And I intreated him with my mouth.] I did not only call, but intreat him; the language of a Master is imperative, 'tis his place to command, not to entreat; but saith Job, I intreated. The word here used signifies the humblest intreaty, the intreaty of a poor man for an alms; according to that of Solomon in the Proverbs (Chap.18.23.) The man useth entreaties, or, speaketh supplications; it is this word, he speaketh humbly; they that are rich and have enough speak big, the words of Great men are usually like themselves great and high, but poor men speak supplications. Job did not speak commands, but supplications to his servant; he did not speak to him as a servant, but as if himself had been his servant, at least, as if he had been his fellow-servant. As his estate was brought low, so his spirit was humble; 'tis comly when our expressions bear the image of our condition.

חנן Est blandè loqui & cū obsecrationibus, ut loquitur pauper.

I intreated him with my mouth.] There is somewhat more in that. The mouth is the shop of words (as the heart is of thoughts) there they are wrought and framed, and from thence they are sent out; yet a man may speak and not with his mouth; a nod with the head, a look with the eye, a motion from the hand, have a language in them, especially from a Master to his servants; and there are gestures of the head, hand, or eye, which may signifie not only speaking but entreating; but Job entreated with his mouth; a master may entreat by the mouth of another, and send a messenger to entreat his servant. Had Job done only so, that had been much; but it is much more for a Master to entreat with his own mouth, I intreated him with my mouth, I spake my self, and yet I could get no answer. Job puts in all these aggravations to set forth this part of his affliction; he called, he intreated, and that with his own mouth, yet his servant regarded not.

Further, His meaning is not only that he could not get a word from his servant, but that he could not get any work from him. Job's servant did not only refuse to speak to him, but to do for him; when a servant makes no answer with his mouth, yet if he act with his hand, it makes some amends; his industriousness is a satisfaction for his unmannerliness; and his diligence may obtain pardon for his silence. We read in the Gospel of a Father who said to one of his Sons, Go, and he answered, I will go, but he did not; he answered with his mouth, but not with his hand; to another for ſon he ſaid, go, do ſuch a thing, and he ſaid, I will not; he did not only not promiſe to go, but plainly denied to go; but afterwards he repented and went, he denied his Father with his tongue, but he obeyed with his hand; it were well if a ſervant who forbears to anſwer by word, would anſwer by his work. When Job's ſervant gave him no anſwer, he gave him neither word nor work, neither tongue nor hand. And though Job's ſervant had denied him nothing but an anſwer in words, yet he had reaſon enough to be troubled at it, and to number it among his ſorrows. Not to anſwer when we are called to, is a deſpiſing of him that calleth us; and we can hardly ſpeak any thing of a man, which renders him more worthleſs, then by not ſpeaking to him. What can we eſteem him worthy of, whom we do not eſteem worthy of a word from us? Hence obſerve,

First, A man in affliction is apt to lay every thing to heart; and is very jealous of every mans carriage towards him.

We are ſenſible of any diſreſpect from men, when the hand of God is upon us; Job could not but take notice of a ſlight from his ſervant: We might think that Job a man of a great and truly noble ſpirit, ſhould have over-looked the neglect of his maidens and men-ſervants, and not have troubled himſelf with it, but he could not. Though the thing in it ſelf was light, yet it lay heavy upon his ſpirit; as in his proſperity he did not deſpiſe the cauſe of his man-ſervant, or of his maid-ſervant, when they contended with him, (Chap. 31. 13.) ſo in his adverſity he could not deſpiſe the contempt of his man-ſervant, or of his maid-ſervant, when they did not own nor anſwer him. We take moſt notice of little evils, when great evils are upon us. And as uſually it is our infirmity to do ſo, ſo there may be both a diſcovery and an exerciſe of much grace in doing ſo. For as it ſhews much holineſs of ſpirit, if when we are loaded with great mercies, we can take notice of little mercies to be thankful for them, ſo if when we are under great afflictions, we take notice of little afflictions to profit by them. He that is ſpiritual, deſires to pick out the meaning of God towards him, in the ſmalleſt croſs-carriage of man towards him. There is much faith ſeen in bearing a heavy croſs, and much tenderneſs in feeling the lighteſt croſs. And as he that hath a tender conſcience is troubled for, and feels the ſmart of the leaſt ſin which he hath committed againſt God, ſo he feels ſome ſmart of the leaſt trouble inflicted upon him by the hand of man, becauſe he looks upon it as a tryal ſent from God.

Secondly, In that he complains thus of his ſervants, Obſerve,

God can create trouble to us out of any of our relations.

They who live and depend upon us, may become a burden to our lives. As ſervants are a help to their Maſters, ſo Maſters are the ſupport and ſtay of their ſervants, they feed them, they cloath them, they lodge them, they have all that they have in the world from them. 'Tis true, ſome ſervants have been great comforts to their Maſters, they have been to them as their right hand, or as their Children; hence Solomon gives the wiſe ſervant a part of the inheritance among the brethren, (Prov. 17. 2.) yet how often doth that relation prove an affliction? How many ſervants are there, who ſerve their own ends, and not their Maſters, or who care not to ſerve their Maſters any longer or further, then they can ſerve their own ends? The ill diſpoſition and demeanor of ſervants, is none of the leaſt of thoſe troubles, of which the Apoſtle warns them that marry (2 Cor. 7. 28.) Nevertheleſs ſuch ſhall have trouble in the fleſh; that is, in their outward condition. With all our comforts troubles are mingled, the ſtate of marriage is not only an honourable, but a comfortable ſtate, yet many troubles attend and throng about it: there is comfort in Children, but there is trouble in Children too; there is comfort in ſervants, yet they are troubles alſo. A ſervant is the loweſt and laſt reſort of a miſerable man for comfort, if he be denied it there, if a ſervant refuſe to help, and inſtead of ſubmiſſive and ſweetning anſwers, either ſtands mute and ſullen, or gives revilings, how great is the miſery of ſuch a man?

Ad valde acerbam injuriam pertinet, ut domini cum ſervis blandè loquantur, & ſervi contemnant. Pined.

Thirdly, In that he charges it upon his ſervant, that he did not anſwer when he was called, Obſerve,

It is the duty of ſervants to be obedient to the call and command of their Maſters.

The time and buſineſs of a ſervant, is not his own, but his Maſters hand; and 'tis his duty at all times to ſerve his Maſter in every honeſt buſineſs. Gracious hearts pattern themſelves in their attention to God, by the attentiveneſs of good ſervants to their Maſters (Pſal. 123. 1.) Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwelleſt in the Heavens; behold as the eyes of ſervants looks to the hands of their Maſters, and the eye of a maiden to the hand of a Miſtreſs, ſo our eyes wait upon the Lord our God till he have mercy on us. The ſervants eye ſhould alwayes be upon his Maſter, and the maidens eye upon her Miſtreſs, not only to hearken what they ſay, but to obſerve what they do, and to pick out the meaning of every motion and turning of their hand. A ſervant ſhould alwayes ſtand ready, and ſet himſelf in a poſture of obedience. Beckening with the hand, or a nod with the head, ſhould be to him as a word of command. The Centurion gives that character of a good ſervant (Matth. 8. 9.) I have Souldiers under me, and I ſay to one go, and he goeth, and to another come, and he cometh, and to my ſervant do this, and he doth it. Here is no murmurings at, no nor ſo much as any the leaſt diſputings of the orders given. Going and coming and doing, are the beſt language of ſervants; 'tis moſt comly when they ſpeak with their feet, and make anſwer with their hands. The Apoſtle is much upon this obſequiouſneſs of ſervants in moſt of his Epiſtles (1 Tim. 6. 1.) Let as many ſervants as are under the yoak, count their own Maſters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blaſphemed: The doctrine of God is, that ſervants ſhould give honour to their Maſters, therefore the doctrine of God is blaſphemed if they do not: The Apoſtle ſpeaks to believing ſervants, and he preſſeth them upon that very account; They that have believing Maſters, let not them deſpiſe them becauſe they are brethren. The Apoſtle ſeems to ſay, that ſome ſervant might thus object, As my Maſter is in the faith, ſo am I too; what honour do I owe him? there is neither Jew no Gentile, bond, or free, maſter nor ſervant, but in Chriſt we are all one: It is true ſaith the Apoſtle, yet abuſe not this priviledge; ye are all one as to the participation of Goſpel-Grace, in the pardon of your ſins, and the juſtification of your perſons; but ye are not all one as to the ſtate of your relations. Grace doth not take away or cut aſunder the bonds of duty, whether natural or civil. Read more, Col. 3. 22. Epheſ. 5. & 6. Now (I ſay) ſeeing the Apoſtle inſiſteth ſo much upon that point, ſurely there is much of the will and glory of God in it, elſe the Spirit of God would not have left ſuch frequent and plentiful admonitions about it. Hence as Paul uſeth a negative conſideration in Timothy, provoking ſervants to obedience, that the name of God be not blaſphemed; ſo he uſeth an affirmative in direct oppoſition to that in his Epiſtle to Titus (Chap. 2. 10.) That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. Holineſs being moſt viſible in our relations, relational holineſs muſt needs be the chiefeſt ornament of our profeſſion. Whereas Job ſaith, his ſervant would not anſwer, though he intreated him with his mouth, Obſerve,

To act againſt the condeſcention of thoſe who are above us, heightens our ſin.

It is a fault for a ſervant not to anſwer when he is barely called or commanded; but for a ſervant not to anſwer when he is intreated, is exceeding ſinful. Every Maſter is above his ſervant, but when he entreats, he puts himſelf below his ſervant. And by how much the Maſter goes out of his place, in gentleneſs to entreat his ſervant, by ſo much doth a ſervant go the more out of his place in ſtubbornneſs, by not obeying his Maſter. Now, if it be ſuch an aggravation of a ſervants undutifulneſs, not to hear when his Maſter entreateth; how ſinful is it when man doth not hear at Gods entreaty? We are all ſervants to God, how oft doth God call, and we do not anſwer, yea, how often hath he intreated us with his mouth, and yet we have not yielded? God beſeecheth man to be reconciled to him, and he refuſeth; God beſeecheth man to obey him, and he either denieth or delayeth obedience. No man could bear that at a ſervants hand, which God beareth at ours. We are careleſs and negligent, we are ſtubborn and unfaithful, yet God is patient. Did Maſters reflect on their ſervices to God, they Cum vis ut ſerviat tibi ſervus tuus, & tu non vis ſervire Deo, facis Deo quod tu pati non vis. Auguſt.

they would see little cause to complain of, or much cause to be patient towards their most unprofitable servants. We are very sensible of a servants failing in duty to us; when shall we be sensible as we ought of our failings in duty to God? When we are troubled that servants do not come at our call, nor do at our bidding, we should consider how many calls we have withstood, and how many biddings we have disobeyed. Let us be exact in duty to God, and walk to all well-pleasing, seeing we expect exactness in duty from man, and to be pleased in all things.

Job proceedeth to describe his affliction in a nearer relation. By how much any relation is nearer to us in which our affliction lies, by so much doth that affliction come nearer to us. Affliction from a servant pincheth much, but affliction from a wife pincheth much more.

Vers. 17. My breath is strange to my wife, though I intreated for the childrens sake of my own body.

We found that Job's Wives breath was strange to him, (Chap. 2. 9.) when she bid him curse God and die; now his breath is strange to her. 'Twas sin which made her breath strange to him; but sorrow made his breath strange to her.

My breath was strange to my wife.

There are four interpretations of these words.

First, Some by the word (Ruach, which we render breath) understand the mind, or understanding; and because the word which we translate strange, signifies also to be distracted, to be as a mad man who hath lost the use of his reason; from both, the sence is made up thus; I was as a distracted man in the account of my Wife, my Wife looks on me as if I were out of my wits, and so unfit for her converse or society. The understanding of a madman is a stranger to himself, and we love not to be near those who are mad.

Quasi uxor Jobi eum pro demente habuerit. Bold.

Secondly, Others translate, not breath, but life, because life is continued by breathing. Life is the union of soul and body, while breath continues, life continues, and the departing of our breath is the departure of life. According to this sence of the word, the Text is thus translated, My life is strange to my Wife, that is, I being sick and full of sores, my Wife is weary of my life, and would be glad to see me in my grave; Job was as a man free among the dead, and these conceive his Wife was willing to be freed from him by death.

Thirdly, Others by his breath understand that which moved upon his breath, his words, or voice, his speech, or complaint. Words are nothing but breath formed and shaped to express our minds by; so, My breath is strange, is, my words, my complaints to her, my discourses with her are strange; she will not hear me speak, my voice is offensive and unpleasant to her by reason of my affliction; I deal so much in groans and sighs while I speak, that she cannot bear it to hear me speak.

Fourthly, Take breath strictly for that which we respire or breath forth while we live. My breath is strange, that is, loathsom, noysom, ill savoury. So the word is used (Numb. 11. 20.) where the Lord tells the people of Israel when they murmured for flesh, that they should have their fill of it (vers. 20.) Ye shall not eat one day, or two dayes, or five dayes, or ten dayes, or twenty dayes, but even a whole moneth, till it come out of your nostrils, and be loathsom to you (so we read, or) till it be strange to you, or an abhorrence to your stomach. As all things are strange to us which we never had or used, so some things grow strange to us, because we have and use them so much. The strangeness of loathing is worse then the strangeness of not having. Ye shall be acquainted with flesh till ye count it strange, that is, ungrateful or unwelcom both to your presence and your palate. So here, My breath is strange to my Wife, 'tis to her as unsavory meat which the stomach loatheth, or cannot digest; probably the breath of Job might have an ill savour, through the continuance of his disease; any long sickness may breed corruption of the breath, and some sicknesses arise from putrifaction in the lungs or inward parts, which necessarily corrupt the breath: 'tis like Job had inward sores as well as outward, and that these made his breath unsavory, yet he looks on this as a part of his affliction, that his breath (though not so sweet and pleasant as in former times) should be strange to his Wife.

My breath is strange to my Wife. He adds an aggravation to this unkindness of his Wife, as before to the neglect of his servants; as he intreated them, so he intreated her; My breath is strange to my Wife,

Though I intreated for the Childrens sake of my own body.

Some render it distinctly, and make this a description of the undutifulness he found in his Children; My breath is strange to my Wife, and I intreated my own Children; implying that they also refused; I intreated the Children of my own body, I was a suppliant to my own bowels. Thus Servants, Wife, and Children, all relations in the family helped on his affliction.

Et orabam filios uteri mei. Vulg.

They who insist upon this interpretation are hard put to it how to make it out, that he intreated his Children; for it may be objected, all his Children were crushed to death with the fall of the house, in Chap. 1. how then can he be said to intreat his own Children here?

'Tis answered, First, He might have young Children when his house fell, that were not at the banquet; so that as the violent death of some of his Children was an affliction to him, so also was the preservation and life of his other Children, according to this opinion.

Secondly, Others refer it to his Grand-children, his Sons Sons, whom he might reckon as his own; Childrens Children, are as our own Children. Thus Jacob spake to Joseph (Gen. 38. 5.) And now thy two Sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the Land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine, as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine.

Filii filiorum sunt instar filiorum.

Thirdly, The Septuagint interpret it for the Children of his Concubines. The Scripture is clear that divers of the Patriarks had Concubines, but that Job had any the Scripture is silent; and therefore I pass this, and rather settle upon our reading, which both the Hebrew very well beareth, and most of the Learned follow: this being only an addition to the unkindness of his Wife, to whom (saith he) my breath was strange, though I intreated her for the Childrens sake of my own body, or as the letter of the Hebrew is, Though I intreated towards the Children of my own body.

Deprecabar ad filios uteri mei. Heb.

Further, The word signifies, to bewail, or deplore, as well as to entreat: so the word is used (Psal. 102. 13, 14.) Thou wilt arise and have mercy upon Sion, for the time to favour her, yea the set time is come, for thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favour the dust thereof; some read it, they pitty the dust, they bewail and mourn over the dust of Sion. Thus Job bewailed his Childrens dust; and then the meaning may be, My breath, or my complaint was strange to my Wife, even when I was bewailing, or deploring the Children of my own body; she did not only abhor me, when I cryed out of the loss of my estate, when I complained of my pains and sores, and of the injuriousness of my friends, but when I was bewailing the loss of my very Children, in which she was as much concerned as I am.

Patet uxori anima mea etiam ubi communes liberos deploro. Coc.

Secondly, I intreated for the Childrens sake; may carry this meaning, as if the argument which he used to draw his Wife to respect him was his Children. I entreated her by the inviolable band of marriage, and the fruits of it, but she regarded me not. My breath is strange to my Wife, &c.

Per sanctum jus conjugii & fructus ejus. Jun.

Hence observe, First, They who have taken sweetest content in one another, may quickly be loathsom to one another.

There is nothing in the Creature of any long continuance, much less of any long contentment. Man and Wife ought in duty to take mutual delight and contentment one in another; yet a Wife who is one flesh with her Husband, may count his breath a stranger, and she who was given for a help, may prove helpless, in time of greatest need.

When man was created, the Lord said it is not good for man to be alone, I will make him a help meet for him. A Wife is made for a help to man; and when doth a man need her help so much, as in the time of sickness, and affliction? That which is good at all times, is at sometimes better. A Wife should ever be a help to her Husband, but then most when he cannot help himself. The vertue of some Wives hath appeared gloriously at such times; and when diseases have made all others loath their Husbands, they have delighted in them. True conjugal love out-lives all changes both of time and state, it knows no decay either by age or sickness.

The

Speed's Chrō. p.630. Sect. 5.

The Story is famous of Prince Edward, wounded with a poysoned knife by a treacherous Assassine, to whom, when other means of cure proved ineffectual, his wife, the Lady Eleanor sucked out the poyson, and gave him both ease and healing. How rare a pattern was this woman of conjugal fidelity? How far did she out-act Job's wife in love, who was so far from sucking his wounds or licking his sores, that she could not abide his breath. Solomon gives this assurance of a virtuous woman, that she will do her husband good and not evil all the dayes of her life: What changes soever be upon him in outward things, her affections change not; whether he be in health or in sickness, whether in riches or poverty, whether his breath be sweet or unsavoury, she doth him good, and not evil all the dayes of her life. True love holds out in duty both to God and man.

Secondly observe, That Love between man and wife, which begins and is grounded upon outward motives, may soon decay and wither.

All outward things are decaying, and if the groundwork fall, that which is built upon it, cannot stand. If riches be the motive of love between man and wife, when once they grow poor, they will be as poor in love. If corporal comliness and beauty be the motive, sickness stains that, and there's an end of love. They who love Christ for the loaves, and godliness for worldly gain, will not love them long. And none know how soon their love may end to any earthly and civil relation, if it began upon earthly and meer civil ends.

There are two motives of conjugal love, that will last for ever.

First, Grace in the person loved.

Secondly, Obedience to an Ordinance of God.

The beauty of Grace withers not, though the grace of beauty do. Grace is most beautiful in the greatest declinings and wrinklings of natural beauty. The breath of Grace can never be unsavoury, nor can obedience to an Ordinance of God decay. These continue ever in the same sweetness and strength, and so will that love between husband and wife, which began at them.

Thirdly, Whereas Job intreated for the Childrens sake of his own body; observe, Children are strong obligations of love between man and wife.

A husband hath no greater argument to move a wife by, then to beseech her for the Children that God hath given them. Children are dear to their parents, and an endearing to their parents. As Children encrease, so should Love encrease; Children are one of the principal ends of marriage; the attaining of any end in marriage, puts a further engagement upon us to perform all the duties of it. Children are the living images of their parents; they are their parents multiplied. So that while a husband entreats his wife for his childrens sake, she is entreated for the sake of as many husbands as she hath children. Hence observe,

Lastly, Strong desires are importunate, and will improve every interest for the obtaining of what is desired.

What we cannot carry upon our own interest, we labour to carry upon any other more prevailing name or interest. Jacob moves the Lord in prayer by the remembrance of his Fathers, Abraham and Isaac; O God of my Father Abraham, and God of my Father Isaac (Gen. 32. 9.) Jacob did not pray to his Father Abraham, but he made use of his Fathers name, as a motive in prayer. And though all names and interests are swallowed up in the name and interest of Jesus Christ, as to deserving a grant of what we pray for; yet we may argue and plead with God in prayer, for the Churches sake; yea, for our own childrens sake, that God would do us good, that we may be further instrumental for their good.

Verse 18. Yea, young children despised me, I rose, and they spake against me.

עיר Quod sæpe a'iis accidit contrarias habet significationes. Stulti quoq; despiciebant me. Vulg.

The word signifies not only a Child, but a Fool; so some render it here, Fools despised me; none but fools despise wise men, nor are the godly contemned by any but the wicked. We say, young children newly weaned from the breast, or as the original in strictness bears, Sucklings, who are the youngest children, despised me. Children in that state, are not in a capacity either to give honour to, or to despise their Elders: And therefore by young children, we are to understand youths, or the younger sort of men, not youngest children. Youths and young men are in common language called Children, in comparison of the Aged. The Prophet Jeremiah cries out (chap. 1. 6.) Ah Lord God, behold I cannot speak; for I am a Child: That is, I am but young. And Solomon tells the Lord in Gibeon, I am but a little Child; I know not how to go out or to come in, 1 Kings 3. 7. Yet at this time Solomon had a Child; as appears (1 Kings 14. 21.) for he reigned but forty years, and Rehoboam his Son was one and forty years old when he began to reign. So that he called himself a Child, because he was young, and with reference to his years, unfit to rule so great a people. Thus here, Young children despised me, that is, young ones despised me.

I arose, and they spake against me.

Not only did they despise when I stood upon my authority, as an ancient man may do; but when I arose, that is, when I shewed them respect, and (as it were) did obeisance to them. To rise to any man, is a gesture of reverence, as well as to fall down before him. Children ought to rise up, and shew reverence to the aged. Job rose to children, and yet they gave him no reverence. Yet some understand it barely of the act; I arose, and went away from them, and assoon as I turned my back, they spake against me. As if his meaning were, Though they durst not speak against me to my face, yet as soon as I turned my back, they reproached and scorned me; what! Is this Job? But I rather take it as before, that Job condescended in respects to young ones, who, forgetting their distance, gave him none. As he did not only call his servant, but entreated him; as he did not only speak to his wife, but entreated her; so he did not only deal gently with, but shewed respect to children, and yet they despised and spake against him. Of this he complains, both as their sin, and as his affliction. Hence observe,

Simulat fur vexero & ab illis recessi, mihi detrahunt, qui præsenti non auderet ita tractare Merc.

First, They that are young, owe reverence to the aged.

This is seated in the Law of Nature, and we find an express Law for it, given by God himself to his ancient people the Jews (Lev. 19. 32.) Thou shalt rise up before the hoarie head, and honour the face of old men, and fear thy God; I am the Lord. He that wears the Silver Crown, should be honoured, in his capacity, as well as he that wears the Golden Crown. As we are to honour our parents, so every old man; for he is as a parent. And if the younger ought to rise up before the hoary head, and give them reverence, how great a perversion is it both of the Law of Nature and of Nations, when the hoary head rising up, is despised by the younger? Paul gives caution concerning Timothy (1 Tim. 4. 12.) Let no man despise thy youth. 'Tis a sin to despise the young who are gracious; what is it then to despise grave and gracious old age?

Secondly observe, It is an addition to our affliction, to be despised in affliction; especially to be despised by our inferiors, whether in degree or age.

This is threatned as a sore judgment upon the Jews, when an enemy should invade their borders (Deut. 28. 30.) I will bring upon thee a Nation of fierce countenance, that shall not regard the face of the old; noting that old men should be reverenced, and usually are reverenced among all Nations. Job was once reverenced both by young and old (chap. 29. 18.) The young men saw me, and did hide themselves. When a man of venerable age comes in presence, young men should start back and modestly withdraw; Tea (saith he) the aged rose and stood up: He had reverence in former times, not only from young men, but from the aged. This shewed the height of his worldly felicity. But now (to shew the depth of his worldly misery) the youngest of young ones, who could despise him, did despise him. It was a crime punishable in the Spartan Common wealth, for young men not to rise up and shew reverence to the aged when they passed by. Hence that proverbial speech took its original; It is only good to be an old man in Sparta. 'Tis comly in all Common wealths and Families, when every person keeps his rank, when honour is given to whom honour is due. Rebuke not an Elder (it is the Apostles rule to Timothy,

Assurgendi habitus à pueris & adolescentibus in adventu senioum religiosè observabantur, præsertim apud Spartas, unde dictum, In sola Sparta expedire fieri senem. Plut.

1 Tim.

(1 Tim. 5. 1.) but exhort him as a Father. Though we must not flatter or favour any person, to the prejudice of the truth, or holiness, yet while we speak truth, or reprove unholiness, we must put a difference between the persons of men. We must not handle or deal with Elders as we deal with the younger men. When we speak reproof, we must speak respect unto the ancient. The Prophet gives it as the Character of a confused State, when children behave themselves proudly against the ancient, and the base against the honourable (Isa. 3 5.)

Verse 19. All my inward friends abhorred me, and they whom I loved are turned against me.

Job proceeds to another rank of friends; he spake of his ordinary friend before, now of those who were as his Council: Though a man hath many friends to converse with, yet some few only are fit friends to take counsel with. We may love many heartily, yet but few should know our hearts. The Hebrew is, The men of my secrets, that is, the men to whom I opened my secrets, and with whom I took advice in things of neareſt concernment. In Scripture we find many such Hebraisms (Isa. 5. 13.) We translate, Thy honourable men are famished. The Hebrew letter is, Their glory are men of famine. So (Obad. 7.) The men of thy confederacy, that is, the men with whom thou hadst confederacy, or didst joyn thy self in league or covenant; so here, The men of his secrets, are the men to whom he communicated his secrets: These we call inward friends. He is an inward friend, with whom we either advise what to do, or whom we tell what we have done or are about to do; as Christ bespeaks his Disciples (John 14. 15.) Henceforth call I you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his Master doth; but I have called you friends: for all things that I have heard of the Father, declare I unto you. As if Christ had said, As my Father hath opened his bosom to me, so have I to you. Therefore you are not used like servants, but like inward friends. Of such Job complains here, My inward friends

חעבו
Est ita abominari aliquem ut reputetur omni familiaritate indignus.

Abhor me.] The word implies such an abhorring of him, as if he had been a man unfit for any familiarity at all, much more for inward familiarity. As if he had said, The men with whom I joyned heart and hand, will not come at me: They stand off as if I were unworthy to be spoken to, or to be heard speak; they defie my company, and will not have to do with me. The word is applied to the aversation of all the sences; it is applied to hearing (Amos 5. 10.) To smelling (Isa. 1. 13.) To the taste (Gen. 43. 32.) To touching or feeling (Isa. 14. 19.) Thus (saith he) by the men that were to me as my own soul, am I now the abhorrence of their souls, yea, even of all their senses.

In that Job had common friends (he described such before) and inward friends; observe,

Wise men make difference of men, but especially of friends,

A wise man knows how to distinguish persons as well as things; he hath (as we may say) inward friends and outward friends. He hath many to whom he doth courtesies, to whom yet he doth not communicate his counsels. Some men have love and faithfulness enough in them to be made the men of our counsel, but they are defective in judgment and understanding; others have understanding and judgment enough to be the men of our counsel, but they want faithfulness; neither every judicious man, nor every faithful man are fit to be men of our counsel, or to be trusted with secrets. He that is fit for this, must have a composition of both in him, and such a man is a rare man indeed. Many will serve for friends to eat and drink with, to talk and discourse with; but few are fit to consult and communicate our hearts with. The heart is a great trust. Observe,

Secondly, Wise men desire to take advice and counsel of others, they have men of their secrets.

'Tis best to see with our own eyes, yet 'tis not only good, but necessary to use the sight of other mens eyes. They are but fools who are meerly led by others, or who act only by the advice of other men, and they (which is as bad) are over-wise, who think they have no need to be advised. None have been so much mistaken, as they who take all upon themselves. They make best improvement of their parts and wisdom, who use them much, but trust them little. As we may not trust our own wisdom at all (which Solomon calls leaning to our own understanding) in reference to our dependance upon God; so it is very unsafe and dangerous to trust to our own wisdom with contempt or neglect of men. Private men need counsel for the management of their family-affairs, much more do Magistrates need it for the managing of publick affairs. The Orator said, Men of Counsel are to a Common wealth, as the mind, reason or understanding is to any particular man: They are to a State, as the foundation is to the building; the whole Fabrick whereof quickly falls and decayes without counsel; therefore in the holy Language Jasad signifies to lay a foundation, as also to gather together in Council, because the foundation of the peace and prosperity of a Nation is laid in good counsel. Job being a publick man, had his Council. It was the saying of one of the Ancients, That Commonwealth is most safe and flourishing, where the heads of ancient men, and the arms of young men are employed and improved (Prov. 11. 14.) Where no counsel is the people fall; but in the multitude of Counsellers there is safety. The worst of Princes have hated counsel. Nero was an utter enemy to the Roman Senate. And Cæsar cared little for their advice. They who would rule by their own will, would rule by their own wisdom; and they who would make all the people their slaves, have no desire to make any of them their Counsellers.

Consilium atque Senatus est mens, ratio, intelligentia reipublica. Cic.

יסד
Significat fundare & convenire in consilio.

Maxima salva est Respublica ubi consilia senum, juvenum arma obtinent. Plut.

And they whom I loved are turned against me.

Having spoken of his friends before, he now speaks of his friendliness to them; They whom I loved: There is no friendship without mutual love. Loving may be taken two wayes, either as opposed to hating, or as opposed to a less degree of loving. Job loved all his friends, but some more; here love is opposed to a less degree of love; Those whom I loved, that is, those whom I loved greatly, those who had so much of my love, that in respect of them, I might be said to love none but them. Christ loved all his Disciples, yet one was called the Disciple whom Jesus loved. A man that loves many, may so love one, that comparatively he doth not love any but him. Such should our love to God be, as ballanced with our love to man. Though it be a duty, and the great Commandment, to love one another; yet God must be so loved by us, that we may (in this sence) affirm we love none but God. The Law is express, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy strength (Luke 10. 27.) If God be loved with all the heart, then the love that we bear to the creature, is no love in comparison of that we owe to God. And in proportion, the love we bear to some man, so far exceeds our love to others, that they may be said to engross all our love. Job spake here distinctly and distinguishingly of such friends as were highest in his favour, and had most room in his heart. These he calls the men whom he loved.

Habebat Job quos præ aliis diligeret.

Again, We may consider love two wayes; first, As it is a love of benevolence; secondly, of complacency: Job spake before of those friends whom he loved with the love of benevolence; but here of those friends whom he loved with the love of complacency, of those in whom his delight was set, and in whom all the lines of his affections were firmly centred: Such was the love of Jonathan to David, of whom he saith (2 Sam. 1. 26.) Very pleasant hast thou been unto me, my brother Jonathan, thy love to me was wonderful, surpassing the love of Women. Women love most; Jonathan's love to David, was more then the love of women to those whom they love most, their husbands and their children. Job had extraordinary out-goings of his heart in love to some; what returns they made to him, we shall see in opening the next clause; Those whom I loved

Are turned against me.] As if he had said, I have had most of their hatred, who had most of my love. They who were as my Counsellers, are become my Betrayers. It is one thing to turn from a man, and another to turn against him; it is if friends turn from us in an evil day (as 'tis said of the Children of Ephraim, that being harnessed, and carrying bows, they turned back in the day of battel. Thus to turn back in the time of need, is (I say) bad enough) but when they turn against us, and not only do us no good, but do us hurt; this is the utmost departure from, and breach of the bounds and bonds of friendship. Thus Ahitophel turned against David in the conspiracy of Absolom, and Judas against our Lord Jesus Christ. To turn against, is the act of an enemy, and implies an hostile spirit. They whom I loved, are turned against me.

Now

Now ſeeing Job who had many friends, had alſo ſome inward friends, whom he calls by way of eminency, thoſe whom he loved.

Firſt, Obſerve, That though all friends are loved, yet ſome may have a more ſpecial intereſt in, and portion of our love.

All the people of God are his friends, yet Abraham had the priviledge above many, to be called the Friend of God. God calls but ſome Saints, his beloved ones, his Jedediahs, his favourites, though he love and favour all that are Saints. He ſpake of the whole people of Iſrael, You have I known (that is, you have I loved) above all the Nations in the world; ſo men may ſee reaſon to love with a diſtinction, to place the heat and hight of their affections upon ſome beyond others, to whom they bear good affection.

Obſerve Secondly, The love of man is ill requited by ſome men; or, They to whom we have done many good turns, turn ſometimes not only from us, but againſt us; and ſhew themſelves not only no friends, but enemies.

That man is leſs then a friend who ceaſeth to do us good, but he is a down-right enemy, who contrives or acts our hurt. What Chriſt ſaid to the Jews (John 10.32.) we may ſay to ſuch friends (in our meaſure) Many good works have we done among you, and to you, for which of them do ye ſtone us. When friends decline in their love, they encline to hatred; and while they are not with us, they may be numbred with thoſe who are againſt us: Neutarlity towards a friend is a kind of enmity; but Job's friends became his enemies in kind. Of ſuch David complains (Pſal. 109.4, 5.) For my love, they were mine adverſaries, they have rewarded me evil for good, and hatred for my good will. And again (Pſal. 55.12,13,14.) It was not an adverſary that ſet himſelf againſt me (Who was it then? it was one whom he once reckoned his choiceſt friend) It was thou, O man, my companion, my guide, and my familiar friend; we took ſweet counſel together, and went to the houſe of God as friends. None prove worſe enemies then they that have received the greateſt kindneſſes, when once they turn unkind. As the ſharpeſt Vineger is made of the pureſt Wine, and pleaſant meats turn to the bittereſt humours in the ſtomack; ſo the higheſt love beſtowed upon friends, being ill digeſted, or corrupted, turns to the moſt unfriendly hatred. The Philoſopher ſaith, They who love one another too much, hate one another moſt. As no exceſs of love is of any long continuance, ſo when they whom we have loved moderately begin to hate us, they hate us more then ſuch can whom we never loved. The diſſentions of brethren, are hotteſt, becauſe they are neareſt: and the diſſention of friends is hotter then that of brethren, becauſe the love of brethren (ſtrictly conſidered) is founded only in nature, but the love of friends is founded in courteſies and profeſſions, which, though not in themſelves, yet to us, becauſe we have been active or receptive in them, are the cloſeſt obligations to love. Now, the cloſer any obligation is, the wider is the breach, when once that obligation is broken, or miſ-improved: if they whom we have loved begin to fall from us, they uſually fall out with us. We have had ſad experiences of this. And 'tis an argument where ever it falls, that ſuch did never love thoſe who loved them upon Goſpel-principles, or in obedience to the command of God. For as they who turn againſt the truth of God, never received the love of it; ſo they never received the love of men in truth, who turn againſt them. Spiritual love cannot turn to hatred, 'tis meer natural love which doth ſo. Holy love ſeldom turns from, but it never turns againſt a friend. When grace is the cement of affections, what can divide them? The ſpecial love of God overcomes thoſe that are loved of him to love him; and though the Lord may ſay of all the Saints on earth, that they have not anſwered his love, with a due proportion of love, and of many that they are fallen from their firſt love; yet ſo powerful is his love, that they never fall either out of his love, or from their own; but the love of man hath no ſuch power over man. And therefore what Job once ſaid, others may have cauſe to ſay, They whom we loved are turned againſt us.

Thus Job's affliction ran through all his relations; he was not only loaded with trouble in his ſtate and perſon, but in his kindred, friends, ſervants, wife, children, Councellors, and chief familiars. All denied him duty, and therefore he cries out for pity in the next Verſe.

Qui ſe nimiũ amant, hi ſe nimiũ odio habent. Ariſt. l. 7. Pol. c. 7. Proximorũ odia ſunt acerrima.

VERS. 20, 21, 22.

My bone cleaveth to my skin, and to my fleſh, and I am eſcaped with the skin of my teeth.
Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me.
Why do ye perſecute me as God, and are not ſatisfied with my fleſh.

IN the former context Job ſhewed what effects his affliction wrought upon others, (all contemned him, or proved unfaithful to him) Here he ſhewes what effect his affliction had wrought upon himſelf, it waſted and conſumed his body, it greived and troubled his Soul; the ſenſe of this took ſuch ſtrong hold of him, that he breaks out into a ſupplication for pittie, (verſ. 21.) and into a deprecation of further perſecution, (verſ. 22.)

Verſ. 20. My bone cleaveth to my skin.

As if he had ſaid, My afflictions have brought me to skin and bones, I am become a very skelliton. My fleſh faileth; and my heart is almoſt failed; only God is the ſtrength of my heart, and my portion for ever.

My bone cleaveth to my skin, and to my fleſh.

The word ſignifieth to cleave together, as thoſe things do that are faſtned with glue; ſo ſome render it here, My bone is glued to my skin: and the copulative is rendred as a word of likeneſs by Mr. Broughton and others, My bone cleaveth to my skin as to my fleſh; that is, whereas my bone (as the bone of any man in health) ſhould cleave to my fleſh, my bone cleaveth to my skin; as if he had ſaid, there is nothing between my bone and my skin; ordinarily fleſh groweth between the skin and the bone; but my skin is immediate to my bone. All fleſh is graſs, ready to wither; but my fleſh and the goodlineſs thereof is already withered. The cleaving of the skin to the bones is a proverbial ſpeech, for extream leanneſs, both among prophane Writers, and in the holy Writ. (Pſal. 102. 5.) My heart is ſmitten dead, &c. by reaſon of the voyce of my groaning; my bone cleaveth to my skin, that is, I am become very low and lean. This proverb is uſed alſo by complaining Jeremie, Their viſage is blacker then a coal, they are not known in the ſtreets, their skin cleaveth to their bone (Lam. 4. 8.) Fat men are skin and fleſh, bones appear not; lean men are skin and bones, their fleſh appears not.

In pelle meâ & in carne meâ adhæſit os meũ. Heb. μεξεσμον id morbi genus appellant Græci quum toto corpore ſucco exhauſto, oſſa cuti agglutinatâ cernuntur. Merc. Conjunctio & ſumitur pro ſicut. Cuti meæ ut carni meæ adhærent oſſa mea. Jun. Oſſa atque cutis ſunt miſera maſcritudine. Plaut.

And I am eſcaped with the skin of my teeth.

When he ſaith, I am eſcaped, he implyes that he had been in danger, and could not eaſily get away. Some evils may be withſtood and conquered, but 'tis well if we can make an eſcape from others. Job was as hard put to it, as ever poor man was. He ſpeaks in alluſion to a Battel, or as if he had come lately from the Wars; and indeed his was a ſore war. A man that hath been put to the worſt in a battel, is glad he can eſcape away with any thing; he is glad when all elſe is loſt to eſcape away with his skin, though it be not a whole skin; when all's made a prey, he is well if he hath his life for a prey. Job had been in a great battel, and was pittifully battered, he only came off with his life, (that Satan had no commiſſion to touch) but he came off with very little beſides, nothing was left him but the skin of his teeth, that was all, and that's a poor all, even as little as may be. The whole skin is not much, but the skin of the teeth is much leſs. This was Job's caſe, I am eſcaped with

The skin of my teeth.] The Vulgar rendreth it, I am eſcaped with my lips about my teeth, or, there is nothing left me but my lips about my teeth; They who follow that tranſlation, tell us rather wittily then ſolidly, that his lips were ſpared him not out of pitty, but upon deſign. The Devil who had power to wound him all over, to touch his bone and his fleſh, as the Lord ſpeaks (Chap. 2.) yet ſpared his lips, leſt he ſhould be diſabled or hindred in ſpeaking, and ſo in blaſpheming God, which was his original plot upon him. A learned Tranſlator, who retains our reading, doth yet expound the skin of his teeth, for his lips, the lips being as a skin encloſing the teeth; and gives that Gloss upon it; He had nothing left him, but the instruments of speech, which Satan hoped would be the instruments of sin.

Deriliſta ſunt labia tantummodò circa dentes. Vulg.

Nihil remansit integrum præter sermonis instrumentum. Jun.

Others by the skin of his teeth, understand the more immediate skin of the teeth, his gums, which are sockets into which the teeth are set and fastned. All these translations and interpretations meet in the expression of this one thing, that his beauty was faded, and the strength of his body utterly consumed, that he was within a step of death, and ready to drop into the grave. When the bone cleaves to the skin, both are near cleaving to the dust. And he who is escaped only with the skin of his teeth, is not like to escape the teeth of death. The next thing which the body hath to loose is life, when all is lost but skin and bone. My bone cleaveth to my skin, &c.

Hence Note, First, A sound mind oft lodgeth in a consumed and crazy body.

Job had a healthy spirit, but his body was unhealthy. While his bone cleaved to his skin, his soul cleaved to Christ. Some good souls are ill-housed in the body, and some beautiful strong bodies are ill-tenanted by the soul. A sound body and a sound mind are together a compleat blessing.

Secondly, Observe how much Job layes this to heart, he makes it his complaint once and again, both here and elsewhere.

Hence Note, Bodily consumption may prove very afflictive to the soundest mind.

Though a sound mind can bear the pain of the body, yet it cannot but be sensible of the pain of the body. Soul and body are such near neighbours, that they must needs know how each other do. If the body be strong, an afflicted mind will weaken it. And if the mind be well, yet an afflicted body will trouble it. Some who have a fulness and fatness of grace in their souls, have been heard bemoaning themselves in regard of bodily weakness in the language of the Prophet (Isa. 24. 16.) My leanness, my leanness. In the former part of the Verse, he makes report of what he had heard, and what was that? From the uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs, even glory to the righteous. All the men in the world (who know what they sing) sing Glory to the righteous, that is, they attest and set forth the happy estate of those who are freely justified, and so reputed righteous by the grace of God towards them; and who are powerfully sanctified, and so made righteous by the grace of God in them. Now though both the glory of Grace, and the grace of glory, even all the good things, or fatness, both of this life, and of the life to come, be the portion, and (by promise) the due of the righteous, yet this righteous Prophet cries out, My leanness, my leanness. As leanness of body was the effect of his troubled mind, so his mind was troubled at the leanness of his body.

Job concludes these effects of his affliction with an apostrophe, and a vehement exclamation to his friends.

Vers. 21. Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O my friends, for the hand of God hath touched me.

Some expound these words as a reproof, not as a supplication; As if he had said, O my friends, ye have unjustly vexed me, ye have troubled me without cause; now therefore know, that it is your duty to pity me: ye have professed your selves my friends, but hitherto ye have shewed me little friendship: be ashamed of this, return to your duty, and trouble me no more. Will ye still persecute him, whom ye ought to pity? Thus he is conceived reproving them.

But rather take the words as an humble, yet earnest intreaty, and so we may title them Job's petition to his friends; he had argued and disputed with them long, but now he entreats and supplicates. In this supplication we may consider,

First, The substance or matter of it, or what he desires, that is pity.

Secondly, We may consider the circumstances or form of it; there is life and spirit in it, 'tis quick, passionate, and piercing, and 'tis quickned two wayes.

First, By an exclamation, Have pity upon me, O ye my friends. He doth not only speak, but cry to them for pity. Interjections are imperfect speeches, but they carry the most perfect sense, both of our wants, and of our desires. When our thoughts are too big for our words, and our hearts too large for our tongues, we vent them by exclamation.

Secondly, He quickens his supplication by a reiteration of it, he doubles it upon them. And there are two doublings in this supplication.

First, In reference to the act.

Secondly, In reference to the object.

He doubleth the act in those words; Have pity, have pity; he doubleth the object, me, me: have pity upon me, upon me; there is pity, pity, and, me, me; as if he would tell his friends that he was a double object of pity, or that he needed double pity, abundance of pity. Multiplyed sorrows, call for a multitude of compassions; and they who suffer much, cannot be satisfied with a little, or with single pity.

Thirdly, He represents the reason or ground of his supplication, why it was that he thus pressed them for compassion, and cried out for pity at their hands. It was (saith he) because the hand of God hath touched me. The hand of God hath touched me, let this touch your hearts.

Have pity upon me.] Pity is the moving of the heart towards those who are in misery. The Original word signifies to shew favour, whether by word, or deed, or rather both by word and deed. Good words, and good works, make compleat pity; good words are comfortable, but good words without good works are lean and miserable comforters. He that speaks pity doth well, but he that acts it doth best.

חנו Est favore prosequi, largiri, & cum objectum miserum est, sympathiam & voluntatem levandi miseriam denotat.

Pity is twofold.

First, Natural.

Secondly, Spiritual.

Natural pity is common to mankind: Man cannot put off pity, unless he put off humanity, and almost cease to be a man. Some beasts are pitiful; those men are worse then beasts who are not. We justly call those men inhumane and unnatural, who have no pity, because pity is seated in the very nature of man; unmercifulness is a sin against the light of nature, as well as against the law of God. And therefore the Apostle puts these two near together, Without natural affection, unmerciful (Rom. 1. 31.) This natural pity as it provokes us to relieve others, so it is a relief to our selves. That pity which moves us to ease others, is our own burden. It is a burden to see another in affliction, specially if he hath any relation or nearness to us; therefore he easeth his own burden who shews pity to another. We do not alwayes love those personally whom we pity. Some shew pity only out of a common instinct of love to others, and some only out of love to themselves. That Judge who neither feared God nor regarded men, yet after a while said within himself, because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her (that is, do her justice and relieve her) lest by her continual coming she weary me (Luk. 18. 4, 5.) And hence we read in Scripture of the bowels of pity, of the bowels of compassion. If any bowels and mercies, saith the Apostle (Phil. 2. 1.) They who have any bowels cannot but have some mercies. In the Hebrew and Greek tongue, the same word signifies both bowels and mercy or pity, because pity causeth a secret motion in the bowels, and affects the body. The harlots bowels yerned, when the living child was to be divided (1 King. 3. 26.) The pity of God himself is called the moving or sounding of his bowels; (Isa. 63. 15.) Where is thy zeal, and thy strength, the sounding of thy bowels and of thy mercies towards us? are they restrained? The Prophet speaks of God in allusion to man, whose bowels are said to be straitned, when he is straitned in mercy. When the inferior sensitive faculties in man, the eye, or the ear, take in sorrowful spectacles or reports, these go to our bowels, to our very heart, the issue and effect whereof is compassion to those, whose sorrows are reported to us. Sometimes the eye carries in a vision of sorrow and misery to the heart; Mine eye affecteth my heart, saith mourning Jeremy, when he saw the ruines and desolate condition of Jerusalem. Sometimes the ear conveyeth a report of misery to the heart, and then we may say, the ear affecteth the heart. When word was brought to good Nehemiah of the sad affliction and reproach of his brethren, the remnant of the captivity that were left in the Province, and how the wall of Jerusalem was broken, broken, and the gates thereof burnt with fire, he sat down and wept, and mourned certain dayes (Neh. 1. 3, 4, 5.) his bowels were exceedingly moved. Natural pity may do this, yet that pity of Jeremy and Nehemiah was more then natural.

Qui compassione moti subveniunt indigenti, magna ex parte sibi subveniunt, propriam enim compassionem minuunt. Bold.

רחם σπλάγχνα.

There is beside this a spiritual pity, which ariseth out of pure love. There may be pity (as was said) where there is no love to the person, and there may be pity flowing only from natural love to the person; but where pity flows from love, and that a divine love, there's spiritual pity, such pity as is more an act of grace then of nature; to the exercise of this pity the Saints are often called. Put on (saith the Apostle, Col. 3. 12.) as the Elect of God holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, &c. They who have indeed put on, and are cloathed with the garments of holiness, will also put on bowels of mercy as a Garment. Mercy moves us to cloath the naked, and mercy is also our own cloathing. Have pity upon me, saith pitiful Job.

Have pity upon me.] Job is not content to speak it once, but he speaks it again, Have pity, have pity; ingeminations, or the doubling of words, are frequent in Scripture, importing much vehemency and intention of spirit in him that speaketh. What we would be sure to have once, we call for twice; and whom we reverence and desire much, we call after more then once. When Eliah was rapt up to heaven in a fiery Chariot, his servant Elisha calls after him (2 Kings 2.12.) My father, my father, the Chariots of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. Father, is a title of esteem and honour; we count him worthy of double honour, whom we call Father, Father. When David would shew how ambitious he was to stand in the Lords books as his servant, he saith it, and saith it again; O Lord, truly I am thy servant, I am thy servant (Psa. 116.16.) And the same David being under a spiritual desertion, recalls the presence of God with a double expostulation (Psal. 22. 1.) which is a Prophecy of Christ, who also took up those words when he hung upon the Cross (his Father having vailed his face from him) My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me. Once more; The Prophet (Isa. 65. 1.) foretelling the earnest desire of Christ to receive and be acquainted with poor sinners, who had no acquaintance with him, nor desire after him, expresseth him doubling his desire; I am sought of them that asked not for me, I was found of them that sought me not; I said, behold me, behold me, unto a Nation that was not called by my name. As if he had said to that strange Nation (us sinners of the Gentiles he means) Be neither afraid nor ashamed to look upon me, and I would have you view me well, glut your eyes upon me, and take your fill of my beauty; when you have beheld me once, behold me a second time, and see whether ye will not like me as well as at the first: look upon me as often as you please, the oftener you look, the more ye will be pleased, and be sure ye look upon no other, for besides me there is no Saviour; Behold me, behold me, me only, and me alwayes; behold me as much as you will, and have no will to behold any other. Scripture repetitions (you see) are no where vain repetitions; the more words we have from God, still the more weight; 'tis so here in Job's repetition; Have pity upon me, have pity upon me,

Saltem vos Amici. Vul.

O ye my friends.] Or, at least, ye my friends (as some translate) do ye shew me pity, ye who are friends; let strangers do what they please, let them pass by senseless of my sorrows, but do not ye; or ye my friends who are present with me, let me prevail with you to shew me pity, though other friends who live at a distance are hardned against me. Thus Job is conceived making a particular application to his three friends, in opposition to those whom he charged with unfriendliness in the former context. As if finding himself deserted by those, yea by his kindred, by his wife, and children, by his servants, and Councellours, he turned himself to his friends then visiting him, O ye my friends, who profess that ye came upon that very errand to comfort me, be not ye unkind as the rest of whom I made that sad complaint. But seeing Job in many passages hath taxed those three friends with deepest unkindness, and professeth that he had not experienced any pity from them; I see little reason why he should make application to them here upon that account; And therefore (I conceive) he directs his speech to them, because it was their duty as well as the duty of others to pity him, not because they had given him more hopes of pity then others had.

Further, Consider he doth not say have pity on me, O ye men; though there is an obligation in that to pity; nor doth he say have pity on me, O ye my allies and kindred (though that be a further obligation to pity) but he puts it upon professing and sometime acting lovers, O ye my friends. A friend is a professor of love; and friendship is love not only professed, but frequently acted. As many bare professions of love, so some one act of love doth not amount to friendship. Every man would do himself good often and alwayes. A friend is another self; so Moses describes a friend (Deut. 13.6.) Where to shew how impartially the Jewes were to proceed against seducers, he expresly forbids any favour to those who might either challenge or deserve the greatest favour, whether upon natural or civil relations. If thy brother, the son of thy Mother, or thy son or thy daughter, or the wife in thy bosom, or thy friend (he seems to speak less, but indeed he speaks more then before, if thy Friend) that is as thine own soul, intice thee secretly, saying, let us go and serve other gods, that thou hast not known, thou shalt not consent unto him, neither shall thine eye pity him, &c. A special friend is as our own Soul, and many special friends are as if they had but one Soul. Jonathan and David moved in the highest sphear of friendship; hence 'tis said of Jonathan, that his Soul was knit with the Soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own Soul (1 Sam. 18. 1) So that while Job bespeaks these men under the title of friends, he moves them by that argument which with most is the most pressing, and which is the most lasting argument. For though brother, and child, and wife, are the nearest ties of love, yet these have received more breaches then that of friend; and friends are more famous for acts of love, then brethren or children, and parents, or husbands, or wives. A friend sticketh closer then a brother (Prov. 18. 24.) and, whereas man and wife are one flesh (Mat. 19.6.) friend and friend are one Soul. What common humanitie will not do, what kindred and alliance would not do, friendship hath sometimes done. Have pity upon me, O ye my friends,

For the hand of the Lord hath touched me.

The hand of God is his power, and this is takeen two wayes in Scripture.

First, For his helping, or his protecting hand; which is called the good hand of God, (Isa. 8. 18.) And by the good hand of God upon us, they brought us as a man of understanding. So Ezr. 8. 18. Then I told them of the hand of my God which was good upon me; that is, to help or to do me good.

Secondly, The hand of God is put for the power of God in punishing and afflicting. Thus Naomi spake when she was become Mara; The hand of God is gone out against me (Ruth 1. 13.) We have variety of expressions used in Scripture in reference to the punishing and afflicting hand of God.

As first, to lay the hand, Exod. 2. 4. And Pharaoh shall not harken unto you, that I may lay my hand upon Egypt, and bring forth mine Armies.

Secondly, To lift up the hand (Isa. 26. 11,) when thy hand is lifted up (to smite thine enemies, and deliver thy people) they will not see. They had eyes to see, but they had no hearts, no wills to see what God had done.

Thirdly, To stretch out the hand (Isa. 9. 12.) For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

Fourthly, To touch with the hand, which was opened in the first and second Chapters of this Book; put forth thine hand now (saith Satan to the Lord) and touch his bone, and his flesh (v. 5.) Job's bone and flesh had felt that touch, and therefore he speaks in the same form and phrase; The hand of the Lord hath touched me.

The finger of God is put for his power in Scripture, as well as his hand. Pharaoh's Magicians confessed at last the finger of God is here (Exod. 8. 19.) That is, this plague or punishment is a demonstration of a divine power. Some conceive that the word finger is there used to note some small part of the power of God; and that as the hand is greater then a finger, so, to say, The hand of God hath touched me, is more then to say, The finger of God hath touched me, or, This is the finger of God. Indeed the little finger of God is more then the whole hand, yea then the loynes of all Creatures. Fooliſh Rehoboam, ſaid, My little finger ſhall be heavier then my fathers loyns. The Lord can make his little finger heavier then the loyns of the moſt cruel oppreſſours. The little finger of God is powerful ēnough to plague and ſubdue the ſtouteſt of his enemies; And there are ſome works of God ſo great beyond other of his works, that the one may be ſaid to be done by the finger of God, the other by his arm or hand; yet the finger of God may be takēn in general for the power of God as well as his hand; and therefore Chriſt alluding to thoſe words of the Magicians, when he refuted thoſe who diminiſhed the glory of his miracles, as thoſe Magicians did the miracles wrought by Moſes, ſaith (Luk. 11.20.) If I with the finger of God caſt out Devils, &c. Which another Evangeliſt expounds by the Spirit (who is the great power) of God (Mat. 12.28.) So that hand and finger may ſignifie the ſame divine power, not only in kind, but in degree. However Job confeſſeth that he felt not the finger, but the hand of God upon him.

But ſeeing he ſaith, this hand had only touched him, doth it not import ſome lighter affliction? The hand of God hath touched me.

נגע Non ſolum tangere ſed etiam percutere denotat, hinc ſæpe de percuſſione lepræ intelligitur.

I anſwer, the word which we tranſlate to touch, ſignifies a grievous ſtroak, and is in Scripture applyed to ſmiting with the plague of Leproſie. This touching is a wounding, and leaves its mark and skar behind it, as the Leproſie did. When the Leproſie aroſe in the forehead of Uzziah, as he preſumptuouſly uſurped the Prieſts office, the Text (expreſſing it by this word) ſaith, The Lord had ſmitten him, (2 Chron. 26. 20.) and though, ſtrictly to touch, eſpecially when the word finger is the inſtrument of it, ſignifies but a little ſtroak, or a light dealing with a thing, as (Luke 11.46.) where Chriſt rebukes the Phariſees, who bound heavy burthens on the people, but themſelves would not ſo much as touch them with onē of their fingers; that is, they would not take the leaſt pains about them; and to ſhew how great vertue there is in a little, or the lighteſt true application by faith to Chriſt, it is ſaid in the Goſpel, that many beſought Chriſt that they might only touch the hem of his garment (Mat. 14.36.) yet to touch, implies alſo an heavy ſtroak; and we in our common ſpeech joyn it with words of deepeſt impreſſion, as when we ſay, touch him home, or touch him to the quick: And ſuch I conceive is the meaning here; The hand of the Lord hath touched me; that is, he hath made my wound deep, mine are ſore and great afflictions, he hath ſmitten not only my fleſh, but my bone, or he hath ſmitten me to the bone. The Lord hath touched me home, he hath touched me to the quick; Have you pity upon me, for the hand of God hath touched me.

First, From the matter of the Petition, Have pity upon me, have pity upon me; Job being in a troubled condition, what doth he ask for? not for riches, not for honour, he only asketh pity.

Hence Obſerve in General, Deſire runs out upon thoſe things which are ſutable to our wants.

'Tis perfect happineſs to enjoy all ſutable good; and the ſupply of any particular good which we want is part of our happineſs. All ſenſitive delight ariſeth from the proportion that is between the object received, and the organ receiving; and ſo alſo doth intellectual delight. Every man frameth (according to his apprehenſion) his Petition to his ſtate, and his prayers to his deficiencies. As all deſire that which is good, ſo that good ſpecially which is the proper cure of their preſent evils. Pity is proper to miſery, and compaſſion to an afflicted condition, therefore the common cry of the afflicted is, pity, pity. He that is hungry, begs for bread, he cryes, Bread, bread; he that is in pain, begs for eaſe; and he that is ſick, thinks nothing worth the having, unleſs he may have health; he that is condemned, begs for pardon, nothing ſo well come to him as a pardon; he doth not ſue for lands, and large inheritances, for a full Table, or coſtly apparel, no, he ſueth only for pardon. He that is convinced of guilt, crys, pardon, pardon; and he that is convinced of his corrupt heart and ſinful deſilements, cries, Grace, Grace. Jeſus Chriſt is therefore altogether deſireable, becauſe he hath in him a ſutable ſupply of all our wants. If we are weak, he is ſtrength for us; if we are ignorant, he is wiſdom for us; if we are guilty, he is righteouſneſs for us; if we are hungry, he is bread for us; if we are naked, he is cloathing for us; if we are in the dark, he is light for us; if we are dead, he is life for us. Chriſt is all in all; and he is all to all. He is all by way of comprehenſion, as having all fulneſs in him; And he is all in or to all by way of diſtribution, as filling all with his fulneſs. In one Chriſt we have all that we want or can deſire for good; He is called the Deſire of all Nations, becauſe all Nations ſhall deſire him, and ſhall receive from him the accompliſhment of all their deſires. And as all our deſires are found in Chriſt, ſo that eſpecially which Job ſo earneſtly deſired, pity. For it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful high Prieſt, even touched with the feeling of our infirmities, having been in all points tempted like as we are, only without ſin.

Secondly, Obſerve from the vehemency of his deſire,
Great and pinching afflictions cauſe us to put forth ſtrong and preſſing deſires.

According to the weight of the burthen that grieveth us, is the cry that comes from us; How do poor condemned priſoners cry to their Judges, Have pity upon us, have pity upon us? David in the day of his calamities, doubles his prayer for mercy (Pſal. 57.1.) Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me, for my ſoul truſteth in thee, &c. Until theſe calamities be over-paſt. It was not a ſingle calamity, but a multitude of calamities which compaſſed David, and therefore he compaſſeth the Lord about with Petitions. His ſpirit being up in prayer like a bell that rings out, he ſtrikes on both ſides, Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me. Chriſt who in the dayes of his fleſh was under ſtrong temptations, offered up prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong crying and tears, unto him that was able to ſave him from death (Heb. 5.7.)

Thirdly, Obſerve, Miſery calls for pity.

If man had not made himſelf miſerable, he had not needed the pity of God; And when God caſts his people into miſery, that calls for the pity of man. There is a voice in ſufferings, though the ſufferer be ſilent; his wants cry aloud, though he ſay nothing; his wounds and ſoars petition for him, though he do not; and 'tis our duty to anſwer his petition, though we receive none from him. Simpathy is a work of that grace which is in us, and the grace of God towards us ſhould provoke us to the exerciſe of it. The Goſpel acquaints us with the pity of God to us, and it preſſeth us to pity one another. Be kindly affectioned one towards another; Rejoyce with them that rejoyce, weep with them that weep (Rom. 12. 15.) Again (Heb. 13. 2, 3.) Remember them that are in bonds as bound with them, and them that ſuffer adverſity, as being your ſelves in the body. To remember them that are in bonds, is not a bare act of remembrance, or only to think that ſuch and ſuch are in bonds; to remember them is to pity them, to pity them really, that is, to do them good, to miniſter and exhibit ſuch things to them as they ſtand in need of. How often ſoever we either think or ſpeak of thoſe that are afflicted, we remember them no oftner, then we ſupply ſome refreſhing to them; for as to remember God, is not barely to have God in our thoughts, but it is an obediential act. While Solomon (Eccleſ. 12. 1.) cautions the young man, with remember thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth; his meaning is, obey and honour him: ſo while the Apoſtle exhorts to remember them that are in bonds, it implies the acting of our charity towards them. Or as the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaketh (1 Pet. 3.8.) it is to have compaſſion on them, to love them as brethren, to be pitiful, to be courteous. They who ſhew no compaſſion to man, ſhew they have little or no acquaintance with the compaſſions of God. And they are both forgetful of and unanſwerable to the compaſſion they have received from God, who withhold compaſſion from man. Hardneſs of heart is oppoſed both to repentance and to pity. That hardneſs of heart which is oppoſed to repentance, is the ſign of a wicked man, who loves his ſin; and that hardneſs of heart which is opposed to pity, is the sign of a cruel man, who hath no love to his brethren. Though the former be the worser of the two, yet the latter is so bad that he cannot be good that hath it. The Apostle John concludes against such (1 Ep. 3.17.) Whoso hath this worlds good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? That is, the love of God doth not at all dwell in him. Compassion is due to every brother in the flesh who hath need, but most of all to Saints, who are brethren in the faith, and partakers of the same grace with us.

of

There are two sorts of sufferers; some under the hand of God, and that either chastning or punishing. Others under the hand of man, and these are of two sorts, either such as suffer for righteousnes sake, and, as the Apostle Peter expresseth them (1 Pet. 4. 15, 16.) as Christians; others as evil-doers, or as busie-bodies in other mens matters. Thus the converted thief rebuked his fellow-sufferer who railed on Christ, saying, We indeed suffer justly, for we receive the due reward of our deeds, but this man hath done nothing amiss (Luk. 23. 40, 41.) They who suffer for righteousnes sake under the wrathful hand of men, or to try their righteousnes under the chastning hand of God, as they are the highest objects of our pity, because they are good, so they are the objects of our joy, because their sufferings are good; yet even they also are to be pitied who suffer for their sins, not only because their misery is great, but because the root of the same sin is in us, which might have put forth the same fruit in us, and so have wrapt us up in the same miseries. While we applaud and rejoyce in the justice of God upon wicked men, we may pity them as men; in some cases where God deals severely, it becomes man to deal kindly; and not only is it sinful to vex, but not to ease those whom God hath smitten. God doth not afflict to teach others to afflict, but to give them an occasion to shew mercy, and an opportunity to be charitable. As many of our graces (as faith and patience, &c.) want an opportunity for their full exercise, till we our selves are afflicted; so some of them (as charity and mercy) want an opportunity for their exercise till others are afflicted. That hand of God which we see wounding others, points also to us to pour the oyl of our tendrest compassions into their wounds. And therefore Job urgeth his friends by this argument to shew him pity; For the hand of God hath touched me. As if he had said, Let not your hand be against me, because the hand of God is; nay rather because his hand hath smitten me, let your hand embrace and support me. Do not ye persecute him, whom God hath wounded; as he intimates they did in the next verse, Why do ye persecute me as God, &c.

Non affligit deus ut cæteri affligant, sed ut quē ille percussit benignè tractent; & qua poterant ratione leniant. Pined.

Quamvis deus puniat in nobis humanitatē vult. Nicet.

Observandū est illud quia, nam divinū supplicium proponit pro ratione commovendæ humanæ misericordiæ. Pined.

Fourthly, Observe, Double or great afflictions call for great or double compassions.

We ought not only to pity those who are distressed, but we must pity them in proportion to their distresses. A narrow plaister will not help a wide wound. The Apostles word implies both elegantly and comfortably, that the compassions of Christ are of the same extent and dimensions with our necessities. (Heb. 5.2.) He can have compassion (or compassion in measure) on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way. If we be in double wants, Christ gives double supplies; if we be in double sorrow, he gives us double comforts; and so should we one to another; to see our brethren over-whelmed with flouds of sorrow, and to give them but drops of comfort; to see them in great distress, and to give them but little help, is below our duty. He doth much who doth but little, if he doth what he can; but he doth nothing who doth but a little while he can do much, if much be wanting. μετριόπαθεν δυνάμενος. Qui quantū satis est possit dolere. Bez.

Fifthly, In that Job lays it home upon his friends to pity him, Note,

There is a special obligation upon friends to shew pity to their distressed friends.

Common humanity moves for pity, much more doth professed friendship. Many enemies have pitied their conquered enemies. When Alexander the Great heard of the death of Darius, and Cæsar of the death of Pompey, they both shed tears. When Titus Vespatian (who came up as the scourge of God against Jerusalem, according to the prediction of Christ, Luk. 19) saw the miserable massacre of the Jewes, both by sword and famine, he expressed much compassion. Now if ingenuous enemies cannot withhold their pity to fallen enemies, how should they who have both received and promised love, be moved with pity to their afflicted friends?

Sixthly, Though Job had received much hard usage, and many unkindnesses from his visiters, yet still he calls them his Friends.

Hence Note, A good man doth not presently cast those out of the number of his friends, who have dealt unfriendly with him.

True love doth not make us blind, so that we cannot distinguish between the courtesies and discourtesies of our friends, but it makes us so clear-sighted, that we can easily distinguish between our friends, and their discourtesies. Job could say, that God acted towards him as an enemy, yet still he reverenced and loved God as his friend and father. So, in proportion did Job, take notice of his Friends doing acts of great unkindnes to him, and yet he retained a good opinion of them that they were his friends.

Lastly, Forasmuch as Job cryes out in sorrow, that the hand of God had touched him. Observe,

It is very dreadful to fall into the hand of God.

If it made Job complain when he did but fall under the chastising hand of God, how will it make those complain who shall fall under his revenging hand? Who knows the power of thine anger? (saith the Psalmist;) I may say (and it is the same) who knows the weight of thy hand? God can strike deep, he can make his sword enter and pass into the very bones and bowels. As it is in spiritual, so in outward smitings; when the hand of God goes forth with the word, it makes deep impressions upon the conscience; It is quick, and powerful, and sharper then any two-edged-sword, peircing even to the dividing asunder of the soul and spirit, and of the joynts and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, (Heb. 4. 12.) So when the hand of God smites the body, or the state, it cuts thorough, and layes all our outward comforts wast. If the Lord do but touch the Mountains (that is, the highest and the strongest of worldly powers) they shall smoak (Psal. 144.5.) then in what flames and combustions shall they be, if he lay the weight of his hand upon them, and suffer his whole displeasure to arise against them! How fearful a thing will it be for unbelievers and contemners of the Gospel to fall into the hands of the living God (Heb. 10. 31.) when we hear a godly man thus lamenting the touch of his hand? They who fall into the hand of God, shall certainly fall under it.

Vers. 22. Why do ye persecute me as God, and are not satisfied with my flesh.

Some expound this Verse as a correction of the former, implying that Job had petitioned his friends in vain; as if he had said; I desired you to pity me, yet still you persecute me, why are ye so unmerciful? Can ye give me any reason, why you give me so much of your anger? Indeed we find his friends as sharp upon him as ever, as if they little regarded, or were not at all moved with his cry. But why were they thus inexorable? Why were their bowels shut up, and their hearts still hardned against him? Surely they were not void of humanity, no nor of pity; yet when he begs for pity of them, he found none, what should the reason of this be?

I answer, First, This was from a special dispensation of God, who hath the hearts (as of Kings, so) of all inferiour persons in his hand; friends are kind or harsh to us, easie to be intreated, or inflexible, at the dispose of God. The sensitive powers are stopt by the power of God, the eye while it sees doth not discern if he forbid; as 'tis said of the two Disciples in whose company Christ walked after his resurrection, Their eyes were holden that they should not know him (Luk. 24. 16.) Now as God holds the eyes from discerning, so the affections from loving and pitying when he pleaseth. And because the severity of Job's friends served the providence of God for his further tryal, therefore he bound up their spirits from any relenting towards him, or shewing him any pity.

Secondly, His friends being still prejudiced against him, and looking upon him as an hypocrite who had sinned greatly, and obscured the glory of God by standing up to justifie himself and maintain his integrity when the hand of God was gone out against him (they (I say) supposing him in this ill-temper) thought it unseasonable to pity him, and might possibly conclude, that to be favourable to him would be both dishonourable to God, and disadvantagious to their design, which was to humble him and bring him to repentance. So that lest they should seem to comply with, or flatter him in his sinful way, they kept on their old way of severe reproofs and threatnings, together with bitter insinuations of his hypocrisie and ungodliness. And it must be granted, that if this supposition or suspicion had been just, their perseverance in reproving him, and refusal to comfort him, had been justifiable. Though the patient complain, yet painful operations must not be forborn, nor corroding plaisters taken off till the soar be throughly searched and cleansed. To shew pity to men in their sins, is indeed to be cruel to them. As withholding more then is meet (from spending) tends to poverty, and proves a scattering of the estate, as Solomon speaketh (Prov. 11.24.) so withholding more then is meet from reproving, tends to flattery, and proves a fixing of the soul in sin.

Thus we may make out a fair sense of these words, as they refer to his friends hard and severe usage of him after he had made that passionate request for pity; yet I should rather expound them as a reprehension of their former severity. As if he had said; You need not ask what aileth me thus to cry, pity, pity; for is there not a cause? and have not you given me cause? do I complain before I am hurt? is there not as much reason as passion in my petition? have not you provoked me to it? unless I were senseless as a stone, how can I forbear to speak? and unless you are senseless as stones, you will now at last forbear to strike; Why do ye persecute me as God, and are not satisfied with my flesh?

To persecute is more then to afflict, every act of persecution hath many afflictions in it, but many afflictions may have no persecution at all in them; affliction may rise from irrational, yea from inanimate creatures; any thing may be an affliction to us, but persecution is the act of a rational creature; reason abused or clouded is the spring of persecution, and he that persecuteth thinks he hath reason to do so. We may take the picture of a persecutor from that description of Saul (afterwards Paul) Acts 9. 1. And Saul yet breathing out threatnings and slaughter against the Disciples of the Lord, &c. While a persecuter hath in him the breath of his own life, he breaths nothing but death against others; and those others against whom he breathes death, are such as are most worthy to live, the Disciples of the Lord: Nothing will satisfie him but the death and destruction of such. One wicked man may vex and oppose another even to death, but he persecutes none but Saints. Evil men are punished, but good men only are persecuted; or if they who are indeed evil are persecuted, 'tis because they make some profession or shew (at least) of goodness, Persecutio est actualis quæda conspiratio in aliquem ex zelo inimicoꝝ procedens.

Why do ye persecute me.

Persecution is the hardest tryal which Saints are put to. There are many promises to such as endure any kind of affliction from the hand of God, but there are more special promises to those that endure persecution from the hand of men; Where we are most comforted, we are most assaulted. (Mat. 5. 10.) Blessed are ye when ye are persecuted for righteousness sake, &c. rejoyce and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven. See 1 Pet. 4. 12, 13, 14. Revel. 2. 10, &c.

But did Job's friends persecute him? Persecution may be considered two wayes.

First, Strictly, as it is the actual opposition of any man for the cause of God, or for righteousness sake, proceeding from an enemy-like zeal against his person or his peace. Thus Job's friends did not persecute him, they did not at all seek to ruine him, but to reclaim him, and bring him to repentance.

Secondly, Persecution is taken in a large sense, and so to persecute is no more then to prosecute and put to trouble. Thus Job's friends had persecuted him all along, and thus notwithstanding his many protestations of his own integrity, and his late cry for pity, they continued to persecute him.

Why do ye persecute me as God?

Job speaks as if his friends had exampled themselves by God in this persecution; did God persecute him? I answer by the former distinction, God did not persecute him as persecution is taken strictly, but as persecution is taken in a large sense for a violent prosecution, so it may be said (with reverence) that God did persecute him while he followed him with afflictions.

But how is it that he saith, They persecuted him as God? as if they had set God for their pattern, and had done as they saw him do.

Man is not more unlike to God in any thing then in his persecution of man. The Lord is pitiful when he persecuteth, he in judgment remembreth mercy; he is kind when he is severe. This was the Ground of Davids choice (2 Sam. 24. 14.) Let me fall into the hand of the Lord, for his mercies are great, and let me not fall into the hands of men. When did he look for mercy? even when the Lord was resolved to afflict him. David did not say, his mercies are great, when he gives me wealth, riches, and honour, when he gives deliverance, and works salvation for his people, but when he is smiting his people, and consuming them with the dreadful pestilence. The woundings of God have more kindness in them then the kisses of many men. Man seldom shews pity to those who are smitten, but how rarely doth he shew pity while he is smiting, or mingle mercy with his justice; God usually exerciseth sparing mercy towards his enemies, and he alwayes doth it towards his own people, against whom he never suffers his whole displeasure to arise, though he be often provoked by them, and displeased with them.

And as men are unlike God in the manner of their afflicting one another, so in the design and intendment of it. God afflicts to try and purge us, most men afflict either to vex and trouble us, or to please themselves. The Fathers of our flesh (saith the Apostle Heb. 12. 10.) chasten us after their own pleasure, or as themselves please, yea for their own pleasure sometimes, or to please themselves, but he (that is, the Lord the father of spirits) for our profit. He doth it that the iniquity of Jacob may be purged, and this is all the fruit, to take away his sin (Isa. 27. 9.) But man doth it that some injury may be revenged, and this is all the fruit he looks after, that his enemy may be taken away, or that he may take the spoil. It is said of the Assyrian (Isa. 10. 7.) when God sent him against an hypocritical Nation, against the people of his wrath, to take the spoil, &c. Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so. What did he not mean or think? Did he not mean to go to take the spoil when he came thither? yes, he was forward enough to go, and he was greedy enough after the spoil when he was come: But he had no thought nor the least meaning to do this in any compliance, either with the will or purpose of God. All that was in his heart was to destroy and cut off Nations not a few, he only designed to heap up riches, and advance his honour and interest in the kingdoms of the world. This was all that was in his heart, while the work of God was in his hand. There are but few who follow Gods design in doing his work. And though Job's friends had somewhat in their hearts suitable to the design of God upon Job in his sufferings, even a further humbling and abasing of him in the sight of his own unworthiness, yet they were so unsuitable to God in their handling of him, and of the whole matter, that the wrath of God was kindled against them (Chap. 42. 7.) Why then doth he say, that they persecuted him as God?

I answer; First, God afflicted him without cause, as he tells Satan in the second Chapter: That is, without any such cause as Satan suggested against him. Job was a perfect man and upright, according to Gods own testimony. Thus Job might say to his friends; Will ye persecute me as God? God, indeed, out of his prerogative may do it, he hath supream power, and may do what he pleaseth, without giving an account of any of his matters; but it is too great a boldness in creatures to imitate God in this; Will ye dare to persecute me, when no reason appears but your own surmises and suspitions? ye know nothing by me, ye can produce no evidence against me, only conjectures. While you deal thus with me, do not you take upon you to persecute me as God in a prerogative way, and because you will. Forbear any longer to set your selves in the place of God. It doth not become you, nor is lawful for you who are my fellow-creatures, to deal with me as God doth. Are ye cloathed with his Majesty and power? Are ye supream and absolute in your proceeding as he? Are ye Gods? You take too much upon you ye sons of men. Either then shew me better reason for what ye do, or do so no more. Why do ye persecute me as God?

ye

Num idim vobis licet quod deo? An vos dei Majestatem & imperium atq; judiciariam potestatem adepti estis? Tacitè summam iis arrogantiã objicit, q.d. nã quid vos dii estis? Bold.

Secondly, God had counted him as an enemy (as he complained in the sixteenth Chapter, vers. 9. Chap. 19.11.) Now (saith he) will you persecute me as God? What if God shew himself an enemy to me, will you my friends, between whom and me there hath been a long profession of love? will you shew your selves enemies also? While the Lord appears in wrath, you should appear in love to your afflicted friend.

Thirdly, God afflicted him without intermission; God smote him incessantly with breach upon breach, blow upon blow, giving him no rest, no breathing, as was shewed before. Will ye afflict me as God, and give me no breathing, no rest? Will ye follow me with rebuke upon rebuke, and threat upon threat?

Fourthly, We may refer it to the degree of affliction; God hath greatly afflicted me, he hath laid his hand heavily upon me; will you proportion your hand to his? Shall your hand be heavy, because the hand of God is? Will you lay load on me, as God hath done? In prosecution of which sense, some expound the words by an usual Hebraism. To do a thing as God, is to do it with strength; the phrase importeth the most powerful and highest acting of strength; Will ye persecute me as God? or, as if ye were so many Gods? Thus he might charge them with an unwarrantable imitation of God in the manner of their opposition.

Quæ à deo fiunt & dei sunt ea maxima esse dicuntur.

But I conceive we need not seek out these Parallels between the manner of Gods afflicting him and theirs, but only look to the matter, or the thing it self in General. Will ye persecute me as God? That is, God hath afflicted and persecuted me, and will you do so too, my friends, will you? What reason is there that you should trouble me, because God hath? Though God be righteous in all that he hath brought upon me, yet you are not innocent. While you thus afflict me, you wound your own souls, though it be supposed that, you have God himself for your pattern.

Why do ye persecute me as God?

Hence Observe, We must not alwayes imitate God.

There are some things of which God saith, As ye see me do, do likewise: He saith; Be perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect (Mat. 5.48.) and be merciful as I am merciful. We should be merciful as God, and perfect as God; but we must not be angry as God, nor smite as God. The Lord saith (Isa. 47. 6.) I was wroth with my people, I have polluted mine inheritance, and given them into thy hand; yet the Lord reproves them who were extream against them too, Thou didst shew them no mercy, &c. As if he had said; Thou shouldest have shewed them mercy when I shewed them none. We must look to the Word of God, and not to his example for these things. It may be sin in us to do that which God doth, and to will that which God willeth in many cases. The revealed will of God is our rule, not his secret will; his secret will shall be done upon us, his revealed will must be done by us. A father is sick, and it is the secret will of God, that his sickness shall be to death, yet it is sinful for the child to will that his father should die: he ought to pray for his fathers life, because the revealed will of God is, that the child should pray for the life of his father; he must not say (possibly) it may be the will of God that my father shall die, therefore I will pray that he may die, or I will not pray that he may live. We are in that to look to our duty, not to the decree of God. So when God afflicteth, or layes his hand upon our brethren, we must not lay our hands upon them too: God calls us to pity, not to vex those that are oppressed with affliction: It is not alwayes the will of God, that we should will that which he willeth. It is the will of God, that many of his pretious servants should suffer, but he doth not will any to put them to sufferings, as if that were a thing suitable to his mind, or to the duty of man. God is just and holy in willing some things, which if man wills, he is unjust and unholy.

Volebat deus Jobum affligi, sed non mandabat, tanquã rẽ consentaneam imagini dei, quæ est in homine vel hominis officio, vel tanquã rem sibi charam & acceptã. Coc.

Nec in ea parte homo divinæ adversatur voluntati, quia vult deus ut homo sibi cõgruum expleat officiũ, non invadat quæ dei est, tantũ interest quid deo, quid homini velle congruat. August. Enchir. cap. 105.

It is the genius or disposition of the world, to bless those whom God outwardly blesseth; and to cross those upon whom God layeth an outward cross. Whereas God often afflicts those outwardly whom he loves, and heaps many outward blessings upon those whom he hates. As every man is not good whom God filleth with worldly goods; so neither is every one evil whom God presseth with worldly evils; therefore the outward dealings and dispensations of God to man, are no rule for man either in his opinion of or actings towards man. Yea in this manner to prosecute that which God willeth is to oppose his will; and to act differently from that which God willeth is to do his will; For the contrariety of mans will to Gods will doth not arise from his doing contrary to that which it is the will of God to do, but from his doing contrary to that which it is the will of God he should do. So, to the point in hand, though it be the will of God to afflict any of his people, yet he hath not willed us to afflict them, but to comfort and relieve them, and therefore though in relieving such we do contrary to what himself wills to do, yet we obey what he wills us to do. Nor doth our will cross his, though the object or thing willed be cross. Man is not displeased with what God doth and wills according to the higher cause, his secret will; nor is God displeased with what man doth according to the inferior cause, his revealed will. So then our contrariety to and compliance with the will of God cannot be concluded from the difference or identity of the object willed, but from the difference or identity of the actings of our wills with respect to the will of God. Hence Job saith, do not you think that you please God, or comply with his will, while you persecute me as he doth; Seeing though it be his will to do it, yet you cannot produce any warrant, that it is his will you should, Why do ye persecute me as God,

And are not satisfied with my flesh.

Et carnibus meis saturamini. Vulg. q.d. Nane vobis refectio & voluptas sit mei corporis cruciatus?

Some read it affirmatively; And ye are satisfied with my flesh; That is, my flesh is your feast, you feed upon my sorrow; my flesh, that is, the afflictions which wound my flesh are a refreshing to you, it is a pleasure to you to see me in pain. It is a sin not to pity those that are afflicted, what is it then to take pleasure in their afflictions, and to make our selves merry with their troubles, and to drink their tears as sweet wine? But the negative particle in the Original forbids this translation, nor may we conceive him charging his friends with this remorseless inhumanity. Yet

Secondly, Others read it (without the negative particle) as a prayer; Why do ye persecute me as God, be satisfied with my flesh, or, Pray be satisfied with my flesh; then the meaning is this, do not you force on this my affliction as far as God, Be you satisfied with my flesh; God afflicteth my soul, I confess he doth, his arrows stick upon and drink up my spirit, he hath sent trouble into my mind, and tryeth me with inward terrours and temptations. But my brethren, do not you persecute me as God, be satisfied with, with my flesh; that is, with the afflictions and troubles of my flesh, do not vex my spirit, as the Lord is pleased to do, be you satisfied with this pained body, with these putrified soars, proceed I pray, no farther, O do not vex my soul! Mr. Broughton gives this gloss upon it; Be contented, that my flesh is wasted, go not about like savage beasts to break my bones also; as if the opposition were not between flesh and spirit, but between flesh and bones. But the former interpretation carries a fuller sense, and a higher aggravation of his misery. For though to wound and break the bones, be more then to wound the flesh, and Satan (Chap. 2. 5.) moved for both, Put forth thy hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, yet to wound the spirit is far more then to wound the bones. Our translation which expresseth the negative particle, And are not satisfied with my

my flesh, may very well agree with, and be reconciled to this; for while according to this rendring he saith, Pray be satisfied with my flesh, he supposeth, that they were not satisfied with his flesh.

Now while Job spake thus to his friends, Ye are not satisfied with my flesh, his sorrow transported him too far; and while he was begging compassion, he shewed himself too passionate. Good men do not always keep the bounds, either of speaking or of doing. Job's friends had dealt harshly with him, but surely they were not thus insatiably cruel. Yet what he saith somewhat over-largly of his friends, is not at all over-large for some mens dispositions. Some there have been, and possibly such there are, who are not satisfied with the flesh of those who are in affliction. And therefore we may hence Note in general,

Such is the cruelty of some men, that they are unsatisfied with the corporal troubles of others, except they trouble their spirits, and vex their souls.

Yea some have risen to that height of wickedness, that nothing could satisfie them, unless they could damn their souls. Flesh will not satisfie them; to take away the life of the body, is a poor revenge; they must destroy the soul, if they can. Such was that exquisite malice of that Italian, who not satisfied with the flesh of his enemy, first threatned him into the denial of God, and then, that he might have a perfect revenge, slew him presently, lest he should repent. Such an abomination there is in the heart of some men. And it was an abomination very like this, which was in his heart, who being at the examination of one who had committed a great murther, for which bloody fact he professed much sorrow and repentance, said, It troubles me to see the villain so penitent, I am afraid he will go to heaven. The Civil Magistrate and Officers of the State should be satisfied with the outward flesh of most hainous offenders, as the Church ought to be satisfied with the inward flesh, that is, with the destruction of sin in the greatest sinners, and should rejoyce in, yea by all means provoke them to repentance, that their souls may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus (1 Cor. 5. 5.) Double revenge belongs only to him, Who after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell (Luke 12.5.) Indeed neither the most cruel Magistrates nor murtherers can do more (Luke 12.4.) yet they shall be judg'd as having done more, who have either wished or attempted more. That mixture of pride and malice which appeared in Haman was monstrous and inhumane, Who thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone, but sought to destroy all the Jewes who were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai (Hest. 3. 6.) Personal revenge would not serve his turn, it must be national; yet the malice and cruelty of those exceeds that of Haman, who think scorn to lay hands upon the body of a man alone, they must reach at his soul, and do their utmost to make him in one moment universally and eternally miserable. Flesh is too gross a morsel for their revenge, they must feed upon the spirit. Such cannot live like Canibals or savage beasts, upon the carkasses of men, they must like the Devil (that roaring Lyon who goes about seeking whom he may devour) lay waste their consciences, and prey upon their souls. And some there have always been who though they arrive not at this degree of wickedness to desire the damnation of the souls of others, yet they are very hungry after and active in the vexation of their souls, thinking they do not enough, unless they do that, which is a torture to their minds, a grief unto their spirits. Of such also, we may say, They are not satisfied with flesh. The cruelty of Davids enemies extended only to his flesh (Psal. 27. 2.) When the wicked, even mine enemies and foes, came upon me to eat up my flesh, &c. (That is, to destroy, to make an end of me) they stumbled and fell. To eat flesh is a proverbial speech, noting extreamest cruelty; so (Zach. 11. 9.) They shall eat every one the flesh of another; That is, they shall exercise utmost cruelty one against another; yet this cruelty in eating flesh, in spoiling the lives and estates of men, is a kind of mercy in comparison of theirs who devour souls. The wickedness of the Adulteress is expressed by Solomon (Prov. 16. 26.) That she hunteth for the pretious life; the life of the body is a precious commodity, but the life of the soul is far more precious. The whorish woman may be said to hunt for both, and chiefly for the latter; The taking away of that life is sometime the end which the Adulteress aims at, and it is alwayes the end and issue of her Adulteries, unless the Lord give repentance and pardon. Old Jacob saith of his sons, Simeon and Levi; Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel. We may say of the Adulteress, Cursed be her love, for it is fierce; and her embraces, for they are cruel; She is not satisfied with flesh, she hunts for the precious life, even the precious life of the never-dying soul.

Thirdly, These words are interpreted as expressing both the spirit and the work of detractors and slanderers, their spirit is full of spight, and their work is to eat up the honour of others. Thus while Job's friends judg'd him an hypocrite, and declared him a wicked one, he might say they were not satisfied with his flesh. Slander devours a man alive; and it devours more then flesh, yea that which some esteem more then their lives, their credit and reputation. Now as we may say of all slanderers, They are not satisfied with the flesh of those they oppose, so it is very rare that any man opposeth another without some mixture of slander. The Christians in the Primitive times were subjected and willingly gave up themselves to a thousand sorts of death for the name of Christ; but this did not satisfie their persecuters. They always endeavoured as much to slay and kill their credits, as they did their bodies; and were as busie to invent and set a face upon horrible lies against them, as to invent terrible tortures for them. They could no more bear it that their good names should live, then that they should live. And therefore they suggested incest, murther, and what not, as the common practises of their early meetings. That they were Christians, was indeed, their crime, that was capital by the Laws of those times; but their persecuters were not satisfied with their flesh, which they might (at pleasure) devour, because they professed Christ, they must fall upon their good names, and charge them with enormities in manners, whom they meant to destroy for the faith. The like methods we have found revived in these latter days; all ways being used to stain their reputation, and heap reproaches upon their persons, whose way and interest hath been opposed. The Apostle warns the Church of Galatia (and that is our warning) (Gal. 5. 15.) If ye bite and devour one another, take heed ye be not consumed one of another.

Est detractoris periphrasis. Obtrectatores vivis pascuntur carnibus. Merc.

But some may say, if men be once bitten and devoured one of another, what is there remaining of them to be consumed?

I answer; By this biting and devouring the Apostle means slandering, backbiting, and evil-speaking one of another. Words which have such a tendency in them, are devouring words, they devour his good name who is concerned by them: Now saith the Apostle, Take heed ye do not devour one another by sharp words, lest that provoke you to cruel actions; usually men first devour one another by the tongue, and then by the hand; detracting words stir up such strife and contention, such distractions and divisions in families, neighbourhoods, and Churches, as prove an utter consumption to them.

Lastly, We may refer this to the contempt and scorn which they powred upon him; under the weight and sence of which he had complained more then once before; as if upon a fresh remembrance of it he had thus bespoken them. O my friends, is it not enough that my body is worn and corrupted with painful soars, unless you pour in the Vineger of sharp invectives and bitter scoffs, to perplex and afflict my troubled spirit? Are these the comforts which you have prepared for your friend? Why are ye not satisfied with my flesh.

Annon satis vobis est, quod corpus meum ulceribus cruciatur, nisi insuper me ludibrio habeatis? O saevitiam plusquā ferinā. Merc.

Thus much of Job's supplication for pity, and his deprecation of their further persecution; in the next words he calls for audience and attention to what he had yet to offer; O that my words were written, &c.

VERS. 23, 24, 25.

O that my words were now written, O that they were printed in a Book!
That they were graven with an iron pen and lead, in a rock for ever!

For

For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon earth, and though after my skin Worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God.

THis sorrowful Patient having cryed to his friends for pity, at verse 21, and for sparing, at verse 22, that they would both condole his former, and forbear to give him further sufferings; he now begs (if he fail in those requests) at least due attention to, and serious consideration of what he had yet to say (vers. 23, 24, 25, &c.) in which (as some conceive) he reassumes the proof of his integrity, and doth it two wayes.

First, By a vehement wish, that all his words might be brought to a stricter, yea to the strictest tryal; O that my words were written, &c. vers. 23, 24.

Secondly, By a strong profession of his faith in the Redeemer, and of an assured expectation of a happy resurrection to a better life, though he should never see good day more in this (vers. 25.) The former shews, that he had lived in all good conscience towards men, and the latter that he was ready to die in a right faith towards God.

The argument of the first part may be thus framed up; He who desires that all his words may not only be heard, but written, and not only written but printed, yea ingraven in a rock, that all posterity may have the skanning of and commenting upon them; this mans conscience doth acquit him, and he stands clear in the apprehension of his own integrity.

But it is my desire, that my words were written that they were printed, that they were ingraven, that all may skan them, and comment upon them.

Therefore my conscience doth acquit me, and I am clear in the apprehension of my own integrity.

This assumption is laid down in the three and twentieth and four and twentieth Verses, in much variety of high expressions, all concurring in this, that he did not only not fear nor decline the judgment of the present age, or of any mortal man then living; but also that he did neither fear nor decline the judgment of posterity, who use to be more severe and critical in their determinations, being freed from all personal respects and ingagements, which often byas the judgment, and blind the understanding, in reference to those who are present and alive. And though this be only a probable argument, not conclusive, or demonstrative of the sincerity of Job, (for many are stiff enough to their errours, and are not afraid to commend them over to the censure of posterity by writing) yet considering that Job looked on himself as a dying man, and that he had much more to say for himself, then this his bare say-so, or verbal asseveration, therefore the argument carries weight in it, and a fair ground that he was sincere, in what he spake and did, because he cared not who heard what he had spoken, or examin'd what he had done; Guilty consciences love not to examine or try themselves, much less to be examined and tryed by others. Thus we may be led into the general scope of the three and twentieth and four and twentieth verses; I shall now briefly open the parts.

Vers. 23. O that my words were now written.

As if he had said; For as much as after all these discourses, I find that there is little will and less care in you to tender my condition, and to do me good, there remains only this last desire which I put up unto you, that what I have both spoken and done, may be faithfully registred and recorded, that some Scribe would now appear while we are in dispute, and faithfully note and set down all the passages which have been between us. Thus he speaks also in the close of this dispute (Chap. 31. 35.) O that one would hear me, behold my desire is that the Almighty would answer me, and that mine adversary had written a Book: let a Book be written of these disputes, I care not who writes it. I would trust even an adversary to write it; O that mine adversary would write a Book, I would take it upon my shoulder, and bind it as a Crown to me; I am sure, mine adversary could say nothing justly concerning me, but what I may glory in, and make my Crown.

מי יתן Quis dabit.

O that my words.] The Hebrew is, Who will give me? As if this were such a special favour, that he looking about him could not find any man ready to bestow it on him; as if pen, ink, and paper, and the pains of writing, were a greater bounty then he was like to meet with in the world. The Hebrew expression, imports much difficulty, though not an impossibility; who will do it? As if he had said, it is hard to find a man to undertake this task; O that my words, &c. 'Tis queried here, what words he meaneth, or what he meaneth by these words, there are three opinions about it.

First, Some take words in a general notion for the history of all his actions and sufferings in the whole series of his tryal. O that, what I have done, O that, what I have endured were faithfully recorded. Words are put for things by a frequent Hebraisme.

Secondly others restrain these words to what he had said by way of defence or apologie for himself, in this contest with his friends.

Thirdly we may rather refer these words he would have written to what he was about to speak, to which these two Verses seem but a Preface; O that the words which I shall speak next might be written, though that all that I have already spoken be scattered in the wind. Golden words indeed those were and worthy to be written in Letters of Gold. Glorious words concerning the Redeemer, concerning the last Judgment, concerning the Resurrection, and his hope of Glory, come next to be opened; O that these words (saith he) were written, that they were printed in a Book, that they were graven, &c. There are three steps of this wish.

First, That his words might be written.

Secondly, That they might be printed.

Thirdly, That they might be graven; all three note duration, yet with a gradual difference.

To write a thing, notes the preservation of it; a word heard quickly perisheth, 'tis gone into air, that which is written, is preserved and continueth; We transmit our minds, our opinions and actions to posterity by writing.

But Job would have his words not only written, but printed, O that they were printed, printed in a Book. The word which we translate printed, signifies, first, simply to set down, or describe a thing Historically, or by way of narration: Secondly, It signifies authoritatively to set down a thing as a Law, as a Statute, by way of determination. The word is frequently used in the Old Testament, to express those Laws, Ordinances and Statutes which the Lord prescribed unto his people; And so this word speaks more then the former; Laws and resolutions of State are more strongly confirmed and more carefully preserved, then bare Narrations are.

O that they were printed in a book.

That is, that my words were written as publick Statutes, Ordinances, and Lawes, with a stamp of authority upon them, that they may be preserved as the Monuments of a Commonwealth, and the Records of a Court are. (Isa. 10.1.) Wo to them that decree unrighteous decrees. The word that we translate to print, is there rendered to decree. (Isa. 33.22.) Thou art our Law-giver, it is this word, or our Statute maker, as we put in the Margent.

Again, When he saith; O that my words were printed; We are not to take printing in that strict sense used amongst us, for that new Art or invention opposed to writing. We have no ground to believe that the Art of printing was used in those ages. The first time that ever it was heard of in Europe (as our Historians tell us,) was (little more then two hundred years past) in the year one thousand four hundred and fourty. It begun to be practised (as it is said) at Harlem, and was perfected at Mentz. Here printing is taken in a large sense for the setting down and describing of any thing in the most authentick and strongest manner, for the perpetuating of it. And therefore also he would have it printed in a book, not in loose shattered papers, but in a book; for though that use also of binding bookes be not very ancient, their writing (for the most part) being in Roules or Volumes; yet those Roules were under much care and inspection; so that this addition of printing in a book carries in it a further degree of care to preserve what was printed. (Gen. 5.1.) This is the book of the generations of Adam; (Matth. 1.1.) The book of the generation of Jesus

Optandi forma Hebræis usitata, valet idem quod utinam. Pronomen quis in scripturis sanctis non pro impossibili sed pro difficili semper accipitur. Hieron. in Eccles. 3. cuncta quæ pertulit. Greg. Verba pro rebus ipsis. Polychr. Ea quæ postea de fide & Auctore resurrectionis subjungit, & de adventu domini. Hier. Epist. 61. ad Pammach. Quæ dicturus sum de spe, quam in deo firmavi. Aquin.

Vox audita perit, litera scripta manet.

חקק Ad ea pertinet quæ tanquam firma & rata perscribuntur ad publicam memoriam, cujusmodi sunt statuta, jura, leges.

John Gerr. tudenberg first inventer of Printing in Europe. An. 1440.

Opto (quasi se corrigens) non tantum scribi communi ratione, sed ut exarentur in libro, majus quippe hoc est & firmius

Jesus Christ; These books were written to be preserved and laid up. That is, of the birth, life, and death of Adam and of Jesus Christ. Job would have a book of his Generation also; O that my words were printed in a book; And which is yet more;

Vers. 24. That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the Rock for ever.

This verse is the same in substance with the former, and contains only a further amplification of his desire; it would not satisfie him that his words were written with a quill, or printed in an ordinary book of parchment, or paper, (there were divers materials, upon which writings were made in ancient times, as also at this day) such books may soon be eaten with wormes and moths, at least, time the eater of all things, will eat them up; but (saith he) I would have my words written with a pen of iron and lead in the Rock for ever.

A pen of iron.] The Prophet (Jer. 12. 1.) useth the same expression; The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a Diamond; implying that it was written to perpetuity: so here, O that my words were graven with an iron pen; That is, so graven, that (as he explaineth his intention in the last words of the verse) it might last for ever. Those things which continue very long (though they have an end) look like eternity, and so are truly said to be done, or to last for ever. Rocks have a kind of everlastingness in them. And therefore that which is written upon a Rock cannot but be everlasting. God is called a Rock of Ages (which we translate, an everlasting strength, Isa. 26. 4.) not only because his own strength continueth, and is the same in all Ages, but because all Rocks are of long continuance, and last many, very many, no man knows how many ages. So that to write upon a Rock is opposed not only to writing upon the water, or in the sand which continue not at all, but to all those usual wayes of writing which are of long continuance; this being once done, may be said to be done for ever. In this all agree; but there is some difference what the meaning should be, of this iron pen and lead, with which he wished his words might be graven in a Rock for ever. The question is whether he means a pen of lead, as well as an iron pen; And if so, it may be doubted, why having called for an iron pen, he should call for a leaden? What can a pen of lead do upon a Rock? lead being softer then a Rock, how can it make impression, or draw a letter upon it?

There are three things which may be offered for the removing of this scruple, and the further clearing of this Scripture.

Publica instrumenta plumbeis voluminibus reservata. Plin. l. 13. c. 11. Fortè ferro incidebant, quod postea plumbo colorabant. Drus. Rab. Selom. Plumbo per fulcos infuso. Jun. Fortè plumbum temperatura aliqua indurabant adeo ut stilo ejus in silice aut petra incidi posset. Pine. Optat Job ut sermones sui immortales fiant, & in longum ævum durent, hoc enim efficit, stilo ferreo insculpi, & exarari plumbo.

First thus; Some render it, in lead, as making the pen to be but one, and that of iron; but that the writing should be upon a twofold matter; first, upon lead; and secondly upon the Rock; as if he had said, I would not have a skin of parchment, or a sheet of paper, but a sheet of lead to write upon; with which the ancient custom of writing matters of greatest moment, whether decreed or done in lead, agreeth well.

Secondly, Because lead seems to be spoken of here as the instrument of writing, not as the matter upon which they did write. I conceive it may be an allusion to another custome among ancient Engravers, who when they had cut the letters in stone, or (as he saith) in a Rock (that is, in Marble cut out of the Rock) when (I say) they had formed the letters with graving instruments, or iron pens, then they coloured them with lead, or filled the cuts of the letters with lead. Thus they might be said to grave with an iron pen and lead, because when the iron pen had shaped the Characters, they powred lead into the furrows or cuts of the letters, to render them more clear and legible.

Thirdly, They who interpret the lead, by a pen of lead, say that there was an art of tempering lead with other metals, which hardned it, and so made it fit for a graving instrument. But it is not much material, which of these we determine. This is plain, that in this wish he alludeth to some extraordinary way of writing in those times upon Monuments of publick Pillars, that the contents or matter so engraven might be transmitted to posterity, and be made immortal, even to endure for ever.

From these two Verses, which only express the strength of his desire, that what he had to say, might be safely preserved for the Observation of after ages; learn first,

That our honest and just desires, (though somewhat passionate) and gratiously accepted and answered by God.

Job speaks here in some heat, yet his heart was honest, and his aim sincere in what he desir'd, and the Lord granted his desire. He wisheth his words might be written, and his words were written, God provided him a Secretary. Job's tongue was as the pen of a ready writer, and God made ready a writer to pen down what he spake with his tongue. Few words have had such a writing, or such a writer; his were written in a book, and written as with an iron pen and lead in a rock for ever; they are preserved to this day, and shall to the end of the World, as Monuments of his patience and uprightness, as also of the Lords power and faithfulness.

Secondly, from this confidence of Job in desiring to have what he had said, or what he had to say, written, we may observe;

Truth seeks no corners.] Truth loves to be tryed, it cares not before whose judgment-seat it comes; it would be written, that it might be seen and considered of all men. Pure Gold fears neither the furnace nor the ballance. Error may shew fair till 'tis tryed, but truth shewes alwayes fairest after tryal.

Thirdly, As this writing specially refers to that noble and divine confession of faith, which Job made in the next Verse; Observe,

It is a duty to profess our faith openly, when we are called to it.

Job had a call to do this; for though he were not directly (and in terminis) invited to make a confession of his faith, yet the dealing of God, and of his friends with him, put him upon it, and bespake it of him. 'Tis high time to declare the ground of our hope, and upon what foundation we are built, when storms either of affliction or persecution assault and shake us; and then 'tis best to do it freely and openly, that our faith may be as famous as our afflictions are. Or (as the Apostle Peter speaks (1 Epist. 1. 7.) That the tryal of our faith being much more precious then of Gold that perisheth, though it be tryed in the fire, might be found to praise, and honour, and glory, not only (as he there saith) at the appearing of Jesus Christ, but in the day of our suffering. As we must not hide our talents in a napkin by our idleness, so we must not hide our faith in a napkin by our silence; we should be so far from being ashamed of our hope, that we should glory in it while we are in tribulation, and desire as (with Job) that it might be written with a pen of iron in a rock for durableness, so that it might be written as with the beams of the Sun for light, and clearness. The Apostle tells the Corinthians; Ye are our Epistle written and seen of all men (2 Cor. 3. 2.) They held forth the faith, both in their profession and practise; they were a breathing confession of faith, a living Epistle, read and seen of all, and so should we be. As faith must be made visible by our works, Shew me thy faith by thy works, saith the Apostle James, so it must be made audible by our words.

There were a sort of Hereticks spoken of by Eusebius, who held this opinion, That there was no need for any man at any time to make open confession of his faith, especially not in times of danger: Then (according to their doctrine) all might conceal and keep their faith to themselves, that so they might also keep themselves in a whole skin, and avoid the danger. This is, indeed, a safe way to avoid persecution and martyrdom, but it is a sinful way. We have just cause to suspect that their faith is dead, who thus hide and bury it. Saints are bound to profess their faith (when called to it) to the death, and to contend earnestly for truth, whatever afflictions and sufferings come after them. The Apostle reports his and the Saints troubles in those times for the Gospel; We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in distress; persecuted, but not forsaken; alwayes bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, &c. But what did Paul (and his fellow-Saints) in those boistrous and bloudy times? Did he politickly preserve himself, or hide his profession? No he, proclaims it, as he saith the Saints of old did before, who were spirited with the same faith (2 Cor. 4. 13.) We having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written,

Euseb. lib. 6. cap. 38.

I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore we speak. What a Christian believes, he should be ready to speak; and he that believes indeed cannot but speak. The Apostles being threatned, answer, We cannot but speak the things which we have heard and seen. Faith is like the oyntment in the right hand, which betrayeth it self; and as it is an evidence, to the Soul that hath it, of those things which are not seen corporally or naturally, so it will give an evidence to others of those things which it self hath seen spiritually.

Fourthly, From the season in which Job made this confession; Observe;

There is nothing doth more support and keep up the spirit in times of sorrow and danger, then a free confession of our faith, and confidence in the Redeemer.

The way to overcome all the evils and troubles in the World, is to say, I believe; Faith is our victory (1 Joh. 5.4.) Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Christ is the only begotten Son of God. He that believes overcomes. The profession and holding out of our faith, is our actual conquest and victory over the world. Faith is our Shield, whereby we quench all the fiery darts of the wicked, whether men or Devils. Faith leadeth us to a fountain of living waters, which at once refresheth us, and puts out that fire. If once faith get up, all evils and temptations fall before it. Job that he might get victory over all the oppositions of men and Devils, holds forth his Shield, and makes profession of his faith in God.

What was that? A compendious yet exact confession of faith it was; as will appear in opening the next Verse, with the context following.

Vers. 25. For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the Earth.

For the cleering of these words, I shall premise two general veins of Interpretation.

First, The Jewish Writers interpret this Context of a metaphorical resurrection, in reference to Job's outward condition, or of his resurrection from a state of affliction. We have this sense of a resurrection illustriously held forth (Ezek. 37.) where the return of the people of Israel out of Babylon is described by the reviving of dry bones. God himself makes the Comment (vers. 11,12.) Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole House of Israel: Behold, they say, our bones are dried, and our hope is lost, we are cut off for our parts. Therefore prophesie and say unto them: Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, O my people, and bring you into the Land of Israel. An estate of extream misery and danger is often in Scripture expressed by death. Paul saith, that he had been in deaths often (2 Cor. 11.23.) and that God had delivered him from a Great death (2 Cor. 1.10.) that is, from deadly danger. Such a condition deprives us of all the comforts of life, and makes our lives oftentimes more bitter then death; yea, men in such a condition are spoken of as buried and dissolved into dust. In pursuance of which metaphor, deliverance is called, a quickning, a reviving, a rising again, Psal. 71. 20. Thou which hast shewed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and shalt bring me again from the depths of the earth. So Psal. 80.18. Psal. 85.6. Isa. 26. 19. Hos. 6.2. Rom. 11.15. In which last place, the calling and restoring of the Jews, is called Life from the dead. Now (I say) the Rabbins generally, as also some of our learned Expositors run upon that strain here; conceiving that Job therefore calls God his Redeemer, because he had to that day preserved him alive in the midst of so many deaths and dangers, as also because he had a sure hope that he should through the power of God survive them, and be restored to such an estate of honour and riches, as he had enjoyed in the former part of his life; this they call his resurrection and redemption, and so accordingly they fit an explication to the several passages of this Context; yet their opinion is strongly opposed by others, with much evidence of reason.

Mercer. Calvin.

Three special reasons may be urged against it.

First, the height and spiritualness of Job's language tells us, that his thoughts moved, and that his hopes were fixed above this worlds felicity; His faith soared aloft in the meditation of a Redeemer, in the præmeditation of the last Judgment, and in the vision of God: all which argue more then a metaphorical resurrection.

Secondly, Though his expressions in the letter may be fitted to that inferior sense, yet if we remember what hath been touched more then once in the former passages of this Book, we find that Job had as it were disclaimed all hope of restoring unto any temporal happiness in this life, affirming, that his hope was gone, and that he was worse then a tree cut down, of which there is hope, that it will grow again, and put forth tender branches from the root; as for him, as he had no desire, so no expectation of recovering his former beauty and greatness, with promises of which his friends (upon the supposition of his repentance) had often endeavoured to raise his spirits and fill his sails. Therefore it seems altogether improbable, that he should rise to that height of hope about it in this place, contrary to the current of all his former discourses upon that point.

Thirdly, He saith, that he should see God with the same eyes, that he should see him for himself, and not another; which argueth that he intended not a resurrection of his outward estate; for what doubt could there be, that if he were raised from affliction, but that he should see God with the same eyes, and that he himself should see him, and not another, or not for another; but to believe the restoring the same body, or the identity of the eyes of his body after all had mouldred into dust, this was a high act of believing. From these reasons it appears that Job holds forth his faith in a resurrection, not to a temporal good in this life, but to eternal life. In which second sense I shall open and prosecute the several passages of this Scripture. Besides many others, one of the Ancients gives his Judgment clearly for it; What (saith he) can be more manifest then this Prophesie. None since Christ came in the flesh have spoken so plainly of the resurrection, as this man did before the coming of Christ in the flesh.

Quid hac prophetia manifestius? Nullus tam apertè post Christum, quam iste ante Christū de resurrectione loquitur. Hieron. Epist. 61. ad Pammach.

I know that my Redeemer liveth, &c.

As if he had thus argued; He that waits by faith in the Redeemer for the resurrection of his body to eternal life, after death hath done its worst, is not a wicked man, or an hypocrite, as you have charged me.

But such is my faith, I believe in the Redeemer, and I look to rise (after this body is consumed and eaten of worms) to an eternal happy life; therefore I am not such as you judge me to be, neither wicked not hypocrite. You account me as rejected of God, yet I know that God is my Redeemer, I know that he lives for ever, and that he is mine for ever; and therefore do not think, because I have no hope of this life, that therefore I despair of life: do not take upon you, that you only know these mysteries, and that I am ignorant of them, as my friend Bildad concluded in the eighteenth Chapter (this is the portion of the man that knows not God,) for even I also know that my Redeemer liveth, and shall stand upon the earth at the latter day.

For I know. What this knowing is, hath been opened (Chap. 13.18.) upon those words, I know that I shall be justified. In brief, 'tis knowing upon the greatest certainty, knowing without all wavering; As if Job had said, My judgment is fixed, and my faith confirmed in this thing, it is as clear to me, that my Redeemer liveth, as if I had already seen him alive. It is as sure to me that I shall rise again, as if I had been dead, and were already risen. My faith makes this as evident to me now, as my experience hereafter shall.

Verbum Originale omnē dubitationē excludit, & notat mentis firmam adhæsionem & rem satis superque exploratam.

I know. This knowing came not in either by sense or any natural demonstration; Faith is the gift of God, and so is the knowledge of Faith, or that knowledge which is the full assurance of Faith. There is an exceeding greatness of the power of God put forth to those-ward who believe according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead (Ephes. 1.19,20.) Faith is the evidence of things not seen; who can make things not seen evident to us, but he who is every where evident, yet no where seen. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, as the Apostle gives the definition (Heb. 11.1.) Who can make things absent from our enjoyment, present to our comfort, but he who is alwayes present? Saints do not see what they believe, yet they know what they believe. When Joseph brought his two Sons, Manasses and Ephraim to his father Jacob for his blessing, Jacob put his right hand upon the younger, and his left hand upon the elder; Joseph observing this, this, humbly corrects his fathers error, Not so my father, this is the first-born, put thy right hand upon his head; but his father refused and said, I know it my Son, I know it, (*Gen.*48.19.) I do not this upon mistake, I know what I do, though the sight of my eye be dim, yet I see clearly enough what I do. Faith sees not upon whom it layeth its hand, but it knoweth upon whom it layeth its hand. (2 *Tim.*1.12.) I know whom I have believed. Faith gives us acquaintance with God, before we see him, and when we see him, faith shall be swallowed up.

I know that my Redeemer.

גאל Significat 1 rem aut personam venditam redimere. 2 captam liberare. 3 interem tã vindicare aut ulcisci.

The word which we translate Redeemer, comes from a root which is applied three wayes in Scripture.

First, To buying again of that which was alienated by sale or morgage, and so to reduce it unto the possession of those whose it was before, *Lev.*25.25.

Secondly, To the rescuing or bringing back of those who have been taken prisoners and led into captivity. There is a double way of redeeming such.

First, By force and power. Thus when Lot was taken prisoner by those four Kings that came against Sodom, Abraham armed his servants, and by force redeemed or brought him back, *Gen.*14.14,16.

Redimere est quasi rursus emere.

Secondly, There is a redemption by price or ransom; To redeem is to buy again; captives are often ransomed and redeemed by price; Christ hath redeemed us both wayes, as will be shewed further in the opening of this Scripture. And because when we are surprized by or engaged in any pressing danger, it costs much or calls for much power to vindicate and restore us; therefore this word redeeming is often used in Scripture to signifie deliverance from any eminent or imminent danger. (Psal. 69.18.) Draw nigh unto my soul, and redeem it. And again (*Psal.*72.14.) He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence; that is, from all secret plots and open actings tending to destruction. And thus the Lord is said to redeem his people from the hand of the Enemy, (Psal. 106.10.) And Jacob speaks of the Angel that redeemed him from all evil (Gen 48.16.) Job's redeemer and this Angel who redeemed Jacob from all evil, is the same, even Jesus Christ; of whom the Lord speaks to Moses (*Exod.*23.20,21.) Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared; beware of him and obey his voyce, provoke him not, for he will not pardon your transgressions, for my Name is in him. This Angel can be none but Christ, the creating, not a created Angel. Pardon of sin belongs not to creatures, nor is the name of God in them; Some creatures have the name of God upon them; but he only hath the name of God in him, who is of the same nature with God.

Thirdly, This word is applied to the avenging of their death, who have been wrongfully slain. (Numb. 35.12.) Goel is the avenger of blood, or the redeemer of blood, because he came to take vengance on such as had unjustly shed the blood of his kinsman. He may be said to redeem a man from death, who according to justice pursues him who took away his life. Christ is not only our Redeemer, by restoring us to life, but our avenger by pursuing and spoiling him (that is, the Devil) who was our murderer, or the contriver of our death.

Again, To be a Redeemer is taken two wayes.

λυτρωτὴν i.e. liberatorem

רוצא Diremptorẽ litium. Syr.

First, More largly for a deliverer, or helper; so 'tis one of the names of God; and to redeem is both his work and his honour. (*Exod.*6.6.) I will redeem you with a stretched out arm, and with great Judgments. In which sense also Moses is call'd a deliverer, (*Act.*7.35.) according to the Greek, which the Syriack translates by a word that signifies a Judge, or one that determines a controversie. God sent Moses to mannage his controversie with Pharaoh, and deliver his people from that state of bondage. And thus God was Job's Redeemer, because he pleaded his cause, and determin'd for him, delivering him out of his affliction, as is reported in the latter part of this book. Under this more general notion (I say) God is often call'd a Redeemer; for as he suffers his people to be carried away by, and fall into the hands of their enemies, and sells them into the enemies hands (that they may know the difference between his service, and the service of the Nations, as he speaks, 2 Chron. 12.8.) yea he sells them for nought (Psal. 44.12.) As sometimes they are said to sell themselves (Isa. 51.1.) Which of my Creditors is it to whom I have sold you. It was a custome among the Jews that parents who were poor and unable to pay their debts, sold their children to their creditors, or their creditors took their children for their debts, as appears by the pitiful complaint of the widow to the Prophet Elisha (2 Kings 4.1.) In allusion to which the Lord challenges the Jews to name his creditors (if they could) to whom he had sold them: As if he had said, I am not in debt to any man, or Nation of men, that I should need (as you sometimes do) to sell my children to free my self; no, for your iniquities (as it follows) you have sold your selves. Now when God fetcheth his people back again, and delivers them from that captivity or misery, into which either he sells them, or they sell themselves (though indeed he never sells them, till they sell themselves) then he is call'd a Redeemer, (*Jer.*15.21.) I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible. And in Psal. 130.7. With thee there is plenteous redemption; that is, with thee there are many redemptions, thou multipliest deliverances as fast as our troubles multiply.

More strictly to redeem, and the Title Redeemer, is applied to Jesus Christ; to whom also, I conceive, we may particularly apply all those works of redemption, which in the Old Testament are ascribed to God. For he was God the Redeemer from the beginning, long before he was God manifested in the flesh. And all the Redemptions of his Church and people from temporal affliction, as well as from eternal damnation, do properly belong to him. It was (saith God) by the blood of thy Covenant, that is, by the blood of Christ, with whom God made the Covenant in our behalf; that God sent forth the prisoners; that is, their disconsolate state in Babylon, *Zech.*9.11.

In this strict sense the word Redeemer, suites Christ fully. For Goel signifies one that is near to us in consanguinity, one of our blood, bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. Hence an ancient Translator renders here, I know that my kinsman, or he that is near to me liveth. And such were under a special obligation to redeem, as appears, Ruth 3.12. Chap. 4. 4,5. where the case is set down between Boas, and the other kinsmen. Boas was a kinsman and had right to redeem, yet because there was a nearer kinsman, he would not meddle but upon his refusal. As if he had said, you have the first right, and may make use of your priviledge if you please; If thou wilt redeem it redeem it, but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me that I may know, for there is none to redeem it besides thee, and I am after thee. From this proceeding 'tis evident that redemption belonged to those that were near of kin, and first to the neareſt. Jesus Christ is near to us, therefore properly and in a strict sense he is (Goel) our Redeemer, he is flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone, he is one with us. As we are the children of God by Regeneration, so the brethren of Christ by Adoption. For both he that sanctifieth, and they that are sanctified, are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren (*Heb.*2.11.) Christ and we are all of one, that is of one nature; we, and Christ as man, are not only of one Father or Efficient cause which is God; but we are of one nature or material cause which is flesh and blood. In which respect he is our Redeemer upon the strictest tearms and laws of redemption. And in that strict sense, besides him there is no redeemer. For though God the Father in the Son by the holy Spirit be indeed our Redeemer, yet properly and according to the signification of this word, Jesus Christ alone is our Redeemer; who taking our nature upon him, and becoming our brother, had right to redeem us, even as being God in our nature, he had full power to redeem us. We are redeemed by the blood of Christ (*Ephes.*1.7.) In whom we have redemption thorough his blood.

ὁ ἀγχιστεὺς μὲ proximus meus. Theodotio

Redimere est asserere & vindicare aliquid vel ab iniquo vel alieno possessore jure propinquitatis. Redemptoris & propinqui idem nomen in scriptura.

Etsi Deus pater in filio per spiritum sanctum verissimè redemptor noster est, proprio tamen hebraeæ vocis significatio Christo convenit; qui quia frater noster, (assumpta nostra carne) factus est, jus redimendi habet, & certissimam redimendi potestatem quia Deus est in carne manifestatus.

The blood of Christ may be considered two wayes in the work of our redemption.

First, As the price of our redemption, we have redemption thorough his blood; that is, blood is the price, by which we are redeemed; We are bought with a price (1 *Cor.*6.20.) What that is, we are taught (1 *Pet.*1.20.) Not with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of the Son of God, as a Lamb undefiled, and without spot.

Secondly, As the blood of Christ may be considered as it it is the price of Redemption; so also as it carries the right of Redemption: Blood implies nearness in relation. God made of one blood all Nations of men (Acts 17. 26.) that is, the blood of Adam the first man hath run in the veins of all his posterity; and so there is a natural relation among all mankind, though not a legal or civil. Now as God made all Nations of men of one blood, so he hath made Christ and us of one blood. For as much as the Children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself took part of the same, that through death he might destroy him who had the power of death, that is, the Devil, and deliver them who through fear of death, &c. (Heb. 2. 14.) Thus (I say) the blood of Christ and ours being one, and so one that he is our brother and kinsman, he had the right, yea (we may say with reverence) it was his duty to redeem us. Christ as God had power to redeem us, but as being (Immanuel) God with us, one with us, a kinsman, a brother, he not only had a right, but he was obliged to redeem us.

To clear the point a little further, there are five things concurring to compleat the Office and Service of our Redeemer.

First, The Redeemer must be a kinsman.

Secondly, He must redeem upon that ground, or under that notion, as a kinsman.

Thirdly, He must deliver those who were under restraint or captivity, from the hand of their enemies and oppressors.

Fourthly, He must not pay any price to the oppressor.

Fifthly, He must pay the price to the true Lord, or into his hands, to whom the redeemed originally and of right do belong.

These five Considerations meet in Christ our Redeemer; For,

First, He is our kinsman.

Secondly, He redeemed us upon that account, as he was a brother or kinsman.

Thirdly, He hath fetcht us out of the hands of our oppressor the Devil.

Fourthly, He paid nothing to the Devil in lieu of our redemption.

Fifthly, He paid the price into his hand who was our first Lord, even into the hands of his Father.

Mankind fallen, may be looked upon two wayes.

First, As under the power of sin and Satan.

Secondly, As under the power and Justice of God: When Christ came to redeem us, he paid nothing to the Devil but blows; He spoiled principalities and powers (Col. 2. 15.) but he did not make them satisfaction; we owed the Devil nothing, he was only an executioner to vex and afflict us; but he paid the price to his Father, under whose justice we were fallen; and so he exactly fulfilled all the duties, and sustained all the parts of a Redeemer to the utmost.

To clear up this Title or Office of Christ yet further, we may take notice that Christ is called in Scripture, a Mediator as well as a Redeemer, yet these titles are not of equal extent. Christ is a Mediator, yea a head for, and to those, whose Redeemer he is not. The good Angels have Christ for their head and Mediator as well as man, but man only hath Christ for his Redeemer. The evil or fallen Angels could not be redeemed, therefore Christ took not upon him the nature of Angels (Heb. 2. 16.) The good Angels, or those who stand in obedience, had no need to be redeemed, yet they had need to be confirmed, and therefore Christ took care of the Angels, and became their head and Mediator. So that as Christ is Mediator between God and man, to make up the breach that is between them; so he is Mediator between God and the elect Angels, to maintain the union that is between them; but he is a Redeemer to man only.

Further, Job doth not only profess faith in a Redeemer, but in his Redeemer; My Redeemer liveth; every word in this confession is precious and weighty. Here he useth an appropriating word, yet he doth not engross the Redeemer to himself excluding others, but he takes his part with others. Those Pronounes, mine, thine, his, are (voces amatoria) words of love, and drop like honey-combs with sweetness of affection. Job's heart was carried out abundantly to Christ in love as well as in faith. The first work of faith is to believe that Christ is a Redeemer; the second is to rest and rely upon Christ as a Redeemer; the third is to see an interest in Christ as my Redeemer. When the servants of Benhadad (1 Kings 20. 32.) came to Ahab mediating for his life, He no sooner said, He is my brother, but they took hold of it, as of a comfortable word. The Syrians (as some report them) were South-sayers, who superstitiously observed a good Omen from those words, which they called Lucky. 'Tis probable Benhadad's servants were skild in such observations, and took it for a good Omen, when Ahab said, my Brother. The Text implies some such thing, while we read (vers. 33.) that, the men did diligently observe whether any thing would come from him, and did hastily catch it; and they said, thy Brother Benhadad; they looked upon it as a love-token when once he said, my Brother Benhadad. Thus here, my Redeemer, shews that Job had much interest in and love to the Redeemer; his faith did not run upon generals, but was fixed, set down, and resolved, to live and die by his living Redeemer.

Erat valdè amicum verbum propter utramq; vocem & quasi omen; omen est Auguriũ ex verbis captatum Syri erant Auguriis dediti. Pined.

My Redeemer liveth.] To live, implies not only the present being, but the eternity of the Redeemer; as if he had said, though I am mortal and dying, as also you my friends are, yet my Redeemer liveth; he saith not, hath or shall live, but he liveth; he speaks of the Redeemers life, without any distinction of time past or to come, he liveth. God is for ever, I am; Christ as God liveth from Eternity, Christ as man liveth to Eternity. And as Christ God-man was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world in the promise, and from eternity in the purpose and decree of God; so Christ as God-man lived from eternity in the purpose of God, and from the foundation of the world in the promise. Christ is compared in the Gospel to many things without life, to water, to bread, to a stone, to a way; yet every one of them hath the addition of life as he is compared to them. He is not called simply water, but living water; nor simply bread, but living bread; so also a living stone, a living way, and the tree of life.

Vivit dominus, i. e. aternus est. Drus. Viventem dicit, i. e. aternum & incorruptibilis vitæ ac virtutis. Coc.

Secondly, When he saith, my Redeemer liveth, we must look on Christ, not only as having life, but as the Lord and Prince of life (Act. 3. 15.) Christ as the Eternal Word hath life in himself (Joh. 1. 4.) As he is the Son of man he receiveth life of the Father; For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself, (Joh. 5. 26.) and that not as every thing which lives hath life in it self; but by way of Eminency, as a Prince of life; for, First, he hath his own life in his own disposé. See how like a Prince he speaks of his own life (Joh. 10. 18.) I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. Secondly, He gives life to others; the Son quickens whom he will, Joh. 5. 21. As Christ hath life in himself, so he hath life to bestow at his pleasure, or upon whom he pleaseth; He came that we might have life (Joh. 10. 10.) He is the life (Joh. 14. 6.) And he is our life (Col. 3. 4.) We were all dead, and lay under the shadow or power of death, the image of death sate upon us all; yea life it self sat (as it were) in darkness, till Christ brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel (2 Tim. 1. 10.)

Thirdly, When Job saith, My Redeemer liveth, it notes the strength, activity, and power of Jesus Christ; not a meer being or subsistence only, but might and strength. As if he had said, Though I am weak, poor, and miserable, though my life be so low, and my body so dis-sperited, that I may more fitly be numbred among the dead then among the living; yet my Redeemer liveth, he liveth and is mighty. David said of his enemies (Psal. 38. 19.) Mine enemies are lively and strong, or being living are strong. Many men live who are not strong; and some live who have no strength. But the life of Christ and his might are the same, and shall never be disjoyned. The Psalmist indeed propheſying of the sufferings of Christ, represents him thus complaining (Psal. 22. 15.) My strength is dryed up like a pot sheard, my tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. When Christ died the strength of his body was dryed up, yet Christ did not die for want of strength; for he gave up the Ghost (saith the Evangelist) it was not pull'd or snatcht from him whether he would or no. Christ did not die because he could live no longer, but because in obedience to his Fathers will, and in answer to the design of our salvation, he was willing to lay down his life. And so strong was he in death, that he conquered dying, and spoiled principalities and powers, making a shew of them openly, and triumphing over them while he was nailed to the Vivere est vigere.

Crosse (*Col.*2.15.) The death of Christ had more life and strength in it, then the lives of all men and Angels. Again, though Christ died, as death is the disunion of the two parts of the humane nature (soul and body) yet death did not hurt the union between his two natures, the divine and the humane, this remained untoucht and inviolable. In this union the strength of Christ lay, as the strength of Sampson did in his locks, which were only a sign or an assurance of the nearness and presence of God with him; and therefore it is said after his locks were cut, he (attempting to put forth his strength as he had done before) wist not that God was departed from him. Now for as much as God never departed from our Sampson Jesus Christ, no not in death; for then not only was God his Father with him (though he cryed out, Why hast thou forsaken me) but the God-head of the Son the second person continued in firmest union with the man-hood which he assumed. And so it may be said of the Redeemer, that when he died, he lived, as well as now we say, he liveth who was dead. Thus he spake to John, (*Rev.*1.18.) I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen, and have the keyes of hell and of death. The keyes signifie power, and to shew that the life of Christ is not a bare subsistence, but cloathed with power; therefore, as he saith, I live for ever, so, I have the keyes. And thus while Job said, I know my Redeemer liveth, he ascribed strength and efficiency to him as well as life. From this part of Job's confession, I know that my Redeemer liveth,

First observe, Affliction doth not separate from Christ.

When Job could call nothing in or of the world his, he could call Christ his; though he could not say, my health, my strength, my friends, my riches, my beauty, for he had none of all these, all these being departed from him, yet he could say, My Redeemer; for Christ was not departed from him. This was Paul's assurance, and the triumph of his faith (Rom. 8. 35.) Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? I am perswaded they cannot; nay in all these we are more then conquerors through him that loved us. Unless Saints were conquered, yea unless Christ himself were conquered, they cannot be seperated from Christ. But all these things, the least of which single do more then conquer worldly men, are more then conquered by holy men; and therefore notwithstanding the united forces of all these, the union between Christ and Saints remains unviolable.

Secondly observe, That a Believer may arrive at an assurance, at the full assurance of his interest in Jesus Christ the Redeemer.

Here are two words of assurance, I know, there is assurance; my Redeemer, there is assurance again. Faith acts upon a sure ground, 'tis bottom'd on the knowledge of a sure word, not upon opinion, and it takes fast hold, 'tis not satisfied until it can say, the Redeemer is mine, and I am his; all's mine, and he is my all. I will not insist upon this point, having in Chap. 13. spoken to it, upon those words, I know that I shall be justified.

Thirdly observe, That Jesus Christ was the Redeemer from the beginning.

The old Fathers who lived before that fullness of time in which Christ came in the flesh, died in this faith, they waited for the Messias, they looked for and relied upon the promised seed. Christ speaks of the times as high as Abraham, Abraham saw my dayes, and was glad (Joh.8.) And the Apostle Jude speaks higher of him, that Enoch the seventh from Adam propheſied of the coming of Jesus Christ to judge the world, therefore certainly he was acquainted with the promise of Jesus Christ to redeem the world. This administers a strong confutation of the Socinian-heresie; for if Christ who was manifested in our nature in the latter end of the world, was the Redeemer of those who lived in the first ages of the world; then he was not a Saviour only (as they affirm) by his word and doctrine, or by the example of his life, sufferings, and resurrection; but by his sacrifice and satisfaction. For how could either the personal teachings or example of Christ reach to or be conveyed up to them, who lived before him?

Fourthly learn, That, there is but one Redeemer.

My Redeemer.] He speaks in the singular number; one is all, as the Apostle testifies (Act. 4. 12.) Neither is there any name under Heaven whereby we can be saved, but only by the Lord Jesus Christ.

Fifthly note, We have a living Redeemer.

Our Redeemer died for us, but he lives for ever. Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over him (Rom.6.9.) Death never had any absolute dominion over Christ, for he had no seed of death, that is, no sin in him. (The Throne of death is founded upon sin, as the Throne of life is founded upon righteousnes) Christ submitted himself to death, but it was not possible he should be holden of it, or subjected by it (*Act.*2.24.) But now not only hath sin no absolute dominion over him, but no dominion over him; and when the Apostle saith, Death hath no more dominion over him, his meaning is, death hath nothing at all to do with him. In this life of Christ our comfort lives. We have a twofold comfort in the life of Christ.

First, In that he liveth, he liveth to us; that is, he liveth for our good. So the Apostle concludes (*Heb.*7.25.) He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. We are assured of a twofold Salvation by the intercession of Christ. First, Of a Temporal salvation from troubles and outward evils: Secondly, Of an Eternal salvation from sin and condemnation. Therefore (saith Paul, 1 *Tim.*4. 10.) we both labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those who believe. The living God is the Saviour of all men, yea he saveth man and beast (*Psal.*36.6.) by his general providence; but he saveth believers by an act of special providence; and therefore they are ready, not only to do their utmost for him, but to venture the loss of all for him; they both labour and suffer reproach, because they trust in the living God, who saveth them above all other men, because Christ ever liveth to make intercession for them, which he doth not for other men.

Secondly, We have this further comfort in the life of Christ, that we live in him; for as Christ is the life (Joh. 14. 6.) so, he is our life (Col.3.4.) our life is bound up in him. Christ is indeed the bundle of life (1 Sam.25.29.) in whom the lives of all believers are bound up. Hence (which is a spring of everlasting assurance and consolation) himself infers (Joh. 14. 19.) Because I live, ye shall live also. The life of Saints is not in their private hands, but in Christ their publick head. And seeing the Spirit hath taught us to say, that He is our life, we may say (with holy reverence, and in an humble dependance upon him) that our life is as safe as His.

From this double comfort (which indeed includes all comforts) issuing out of this great truth, that our Redeemer liveth, I shall only intimate this single duty (which indeed includes all duties) incumbent upon all believers, Live to Christ. Paul had made out this Judgment upon this ground (2 Cor. 5. 14, 15.) and so should we, That if one died for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all, that they which live, should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him that died for them, and rose again. If Christ had only died for us, that we might live, that had been so great a benefit, and so unspeakable a kindness, that it would have obliged us for ever to live to his name and memory; but when, as he died, so he arose or lived again for us, and is thereby enabled to pour down benefits upon us, and do us kindnesses every day, how much more doth this oblige us to live unto him! Some are apt to forget dead friends, yea though they laid down or ventured their lives for them, yet they are soon forgotten. But shall not he live in our memories, and be the sum of all our lives, who died to redeem us, and yet is our living Redeemer. Though every believer doth not arrive at this clearness and full assurance of faith, to know that the Redeemer is his; yet he that believes cannot but know that he upon whom his soul resteth, as a Redeemer, liveth. And therefore, though he doth not yet receive the sweetness of this comfort, that he shall for ever live with Christ; yet he ought with his all, and in his ever to pay the tribute of his duty in living unto Christ. I know that my redeemer liveth,

—— And that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, &c.

These

These words contain the second Article of Job's holy confession; as if he had said, I do not only believe that my redeemer liveth, but that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth.

יקים à radice קום Surrexit ad stadium, erectus, elatus, elevatus fuit. יקום Omne quod stat, subsistit vel vivit in terra. Cadaver, dictum à cadendo, vel ut alii, caro data vermibus. Sic גבלה Hebraicè & πτῶμα, Græcè idem sonant. ואחרון Posterior, postremus, ultimus vel tandem. Theodotio virtit novissimè.

The word which we translate to stand, signifies to rise up to stand, or to be erected, or lifted up; and hence Jecum, (from the same root) is used by Moses (Gen. 7. 4.) to signifie, every living substance, so we translate, For yet seven dayes, saith the Lord, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty dayes and forty nights, and every living substance that I have made (or every thing that standeth up or subsisteth) I will destroy. A living body standeth up, in opposition to which a dead body is (in all the learned Languages) expressed by a word that signifieth falling down; a dead body is a falling body, a body fallen to the earth from whence it first was raised; or it is flesh given to the worms, as some make the Latine word sound, by a nice distinction of each syllable to a word.

Now, saith Job, My Redeemer liveth, and shall live, he liveth and he shall stand at the latter day. Jesus Christ was a falling body, when he died; but he conquered death, and became a standing body again, and shall stand,

At the latter day upon the earth.] The Hebrew is, last, or latter upon the earth, our Translaters add the word day, in a different letter, both to distinguish it from the expresse terms of the original Text, as also to determine what they apprehended as the proper sence and scope of the place.

The latter or last dayes in Scripture are taken three ways.

First, More generally for the time following, or for hereafter. That which the Prophet Joel expresseth thus, It shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh (Chap. 2. 28.) is cited by the Apostle (Act. 2.17.) It shall come to pass in the last dayes, &c.

Secondly, The latter dayes contain all Gospel time, or all that time elapsed since Christ came and was revealed in the flesh; which, though the Gospel was published presently after the fall (Gen. 3.15.) is strictly called the Gospel-time, in opposition to the legal administrations. So we may understand the old Patriark Jacob (Gen.49.1.) When he called unto his sons and said, Gather your selves together, that I may tell you what shall befall you in the last dayes, that is, at the coming of the Messias, or when Shilo comes, as he speaketh (Vers. 10.) Though withal Jacob intends there a prophesie to his sons of their state in all the times following, or as the Hebrew elegancy expresseth it, In the posterity of dayes, which Scripture phrase notes also any or all time to come, as was toucht before. Thus the Apostle speaks of the latter times (1 Tim. 4. 1.) and of the last dayes (2 Tim. 3.1.) These dayes are called last, First, Because all was then consummated, which was prophesied concerning the work of mans redemption, and so is the perfection of all times; or as the Apostle calls it (Gal. 4. 4.) The fulness of time. Secondly, Because the whole time of the worlds continuance being distinguished into three Great periods, the Gospel time is the last of the three. The first, Was from the Creation to the giving of the Law upon mount Sinai. The second, From the giving of the Law till the appearance of Christ in our Nature. The third, From that Appearance in humility, till his appearance in Glory. These are the latter dayes.

Finis dierũ denotat extremos dies, sive tempus Messiæ. Schind.

Thirdly, As the whole Gospel time is called the last time, or the latter dayes; so, there is a latter day, or a last time, (1 Pet. 1.5.) which is more special and particular, and that is the day of the Resurrection, or the day of Judgment, which we may call the last of the latter dayes. Under both which notions the words may be taken here; first, as referring to the coming of Christ in the flesh to redeem us from death; secondly, to the coming of Christ in Glory to raise the dead, and to Judge both quick and dead.

Further, As this word last or latter, is expounded with reference to a time, so to a person.

And thus it is taken two wayes.

Ego novissimus super terram, &c: i.e. Ego omnium in terra habitantium miserimus surrecturus sum & victor existam in hac vita. Verba super terram jungunt, non cum verbo surget vel stabit, sed cum nomine novissimus. Ego novissimus super terram, i. e. omnium in terra habitantium miserrimus erigar, &c. Bold.

First, Some refer it to the person of Job, and joyn the words on the earth, not with the word stand, but with the word last, giving the sence thus, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and the last (man) upon the earth shall stand; that is, he who is last, lowest, or meanest upon the earth, meaning himself (Job speaks of himself in the third person (say they) the more to move compassion) shall stand upon the earth freed from the bondage of these afflictions, under which now he groaneth, and which is more, as a conquerer in the cause which now dependeth. There is a general truth in this; to call any man the last upon the earth, is as much as to say, he is a poor or a miserable man. The last upon the earth, is the lowest or meanest upon the earth. Thus Job describeth at once the poverty and weakness of his condition, and the strength of his faith; I know that my Redeemer liveth, and though I be last upon the earth, yet I shall stand in this cause, and carry it against my friends, because I have such a Redeemer, such a Deliverer, to undertake for me.

And to make that yet clearer, some expound those words upon the earth comparatively, I, the last upon the earth, that is, I, who am viler then the earth, or (as the Apostle speaks) the off-scouring of all things in the account of all men. We have such an expression in our Language, concerning a person who hath low thoughts of himself, or is vile in his own eyes. He is not worth, or he doth not judge himself worth the ground he goes upon; that is, he judges himself, as Job is supposed to do, according to this interpretation, more vile then the earth. And then the sence of the whole may be thus conceived; as if he had said, Though I am in my own opinion, or in the opinion of others, more vile then the earth, as the off-scowring of all things, the scorn of men, and the outcast of the people; yet I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that I shall stand right before him, in judgment, when my cause comes to tryal. In which sence this word stand is used (Psal. 1. 5.) The wicked shall not stand in judgment, that is, they shall not be justified or acquitted, they shall fall before the Judge. Wicked men though they judge themselves more excellent then the heavens, shall yet fall in Judgment when the righteous shall stand, who thought themselves, or were thought more base then the earth. But I shall not stay upon this interpretation, there being so much straining of the Text to make it out.

Si verba super terram vel pulverem, comparative sumeremus, i.e. abjectus & vilis plusquam terra. Emphasin habet. Bold.

Secondly, It is referred to the person of the Redeemer, I believe that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand the last upon the earth. The last, is one of the Titles of Christ, who is called Alpha and Omega, the first and the last (Rev. 1.7.) It is as great an honour to be called the last, as the first (Isa. 44. 6.) Thus saith the Lord, the King of Israel, and the Redeemer the Lord of Hosts, I am the first, and I am (acaron, the word of the Text) the last, and beside me there is no God; first and last, Alpha and Omega comprehend and carry all. Alpha is the first, Omega is the last letter of the Greek Alphabet; these are letters of more eminent note then the rest, because being first and last, they enclose all the rest. How eminent then is Christ, who is Himself both these letters! How great is he in whom the terms of greatest distance imaginable, first and last, meet and are united; so that Christ calling himself first and last, takes to himself absolute perfection, power, soveraignry, eternity, dignity, and Divinity. He is the first, because before all beginning, he was in the beginning with God, and from him all things received their beginning. He is the last, because he shall continue for ever without end, and is the end of all things that had a beginning; All things were created (not only) by him, but for him (Col. 1. 16.) He is also the last, because when we have attained him, we are at the highest or last of our attainments; we rest and have no more to seek when we have found him, for he brings us to the Father in whom, through himself the Son, we have eternal rest. Thus we may conceive Job's faith triumphing in his Redeemer, as the sum and comprehension of all things; He liveth as the first, and the last shall stand, Vult dicere, post omnes qui terram incolunt ipse manebit: postremus omnium erit, stabit, i. e. perstabit manebit, vivet postremus & ultimus. Drus.

Upon the Earth, or, upon the dust.

על עפר Super pulverem vel contra pulverem על importat Hostilitatem.

Which is expounded three ways (as I shall shew further.)

First, Of his standing upon the earth, when he was made man.

Secondly, Of his rising up upon the earth (for the word as was toucht before, signifies both to rise up and to stand upon) after he had laid down his life, and abode in the grave three dayes.

Thirdly, Of his standing upon the earth, or over the earth (the Hebrew bears that also) when he shall judge man.

Again, Some render, He shall stand against the dust; that is, He shall contend with the dust, and shall by his power raise me and all men up out of the dust; he shall conquer the dust; so the word (with this preposition) is used (Gen. 4. 8.) Cain rose, or stood up against his brother Abel: Cain's rising against him, was a contending with him to slay him. (*Judg.*9.12.) Ye are risen up against the house of my father. (*Psal.*54.5.) Mine enemies rise up against me, or upon me. Thus the Redeemer shall rise or stand up against the earth. What earth?

Stabit supra pulverem ut vindex triumphans, spoliato mortis carcere, qui carnem nostram detinebat. Coc.

This earth is interpreted two wayes; first, for men, who are but dust and refined earth; or for that earth into which the bodies of men are resolv'd in the grave. Christ shall stand up against that earth, to recover the bodies of his people out of it; so a late Expositor gives the sence. This Verse (saith he) declares the manner how Christ shall vindicate our dead bodies out of the hand of corruption. He will stand upon the earth as upon a conquered enemy. Our bodies are sown in the earth, there they are held prisoners; but Christ will recover them out of the earth, he will strive with the dust, and putting forth his Almighty Power, break the bars and gates of that Prison wherein the bodies of his people are detained. Death is an enemy, the last enemy, as the Apostle speaks (1 Cor. 15. 25, 26.) where he represents Christ, contending with it, and conquering it. He must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet; the last enemy that shall be destroyed is Death. Now Death keeps all under its feet, but Christ shall put Death under his feet, standing triumphantly upon the dust in the latter day.

For the further understanding of these words, I shall gather the distinct interpretations and versions of them together, that they may lie the fairer to the Readers eye and judgment.

He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth.

In novissimo die resurrecturus sū. Vulg.

First, The Vulgar translation renders this clause, as the former, in the first person, as Job's profession of his faith about his own Resurrection. I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that I shall rise in the latter day. The favourers of that translation strive much to vindicate and maintain it, as also to reconcile it to the Original, which is in the third person (as all agree) besides other wide differences, very hardly, if at all, to be agreed. Nor is there any need to expound Job speaking in this Verse of his personal Resurrection (unless inclusively with the resurrection of all mankind) that being the business of the two Verses following. For as soon as he had said, He (that is, Christ the Redeemer) shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, he subjoyns his assurance in the next words, that himself should then be raised up; Though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh I shall see God. How strong and confident an assertion of his own Resurrection is couched and contained in that profession, will appear when I come to the opening of it.

Secondly, This clause is understood by some metaphorically; To stand, is to overcome and be victorious; He shall stand last upon the earth, that is, Christ shall conquer all his enemies, all that oppose him shall fall before him; his enemies shall lick the dust, but he shall stand upon the dust, or continue last upon the earth. This holds out a comfortable truth,

That, Christ will certainly out-stand and vanquish all his enemies.

Perpetual duration triumphs over all. Whatsoever Christ hath done, or doth, or is to do, is wrapt up in this, That he was, and is, and is to come; or in this, that he is Alpha and Omega, first and last. It is a grand principle among Politicians, Take time, and you may do any thing. He that is first and last, may take what time he will, and therefore he may and will do whatsoever he wills. The Eternal will have the last word, and the last blow. He that stands last upon the ground, and keeps the field, carrieth the day against all, and is proclaimed Conquerer. What a mercy is it to have a friend who counts all our enemies his, and who is too hard for all his enemies.

Thirdly, These words (as others conceive) at least imply and intimate to us the Incarnation of Christ, or his taking flesh, I believe that my Redeemer liveth, or that he is God from everlasting. There is Job's faith in the divine nature of the Redeemer, and that in the latter day he shall stand on the earth, that is, that he shall take flesh and be incarnate; there is Job's faith, that the Redeemer should assume our Humane nature, and so become God with us. He could not have had a true faith in the Redeemer, unless he had believed this; he could not have called Christ his Goel, or kinsman, in the former part of the Verse, unless he had believed that he should stand upon the earth, as he expresseth it in the latter. The Redeemer must be God, how else could he satisfie? The Redeemer must be man, how else could he suffer?

Et posteriorem super pulverem resurrecturum. Jun.

Fourthly, Others conceive these words speaking Job's faith in the Resurrection of Christ from the earth, or standing up upon the earth. Junius (if I apprehend him rightly) translates fully to this sence, And shall rise the last upon the dust. Not that Christ shall rise last, for he is the first-born from the dead, and the first-fruits of them that sleep; but he arose as the last Adam in opposition to Adam, who was the first man, as the Apostle speaks (1 Cor. 15.45.) Master Broughton agrees also to this meaning, rendring the words, And at last shall rise upon the dust; which he thus explains, My Redeemer shall rise from death. See then how rich a store we have here of precious truths about the great mystery of Christ in this one Scripture, which the Holy Ghost hath been pleased so to phrase, that it may at once hold forth Job's faith in the incarnation of Christ, that he should stand upon the dust in our nature; as also in the Resurrection of Christ, that he should rise out of the dust in our nature. These two involve each other, for unless Christ had taken flesh, and stood upon the dust, he could not die, and so lie down in the dust; and his rising from the dust, necessarily implies, that he had taken flesh, which he laid down by his free submission unto death.

Hæc verba in varios sensus trahuntur, & quidem cum analogia fidei congruentes; commodus & simplex hic quem sequimur est. Æternum sc. esse hunc suum redemptorem, qui tandem pulveri insistens pro imperio mortuo excitet. Merl. Et novissimo super pulverem (vel terram) staturū. Mont.

Yet (as I conceive) these words are more strictly to be understood, not of Christs taking flesh, and standing upon the earth in it; nor of the personal rising of his flesh out of the dust (both which are yet included) but of his coming to raise all flesh out of the dust, and then to proceed in judgment with them. And thus a late Expositer concludes, These words (saith he) have various interpretations, all agreeing with the analogy of faith; yet this is a plain and pertinent sence which we follow; Namely, that Job believeth his Redeemer to be eternal, who shall at last stand upon the earth, and by his soveraign power or command raise the dead. Our translation together with our renewed Annotations appear fairest this way; and Mr. Mercer (though himself followeth the Rabbins in the opening of this Text, yet) confesseth, that it is the Judgment of most Interpreters, both Ancient and Modern, that these words are to be understood of the general Resurrection, and of the Judgment which shall follow. For when Job professeth his assurance, that his Redeemer shall stand upon the earth in the latter day, we are not to stay our thoughts in a bare posture, but are led forth to consider, what his standing there intends, or what the Scripture tells us he shall do when he appears and stands upon the earth in the latter day. Now the work of that day is plainly reduced to these two heads in Scripture, Resurrection and Judgment. In reference to both which, I shall specificate these general words, and draw them out into expres and particular Observations.

First, Thus, Our bodies shall be raised out of the dust in the latter day by the power of Christ.

Man is a creature consisting of visible and invisible, of mortal and immortal, a soul and a body. His mortal and visible part the body fell under the arrest of death, as soon as he was tainted with sin, and by the decree of God it is appointed unto all men once to dye; yet man shall not alwayes abide in this death, which is the seperation of the soul from the body. These shall meet again and be re-united; death it self is under the dominion of Christ the Lord of life; the keyes of the grave are committed unto him. We read of a twofold Resurrection from a twofold death, both effected by his power (Joh. 5.25, 28, 29.) The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear it shall live. All men are naturally dead in sin, as soon as they live in nature. And as soon as any of these dead hear the voice of Christ speaking by his Word and Spirit, they live in grace. This is called a new Birth, a new Life, as also a Resurrection. The hour or seaſon of this ſpiritual Reſurrection (ſaith Chriſt) is coming, and now is (verſ. 25.) But at verſ. 28, 29. he ſpeaks of a Reſurrection which was coming, but then was not; Marvail not at this, for the hour is coming, that all that are in the graves ſhall hear his voice and come forth; they that have done good to the Reſurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the Reſurrection of damnation. There are but ſome who attain the ſpiritual Reſurrection, but all ſhall attain the corporal: All that are in the graves (whether buried in the Sea, or upon the dry Land) ſhall come forth, even they who ſhut their ears againſt his voice, calling them out of their ſins, preaching peace, and tendring them eternal Salvation, ſhall hear his voice calling them out of their graves, and ſummoning them to the judgment of their eternal Condemnation. As Pharaoh lifted up the head of both his great Officers; the chief Butler and the chief Baker, were both brought out of the priſon, but the one he reſtored to his Office, and the other he hanged up. Thus in proportion will it be in the day when Chriſt lifts up the heads of all the priſoners of death out of the grave. Chriſt is ſo much in the Reſurrection, that he calls himſelf the Reſurrection. When he was going to the grave of Lazarus, he ſaith to Martha, Thy brother ſhall riſe again (Joh 11. 25.) ſhe anſwered, I know he ſhall riſe again at the Reſurrection, at the latter day. Her faith was clear for the Reſurrection, and ſhe expreſſeth the time (as Job in the Text) at the latter day. Chriſt approved her confeſſion, yet gives her further inſtruction (verſ. 25.) I am the Reſurrection and the life; and ſo he is, not formally, but cauſally, or virtually, that is, he is the Author of the Reſurrection, and that in reference to both Natures. Firſt, His Divine Nature is the efficient cauſe of the Reſurrection, he ſhall raiſe our bodies out of the duſt, and the duſt ſhall give up its priſoners, by the power of his God-head. Secondly, His Humane Nature is the exemplary cauſe or pattern of the Reſurrection; upon which ground the Apoſtle calls Chriſt, the firſt-born from the dead, Col. 1.18. For though ſome were raiſed from the dead before him, yet ſeeing his Reſurrection was the cauſe of their Reſurrection, and will be the cauſe of theirs who ſhall be raiſed, therefore he is called the firſt-born from the dead. Hence the Apoſtle argues the oppoſers of the Reſurrection in the Church of Corinth (1 Cor. 15.12.) If Chriſt be preached that he roſe from the dead, how ſay ſome among you, that there is no Reſurrection of the dead? As if he had ſaid, Do but grant this, that the body of Chriſt is riſen, and you cannot rationally deny a Reſurrection of our bodies; both becauſe his Reſurrection is the exemplar of ours, and becauſe Chriſt and all believers are one myſtical body, he is the head and we the members; nor indeed is Chriſt perfectly riſen, till we all riſe. For though Chriſts perſonal Reſurrection was perfect when he aroſe, and though all believers aroſe repreſentatively when Chriſt aroſe, yet till all believers ariſe perſonally, the Reſurrection of Chriſt hath not received its utmoſt perfection. For as though the perſonal ſufferings and afflictions of Chriſt in the fleſh were perfect, yet till all his members have ſuffered in the fleſh, that which God hath appointed as their portion in ſufferings; There is ſomewhat behind (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Col. 1. 24.) of the afflictions of Chriſt, which Paul for his part rejoyced to fill up; ſo we may ſay, that till all believers ariſe in the fleſh, or body, there is ſomewhat behind of the Reſurrection of Chriſt.

or

We may further take notice from 1 Cor. 15. verſ. 16,17, & 18. how the Apoſtle turns this Argument: as before he ſaid, If Chriſt be riſen, how do ſome ſay, that there is no Reſurrection of the dead; ſo here on the other ſide, If the dead riſe not, Chriſt is not riſen; and if Chriſt be not raiſed, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your ſins, and they that are fallen aſleep in Chriſt are periſhed. From all he concludes verſ. 20. But now is Chriſt from the dead, and become the firſt fruits of them that ſleep; for ſince by man came Death, by man came alſo the Reſurrection from the dead; for as in Adam all dyed, ſo by Chriſt ſhall all be made alive. There are two roots out of which life and death ſpring: Death ſprings from Adam, life from Chriſt; and as by Adam all die, which are Adam's ſeed, or his ſons (as all men naturally are); ſo by Chriſt all who are his ſeed and Children, and ſo only the Elect and Faithful are, ſhall be made alive. But then it may be queſtioned, Shall not all men, even all the ſons of Adam be made alive by the Reſurrection of their bodies, which is the general ſubject of that Chapter? I anſwer, they ſhall. Hence Chriſt ſpeaks diſtributively, of them that ſhall riſe, as was ſhewed but now (Joh. 5. 29.) They that have done good ſhall come forth to the Reſurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the Reſurrection of damnation. But ſhall not the wicked be raiſed alſo by Chriſt? The twenty eighth Verſe anſwers, All that are in the graves ſhall hear his voice. Chriſt ſhall raiſe all, yet with a difference; the wicked ſhall be raiſed by vertue of that power or dominion which he hath over all fleſh (Joh. 17. 2.) But the godly are raiſed up by vertue of that union which Chriſt hath with their ſpirits, yea with their perſons.

Secondly, Conſider the words as holding out that which follows the Reſurrection, Judgment; Job is conceived (in reference to his own preſent condition) as having a ſpecial eye at that; for he was hardly judged in thoſe dayes, and therefore might comfort himſelf in this hope, that his caſe ſhould be judged over again at the latter day; as if he had ſaid, Though I am ſeverely treated by you, and cannot have right judgment here on earth, yet the time will come when I ſhall ſurely have it; My Redeemer ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon earth, to miniſter judgment unto all, and to me among the reſt.

From the application of the Text,

Firſt obſerve, That there ſhall be a general Judgment, hath been known and believed in all Ages.

While Solomon ſeems to let the young man looſe to his pleaſures, he preſently gives him a check, or a cooler, upon this account (Eccleſ. 12. 9.) Rejoyce O young man in thy youth, &c. but know for all theſe things God will bring thee to Judgment. The Preacher concludes his penitential Sermon with this point, God ſhall bring every work to Judgment, and every ſecret thing, whether it be good or evil. The Apoſtle Jude ſpeaking of the lapſed Angels, aſſures us at Verſ. 6. that, The Angels that kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their own habitation, he hath reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs, unto the Judgment of the great day. In Verſ. 14, 15. he ſhews how early this doctrine of a judgment was in the Church of God; Enoch the ſeventh from Adam, propheſied of this, ſaying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thouſands of his Saints, to execute Judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly amongſt them, of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodlily committed, and of all their hard ſpeeches which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him. Enoch lived long before Job, yet in his time this was a famous well known point of faith; and we find that in the Apoſtles time, it grew into the number of ſacred Proverbs, which are all famous, and commonly known (1 Cor. 16. 22.) If any man love not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, let him be Anathema Maranatha, that is, let him be accurſed till the day of Judgment, or till the Lord come to Judgment. The Apoſtle uſeth two words, to note both the vehemency of his own ſpirit in ſpeaking, and the certainty of the thing ſpoken; and he gives the curſe in two Languages (Greek and Syriack, which latter is a daughter of the Hebrew) both to ſhew that men of all Nations, and Languages, who love not Chriſt, are under a curſe, and that they are deſervedly curſed among all Nations. The Greek word uſed by the Apoſtle, Anathema, ſignifies execrable. The Syriack word Maranatha, is a compound of Maran Lord, and Atha He cometh. This was uſed in the moſt dreadful ſentence of Excommunication; as if they had cited the perſon to the tribunal of Chriſt at his coming to Judge the world, or left him bound under the curſe of that ſentence until the coming of Chriſt. So that Maranatha, ſignifying, the Lord ſhall come, was a proverbial ſpeech, implying a day of Judgment coming. And as Scripture authorities are full of it, ſo there are many rational demonſtrations of it: For firſt, The judgments which have been, ſhew that there ſhall be a Judgment; Chriſt hath often, as it were, ſtood on the ground already in Judgment both againſt Perſons and Nations; theſe leſſer dayes of Judgment, are a ſtrong argument of a great day of Judgment. Secondly, As leſſer external Judgment-dayes argue it, ſo do internal Judgment-dayes. There is a day of Judgment kept in the Conſcience of man, which tells us that God will keep a day of Judgment at last concerning all men. If we were not to be judged, we should never judge our selves; nor be troubled at what we have done, were we not to answer for what we have done. The Apostle is clear in it (Rom. 2. 15.) speaking of the Gentiles who had not the Law published to their ear, Yet (saith he) which shew the work of the Law written in their hearts, their consciences also bearing witness, and their thoughts in the mean while either excusing, or accusing one another. This mean while, is, till the Judgment come; as if he had thus expressed himself, Before the great Judgment comes they judge themselves; or their thoughts betwixt themselves are arraigning and impleading them, or Apologizing for and acquitting them. The reason of this internal antecedent session is, because as many as have sinned in the Law, shall be judged by the Law (Vers. 12.) (the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth Verses, are but a parenthesis) In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my Gospel. In this mean while, or in this interim till the day that God shall judge the thoughts of men by Jesus Christ, mens thoughts fall a judging themselves. Conscience is the correspondence of the spirit of man with the Law of God in binding or loosing, in condemning, or absolving. And though some mens consciences are so dark, blind, and ignorant, that they do not judge themselves at all; and the consciences of others are so brib'd and biassed, so ill informed and erroneous, that they give a false judgment, and justifie those whom God and his Law condemn; yet that there is such a work of conscience (whether it be true or false, right or wrong, alters not the case) all (who know any thing of its working) do agree; and this is an evident and convincing demonstration, that there shall be a judgment. Conscience is Gods Deputy, and doth but begin what Christ in that Great audit-day, or day of reckoning, will compleat and finish. The Apostle indeed assures us, that if we would judge our selves, we should not be judged (1 Cor. 11. 31.) Yet in this he doth not exempt either good or bad who judge themselves from appearing in the great day of Judgment, but only directs the good (for he speaks there to Saints in fellowship,) how to prevent the Lords adjudging them to present chastnings and afflictions, as is clear from Vers. 32. For when we are judged, we are chastned of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world. Holy self-judging and examination may prevent present judgment, but every self-judging is an evidence, yea, an assurance of the future judgment.

Thirdly, Judgment hath not been fully executed in any age of the World, excepting one, that of the old World; and yet then it was not a full execution of judgment, there was a wicked one not judged, there was an accursed Cham in the Ark spared from judgment, while the rest of mankind was drowned and overwhelmed with water. And though God hath written wrath and judgment upon thousands of wicked men in red Letters, even in their own blood; yet there are many whose paths swim with Butter, and the rock pours out rivers of Oyl unto them; many upon whose heads the candle of outward prosperity shines, whilst their heads, and hearts, and hands are full of wickedness; judgment is so far from being fully executed in this world, that many are hardned in sin, and some so stumbled or offended in the wayes of holiness, that they are ready to say, Where is the God of judgment? And hence it is that the Apostle (Rom. 2. 5.) calls the last judgment, the day of the declaration of the righteous judgment of God. The judgment of God is righteous now, but it is not revealed, it is not manifested, therefore a time shall come, when there shall be a revelation of his righteous judgment fully; the same Apostle gives a fourth reason (which comes near the case of Job) why there must be a day of judgment. Job's good name was under a cloud, his credit was exceedingly eclipsed, and he was mis-judged by his friends (as many sincere ones have since been) an hypocrite; now as the Lord will have a time to acquit himself, and to declare the righteousness of his judgment, so he will have a time to quit the integrity of his people, and to set them right in the eye of all the world. In that day as he will destroy the vails of mis-report which have been cast upon his wayes, and the vails of error which have been cast upon his Word; so also he will destroy all the vails of reproach and slander which have been cast upon the persons, speeches or endeavours of his people. He will have a day in which there shall be a fresh Edition of the works of all his Saints, with the comment of their own upright and honest meaning upon them, not rackt and wier-drawn with the malice and mis-conceptions, either of enemies, or mistaken friends. This is the ground of that serious and but needful caution given by the Apostle (1 Cor. 4. 5.) Judge nothing before the time, till the Lord come, who both shall bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the heart, and then every man shall have praise of God. What, every man? Will God praise those who are praise-less? Will he praise the proud and covetous, the drunkards, and unclean? Shall every man have praise of God? Will he flatter men in their sin, and sow pillows of commendation under every elbow? No, the Apostles meaning is, every man that is praise-worthy, shall have praise of God; every good and faithful man, every true believer; all sincere and honest hearts, though they have been called hypocrites, and disgraced, though they have had the dirt of a thousand scandals cast in their faces, yet there is a day coming, when as all tears, so all reproaches shall be wiped away, and every man, that is, every godly man shall have praise of God. Job who was called hypocrite, and wicked, shall then again have praise of God, his old certificate or Letters of commendation shall be renewed; A man perfect and upright, fearing God and eschewing evil.

Seeing this day of Judgment hath been so long ago spoken of, and believed, seeing there are such undeniable proofs and demonstrations of it; we have cause to be ashamed that we have not more quick thoughts, more lively and working apprehensions of it, that we are not more acquainted with it. One of the Ancients saith of himself, that whersoever he went, whether he did eat or drink, or travel, or study, or whatsoever he was about, he thought he heard the voice sounding in his ears, Arise ye dead and come to Judgment; it is good for us to carry this day in our thoughts all our dayes. If we do so, we shall find these two profitable effects of it.

First, It will awaken us; Secondly, It will meeken us.

First, It will awaken us, and keep us awake. The sound of this Judgment made Felix tremble; he that trembles is awakened; and it will keep us awake while we remember that it shall come unexpectedly, suddainly; it hath been long in coming, but when ever it comes, it shall come suddainly. So the Apostle describes the coming of that day (1 Thes. 5. 2.) It shall come as a theef; a theef comes suddainly. Christ describes it by that which is more suddain (Luke 21. 35.) It shall come as a snare; how suddainly doth a snare take the bird? That the Judgment shall be so terrible and dreadful should awaken us; that it shall be so suddain and unavoidable, should keep us awake.

Secondly, It should meeken us. Why should we judge others, seeing we must all be judged? See how the Apostle takes them up, or rather takes them down, who erected tribunals, and stood on the earth as Judges over their brethren (Rom. 14. 4.) Who art thou that judgest another mans servant? Proud censuring persons know not themselves, nor doth any man know what they judge themselves to be, who are over busie in judging others. When we in common speech say to a man, Who art thou? we argue our own ignorance or nescience of his person. But in speeches of this stile, when we say, Who art thou? We either argue the pride of that person whom we already know, or that he doth not know his place and duty, but over-weens himself, and takes upon him beyond his line, which no man doth more then he who takes upon him to judge another mans servant, excepting him only who takes upon him to judge the servants of God. And while the Apostle saith, Why doest thou judge another mans servant? he doth but more convince (by that common rule) such as presume to judge the special servants of God. As thus he reproves all peremptory judging of others, because they are servants to another; so he proceeds to a further reproof of it, because they are our brethren (Vers. 10.) Why doest thou judge thy brother? Why doest thou set at naught thy brother? We shall all stand before the Judgment seat of Christ. But may we not at all judge one another; must all judgment be deferred till Christ comes to judge us all? This the Apostle seems to give in charge (1 Cor. 4. 5.) Judge nothing before the time; What's the time? We have an answer in the next words, Until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, &c. What coming is this? None other surely, but his coming, or his glorious appearance, when we must appear before his Judgment-seat, to receive according to what we have done in the flesh, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. Yet this is not a total prohibition of Judgment, as some pervert that place, urging it against all Magistracy, as if it were unlawful for a man to be a Judge. The Scripture forbids only incompetent Judges, or the unjust Judgment of such as are competent. It forbids only rash Judgment about things or persons without proof, or a Judgment upon persons about such things, of which there can be no proof; The hidden things of darkness, and the counsels of the heart, which Christ alone can bring to light and make manifest, as that Text expounds it self: or the Scripture forbids rigid and final judgment concerning the eternal state of any person. For though we may say of many men, considering their actions and outward course, as also the appearing frame and disposition of their spirits, that they are in a damnable and perishing condition; yet we cannot pronounce a final sentence upon any man, that he shall be damned, because every mans judgment is of God, and they who are now abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate, may yet (through Free Grace) be converted and healed, made clean and justified.

be

Lastly, The Scripture forbids us to judge one another, as having no grace, for the doing or not doing of those things, which may consist with a present state of grace. So the Apostle argues (Rom. 14. 3.) in his dispute about the ceremonial observation of meats and dayes, concerning whose abolition by Christ, many believers were then unsatisfied; Let not him that eateth not, judge him that eateth, for God hath received him; that is, he hath accepted, and numbred him among his own; therefore do not thou severely reject and cast him out. And as thus in many cases we ought not to judge our brethren at all, so in all cases we ought to judge them with tenderness and meekness, with a kind of trembling and unwillingness, because there is a Judgment to which we also must come to give an account, as of all our wayes, so of the Judgment which we at any time pass upon our brethren.

Secondly observe, The Redeemer shall be the Judge.

Though the three Persons in the glorious God-head, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, concur in every work upon the Creature; yet some works are specially appropriated to each person. This great work of Judgment is appropriated to the Son as a part, or as the completion of his Mediatorial Office (Joh. 5. 22, 27.) The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to his Son; that is, the Father alone (as they imagined) without the Son, judgeth no man; for as he created all, so he judgeth all by the Son: And hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man; for being the Son of man he will be visible to all (Rev. 1. 7.) and so most fit to be the Judge. Peter speaks this as a special doctrine which he was called to preach (Acts 10. 42.) Him hath God raised up, and shewed him openly, not to all the people, but to witnesses chosen before of God; and hath commanded us to preach to the people, and to testifie that it is he that is ordained of God to judge the quick and dead. As the saving of man by Christ is founded in the will and ordination of God, so also is the judging of man by Christ. The Apostle Paul (Acts 17. 31.) stirs up and awakens all to the duties of holiness and repentance, because God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance to all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

Some may object that of Christ himself (Joh. 8. 15.) as a disclaimer of this office, I judge no man: The answer is at hand, Ye judge after the flesh, I judge no man; that is, as ye do, after the flesh, or by outward appearances (as he speaks, John 7. 24.) I judge the Spirit, and after the Spirit, mine is righteous judgment. Again, I judge no man; that is, my present work is to save, and to preach salvation; my work is to tender conditions of peace, and to call sinners to repentance, that's my present work; my second coming is for Judgment. But though Christ be Judge, yet it seems he is not the only Judge, himself saith that he had associated his Disciples (Luke 22. 29, 30.) I appoint unto you a Kingdom, as my Father appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my Table in my Kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve Tribes of Israel. I answer, They shall judge, not authoritatively, but doctrinally. As the word which Christ spake, so the word which the Disciples of Christ spake (or which any of his faithful Ministers spake according to the truth of Christ) shall judge him (that hath heard it) in the last day (Joh. 12. 48.) The word is the rule of judgment, as Christ is the person judging. Yet, I conceive, that Text in Luke imports some special personal honour and priviledge, which the twelve Apostles shall have in the Judgment of the great day, beyond the rest of Saints. Of whom the Apostle speaks (1 Cor. 6. 2.) Know ye not that the Saints shall judge the world? All the Saints shall judge the world as approvers, they shall Vote as it were with Christ, and say, This is a just and righteous Sentence; but the Apostles shall judge (if I may so express it) as Assessors with Christ, to whom alone the Commission as Judge is given. The Queen of the South (saith Christ) and the Ninivites shall rise up in the Judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them (Luke 11. 31.) that is, the example of the Queen of the South, who took so long a journey to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and the example of the Ninivites, who repented at the preaching of Jonah, shall be produced as evidence for their conviction and condemnation, who have heard and refused the wisdom of a greater then Solomon, and the preaching of a greater then Jonah. The great Judgment shall be carried on by many, as Assessors, as Approvers, and as Witnesses; but the Redeemer only shall be the visible and determining Judge.

This day of Judgment will be very terrible. Christ who at his first coming was revealed in flaming love, shall be then revealed in flaming fire (2 Thes. 1. 7.) This Judgment will be very glorious. The first appearing of Christ was so obscure, that it was an appearance but to very few; many who saw the man, did not see the Saviour; but his second appearing will be so full of lustre and glory, that as all shall see the man, so all shall see the Judge. Thus the Apostle describes it (Tit. 2. 14.) Looking for the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ. It is said of Agrippa (Acts 25. 23.) that he came to the Judgment-seat and Bernice with great pomp; we may render the Text thus, He came with great phantasticknes or affected vanity. When the Lord Jesus Christ shall come to his judgment-seat, it will be with great pomp indeed, but it shall be serious as well as glorious pomp; For he shall come in the glory of his Father, with all his holy Angels (Mark 8. 38.) Christ shall have a train of Angels; as the Arch-angel shall give the summons, or cite the world to appear at the bar (1 Cor. 15. 52. 2 Thes. 1. & 5.) so there shall be thousand thousands of Angels attending the Judge: He shall come in the glory of his Father, with all his holy Angels. The first coming of Christ, was in the form of a servant (Phil. 2.) Yea the Prophet saith (Isa. 53. 2.) He had no form nor comliness. In his first coming, he was followed by Fishermen, or men of inferior quality; but his second coming will be in the glory of the Father; his glory will be such, as the Fathers glory is; and his followers shall be greater then the greatest of men, and these not a few, but many, even all his holy Angels.

And 'tis but equal that Judgment should be put into the hand of the Redeemer, and that he should come in all this glory, when he comes to sit in Judgment; because he hath been judged, and condemned; because he hath born shame, and dishonour, while himself stood in Judgment. Christ did not only die for us, but he was condemned to death as an evil-doer; there was not only pain in his death, but shame; he in this humbled himself indeed, and which is more, he became obedient, and (which is the lowest obedience) he became obedient unto death, and which is the lowest and most ignominious death, the death of the Cross. The Apostle makes this threefold humiliation, the ground of his threefold exaltation (Phil. 2. 9, 10.) Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, &c. He exalted him above the grave in his Resurrection, above the the earth in his Aſcenſion, above the heavens in his Seſſion at the right hand of him the Father, That at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, both of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue ſhould confeſs, that Jeſus Chriſt is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. Indeed if God be ſo careful to redeem the honour of his Saints and Servants, who have ſuffered reproach, if he will get them fame in every Land where they have been put to ſhame, and make the Sons of thoſe that have afflicted them to come bending to them, and to know that the Lord hath loved them; and if whereas they have been hated, God will make them an eternal excellency, ſurely then, much more will God be careful of the honour of his Son; he that will not let his ſervants honour lie in the duſt, but will repair their credit, and take off the reproach which they have born for his Name, how can he be unmindful of his Son, or not re-inveſt him in that Glory of which he ſtript and uncloathed himſelf, that he might perfect the work of our Redemption!

This honour of Chriſt the Redeemer, to be Judge of the world, together with the glory in which he ſhall appear when he comes to judge the world, carries a twofold effect in it, according to that twofold diſtribution of thoſe who are the objects of this Judgment, good and bad, the godly and the wicked.

Firſt, It carries terror to the wicked, who know not God, and who have not obeyed the Goſpel. What more terrible to unbelievers, then to be judged by him whom they have not believed? What more terrible then to be judged by him whom they have neglected, to be judged by him whoſe grace and mercy they have refuſed? What more terrible then to be judged by him whom they have deſpiſed, and ſaid (at leaſt in their hearts) This man ſhall not reign over us? How terrible will it be to thoſe wicked men, to ſtand before Chriſt as their Judge, whom they have trampled underfoot, and counted his blood (the blood of the Covenant) as an unholy thing, and have done deſpight unto the Spirit of Grace?

There is nothing in condemnation more dreadful, then to be condemned by a Redeemer; they who are without Chriſt, are without hope, how hopeleſs then and helpleſs are they who are caſt out by Chriſt? By whom ſhall they be ſaved, who are condemned by a Saviour? As the love of Chriſt is moſt deſirable, ſo his wrath is moſt inſupportable. Who can ſtand before his wrath as a Judge, who as a Redeemer came to deliver us from the wrath which is to come.

There are five things in this Judge, which make his wrath moſt dreadful.

Firſt, He is ſuch a Judge, as the power of the moſt powerful cannot daunt.

Secondly, He is ſuch a Judge, as the wealth of the wealthieſt cannot bribe.

Thirdly, He is ſuch a Judge, as the wit and ſubtlety of the wiſeſt and moſt ſubtle cannot delude.

Fourthly, He is ſuch a Judge, as there is no appealing from his ſentence.

Fifthly, He is ſuch a Judge as there is no repealing of his ſentence. What he ſets down ſhall ſtand for ever. All which Job applies to his friends in the laſt words of the Chapter; Be ye afraid of the ſword: for wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword, that ye may know there is a Judgment.

Secondly, This carries Comfort, and ſpeaks joy to Saints. How ſweet is it to remember, that their Redeemer is their Judge. For as the Apoſtle argueth, Who ſhall condemn? it is God that juſtifies; ſo may they, Who ſhall condemn? it is Chriſt that judgeth us. The time of the Judges coming, is the time of their refreſhing. So the Apoſtle Peter calls it in his Sermon (Acts 3. 19, 20.) Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your ſins may be blotted out, when the times of refreſhing ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord. What theſe times are is expreſſed, (Verſ. 20.) And he ſhall ſend Jeſus Chriſt, which before was preached unto you, whom the heavens muſt receive, until the times of the reſtitution of all things. When Chriſt ſhall reſtore and ſet all right, which ſin hath diſordered (which will be a time of Judgment queſtionleſs, if not the time of the laſt Judgment) then it will be a time of refreſhing to all the people of God; even of ſuch refreſhing (and infinitely more) as the weary labourer or tired traveller takes in his repoſe under the cooleſt ſhades (as the word there uſed implies) which fetcheth up his fainting ſpirits, and renews his ſtrength. When God came at once to judge, and reſtore Adam after his fall, he came in the cool of the day (Gen. 3. 8.) And when Jeſus Chriſt ſhall come to judge and perfect the reſtauration of man, though it will be the heat of the day, or a day of heat to all his enemies; yet it ſhall be the cool of the day, or as the refreſhing ſhadow after heat to all his Saints. That Chriſt is Judge, cannot but be a rejoycing to the Saints. For Firſt, He being Judge, the Judge is their friend.

Secondly, The Judge is their kinſman, their brother; for though (as we ought not now, 2 Cor. 5. 16. ſo) Chriſt in that day will not know any man after the fleſh, yet all believers who are as his fleſh, ſhall then be known, that is, accepted with him.

Thirdly, The Judge is alſo their Prieſt and Propitiation; he ſhall judge them, who hath ſatisfied for them, and knows how all reckonings and accounts ſtand between God and their ſouls; for he it is that hath by his own blood ballanced and made them up.

Fourthly, The Judge is their Advocate and Interceſſor; he ſhall judge them, who hath often moved for them, who hath poured out his ſoul in prayer for them, as well as he once poured out his ſoul an offering for them. Surely he who hath ſpoken ſo much for them, will not (though he hath cauſe to blame them for many things) ſpeak or pronounce any thing againſt them.

Laſtly, The Judge is he who was judged in their behalf; and ſeeing he was condemned bearing their ſins, he will not lay thoſe ſins again upon them who have laid hold on him, and ſo condemn them.

All theſe conſiderations laid together, ſhew how ſweet it is for Saints to remember that the Redeemer ſhall ſtand upon the earth to judge them. And hence the Saints are deſcribed.

Firſt, Not fearing but hoping for his appearing (Tit. 2. 14. where it is called not only the hope, but the bleſſed hope) Looking for the bleſſed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; it is the bleſſed hope, becauſe the thing hoped for being once attained, we ſhall be for ever bleſſed.

Secondly, They are deſcribed (not fearing, but) loving the appearing of this Judge (2 Tim. 4. 8.) Henceforth (ſaith Paul) there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which the Lord the righteous Judge ſhall give me at that day, and not to me only, but to all them alſo that love his appearing. To be a lover of the appearing of Chriſt in Judgment, is the character and almoſt the definition of all true believers. None can love it but they, and they cannot but love it.

Thirdly, They are deſcribed (not fearing, but) praying for it, and that not coldly but earneſtly and importunately (Rev. 22. 17.) The Spirit and the Bride (that is, the Spirit in the Bride ſaith, or the Spirit preſſeth and provoketh the Bride to) ſay come, and let him that heareth ſay, come. Who is thus invited to come, and for what to come? The perſon invited to come, is Chriſt, and he is invited to come to fulfil all the Propheſies of that Book revealed to John, and therefore to come to judgment, which as it is there Propheſied, ſo it will be the utmoſt fulfilling of all the Propheſies. And to ſhew that Chriſt approved and accepted this earneſt prayer of the Bride for his coming; he anſwers (at verſ. 20.) He which teſtifieth theſe things (and that is none but Chriſt, The Amen, the faithful and true witneſs (Rev. 3. 14.) he (I ſay) anſwers, and) ſaith, Surely I come quickly; and this is the third time that he ſaith it in this Chapter; for he had ſaid verſ. 7. and again verſ. 12. Behold I come quickly. Which threefold promiſe of his coming quickly, is ſealed up with Amen, and the prayer of John, ſeconding the Churches prayer, Even ſo, come Lord Jeſus. What longing is there for his coming, who having been prayed to come, promiſeth to come quickly, and is yet again prayed to come. The preparations and prognoſticks of the coming of Chriſt, are dreadfully ſet down to the amazement of the world (Luke 21. 25, 26.) There ſhall be ſigns in the Sun, and in the Moon, and in the Stars, and upon the earth, diſtreſs of Nations, &c. mens hearts (that is, the the hearts of the men of the earth, or of earthly-minded men) failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, &c. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. This glory & terror of the coming of Christ, which shall dazle the eyes and astonish the hearts of all that know not God, shall be delight to the eyes, and rejoyce the hearts of all that obey him. These Christ bespeaks in vers. 28. When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads (looking up and lifting up the head, is a posture of confidence and of joy) for your Redemption draweth nigh; that is, you shall soon receive all the fruits of your Redemption, or Redemption in full. Our Redemption was wrought when Christ came first into the world, but we reap not all the benefits of our Redemption, till Christ comes the second time into the world. Then they who are dead shall be redeemed from the power of the grave, and they who shall be found alive, shall be redeemed from all the troubles and sorrows of this life. Then Christ will wipe all tears from the eyes of every afflicted Job; then he will heal all the sores of his Job's; then he will supply all the wants, and restore the broken estates of his Job's; then he will repair the credit and honour of his Job's; then he will rightly interpret the actions and speeches, the works and words of his Job's; then he will give his Job's a full estate, a double estate, a seven-fold estate to all that they had before; then he will make his Job's like himself; they that lay on the dunghil, scraping their sores with a potsherd, when Christ appears, shall appear with him in glory (Col. 3. 4.) The diseased and leprous bodies of his Job's shall be fashioned like the glorious body of Jesus Christ, by that mighty power by which he is able to subdue all things to himself; yea, when the Redeemer shall stand upon the earth in the latter day, he will marry all his Job's to himself, he will take them from the dust, and lay them in his bosom for ever. Therefore well might Job, and well may any Saint in his, or in a worse condition then his (if worse may be) rejoyce and triumph in this faith; I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth.

VERS. 26, 27.

And though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God.
Whom I shall see for my self, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me.

IN the former Verse we have considered and improved the confession of Job's faith in the Redeemer.

First, As living or eternal.

Secondly, As rising from the dead, or raising the dead to life.

Thirdly, As judging both the quick and dead. He in these two Verses enlargeth the confession of his faith concerning his own personal resurrection. Which

First, He asserts in the close of Vers. 26. In my flesh shall I see God.

Secondly, In the strong actings of his faith he assureth himself of it, notwithstanding all the difficulties that might obstruct and hinder it; in the former part of Vers. 26. and in the close of v. 27. Though after my skin worms destroy this body; though my reins be consumed within me, yet I believe I shall see God; these impediments do not weaken my faith.

Thirdly, He declares the benefit or happiness which shall accrew to him after the resurrection of his body, which he doth,

First, In those words, I shall see God.

Secondly, In those, I shall see him for my self. In both which expressions, he sets forth the happiness of the Saints after the raising of their bodies out of the grave, and the reunion of soul and body.

Fourthly, He maintains the identity of his flesh or body in the Resurrection, or that the same body which falls shall rise. And this in a twofold notion.

First, An identity specifical, it shall be the same body in kind.

Secondly, An identity numerical, or individual, it shall be the same particular body which he had on earth, and laid down in the earth. Both which are evidenced and evinced from those passages in the Text: I shall see him in my flesh; Mine eye shall behold him, and not another; I, my, mine, and not another, imply nothing, if not himself, or no other thing but himself.

From all we may collect, how excellent a confession of faith Job made about that great mystery of the Resurrection, and how firmly his soul was established in it.

Vers. 26. And though after my skin worms destroy this body.

I will not stay either upon the opening or disproving of the translation of the Vulgar Latine; which as it varieth extreamly wide from the Original in the close of the former Verse, so at the beginning of this. There instead of, He shall stand upon the earth in the latter day (as we translate) 'tis rendred, I shall rise again in the latter day. And whereas here we say, Though after my skin worms destroy this body; that reading is, and I shall be again encompassed about (or cloathed) with my skin. This vast difference in the translation ariseth from hence, because the word which we render to destroy, may be derived from a double root; either from a root that signifies to compass, or circle a thing round, or as we and most Grammarians derive it from a root that signifies to break, or to destroy, to diminish, or crumble a thing (as it were) into the smallest pieces or atoms.

Et rursum circumdabor pelle mea. Vulg.

נקפו vel à radice יקף Circumdedit, vel à נקף contrivit, fregit.

A second reading we give in the margine of our Bibles; After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed, yet, &c. Whereas we say in the Text, Though after my skin, worms destroy this body; we put in the margine, After I shall awake, &c. The reason is, because the same word in the Hebrew which signifies the skin, signifies in the Verb, to awake or arise from sleep. Mr. Broughton gives light to this, in the exposition of his own translation, And after this my skin is spent. Which he glosseth thus, in the person of Job, And after worms spend this my skin and flesh, I mean after my Resurrection, and I use a doubtful word to contain both. As if a word were intentionally used by Job, which signifies both his skin, and his awaking or Resurrection, that so we might take it both wayes, and neither of them both against, either the scope of the Text, or against the truth ('tis usual in Scripture to compare death to sleep, and the Resurrection to awaking) When (saith he) I awake, though this be destroyed, I shall see God. Or though this skin be destroyed, yet I shall see God. To this sence another translates, After worms have digged through this (that is, this skin or body) I awaking shall see God in my flesh. The interlineal varies little, And after they (that is, the worms) have consumed this my skin, I shall see God in my flesh. The strict letter of the Hebrew is very concise, And after my skin destroy this. So that we supply three words in this one clause, to make up that which we conceive the sence; First, The word Though; Secondly, The word Worms; Thirdly, The word Body; neither of which are expresly in the Original. Therefore our Translators have put them in a different character, implying that those words are added to explain the meaning of the place, which is somewhat dark, by reason of that conciseness of expression.

Et postquam vermes confoderint hoc istud evigilante me. Jun. Et postquam pellem meam contriverint hanc. Mont.

Some Interpreters take notice of the elegancy of Job's speech, who therefore doth not name his body, or say, this body; either because with the demonstrative particle, This, he used a gesture putting his hand upon his breast, After worms have destroyed this, which I now lay my hand upon, that is, this my body, I shall yet see God in my flesh. Or as some others conceive he saith only This, not this body, because his body was so worn and disfigured with his sores and sickness, that it could scarce be called a body; after worms have destroyed this, call it what you will, I can hardly find a fitting word to call it by. As if he had more largely said, After I am dead, and laid in the grave, where worms do not only eat my skin, and consume this upper garment, but my whole body also; yea, and not only the outward limbs and members of my body, but my very bowels and entrals. Though my reins be consumed within me; though worms devour, and rottenness invade whatsoever I am, or have of a body; though I am spent from head to toe, from skin to reins, without and within, yet notwithstanding all this, I believe that I shall rise again, and see God in my flesh.

Credo carnis resurrectionem & videbo interim consumi renes meos in medio corporis mei. Brent. Consumor totus ab una parte ad alteram. Jun.

Hence observe, First, Death may, yea shall prevail over the whole outward man.

Death

Death ſpends both skin, and reins; it devours all. Death ſwallows up fleſh and bones. We may well ſay of death, It makes no bones of any man. It takes in one part after another, till all be taken in; skin, and fleſh, and bones, and reins, death unmakes us. Hence the ſame word in the Greek that ſignifies to unmake, ſignifies alſo to die; becauſe death is the unmaking of every creature that lives. Man is unmade man, by the firſt act of death; that ſeparates ſoul and body, and this makes him no man: The ſoul alone is not man, the body without the ſoul is not man; therefore the diſunion of theſe unmakes man. And when death hath unmade man, by disjoyning ſoul and body, it proceeds to unmake the body. Though death can do no more to the ſoul then ſeparate it from the body, yet it can do much more to the body then ſeparate it from the ſoul. Death conſumes the body when 'tis alone, it pulls one member from another, till it prevaileth over all; as an old building is pulled down piece after piece, till all be laid in duſt and rubbiſh: not only doth it fade the beauty, and deface the skin, but it enters into the bones, and ſucks the marrow. The Apoſtle Peter uſeth a word of this ſence, while he ſpeaks of our death to ſin (1 Pet. 2. 24.) Who his own ſelf, bare our ſins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin, &c. (ſo we tranſlate:) the word is, that we being unmade, or off-made to ſin: every converted ſoul is united to, or made up in Chriſt, and unmade to ſin, that is, dead to ſin. Now as ſpiritual death to ſin, is the unmaking of a man, the pulling him in pieces in regard of what he was; the unmaking of his ſinful nature, that he may be made up again by grace: ſo natural death is the unmaking of the body.

There was never any body made, but death (according to the common appointment of God) had or hath a power to unmake it, one excepted, which one was the body of Jeſus Chriſt. Some indeed, as Enoch and Elias were tranſlated and did not ſee death; and others though they died, yet were raiſed to life by the power of God before death did actually unmake or conſume their bodies; but there was never any body which being dead, death had not a power to conſume, but only the body of Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore the Apoſtle (Acts 2. 24.) puts it as a ſpecial excepted caſe: Chriſt died, but death could not do with his body, as Job ſuppoſed it might with his, deſtroy his skin and reins; For (ſaith he) God raiſed him up, having looſed the pains of death. The original which we render pains, cometh from a root, which ſignifieth bands or cords: for death when it ſeizeth upon man, binds him (as it were) hand and foot, with bands, and cords, and keeps him faſt, that he cannot ſtir till it hath totally devoured him. Death bound the hands and feet of Jeſus Chriſt, and laid him in the grave; But God raiſed him up, and looſed the bands or cords of death: And Jeſus Chriſt, who as Mediator, or God-man, laid down his life, had power alſo to take it up again (Joh. 10. 18.) As Sampſon whom when the Philiſtines had bound with new cords, he ſnapped them aſunder, like a threed at the Candle; So Jeſus Chriſt when he was laid in the grave, broke the bands of death, or was raiſed up by God looſing thoſe bands; and why? Not only becauſe he had power to do it, for ſo he hath power to looſe the bands of death from any man as ſoon as they are tyed on, if it were his will and purpoſe to do it; but the Apoſtle aſſigns a reaſon beyond this, ſhewing that Chriſt was raiſed before death could conſume his body, not only becauſe it was poſſible, or in the power, as alſo agreeable to the will of God, ſpeedily to looſe thoſe bands, but becauſe it was not poſſible that he ſhould be holden of them. It was poſſible that death ſhould ſeize on Jeſus Chriſt, and ſo it did, he freely yielding himſelf up to it, becauſe a death was owing and to be paid to the Juſtice of God for ſin. But (ſaith the Apoſtle) death could not hold him, and keep poſſeſſion, That was impoſſible. And that upon a twofold account.

First, In reference unto himſelf.

Secondly, In reference to us.

First, It was not poſſible in reference to himſelf; becauſe he is life, and life eſſentially; I am the Reſurrection, and the life (ſaith Chriſt to Martha, Joh. 11.) Chriſt is the Reſurrection, becauſe he raiſeth us. He is not formally the Reſurrection (as was ſhewed before) but effectively. But Chriſt is life formally and eſſentially; now it is not poſſible for death to hold life it ſelf longer under its power, then he who is life pleaſeth. Therefore Chriſt being eſſentially life, could not but prevail over and conquer death; or as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Swallow up death in victory (1 Cor. 15. 54.)

Secondly, It was not poſſible in reference to us; for he having undertaken the work of reſtoring us to life, if his life had been ſubdued by death, if he had been held down by the power of death, alwayes in the grave, we had been loſt for ever; as the Apoſtle argueth, 1 Cor. 15. If Chriſt be not riſen, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your ſins. We had been ſtill under the power of ſpiritual death, if Chriſt had been held by that corporal death. Therefore it was impoſſible (becauſe Chriſt was to carry the work of our Redemption through) that he ſhould be held down by the cords of death, though he ſubmitted to die. So then here is the difference; the body of Jeſus Chriſt was not deſtroyed and totally unmade by death; death could not ſend in its Armies of worms to eat up his fleſh and conſume his reins, no nor ſo much as in the leaſt to corrupt his body; as the ſame Apoſtle expreſſeth it (verſ. 27. out of the Pſalm) Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, nor wilt ſuffer thy holy One to ſee corruption. He ſuffred his holy One to die, but he did not ſuffer him to ſee corruption; that is, to feel corruption, or be under the power of corruption. Therefore Jeſus Chriſt roſe the third day; and he roſe upon the firſt account, that it could be called the third day; he lay as little time in the grave, as could truly be reckoned three dayes: and ſo (I conceive) he did that he might not give the leaſt advantage to death, or that death might have him no longer priſoner then needs muſt. And upon this conſideration too, he ſaw no corruption. For three dayes (as Naturaliſts obſerve) a body may continue without corruption; eſpecially as it was with Chriſt, who dying and being buried the evening of the ſixth day, lay the ſeventh in the grave, and roſe early in the morning of the firſt day of the week. Martha ſaid to Chriſt when he came to the Sepulchre of Lazarus, Lord, he hath been dead four dayes, by this time he ſtinketh (Joh. 11. 37.) When a body hath been dead four dayes, we may ſay, ſurely it is corrupted; but in three dayes there is no neceſſity of corruption: So that, God (as it was propheſied in the Pſalm) did not ſuffer his holy One to ſee corruption, no not the leaſt corruption; this was peculiar to Jeſus Chriſt. And the Apoſtle is very careful to keep this cloſe to Chriſt; for though it were ſpoken by David, yet he ſhews that David did not ſpeak this of himſelf, as if he expected any ſuch priviledge (verſ. 29.) Men and brethren, let me ſpeak freely to you, of the Patriark David, who is dead, and buried, and his Sepulchre is this day with us. David who ſpake this is dead, and buried, and lies in the duſt ſtill among us; therefore he ſpake this of another, and that other is Chriſt, whoſe body was ſo exempted from corruption, as none, beſides his, ever was. For though Chriſt (as was toucht before) raiſed ſome dead bodies before they were corrupted, yet every body that dies is naturally ſubject to corruption, and continuing under the power of death, muſt needs corrupt and be deſtroyed by worms.

Secondly obſerve, The total conſumption of the body of man, is no impediment, no bar in the way of faith to ſtop us from believing the Reſurrection.

Job ſpeaks in ſuch language as might repreſent the greateſt difficulty to faith, and yet conquers it. And we to reach his ſence, ſupply ſuch words as expreſly ſhew it, Though and though; Though after my skin, worms deſtroy this body; Though my reins be conſumed within me. Though it be thus, and thus, yet I believe; as death ſhall triumph over my body, ſo my faith triumphs over death. Chriſt himſelf puts in a Though to this point of faith about the reſurrection, ſpeaking to Martha (Joh. 11. 25.) He that believeth in me, yea though he were dead, yet ſhall he live again. But it may be ſaid, Lazarus was dead at that time, why then doth Chriſt ſuppoſe that which was no more then actually was? And how can any man be ſaid to live again who was not dead? Why then doth Chriſt ſay, He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet ſhall he live. I apprehend, that by dead in that aſſertion or promiſe, ſomewhat more is intended by Chriſt, then barely to be dead, as Lazarus was; He that believes in me, though he were dead, ſeems to ſpeak not only the ſeparation of the ſoul from the body, yea, not only (as Martha suspected it was with Lazarus) the body beginning to corrupt, but even a total corruption and consumption of it; when (answerably to the expression of the Text) skin and bones, and reins, and all are eaten up. Now though he were thus dead (saith Christ) yet shall he live again. Faith saith to death, Do thy worst; and to the grave, put forth the utmost of thy power, digest me fully, (the grave is a great eater, it hath a strong stomach) assimilate me to thy self (as by the last act of concoction meats received into the stomach are) turn me into thine own substance; make my body look like the grave, make it so like thy self, the earth, that no man can distinguish me from the earth, yet this doth not at all weaken my faith in believing that I shall rise from the dead. Put all these disadvantages upon it, yet the power of God answers, or rather tramples upon them all. The faith of Abraham (Rom. 4. 18, 19, 20.) moved much after this rate, or in such a sphear of holy hight and strength, in reference to the promise of a son; that a son should be born to Abraham, was like the raising of one from the dead. So the Author to the Hebrews speaks expresly (Heb. 11. 17, 19.) By faith Abraham when he was tryed offered up Isaac: and he that had received the promise, offered up his only begotten Son, accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead, from whence also he received him in a figure. See how Abraham's faith acted about the receiving of Isaac in his old age, (when his body was (in reason) more fit to go to the grave, then to beget a son) like Job's for the receiving of his dead body out of the grave. He (saith the Apostle, Rom. 4. 18.) against hope, believed in hope. Every thing stood in the way of this hope, that he should have a son, yet he believed that he should become the father of many Nations, according to that which was written, so shall thy seed be. And being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body, now dead (that is, decayed with age) when he was an hundred years old, nor the deadness of Sarah's womb. This probably was the figure of which the Author to the Hebrews writes, when he affirms, that Abraham was willing at the command of God to offer his son to death, from whence (by the promise of God) he had received him in a figure. There were two deaths, a double death, to hinder Abraham from having a son, and yet his faith lived and prevailed over both. He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God. And being fully perswaded, that what he had promised, he was able also to perform. Faith looking to the power of God, triumphs over our own weakness. Now as Abraham's faith triumphed over those two deaths, or decayes and declensions of his own and his wives body, believing strongly that thorough these two figurative deaths, God would raise him a son: So faith triumphs over, and breaks all those bands, by which death may seem to hold the body in the grave beyond all hope of rising.

not

We find Faith putting many hard cases to it self; David did so (Psal. 23. 4.) Though I walk in the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no ill. Again (Psal. 46. 2.) Therefore we will not fear, though the earth remove, and the mountains be carried into the midst of the Sea. You see what thoughts faith proposeth to it self, and yet gets over and above them. Faith is not only a purifying, but a prevailing and a conquering grace. Faith is our victory over the world, and all worldly objections. As the grace of God towards man triumphs over all the unworthiness of man, and will do man good, though many stops lie in the way, (Psal. 106. 8.) They understood not his works, they remembred not the multitude of his mercies, they rebelled at the Sea, even at the red Sea. Every one of these were as a stop in the way of mercy to do that people good, yet mercy got over them all, Nevertheless he saved them. Now (I say) as the grace of God triumphs over the unworthiness of man; so faith triumphs over all the improbabilities and impossibilities that seem to lie in the way of God, to hinder him from doing any thing for us, when once we have his word or promise. And as to that special word, or promise of God for the Resurrection of the body, faith seems to speak, yea to glory and boast thus; He that gave me a being when I had none, can easily reduce me to the being I am in, when I seem not to be what I was before, or no such thing as now I am; though wild beasts of the Earth, and birds of the Air; though Canibals, or men-eating-men devour this body; though fire consume it, though the ashes be scattered in the Air (as the Church story speaks in the reign of persecuting Diocletian) or thrown into the River, as lost for ever, and never to be gathered up again in the opinion of man; though all these difficulties and encumbrances grow upon my faith, yet I believe I shall be repaired, and see God in my flesh. Which is the next point of Job's faith.

Yet in my flesh shall I see God.

The Hebrew is, from my flesh; it is usual in that language to put the Preposition De for In. Mr. Broughton keeps to the letter, and saith, Yet from my flesh shall I see God. His meaning is, I being raised and cloathed with flesh, shall see God; or, from my flesh, When I am in the flesh I shall see God. There are two things further in those words, In my flesh.

Non dicit, per carnem meam, sed in carne mea, q.d. in carne mea ero cum videbo Deum.

First, He saith, My flesh, that is, my own flesh: In opposition to another flesh, whether specifical or personal, as was intimated before.

Secondly, My flesh, as pointing to his present estate, My flesh, this flesh of mine which is now so miserably worn, and will shortly be worm-eaten; this my flesh, which is now unmeet for the presence of any man, much more for the presence of the great God; even this flesh of mine, this diseased and despised flesh shall be fitted for the presence of God, the great and glorious God; I, in my flesh, in this my flesh shall see God.

Shall see God. To see, is often used in Scripture to note a divine and super-natural act; hence prophetical revelations are called visions, and the Prophets Seers. There is a twofold seeing, First, Seeing with the eye of the body: Secondly, Seeing with the eye of the mind: a corporal and an intellectual sight: both which may here be understood, according to the twofold acceptation of the word, God. I shall see God. The word God, may be taken, either, first, essentially for the divine nature, and then we must expound the word see in the latter sence, I shall see him with the eye of my mind, or intellectually. Secondly, The word God, may be taken personally for Jesus Christ the Mediator, who having two natures, the divine, and humane, united in his person, or having assumed the humane nature into the divine, which is the person, himself is often called God: So that, I shall see God is this also, I shall see Jesus Christ, God-man, who being glorified in the body, shall be seen with bodily eyes. And so Job assures himself that he shall see God in the first sence, with the eye of the body; as if he had said, I shall have a glorified eye to see a glorified Saviour with. From or in my flesh, I shall see God. Thus one of the Ancients gives the interpretation of this Text. Whereas (saith he) Job saith, in my flesh I shall see God, he, without doubt propheſied the resurrection of his flesh: yet he did not say, By my flesh, which if he had said, the Text notwithstanding might be expounded of God, who being in the flesh, shall be seen by the flesh; yet we may understand it only thus, I shall be in the flesh, when I see God.

Illud quod ait Job, in carne mea videbo Deũ, resurrectionem quidem carnis procul dubio prophetavit; non tamen dixit per carnem meam, quod quidem si dixisset posset Deus intelligi, qui per carnem in carne vẽ debitur; nunc vero potest & sic accipi, in carne mea ero, cum videbo Deum. Aug. l. 22. de Civ. D. c. 24.

Hence observe, First, The body after the resurrection shall be true flesh, or shall have true flesh.

That opinion hath been condemned as heresie, which some held long since, That when the body riseth again it shall be a spirit, subtile, and thin, like the Air or Wind, not subject to the touch of the hand, or sight of the eye. To which one of the Ancients answereth well from (Luke 24. 39, 40.) where Christ when the Disciples were affrighted at his appearance, after his resurrection, thinking they had seen a spirit, vers. 37. (for so absurdly they spake, as if a spirit could be seen, Christ, I say) to free them at once from that absurdity, and fear, calls to them, Why are ye troubled, and why do thoughts (that is, such vain thoughts as these) arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I my self (much in the language of Job, whom I shall see for my self) handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have. Mine is a true body, composed of flesh and bones, it hath the dimensions and properties of a true body, it may be seen and handled: Christ admitteth the testimony of their own senses, to assure them it was no delusion or phansie which was presented to them, but his real body.

Corpus nostrum in illa resurrectionis gloria erit impalpabile ventis aereis subtilius. Eutic. Constant. Epic.

But, saith not the Apostle (1 Cor. 15. 37, 38.) treating of the Resurrection, That which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, as perchance of wheat, wheat, or some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it pleaseth him, to every seed its own body. From this similitude some argue, if that which thou sowest is not that body that shall be when thou reapest; then the body that dies, and is laid in the Grave, is not that body that shall be in the resurrection; and if it be not the same, but some other body, then it may be an ayereal body.

Non dicit grano seminis deisse quod erat, sed adesse quod non erat; qui autem verũ corpus resurgere denegat, nequaquam dicit adesse quod deerat sed abesse quod erat. Greg. in disput. contra Eutich.

I answer, It is true, corn, or grain which is sowed, doth not rise again in that manner, or after that likeness in which it was cast into the ground. We sow bare seed, but when it comes up again, it comes with a stalk and an ear, and shoots up in much beauty, glory, and verdure. There is a great difference between a grain of wheat in the bushel, and a flourishing stem, or ear of Corn in the field. God gives it another body in the growing up, but yet it is still a body; and there is the same nature in it still, the grain remains still: Only, there is an addition of beauty and greenness when it grows up. So the body that is cast into the ground is like bare grain (the Apostle useth that word) it is a bare body, a naked body: but when it shall be raised again, the body shall have many great additions, it shall have a cloathing, and an excellency of glory put upon it, (2 Cor. 5.4.) We shall be cloathed upon, yet still it is a true body and the same body. The Apostle Paul doth not say, that the body shall be utterly cast away or lost in Glory; but the body that dies is uncloathed, and those bodies of Saints which live at that Great day, shall be cloathed upon with a house which is from Heaven. So that in the Resurrection there will be an adding somewhat to that which was before, not a taking away of that that was before; the flesh shall be refined and purified, it shall not be laid aside, or annihilated. The corn grows up, with somewhat that it had not, but it doth not lose any thing that it had; 'tis still a grain of wheat and better. So the body laid down in the grave is raised, not the same in all things, but better in many things; it will not lose any thing of perfection which it had, but it will gain many perfections which it had not, even the excellency and perfection of glory.

Caro nostra post resurrectionem eadem est & diversa, eadem per naturam, diversa per potentiam.

Secondly, It is objected, How can it rise flesh, when the Apostle (1 Cor. 15.50.) saith, Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption? If no flesh shall inherit that state, how can it be affirmed, that the true flesh shall be raised to enter upon that inheritance?

I answer, by way of grant, that by flesh and blood in that Scripture, we are to understand natural flesh and blood, not flesh and blood as it notes a sinful, or corrupt condition: In which sence it is also true, that flesh and blood shall not inherit the Kingdom of God. But the Apostle speaking there of the resurrection of the body, he means the flesh and blood of which the body is composed and made up; and of that he saith, It shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. 'Tis true, it shall not, in the state wherein it is, flesh and blood, as it is corruptible, shall not enter into Heaven. Himself seems to expound that we are thus to conceive flesh and blood in the latter clause of the same Verse, Neither shall corruption inherit incorruption; that is, corruptible flesh and blood, or flesh and blood that hath the seeds and principles of corruption in it, shall never enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; such flesh and blood is unfit to wear the garland of glory. As our souls must be changed before they can be fit for glory, so also must our bodies. Meer natural flesh and blood are too weak to bear the weight of glory. Which the Apostle intimated (Vers. 44.) It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. As if he had said, Such a body as man laid down in the grave will not serve his turn, when he riseth again. Man layes down only a Natural body, or as the Greek strictly speaks, an Animal body, or a Soul body; that is, a body quickned and maintained only by a living soul, such as Adam's was in the Creation, whose body being formed out of the dust of the earth, and the Lord breathing into him the breath of life, he became a living Soul (Gen. 2.7.) yet such was his soul that it could not maintain his bodily life without helps from without. And so his (as also ours who are descended from him) was but a meer natural body. But when man is raised from the dust, he shall be provided and fitted with a Spiritual body. The Apostle saith not, that the body shall be changed into a spirit, but it shall be raised a spiritual body, which yet some urge strongly to prove that the body shall be attenuated into a spirit; but for the removing of that objection and the clearing of the Scripture; I answer, that the body raised to glory is called spiritual these three wayes.

First, Because the body shall ever be subject and serviceable to the spirit; for as the spirit of a man while it is subject to and serveth sinful flesh, is called carnal in the language of Scripture; so the flesh of man when it is purely subject to the spirit, may, by the same proportion, be called spiritual.

Secondly, It may be called a spiritual body in regard of the great strength and activity, with which it shall be endowed: Spirits are strong, and so is every thing which is spiritual. Spirit is often in Scripture opposed to flesh, to denote strength. When the Prophet would have the Jews know that the Egyptian Horses were too weak to be trusted too, he saith, Their horses are flesh, and not spirit (Isa. 31. 1.) The Devil is called a spiritual wickedness, to shew that he is a strong and a powerful wickedness (Eph. 6. 12.) In this reference also our bodies after the resurrection are entitled spiritual. It must be a body of mighty strength which is able to bear a weight of glory, or as the Apostle amplifies it, An exceeding weight of glory. There is such a weight in Glory that our frail bodies would be crushed under it, unless being made spiritual, they were also made strong to bear it.

Thirdly, 'Tis called a spiritual body, because then the body shall have no need of natural helps. This the Apostle teacheth us in that opposition, It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. A natural body stands in need of natural supports, but a spiritual body needs them not. When they in the Gospel put that tempting Question to Christ, whose wife the Woman should be at the Resurrection, who had been successively married to seven husbands; Christ gives an answer, implying that such Questions shall then be out of doors (Matth. 22.13.) After the resurrection, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the Angels in heaven. Marriage will be out in heaven: yea the body shall be so spiritual in heaven, that we shall need, neither sleep, nor meat, nor cloathing, as Angels and Spirits do not. I may give the spiritualness of the body in four words, according to the Schoolmen in their disputes about the state of a glorified body.

Pro immunditiis ulceribus respersum erit Jobi corpus atq; illuminatum, quibusdam quasi punctis luminis & guttis lucis & stellulis clarissimis distinctum & circumdatum. Pin.

First, Clearness and beauty: the face of Stephen did shine as the face of an Angel (Act. 6.15.) Not that an Angel hath a face or shines visibly, but so 'tis phrased to note excellent beauty; as excellent bread is expressed, by Angels bread: there was an amazing beauty stampt upon the face of Stephen, because he began to border upon Heaven, and had received some beams of glory approaching. Then instead of those filthy ulcers, with which the body of Job was spotted; his body, as also the bodies of all the Saints with him, shall appear (as it were) with stars and studs of light, and resplendent beauty; and which is the beauty of this bodily beauty in Heaven, it will be such as whereof none shall be proud themselves, nor yet by it be a snare to others.

Secondly, Agility, nimbleness, and activity; whereas now our bodies move heavily, they shall then ascend and descend like Angels.

Thirdly, Impassibility, we shall not suffer hunger or cold, sorrow, or pain in the body.

Fourthly, Spirituality, which, I conceive, may rather be the comprehension of the other three. Then that of the Apostle will be fulfilled, Christ will change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body (Phil. 3. 21.) Not that a glorious body shall be of another fashion then now it is, in regard of the symmetry and disposition of parts and members (the same fabrick and frame shall continue) but it shall be of another fashion in regard of qualifications and endowments; such as those fore-mentioned, and in all those our bodies shall be fashioned like the glorious body of Jesus Christ (which is the highest accent of honour which the body is capable of) and excepting these changes the body shall be the same it was; the same in nature, invested and sublimated with those noble additions of clarity, agility, impassibility, and spirituality. Thus it shall be sown a natural body, but raised a spiritual body, yet still a body, a true body still. That's the first point, the body after the resurrection shall be true flesh.

the

Secondly, Observe, Saints raised to life shall see God.

It will be our whole work, and our whole wages, our whole business, and our whole blessedness to see God. Job speaks as if there were nothing to be done in the next life but only to see God; nothing to be had or enjoyed then, but only a sight of God; and indeed there shall be nothing else; I shall see God (saith he) that's enough for me, yea, that's all to me (Psal. 16. 11.) In thy presence is fulness of joy: That is, when I shall see and enjoy thee present (Matth. 5. 8.) The pure in heart shall see God. (2 Cor. 13. 12.) Now we see through a glass darkly, then face to face; that is, intentively and directly, not reflectively or by effects; we shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known; according to the utmost comprehension which a creature is capable of, our vessels shall be as full as they can hold, and what would we have more? Yea, our happiness shall be, that we would have no more. Our hearts shall be so full of joy, and our heads so full of knowledge, that we shall desire no more. We see the World, and are not filled; The eye, saith Solomon, is not satisfied with seeing. But the sight of God is satisfying and filling, that will not leave one empty space or corner in the soul. God is enough for us, and we shall certainly have enough when we see him (as then we shall) as he is. That priviledge is assured to the Sons of God (1 John 3. 2.) We shall see him as he is. In this life the Saints see God; the life of grace is the vision of God, as well as the life of glory: and though it be true, that here the Saints do rather see what God is not, then what he is; yet 'tis true also, that here the Saints see God as he is, as those words may note a real seeing of him, though not (as they intend) a full seeing of him. Here we see God by faith; We (saith the Apostle, 2 Cor. 5. 7.) walk by faith, not by sight. We neither walk by sight, as carnal men do, who have no faith, nor do we walk by sight, as glorified Saints, who are above faith. But we walk by faith, which though it be opposed both to the sight of nature here below, and to that sight of glory, which we shall have above; yet that also is a sight, and by that we see God.

First, In his Promises; Abraham saw my day (saith Christ, John 8. 56.) He saw it in the Promise; and there God is seen.

Secondly, In his Ordinances; David desired to dwell in the House of the Lord all the dayes of his life, to behold his beauty (Psal. 27. 4.)

Thirdly, We see God in his Providences; in them God is so eminently to be seen, that he is as angry when his People see him not in Providences, as when they see him not in Promises, or Ordinances. In all these we have a sight of God by faith in this life, and we see him truly as he is; yea, God hath been pleased to make himself visible to some of his people in this life, even to their sense, as well as to their faith (Isai. 6. 1.) I saw the Lord, saith Isaiah the Prophet; he speaks not of an intellectual, but of an ocular sight; and Job, I have heard of him by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eyes have seen him (Job 42. 6.) And so Jacob (Gen. 32. 30.) I have seen God face to face; and he calls the place Penuel, The face of God. Not that he (or they) saw God himself with the eyes of his body, so no man hath seen God at any time (1 John 4. 12.) and so no man can see God and live (Exod. 33. 30.) But these saw God in some representation of himself, in some such breakings forth, and evident demonstrations of his Glory to the eye, as gave them an undoubted argument of the presence of God with them; yea, sometimes God hath condescended to appear in the form of a man. So that besides that sight of faith which all Saints have of God in this life in his Works and Word, some have had a kind of sight by sense in those illustrious and familiar manifestations of his presence with them; yet all this is but a glimpse to that sight which we shall have of God in heavenly glory, when we shall see him as he is. Which words of the Apostle John, as they are appliable to the person of Christ, whom we shall then see as he is, as that is opposed to what he was, while he was here in the form of a servant; so they are also appliable to the Nature of God, or to God essentially taken, whom we shall see in that glorified state, as he is, though not with the bodily eye, nor with any full comprehension of our understandings (for how can finite comprehend infinite) yet our understandings shall have such a full apprehension of God, that comparatively to any sight of God which we have had here, we may be said to see him as he is. This intellectual sight, being unexpressibly far more excellent and evident then either that sight which every Saint hath by faith, or which any have had by the eye, in those appearances he sometimes hath vouchsafed to dust and ashes here. And therefore that sight of God is called by way (not only of distinction, but) of eminency, The beatifical vision.

Thirdly, As this Text is expounded peculiarly of Christ the Mediator, then we may observe yet further for our comfort, that Saints glorified shall see, and ever behold the glorious body of Jesus Christ.

We shall see Christ in our nature glorified. Therefore some render the Text, Not, In my flesh I shall see God; But, I shall see God in my flesh; that is, I shall see Christ sitting in glory, cloathed with flesh, or in the likeness of man. God sent his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, to condemn sin in the flesh (Rom. 8. 3.) And he shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation (Heb. 9. 28.) That is, There shall be no likeness of sin upon him at his second appearance, as there was no sin in him at the first. But though he shall then have no likeness of sinful flesh upon him, yet he shall have the likeness of flesh, and that, not as likeness is sometimes taken, for the resemblance of that which it is not, but as likeness imports the truth of that which is. Christ shall be seen in true humane flesh, and this seeing or beholding of Jesus Christ in the flesh, will be (if we may conceive a second there) the second great joy in Heaven, To see the Saints will be great joy. The Disciples saw Moses and Elias in the transfiguration of Christ (which was a shew of Heaven, Matth. 17.) What joy then will it be to see the glorious person of Jesus Christ? Christ is indeed the Desire of our eyes. It was the wish of Austin, that he might have seen three things. First, Rome in her flower. Secondly, Paul in the Pulpit. Thirdly, Christ in the flesh. To have a view of Christ in the dayes of his humiliation and debasement, was to them, who knew him by faith, matter of great rejoycing. Old Simeon desired to see no more of this world, when once he had seen Christ; he wishes to depart and have his eyes closed, when his eyes had seen the salvation of God, that is, Christ, whom God sent to be our Saviour (Luk. 2. 30.) What then will it be to the Saints, when they shall see God their Saviour, Jesus Christ sitting cloathed in that flesh that they themselves wear, though in a more excellent cloathing of glory, then a meer creature is able to bear. The Apostle Peter foreshews this joy of Saints (1 Pet. 1. 7, 8, 13.) That the tryal of your faith may be found to praise, and honour, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ, whom having not seen ye love. As if he had said, If ye love Jesus Christ, now you have not seen him, but have only heard him spoken of, and seen him by faith; If ye having not seen do love him, O how will ye love him when you shall see him! for that is the strength of the Apostles Argument, Whom having not seen ye love, in whom though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoyce with joy unspeakable and full of glory. As if he had said, If ye now rejoyce with joy unspeakable, and full of glory, believing in Jesus Christ whom you never saw, what rivers of joy will flow in upon you when you see Jesus Christ! And therefore at the thirteenth Verse, the Apostle Peter gathers up his own spirit, and the spirits of all the Saints, to the serious expectation of this thing; Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace to be brought to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. There is a twofold interpretation of that Scripture, according to the twofold signification of the word Grace: Some read it thus, Rejoyce for that grace that is brought to you by the revelation of Jesus Christ. It is matter of highest and purest joy to remember that Grace (whether we take it for the favour of God to sinners, that they may be justified, or for that heavenly principle which the Spirit works in the hearts of sinners, that they may be sanctified) at the revelation of Jesus Christ to the soul in conversion.

Videbo deū in carne mea, i. e. Christum in carne resuscitatum.

When this grace is brought to (and through the effectual working of the Spirit) received by sinners, there's joy in Heaven, and therefore the thought of it should cause joy on earth. Yet

Our translation refers rather to the time future; Gird up the loins of your mind, &c. for the grace to be brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ hath been revealed already, but he shall be revealed yet more plainly. But is that the time of grace? We received grace at the first revealing of Christ, shall we receive more grace then?

I answer, Grace may be put for glory, or for that unspeakable favour and wonderful love, which shall be given out to the Saints when their bodies shall be raised, and Christ appears to them in Glory. So the word grace is used (1 Pet. 3.) where the Apostle exhorts Husbands and Wives to walk according to knowledge, as heirs of the same grace of life. We are possessors and not heirs only of grace in this life; but in this life we are only heirs of the grace of life, that is, of eternal life, or glory. Such is the grace that is given at the revelation of Jesus Christ; that is, when Jesus Christ shall be set forth to the view of our bodily eyes, at the rising again of our bodies. Then fulness of joy is promised, and God hath provided for it every way. He hath provided joy for the eye of the mind, by that vision of himself: He hath provided joy for the eye of the body, by the vision of Jesus Christ. And some have piously conceived it one part of the design why Jesus Christ took flesh, that we might have compleat joy in him, both by seeing the Divine nature in him intellectually, and by seeing him glorious in the Humane nature; for so at once both mind and body shall have fulness of consolation by him.

Fourthly, For as much as Job, to comfort himself in his present sorrows, hath recourse to this hope, I shall see God in my flesh: As if he had said, I see nothing but visions of horror and amazement now; I see nothing but friendless friends, and miserable comforters now; I see nothing but poverty and want compassing me now; but I shall see God, there's my hope, and there's my happiness.

Hence Observe, Our compleat happiness consists in the vision of God.

Christ placeth the future happiness of the Saints in the vision of his Mediatorial glory; Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory that thou hast given me (John 17. 24.) Glorified Saints shall for ever feed their eyes with unutterable delights in beholding the Glory of Jesus Christ.

The sight of the eye gives much contentment; It is a pleasant thing to behold the Sun (Eccles. 11.) How pleasant will it be then with the eye of the soul to behold God, and with the eye of the body to behold Jesus Christ? Mine eye affects my heart, saith Jeremiah in the Lamentations: That's true of joy as well as of sorrow. Sights refresh: How do people flock to see great shews? Now, the clear light that comes into the understanding, brings infinitely more refreshing and gladness to the soul, then that which comes in only by the body. It is joy and happiness to Saints to see God now, as was shewed before, in his Word and Works, in his Ordinances and Administrations. Good Hezekiah lamented his feared loss of that priviledge (Isa. 38. 11.) I said I shall not see the Lord, even the Lord in the land of the living: That is, I thought I should never have gone to Church more (as we use to speak) or to the Temple, there to behold the beauty of the Lord, and partake of his Ordinances. But what Elihu promises in a like case (Job 33. 26.) was performed to Hezekiah, He shall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him, and he shall see his face with joy. When shall he have this joyful sight? Even in this life; as 'tis explained at the twenty eighth Verse; He will deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light: That is, He shall be raised from his sick bed to see the light of the Sun, and then also he shall see the light of Gods countenance. This will be a joyful sight to him here, much more will the sight of Gods Face fill him with joy hereafter.

And the reason why this vision is our joy and happiness, ariseth four wayes.

First, Because our seeing of God makes us like him; like him two wayes, or in a double conformity. First, In holiness: And therefore, Secondly, In blessedness. These two cannot be separated. They that are (according to their capacity) holy as God is holy, shall also (according to their capacity) be happy as God is happy: Now that our seeing of God impresseth upon us a similitude of his holiness, is affirmed by the Apostle John (1 Epist. 3. 2.) We shall be like him, (Why?) For we shall see him. For if the vision we have of God here (in proportion to it) draw a likeness upon our souls (look how much any soul sees of God by faith, by so much is that soul made like to God in holiness) We all as in a glass behold the glory of the Lord, and are changed into the same Image (2 Cor. 3. 18.) Now if here in Grace, while we in Promises, and Providences, and Ordinances, behold God, we are made like to him, much more shall we be so, when we see him face to face. The true reason why we are not more like God in this life, is, because we see and truly know so little of him.

Secondly, Blessedness is nothing but satisfaction, and content. The Devil is most miserable, because he is nothing but dissatisfaction, and discontent. And hence the Devil labours to put all into a discontented mood, that they may be miserable, as he is. Now as our likeness to God riseth from vision; so our satisfaction, content, and rest, riseth from both. (Psal. 17. 15.) As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness. The Psalmist spake in the former Verse of the utmost happiness of worldly men, who have their portion in this life; and in this Verse he speaks by way of opposition to that, of his own happiness, together with the happiness of all the people of God; As for me, I will behold thy face, &c. As if he had said, Let others place their happiness in what they will, as for me, or for my part, here is my happiness, To behold the face of God in righteousness, (without holiness no man can see the Lord,) But what's the benefit of beholding the face of God? The next words expres it; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness. If we understand the Psalmist (as some do) of beholding God here in his favours and mercies, that confirms the point more; for if the soul receive satisfaction in beholding God here as he is pleased in part to reveal himself, then we shall much more be satisfied when he reveals himself fully to us. God is satisfied in and with himself, and therefore he can quickly satisfie us. The very gleanings of God being infinitely more then all the vintage and harvest of the creature.

Thirdly, Our seeing God, is the enjoying of God. How then can we be but happy in seeing him? We see many good things now that advantage us little, because they are none of ours; we do not enjoy them by seeing them, it is but a transient sight: But this sight is enjoyment, and the appropriation of God to our selves. Faith appropriates God here, vision shall much more hereafter.

Lastly, This sight will make us happy, because when once we enjoy God by sight, we shall be filled with assurance of enjoying him for ever. There is nothing but assurance in Heaven, and that not only that our estate is sure and shall continue, but that we shall have a continual sight or manifestation of it. Glory shall never be hidden from our eye, It shall be revealed in us (Rom. 8. 18.) This evidence of Glory compleats our happiness in glory. And seeing this vision of God, and the revelation of Glory in us, are the compleature of our happiness, no marvel if Job comforts himself in this expectation; After Worms have destroyed this body, I shall see God in my flesh. This sight will recompence all our sorrows and sufferings, yea, when once we have attained this sight, we shall not only never see, but forget our sorrows, and remember our sufferings no more.

Verse 27. Whom I shall see for my self, and mine eye shall behold, and not another, though my reins be consumed within me.

Job concluded the former Verse with an assurance, that, In his flesh he should see God. This Verse begins upon the same point, Whom I shall see for my self; but though it be the same in the matter, yet it comes cloathed with new considerations and additions. He doth not say barely, Whom I shall see; but, Whom I shall see for my self: There is the first addition. Secondly, Mine eye shall behold, and not another: There is a second addition; and this (saith Job) I believe Though my reins be consumed within me, that's a third.

Job)

Whom I shall see for my self.] It is one thing to see, and another thing to see for our selves. In some cases to do or see for our selves is sinful. As, No man should live to himself; so in that sence, No man should see to himself, or for himself. Job promiseth himself a time, wherein he should see, and do for himself without sin. And there is a doing for our selves, or a living to our selves in this life (much more may it be so in the life to come) which is not sinful, nor at all contrary to those Gospel rules of denying our selves, and living unto God. The Original which we render for my self, is in the Dative case (as Grammarians speak) which imports favour; I shall see to, or for my self, that is, for my own good, advantage, and comfort: The Prophet speaks in this construction (Isa. 9. 6.) To us a Son is given, to us a Child is born. He is given to us, or for us; that is, for our benefit, and salvation: There was never such a birth to us as Christ was; and it were better for us never to have been born, then not to have an interest in the birth of Christ. The promise of Christ is the foundation of our comfort; I shall see him to my self, (saith Job) as having my share, my part in him.

Est Dativus benevolentiæ, favoris, commodi & utilitatis.

Videbo deum mihi, non adversum me sed pro me sententiâ pronunciaturum. Pin. Videre, hoc loco, mihi sapit forum. Bold. Existimo vocem rar esse accusativi casus non nominativi, nec debere referri ad alium vel alios, quam ad deum ipsum. Bold.

Or, I shall see him for my self; that is, as a friend to me, as he that will take my part, and give sentence on my side. Some expound the latter clause of the verse sutably to this; Whom I shall see for my self; and mine eyes shall behold him, and not another; that is, not an adversary: For the word in the Hebrew signifies not only alium, but alienum, not only another, but an adversary. A learned Interpreter puts the word in the Accusative, not in the Nominative case, thus, Whom I shall see for my self, and not as my adversary (but friend:) So it refers to God himself, I shall not see God as a stranger to me, much less as an enemy, but shall find his heart opened to me, and him ready to receive me into his everlasting embraces.

It hath been shewed from the former words, that the happiness of Saints after the resurrection consists in vision: Here Job riseth up to a fuller assurance of that priviledge, which glorified Saints shall have in Heaven; Whom I shall see for my self.

Hence Note, In Heaven Saints shall have their interest in God clear, undoubtedly clear to them for ever.

It is the business of faith now to believe in God for our selves; to take Christ for our selves. But though this be the work of faith, yet faith cannot alwayes reach it, or read its own evidences by it. There may be true faith, and yet no sight of Christ for our selves; we may see him, and yet fear we have no interest in him. Come to Saints under temptation, or in times of desertion, and tell them of mercy, and free grace brought in by Christ the Redeemer; they answer, yes, they believe that it is so, Christ is the Saviour, grace is free, mercy endureth for ever; But what's all this to them? They see this by faith in the general promise made to sinners, but they see not this for themselves, nor can they make out their share in it; yea, possibly they see God angry; they see him indeed, but not for themselves, but as an adversary to them, or as departed from them; his face is hid, and they doubt whether he will ever unvail it again towards them. This is the state of many Saints here, and there are very few who see God alwayes for themselves in this life, or whose hearts are cleared from all scruples and fears about their interest in Christ. This is reserved for Glory when love shall be perfected: Perfect love will cast out fear (1 John 4. 18.) and when fear shall be totally and finally cast out, we shall never have so much as one suspicious doubtful thought, crossing our spirits, or shaking our assurances. Heavenly enjoyments shall not know the least interruption. Saints in this life are in a happy condition above all people in the world: but they meet with many rubs in the making out, and evidencing of their happiness: but in Heaven the favour of God shall ever be in sight, we shall see him continually for our selves. Job said in this book, Thou holdest me for thine enemy. He found God against him, and dealing with him as if he hated him: but his faith recovered to the highest pitch, I shall see God, and he will never act as an adversary any more. God will not so much as personate an enemy in Heaven, though here he smites and wounds his beloved ones, even with the wounds of an enemy; but there's nothing but smiles and embraces in glory; Whom I shall see for my self.

Again, This addition to the vision may refer (by way of opposition) to that sight which wicked men shall have of Christ in the resurrection: I shall see him for my self. There are others that shall see Christ as well as I, but I shall see him so as they shall not see him, they shall not see him for themselves (Matth. 24. 30.) There will be an universal vision of Christ in that great day, Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in Heaven, and then all the Tribes of the earth shall mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of Heaven with power and great glory. All the Tribes of the earth; he speaks of all Nations in allusion to the Nation of the Jews, who were distinguished into twelve Tribes, All the Tribes, that is, all the Families and Kindreds of the earth shall see him: But shall all the Tribes of the earth rejoyce in seeing him? No, all the Tribes of the earth shall mourn. Not that every particular person of every Tribe shall mourn, but many of every Tribe shall mourn. And this Scripture may give us light in the explication of those universal terms about redemption; for as it is said, Christ dyed for all; so here he saith, All the Tribes of the earth shall mourn at the appearance of Christ; yet then many shall rejoyce. Lift up your heads (saith Christ to the Saints) for the time of your redemption is at hand. But all the Tribes, that is, a number of the Tribes, or the greatest number of the Tribes shall mourn. All shall see him, but with a difference: The Saints shall see Christ coming, and it will be a welcome day to them: The wicked shall see him, but it will be a black and a sad day to them (Revel. 1. 7.) Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him; good, and bad. Which he addeth by way of specification; Every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him. If every eye shall see him, then they that pierced him must needs see him; and if so, why are they particularly named? It is usual in other Scriptures, when an universal is first laid down, yet to nominate a particular kind or person, though that be included in the former general. As in the the title of the eighteenth Psalm, A Song of David in the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies: There is the universal, and yet it follows, and from the hand of Saul. Saul was among his enemies, and so was included in the general stile of all his enemies; but he puts in Saul by name for special reason, because he was his most mortal enemy. Samuel commands Israel to put away all their false Gods, and Ashtaroth (1 Sam. 7. 3.) If they put away all, they must needs put away Ashtaroth; but he names Ashtaroth, because that was a principal Idol. So here, Every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him. Under the general they that pierced him are included; yet he specifies his piercers, who were of two sorts, and so according to the Text and point in hand, must have a twofold sight of him. Among those who pierced Christ, there were some that repented, and returned (as we read) at that Sermon of Peter) Acts 2. Peter told them they were the betrayers and murtherers of Christ; this pricked them to the heart, and many repented, embracing and believing on that Christ, whom they had betrayed and murthered. These shall see Christ with joy, though they pierced and put him to sorrow: The death of Christ hath procured mercy for those, whose cruelty procured his death. They who judged Christ worthy to dye, judging themselves so, were through faith delivered from death.

There were another sort that pierced him, who never repented, and they shall see him too, but they shall see him to their sorrow. They would withdraw from this sight, they would not behold him whom they pierced, if they could help it; they would fain be excused, but they shall not. Every eye shall see him, even they that pierced him. What a dreadful thing will it be, when they who wilfully and maliciously pierced the Lord Jesus Christ to death, and dyed impenitently in that sin, shall be brought into his presence? This sight of a pierced Christ will pierce their souls with sorrow; yet they shall see him not with sorrow only, but with vexation of heart, and anguish of spirit. They who have not seen a pierced Christ in the sorrows of repentance, can never see him whom they have pierced, but in the sorrows of despair. To behold Christ with the eye of sense will be most grievous to all those, who have not beheld him with an eye of faith. See him! No, they had rather be covered with the mountains, and that the hills should fall upon them. But they shall see him and be afraid, terror shall take hold of them. 'Tis a promise to some, that they shall see him whom they have pierced, and mourn (Zach. 12. 10.) 'Tis a threat to others, that they shall see him whom they have pierced and mourn; every eye shall see him, even they that have pierced him. To see the Saints in happiness, shall be a part of the punishment of the damned (Luke 13. 28.) There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when you shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the Prophets in the Kingdom of God, and your selves shut out. You shall be vexed with anger and envy as well as with pain and loss. Now as there shall be a different view and sight at that day in reference to the Saints, Saints shall look upon one another rejoycing; but wicked men shall look on the Saints mourning. It will be a blessed meeting when we shall see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and our selves let into the Kingdom with them. But the wicked shall see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob let into the Kingdom, and mourn that themselves are thrust out. Thus also there shall be a different sight of Jesus Christ; Believers shall see for themselves, and rejoyce: The wicked shall see him against themselves, they shall see him as their enemy, and mourn. I shall see him (saith Job) for my self. That's the first addition.

And mine eyes shall behold, and not another.

ראה verbum conspiciendi hoc loco aliud est à superiori, & significat propriè intendere in rem aliquâ oculis & animo, cum peculiari quodam sensu & experientia rei conspectæ.

We have in this Text, see, and see, and behold. The word in the Original is different from what we had before. I shall behold him. It signifies more then the bare seeing, or the gathering in the species of any object into the eye. It signifies a very vehement beholding; a critical discerning, view, and sight of a thing. Whom I shall behold. That is, with deep intention, both of eye, and mind, to find out and rejoyce in all the excellency, beauty, glory, and worth that is in him. A man may come into a room adorned with goodly pictures, he sees them in his passage, he hath a transient view of them, and he takes some pleasure in this view. Another beholds them, to see the workmanship, how the lines are drawn, and features shadowed to the life, he views with skill, and art, this pleaseth much, and gives the accurate beholder high contentment. So here, Mine eye shall behold him: That is, I shall even set my self to take a view of him, to gather up (as it were) into my self the idea's of his divine perfections, and so to receive all those delights and contents which rise from such an excellent Object. Moses (Exod. 3. 3.) had a vision of the burning Bush; The Angel of the Lord appeared in a flame of fire in the midst of the bush. I will now turn aside (said Moses) and see this great sight. He saw it before; for it is said, The Angel of God appeared to him. But that did not satisfie? I (saith he) will turn aside and see it: He useth the word of the Text; that is, I will turn aside to view it yet more exactly, to consider it more fully. I will see it with diligence and intendment, as well as I have seen it with wonder and astonishment. I will get near to observe this miraculous flame, that the bush should burn and not consume. So the word is used (Eccles. 1. 16.) I communed with mine own heart, saying, lo I am come to a great estate, and have gotten more wisdom then all that were before me in Jerusalem. Yea, my heart had great experience of wisdom and knowledge. The Hebrew is, My heart had seen much of wisdom and knowledge; that is, I had not only taken a light view, and consideration of those things that concern wisdom and knowledge, but my heart was studying, and beating upon them; I experimented them from time to time, till I was greatly seen in wisdom and knowledge. So here, mine eye shall not only take a glance, or a sight in passage, but I shall feed and satiate mine eye with a fixed observation. But Saints in glory shall come nearer and nearer to God, they shall as Moses saith, turn aside, to see this great thing the Glory of God, who is an everlasting burning. Saints in glory shall ever contemplate the ravishing Excellencies of God, and have a very intimate sight, and apprehension of him; they shall see, and behold him; they shall have as clear a knowledge of, and as free a communion with God as the state of a creature can bear. This the Apostle distinguisheth from our present sight and knowledge of God, which is through a glass and darkly, whereas he calleth this a sight, face to face, and a knowing even as also we are known. Mine eyes shall behold,

Post primùm illum & jucundissimum sui redemptoris conspectum, ait deinde se attentiùs, observantiùs, diligentiùs prospecturum, intenturumq; oculis & animo in tantam gloriam. Pin.

And not another.] The word which we render, another, signifieth first one differing in heart, condition, and affection, as was touched before: It signifies also any one differing only in name and number: Another person, another man, how much soever he be a friend, or affected to us. This sence of the word our Translators seem to intend: And then the meaning plainly is this, Mine eye shall behold, and not another; that is, the sight which I shall have of God in my glorified state, shall not be at the second hand, but such as I shall feel my self: The joy which I shall then receive shall not be from any report or narrative that others shall give me of the Glory of God, but it shall be from mine own personal vision, or sight of God. I shall see with mine own eyes, not anothers, or not by another.

זר alienus, vel alius, non videbit pro me alius, nã apertim & clarum videbo ipse.

Now we know God by the reports made to us of him; as those of Samaria knew Christ by the report which the Woman made: So, upon the matter the knowledge which we have of God here, is upon the report made to us of God in Ordinances, and in Providences: But as those Samaritans came to the Woman and said, Now we believe, not because of thy sayings; for we have heard him our selves, &c. So we shall say at last to all, whether things or persons, which have been as means reporting and conveying to us the knowledge of God; now we know, not because you have said it, or shewed it, for we our selves have seen him. We shall behold God our selves, and not by another. Such shall be the difference between all the knowledge we have of God here, and that which we shall have in glory. The knowledge we have here, is but like that which the Samaritans had of Christ by the Womans report; but that which we shall have in Heaven shall be like that which they had of Christ when himself came personally among them, and spake immediately. Or we may illustrate it by that of the Queen of the South: The knowledge which we have of God here, and of his Glory and Excellency, is like that of the Queen of the South in her own Countrey; there she heard a report of Solomon's person, of his government, of his riches, and dignity, and such a report as did not only affect and astonish her, but provoke her to undertake that great journey, that she might see for her self, and her eyes behold, and not another; and when she came to the Court at Jerusalem, and there beheld Solomon in his person, and attendance; when she observed the service of his table, and heard his wisdom, there was no more spirit in her (1 Kings 10. 5.) that is, she was as one astonished, whose spirits are conquered, and over-matched, or as one in a swoon, whose spirits are sunk and dissipated. Where the natural Spirit doth not act, it is said not to be. When we come to the Court of Heaven, as the Queen of the South to Solomon's Court, and there behold how much God is beyond and above all that we have hitherto heard of him here at home in our own Countrey, we shall be rapt up into admiration, and there shall be indeed no more of this low and narrow spirit in us for ever.

זר alienus à fide dissimilitudinem quandã morum & vitæ indicare potest, significat etiam id quod amico & familiari opponitur, & quod propter insuetudinẽ est horrori & nauseæ.

Further, The word is taken, not only for another person, or for one differing personally, but for one differing in condition, and in quality, or bearing any dissimilitude in manners; and so it was applyed to him who was an alien from the faith, a stranger to the Covenant, and Commonwealth of Israel. As if he had said, I shall behold him, and not another; that is, not an alien from the Common-wealth of Israel; not a stranger from the Covenant; not a man of another frame of spirit then I now am of, such shall not behold him. Which suggests this Note,

All that behold in Glory, shall be of one condition, of one faith and frame of spirit.

No stranger shall behold him, all shall be brethren; they all shall be as one man, or as if there were not another among them all. Heaven hath no mixture. All things and persons shall be as in one state, so of one piece. No tares in that field, nor goats in that flock. Saints enjoy unmixt communion here sometimes, and live together as if there there were not another among them: This Spirit of holiness and of unity was eminently poured out upon the first Gospel-Church, (Acts 2. 1.) They were all together with one accord in one place, as if they had all but one soul; and they continued as in the Apostles doctrine, so in fellowship, v. 42. Thus it is in the truth and height of spiritual communion below; Saints have not a stranger among them. And it is promised as the great priviledge of Sion, The Canaanite shall be no more in the Land; that is, there shall be no Alien among them, (Nahum 1. 15.) Behold upon the mountains the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace: O Judah keep thy solemn feasts, perform thy vows, for the wicked shall no more pass through thee, he is utterly cut off. The wicked, or Belial (in the Original) he that will not bear the yoak of God, shall no more pass through thee, much less stay and lodge in thee; no man shall be yoaked with you, but he that bears the yoak of Christ: O rejoyce, and keep thy feasts. That will be the day of Sions glorious liberty, when all (within her liberties) bear the yoak of Christ, and none shall be unequally yoaked. This is the glory of Saints below; and this shall be perfect in the state above. There shall be no stranger, no Canaanite in Heaven, none that are uncircumcised, or unclean: This is the harmony of Heaven, none but Saints shall be admitted there; and all the Saints shall be of one mind, and mind the same things there. Mine eye (saith holy Job) shall behold him, and not another.

Thirdly, Mr. Calvin carries the sence of these words to an Identity of the object to be seen, not to an Identity or consimilitude of the subject seeing. I shall behold him, and not another; that is, I shall behold him, and none other; I shall behold God alone: As he is the adequate, so he shall be the sole object of mine eye. He shall fill me with himself, I shall see God, and not look after, or take notice of any thing besides him: Mine eye shall not wander upon other objects. From that reading we are taught,

That, as in Heaven we shall see God; so we shall eye nothing but God.

We shall then indeed love God with all our heart, with all our soul, with all our might, yea, then we shall see him with all our eye, or contemplate him with all our understanding. Our whole man shall be fixed for ever on God, and God alone. Now the Saints have their eye upon God, they behold God by believing, but there are a thousand objects that draw us away from God, and mingle with our sight of him. We behold God, and other things too: We behold God; but we behold men, and many times, we have mens persons in admiration. And whereas we should have God only in admiration, we have the wisdom and knowledge, the holiness and graces of some men, the power and greatness of other men in admiration. But then nothing besides the wisdom and knowledge, the holiness and grace, the power and greatness of God shall be admired and exalted. I shall behold him, and not another. Then God shall be all in all (1 Cor. 15. 28.) All shall behold the Face of God, and that shall be an eternal satisfying feast. Glorified Saints shall not go for one morsel to any creature, they shall have all in the vision of God. It is the duty of faith to do so here; faith is taught to live upon God alone, to behold God, and none other, Christ, and none other; to behold Christ for justification, and none other, that we may be found in him, not having any righteousness of our own. This is the lesson that faith is taught here, to look to Christ, and to none other; and so to God, and to none other (Psal. 73. 25.) David (or Asaph) professeth that such was his faith; he speaks as high of his faith here, as he could of his vision in Heaven; Whom have I in heaven but thee? And whom have I in earth that I desire besides thee? David's faith beheld God, and none other, in Heaven; and comparatively to God, he valued none upon this earth. I have none in Heaven, neither Saint nor Angel; I have neither Abraham, Isaac, nor Jacob, to rejoyce in; and upon earth I have none, neither Wife nor Child, neither friend nor servant, that I look to, or rejoyce in, in any the least degree with God; Whom have I upon earth that I desire besides thee? David was a man deservedly desired by many, and he had doubtless duly bounded desires to many on earth, yet his desire of God had such a holy excessiveness in it, that he might say, I desire none but him. This is the business of faith to draw the soul purely to God. Saints are invited (Psal. 48. 12, 13, 14.) to walk about Sion, as if we were to make it our happiness to behold her strength and beauty; Walk about Zion, go round about her, tell her Towers, mark her Bulwarks, consider her Pallaces, that you may tell it to the Generations following. We are to busie our selves, to imploy both sense and understanding upon Zion; upon her Towers and Bulwarks, upon her Pallaces and Walls; not as if the Saints should be taken up meerly in the admiration of the beauty and glory of Zions Ordinances and priviledges. The last verse tells us, we must not stay in Zions Bulwarks and Pallaces, while it concludes thus; For this God is our God for ever and ever, he shall be our guide even unto death. He saith not, It is this Zion, these strong Walls and Bulwarks, these goodly Pallaces, which I call you to look on as your joy and happiness: No, this God, the God of Zion, you are chiefly to look on, and he is your chiefest happiness: unless you see God in Zions Bulwarks, and Walls, and Pallaces, it is not worth your sight. This God is our God. He quite slips the mention of Walls, Bulwarks, and Pallaces, and rests in the mention of God. Thus we should live upon God, not only in the great mystery of Redemption and Justification: In reference to which Christ by the Prophet bespeaks the whole attention of our souls (Isa. 45. 22.) Look to me, and be ye saved; that is, to me alone; but also in all our enjoyments. This, I say, will be perfect in vision above, we shall have, we shall enquire after nothing there but God, to be filled with, to all eternity.

As God hath none upon the earth that he desires to look on, but only his Saints; he cares not for all the rest of the World, he scarce can give them a look: To this man will I look (saith the Lord) even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word (Isa. 66. 2.) As the Prophet said when there were two great Kings before him, whereof one was very wicked; Were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the King of Judah, I would not look towards thee, nor see thee (2 Kings 3. 14.) so the Lord beholds all the children of men from Heaven, yet he is said to look only to the Saints; He beholds the great, the rich, but he looks only to the poor in spirit, and to them he looks, how poor soever they are in the flesh. To him will I look that is poor, &c. As if he had said, Mine eye passeth over others lightly, but where-ever I find a man of a contrite heart, I fix mine eye upon him, and rejoyce in such a sight. There is not one humble soul, but the eye of God is on him, and will continue upon him for ever. Now as God is taken up with viewing and beholding Saints; so the Saints are and shall for ever be taken up in beholding God. God sees through all the perfections that are in us in a moment; God needs not look long on us, as if he were unsatisfied what we are; there is no excellency in us, but is open to him: But we can never draw out the perfections of God, how long soever we stay beholding him; some new glory will break forth to us, or rather the whole Glory of God (so far as the most perfect creature is able to take it in) will be everlastingly new to us.

All these conceptions about and interpretations of the Text, are pious and profitable; but that which I rather take to be the proper meaning of these words (Mine eye shall behold, and not another) is this, Job (as was touched in giving the Analysis of these two Verses) speaks here of the Identity of his flesh in the resurrection: I shall see him, I shall see him for my self, mine eyes shall behold him, and not another. That is, I, the man who now stand here before you, this same Job who now speaketh; I the very same numerical person shall see God in this very flesh, and with these eyes; they shall be indeed new dressed and dyed, trimmed, and made fit to come into the presence of the great and glorious God; yet it shall be even this flesh, and these eyes, in which I shall come into the presence of God, and behold my Redeemer. I shall be altered from what I was, but I shall not be another then I was; I shall be changed into a better condition, but I shall not be changed into another person. My qualities shall have a perfective alteration, but I shall retain the same matter, and be the same man. A man raised glorious and immortal, is what he was, except his mortality; and hath no more then he had, except his glory. The Philosopher acknowledgeth there may be a specifical, but not a numerical restauration of that which is corrupted. But Job's faith was clearer then Aristotle's reason; He believed a personal resurrection, Mine eye shall behold, and not another; I shall not be changed into another person, whatever changes I undergo, I shall be Job still, the same Job.

Idem qui sum, & non alienus. Jun. Hisce oculis ego ipse, hac ipsa carne, &c. Resuscitatus & glorioſus non erit alius à seipso mortali & nondum glorioſo. Bold. Egomet non in aliud quidpiam commutatus. Bez.

Quæcunq; substantia est corruptibilis, reintegratur eadem specie non eadem numero. Arist. lib. 2. de Gener.

Hence Observe, Every man at the resurrection shall receive the same body that now he hath, and be the same man that now he is.

Resurget cutis mea, quæ perpetitur hæc. Sept.

The Septuagint are full in this; and therefore they translate by way of explication, My skin that hath suffered these things shall rise again. We shall be in the resurrection what we are now, except our infirmities and imperfections, our lameness and blindness, our sores and sicknesses; all these shall be done away, but we shall remain; we shall loose nothing but that which is not worth the keeping; we shall loose nothing but that which to loose will be a gain to us. Every man in the resurrection shall be, though not in every consideration, The WHAT he was, yet he shall be The WHO he was, both name and person. Christ will not loose those particular parts and members of the body in the dust of the grave, which himself hath redeemed from the fire of Hell. There are two Pronouns, the one possessive, the other demonstrative, in these words, which speak much to this point; Mine eyes, and This, Job did as it were lay his hand upon his breast, and say, This flesh, this body; as Christ (John 2. 19.) Destroy this Temple, and in three dayes I will raise it again. This very Temple, though destroyed, shall be built up again. The Apostle useth such Identical expressions (1 Cor. 15. 53.) This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. This corruptible, and this mortal. He doth not only say corruptible shall put on incorruption, and mortal shall put on immortality, but this, and this, to shew the sameness of it. It was a custom in the primitive times (as some have observed) when they repeated that Article of the Faith, I believe the resurrection of the flesh, to point to their own body, and say, even of this flesh; I believe the resurrection of this flesh, of this body.

Etiam hujus carnis.

One of the Ancients hath a large discourse upon this subject, wherein he discovers some, who though they granted the soul immortal, yet denyed the resurrection of the same body: Such were the Marcionites, Basilidians, and Valentinians. These, saith he, went halves with the Sadduces in their opinion. The Sadduces denyed Spirits. Hence (Acts 23. 6.) Paul perceiving that the Assembly was mixed of Sadduces and Pharisees (and wisely considering, that if he did but mind them of their differences between themselves, they would not so strongly agree and combine against him) he made his advantage of it by professing openly that he was a Pharisee. And the sacred Historian tells us what the peculiar tenets of the Sadduces were (ver. 8.) The Sadduces say there is no resurrection, neither Angel nor Spirit (they denyed both) but the Pharisees confess both. They held, that there were immortal spirits or souls united to the bodies of men, that those bodies should arise and be re-united to the soul. They also confessed that there were Angels, who are Spirits subsisting properly without bodies. Now, as the Sadduces denyed the resurrection of the body, so others denyed the resurrection of the same body: These he calleth sharers or halvers in the Sadduces opinion: Though not so grosly as they, yet too too grosly departing from the faith. And indeed they who deny the resurrection of the same body, do (by implication) altogether deny the resurrection of the body. For if the same numerical body should not rise, it could not be called a resurrection: Resurrection is the rising of that which fell, and the taking up of that which was before laid. So that it would be the creation of a new body, not the resurrection of the old, if it were not the same body. And it conduceth much to the comfort of Saints, and may be the terror of wicked men, to keep close to the faith of this Article. The Apostle seems to touch it (2 Cor. 5. 10.) We shall all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things he hath done in his body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad. That hand which hath been doing for Christ, that very tongue which hath been speaking for Christ, that whole body, which hath been moved and acted for Jesus Christ, as an instrument of his glory, that shall receive the reward: As also that hand, that eye, that tongue, that foot which hath moved, and stirred against Christ, that also shall be punished, and receive according to the evil committed in the body. Judgment would not be exact, unless as there hath been a co-partnership between soul and body in their works, so also they should be co-partners both in reward and punishment.

Tertullianus eos qui reditum animæ non ejusdem corporis in resurrectione admittebāt (Marcionitas, Barsilidianos, & Valentinianos) eleganter vocat partiarios sententiæ Sadducæorum, ut qui dimidiā tantum agnoscerent resurrectionē. Tertul. de resur. car. l. 2.

Si in alio corpore resurrexero, jam ego non ero qui resurgo; non enim resurrectio dici poterit, ubi non resurgit, quod cecidit. Greg.

Judicium integrum non erit, nisi sicut fuit inter animæ & carnem operarum societas, ita etiam sit mercedis aut supplicii. Tertull. persequitur hoc Argumentum l. 2. de resur. car. c. 14, 15, 16, 17.

If it be objected, How can the same numerical body rise again, especially in such cases, when thousands of carkasses are mingled, and their dust promiscuously heaped together, or scattered abroad? When the bodies of men are devoured by wild beasts, and digested into the substance of fowls and fishes, especially when the bodies of men are eaten and concocted into the bodies of other men? How can these numerical bodies rise? I answer, First, If we will not rest in matters of faith till we have a clear rational account of them, our faith may quickly be at a stand. I answer, Secondly, That as it is easie to make objections against faith; so faith hath one answer as easie as these objections. The Apostle gives it, and into that all such doubts must be resolved (Phil. 3. 20.) for having shewed the present condition or disposition of the spirit of Saints in the former verse, Our conversation is in Heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. He presently shews what the future condition of the Saints bodies shall be; Who shall change our vile bodies, that they may be fashioned like unto his glorious body (Who is this, who puts this vile body into such a glorious fashion? Trouble not your selves for that, there is power enough to do it, It is done) according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself. This is an answer to the hardest objections, Christ can subdue all things, therefore those which are hardest.

There is no difficulty to omnipotency.

You ask how the same body can be restored? I ask how the first body was created? Tell me how God created Heaven and Earth out of nothing? So that as the Apostle speaks (Heb. 11. 3.) Things which are seen, were not made of things which do appear: How were these things done? If you argue by reason, you will be pos'd and gravell'd in these as well as in that other; yea, you will be at a wall, and not able to answer about that which is ordinary, and every day done, and shall continue to be done in all the Generations of men (Solomon puts the question, Eccles. 11. 5.) Tell me how the bones grow in the womb of her that is with child: Can you tell how the Child is framed? Thou canst not give an account of thy own production, nor find out the work of God in forming the body; How then canst thou tell me? Or how can I tell thee the work of God in raising the body? Or how that scattered mingled dust is severed and recollected to each proper body? I must say as David (Psal. 139. 6.) Such knowledge is too wonderful for me, it is high, I cannot attain unto it; or as he at the fourteenth verse of the same Psalm concerning his making, We are fearfully and wondrously made: marvellous are thy works, O God. And must conclude about this point of the resurrection as the Apostle begins about the creation (Heb. 11. 3.) As through faith we understand that the worlds were framed; so that the body of man shall be raised by the Word of God. Therefore as to the manner how such things are done, we must have recourse only to the Almighty power of God, to the All-powerful God, Who is able to subdue all things to himself. Mine eye shall behold, and not another,

Though my reins be consumed within me.

I toucht upon the interpretation of this clause before, as it suits with that passage, vers. 26. Though after my skin, worms destroy this body, and though my reins be consumed within me. Though I be totally consumed, skin without, and reins within, yet notwithstanding, I believe, that I shall rise and see God. Thus it was joyned with the first words of the twenty sixth verse, to shew the triumph of faith over all difficulties that lye in the way of the resurrection. In this sence I have done with it already; and I take that to be the meaning of our Translators, Though my reins be consumed within me.

Yet

Yet a little further to open these words, and to give you two or three things from them. The Vulgar translation is extream wide from our reading, though the abetters of it labour to make it out from the Original; This hope is laid up in my bosom. Job having given a confession of his faith in the Redeemer, and of the resurrection, he (according to this translation) concludes, This hope, or the hope of these things is laid up in my bosom. The word rendred within me in the Hebrew, signifies the bosom or chest (as we call it) of the body; and so, by a Metaphor, that wherein we lay up our secrets, our desires, and our hopes; these are all laid up in our bosoms. Jesus Christ is said to come out of the bosom of his Father, where his secrets, his hid treasures, are stored up.

Reposita est hæc spes in sinu meo. Vulg.

כלה significat consummari vel deficere, ut aliis modis sic peculiariter desiderio alicujus rei. Unde etiam usurpatur pro desiderare & diligere. Hinc dicuntur renes

We say, Though my reins be consumed within me; they say, This hope is laid up in my bosom. But how come they by the word hope, and the word laid up? The answer is thus given: The same root which signifies the reins, signifies also to consume, or to finish. And because our desires consume us, (a man by strong desires is as it were wasted and spent:) Or because a man endeavours by all means, to perfect and consummate his desires, by attaining and enjoying the thing desired; therefore the word doth also signifie to consume, or to consummate as well as to desire. And because the reins are the seat of desire, as Naturalists speak, they are therefore in the Hebrew expresst by desire it self. The same word is rendred both reins and desire, because the reins provoke desire, or to the fulfilling of desire (Psal. 26. 2.) Try my heart and my reins; that is, Lord try my desires what the things are which I would have. So (Psal. 7. 9.) The Lord tryeth the heart, and the reins; that is, he finds out or discovers the most secret desires of men; He knows what every one would have, as well as what every one doth; He knows what the motions of the reins are, as well as what the motion of our hands are. And hence because what we hope for, we desire and wait for, therefore the Text is thus read, This hope is laid up in my bosom. It's true, Saints treasure up in their breasts the hope of the resurrection, the hope of the glory of the life to come: This they keep among their chiefest treasures; this is the riches, the gold and silver which they lay up in their bosoms; whatsoever they lose in the world, when they are stripped of all, yet they have a chest full of this treasure. This hope is laid up in my bosom. Saints have their bosoms full of this hope, when stript of all. But because this reading, though the sence be pious, strains too hard upon the Text, therefore I will not insist upon it.

כליות quasi concupiscentes aut consummantes, quia in illis videntur consummari desideria. Hinc vulgatus vertit, spes, quæ cum desiderio rei sperata conjuncta est.

Further, Whereas we say, Though my reins be consumed within me. The word Though, is not in the Hebrew; there 'tis only My reins are consumed. Now because ordinarily in Scripture reins are taken for desires, therefore this sence is very clearly made out from it, that Job having spoken of the sight he should have of God, and the assurance of his own resurrection, concludes with this expression, My reins, or my desires are spent; that is, I have nothing more to desire, nothing more to wish and seek after then this, a blessed resurrection, and the enjoyment of God for ever.

כלו כליותי

Desideria, vota intimæ animæ cogitationes & affectiones consummata, ad finem & perfectionem deducta sunt. Nihil habeo quod desiderem.

Hence we may Note, All the desires of Saints are consummate, yea (I may say) consumed in the hope of a happy resurrection, and of the vision and enjoyment of God.

These are the consummation, and the very utmost of their desires: The seventy-second Psalm concludes thus, The Prayers of David the Son of Jesse are ended: Which some render, The desires of David are consumed and finished; David had no more to desire. Why doth he put such a conclusion to that Psalm, The prayers, or desires of David are ended? That Psalm is a Propheſie of Christ; David was setting faith on work upon the Kingdom of Christ; and when he had done this, he shuts up all, I have no more to desire, here I make an end; here is the utmost of my joyes and comforts; not an end of consumption, but an end of perfection, I can go no further; being come to Jesus Christ, I have no more to ask.

Cum hic Psalmus sit de petendo & expectando Messia non solum eo Psalmo suum psalterium clausit David, sed etiã videtur fuisse summa suæ spei desideriorum & precum.

So also David (2 Sam. 23.) having elegantly described the blessings which follow a righteous Government, shuts up thus (ver. 5.) Though my house be not so with God: That is, Though I have not such a glorious posterity, and such an illustrious succession upon my throne; or, as the former Verse speaks it, Though my house be not as the light of the morning when the Sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain; though my house be not so with God, yet he hath made with me an everlasting Covenant, ordered in all things, and sure, that is all my salvation, and all my desire; here is the end of my reins: What though my house do not flourish, nor shine in that outward brightness that now it doth? Are these my chief hopes? Do these carry my strongest desires? No, my hope is laid up in the Covenant of life and peace, the good whereof is all my desire: Doubtless David desired that his Children should prosper, and that the Throne of Israel might continue in his line, but comparatively with the spiritual benefits of the Covenant of God in Christ, and the enjoyment of him, those were no desires, and therefore referring to them he saith, this is all my desire, or I have no more to desire, My reins are consumed within me.

Again, Some render thus; My reins are consumed by reason of my desire: As if he had said, I have spoken of death, I have spoken of glory, of the vision of God, and now my reins are consumed, my very desiring part is consumed with desire after these things: I desire these things, so that I am consumed with the desire of them, and my desiring faculty is spent with desiring. Not only were all his desires terminated in this, but his desiring power was swallowed up in the pursuit of this desire; he had such strong affections to God, that he was even ready to fall into a swoon, and faint away.

Hence Note, Saints upon the discovery of the glory of God, and the happiness of the next life, are filled with longing desires after those enjoyments.

Lord, I have waited for thy salvation, saith Jacob (Gen. 49. 19.) Jacob speaks this upon his death-bed, as that which he had been looking for all his life; as if that were the account of all his actions in the world, and the story of his whole life; Lord, I have been waiting for thy salvation (Psal. 119. 81.) My soul fainteth for thy salvation; that is, it fainteth with desire after thy salvation; and (v. 127.) I have longed for thy salvation. All desires are summed up in longing. There is a strong desire in Saints here to see God, and such as makes them faint, even to see and enjoy him in his Ordinances. (Psal. 27. 4.) One thing have I desired of the Lord, and that I will seek after (that is, never give over seeking after till I reach and attain it) to behold the beauty of the Lord, and enquire in his Temple. Again (Psal. 42. 1, 2.) As the Hart panteth after the water-brooks, so my heart panteth after God: When shall I come and appear before God? That is, When shall I behold and enjoy him in these lower Heavens, his spiritual Dispensations and Ordinances. Now if there be so great and so longing a desire to see the Lord through these mediums, or in these glasses, how much more to see him immediately and face to face? And if that be The one thing, the only thing which David desired, if all his desires were summed up in that here, how much more in Heaven, how will that desire swallow all our desires in glory? And indeed we could not abide in Glory with any other desire but that. The Saints are described in their present state by this Periphrasis, Such as love the appearing of Christ; as if they loved nothing else. What then will Christ be to them when he shall appear? They who love Christ, whom they have not seen, how shall they love Christ when they see him!

We may speak of the precious things of the Gospel, and of the glorious enjoyments of Christ to carnal hearts, and they never desire them; they are so far from having their reins consumed in the hot love of them, that their spleen is only stirred against them.

From the whole context, consider upon what subject Job falls when himself was fallen into that sad condition; he was fallen into the depth and gulf of worldly misery, and outward affliction, the hand of God was heavy upon him; What was his resolve, whither doth he betake himself? He meditates the resurrection; he meditates the estate of Saints after this life, and this bears up his spirit in the midst of all the afflictions with which he was burdened in this life.

Hence

Hence Observe, Faith in the resurrection to life encourageth us in or against all the troubles and afflictions of this life.

As Saints find present support and strength in affliction, by what Christ every day administers and gives forth unto them; so by what they hope and are assured he will give and be unto them in that great day. The hope of future good is a present comfort. (2 Cor. 4. 17.) For this cause we faint not; What cause was that? Because we have this hope, this faith (ver. 14.) That he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise us up also by Jesus, and shall present us with you. Expectations from Christ are as the cordials which keep us from fainting under our burthens, and revive us in the sorrows of death it self. The faith of Christ in the resurrection of his own body to life, is spoken of prophetically, as that which bare up his spirit in the hour of death (Psal. 16. 9, 10.) Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, nor suffer thy holy One to see corruption. Now as that was Christs support in his sorrows, and sufferings, that he should not be left in the grave, that he should not see corruption: So it is the support of Saints, that though they see, yet they shall not for ever lye under the power of corruption. (Psal. 17. 15. Psal. 49. 15.) Thou wilt redeem me from the power of the grave. The Apostle makes his Doctrine the Canon of Consolation (1 Thes. 4. 18.) Comfort one another with these words: What words were these? All those words, beginning at the thirteenth Verse to the end of the Chapter: I would not have you to be ignorant brethren, concerning them which are asleep (he means dead) that ye sorrow not even as others that have no hope: for if we believe that Jesus dyed and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him, &c. The Author to the Hebrews is abundant in testifying how the Jewish Martyrs comforted themselves with this thing in the midst of those various deaths with which they were encompassed. (Heb. 11. 35.) They did not accept of deliverance, that they might receive a better resurrection. Why it is called a better resurrection was shewed in opening the fourteenth Verse of the fourteenth Chapter of this Book. The hope of the resurrection was a ground of such strong consolation to the Saints of former times, that it was called expresly, The Consolation. We may collect this from the discourse which Christ was pleased to maintain with Martha concerning the death of her Brother Lazarus, whom Jesus loved. For whereas Christ tells her (John 11. 23.) Thy Brother shall rise again. Martha saith, I know he shall rise in the resurrection at the last day: What the Greek calleth The Resurrection, the Syriack Paraphrase calls The Consolation, reading it thus, I know that he shall rise again in the consolation. What strong consolation did the Believers of those Ages draw from their assurance of a resurrection, seeing resurrection and consolation were terms equivalent? When this was but named, the other was understood; we have now the first-fruits of consolation, but our harvest will not be, till our dead bodies, which the Apostle compares to seed sown, spring out of the earth again.

I might further shew, that the resurrection is not only the consolation of Saints, but the consolation of the whole creation: The Apostle speaks of it under that notion (Rom. 8. 19, 22.) For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the Sons of God. And again, The whole creation (not only living, but sensless creatures, these must be taken in to make up the whole creation) groaneth, and travelleth in pain until now. But what would the creature have? It waiteth for the manifestation of the Sons of God, and to be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. We are now the Sons of God (saith the Apostle John, 1 Epist. 3. 2.) and it doth not yet appear what we shall be. But we know, that when he shall appear, we shall be like him: At the appearance of Christ, the Son of God by nature, his Adopted sons shall appear what they are, there will be a glorious manifestation of them when Christ shall appear in glory. This glory (which will be compleat at the resurrection) the whole creation now groaning waiteth for, being subjected under hope to participate (each creature according to its capacity) in the glory of it. Now if all creatures are sustained by this hope, much more man, who is chiefly concerned in it. Job is a great example of it, who upon his sorrowful and sick bed raised his soul into consolation, by thoughts of the resurrection. His friends pressed him with hopes and promises of a temporal resurrection, if he did repent: but he disclaimed the hope of such a resurrection, or was not much affected with it, he little minded a resurrection to temporal glory; but he had an assurance of that which served his turn a thousand times better, making him even then, if not joyful, yet patient under all his tribulations. I shall see God for my self, and not another, though my reins be consumed within me.

Job having thus declared his faith, makes an application of all particularly to his Friends in the two last verses; But ye should say, why persecute we him? &c.

VERS. 28, 29.

But ye should say, why persecute we him, seeing the root of the matter is found in me?
Be ye afraid of the sword: for wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword, that ye may know there is a judgment.

THus Job concludes, and his conclusion consists of two parts.

Whereof the first is a direction.

The second a commination.

He gives direction (ver. 28.) where he tells his Friends their duty, or what resolutions became them concerning him; Ye should say, why persecute we him? He subjoyns a reason, or the ground of that direction, Seeing the root of the matter is found in me?

The commination or threat is laid down (ver. 29.) Be ye afraid of the sword. While he bids them be afraid of the sword, he fore-warns them that the sword is coming, and that the judgment of God was ready to overtake, and fall upon them, if they still persisted in their hard thoughts, and uncharitable censures of him.

Here also he subjoyns a reason or ground of this commination; For wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword. I warn you of the sword, and I see the reason why; wrath seems to awaken, and who knows what work it may make among you ere long: This I know from many Authorities and experiences, That, Wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword, that ye may know that there is a Judgment.

First, Consider the direction.

Verse 28. But ye should say, why persecute we him?

Ye should say.] The Hebrew is rendred three wayes.

First thus, For, you will say, as implying a future ground, or occasion, yea, an urgent necessity, which they should see and be convinced of at last, to say, Why persecute we him?

Secondly thus, Wherefore do ye say? Intimating their present action, or assertion.

Thirdly, We render it, Ye should say; at once shewing their duty, and convincing their neglect of it. As if he had said, O my friends, ye ought to say, or it is best for you to say thus; look to your selves, this is your duty to say, why persecute we him? So the Prophet (Mal. 1. 6.) A son honoureth his father; the meaning is, a son ought to honour his father: There are many sons who dishonour their fathers; but it becomes every son to honour and obey, or by obeying to honour his father. Thus here, For you say; that is, you should say, or you ought to say, בו יאמרו Potentiale est dicere debueratis, vel vestrum erat dicere. Merc.

Why [persecute] we him?] We had this word (ver. 22.) Why do ye persecute me as God, and are not satisfied with my flesh? Here he puts it to them again, Ye should say, why persecute we him?

The word which we translate to persecute, is a Metaphor taken from wild beasts, or ravenous birds, whose hunger or cruelty makes them swift and fierce to overtake, and so to satiate themselves with their prey. The Greek Translators of the old Testament usually render it by that word which is used in the Greek of the new Testament, to express the vexation of the Saints or Gospel-professors by the World, for the Faith of Christ, and the testimony of a good Conscience. And because this word bears in it the sence of a most earnest and vehement pursuit, therefore when the Spirit of God would put Saints upon the strongest, and most vehement pursuit of any grace, or duty, he useth this word, and exhorts them even to persecute it (1 Cor. 14. 1.) Follow after charity. Persecute charity; that is, be be as eager after charity as a cruel man is eager to persecute him that is innocent and godly (Heb. 12. 14.) Follow peace with all men, and holiness: It is this word: As it is the strongest evidence of the sinfulness of any man to persecute those persons who have received grace; so it is an evidence of purest holiness to persecute or earnestly to pursue the highest attainments of grace. There is nothing of freer gift then Grace, and the Kingdom of Heaven; yet the Kingdom of God delights to suffer violence, and then 'tis best when the violent take it by force. The Grace of God to man is free; yet man should be fierce in following the Grace of God. The love of good hath made as hot persecutions as ever wrath hath made against it. But to the Text.

רדף Insecutus, prosecutus, persecutus; &c.

Why persecute we him?] This word may be considered two wayes. There is a persecution in a strict sence; and a persecution in a large sence. I conceive that we are not here to take persecution in a strict sence, as if Job did imagine his Friends were (as we may say) bloody Bonner's, or Nero's, or Diocletian's, that they did oppose and vex him directly (or eo nomine) for truth and righteousness sake, or that in opposing him, they opposed or suppressed their own light: But here persecution is taken in a large sence, for unfriendly dealing, or for such unkind carriages as are very wide from and unsuitable to those who profess love. There is a threefold persecution, First, A mental persecution, when the spirit of a man riseth up, and opposeth another. Secondly, There is a verbal persecution, when men give hard words, and uncharitable censures. Thirdly, There is a real persecution (there is real persecution in both the former, as real is opposed to imaginary) or a persecution by the hand; such as is the dragging of innocent persons before the Tribunal of the Magistrates: As Christ foretells his Disciples, Ye shall be brought before Governours and Kings for my Names sake (Matth. 10. 18.) Here we are to take persecution in the second signification. Job's Friends did not hate him, they thought indeed that he had done very wickedly, and that he was very wicked, they concluded that he was leavened with hypocrisie; but I cannot conceive that they were leavened with malice against him, nor was theirs persecution in the third sence; they did not hale him before the Magistrate, nor bring him to judgment and tryal. But it was persecution of the middle rank, hard language, and unfriendly censures. Job was under the persecution of the tongue, he complained of that (Chap. 12. 4.) I am as one mocked of his neighbour. And again (Chap. 17. 2.) Are there not mockers with me? Mocking is called persecution (Gal. 4. 29.) He that was born after the flesh, persecuted him that was born after the spirit. Ishmael persecuted Isaac with scornful language, he mocked him (Gen. 21. 9.) Such was Job's persecution, and he bids his Friends give him any reason if they could, why they persecuted him thus. But ye should say, why persecute we him? There are three or four readings of the words as joyned together.

Quia dicetis, quis persecutus est eum? i. e. quis persecutus est eum nisi Deus qui omnia merita novit? Cajet.

First, Some thus, Because you will say, who persecutes him? As if he had said, You put it off from your selves, you think you do not persecute me at all, ye say it is the hand of God on me, not yours; we do not touch you, God hath, and Satan hath by his permission. You will say, who persecutes him? Is it we that have done it? Is not the hand of God on you? Doth not that lead us to speak thus concerning you, and to judge thus of you? Why do you say that we persecute you? It is God who knows very well what you deserve, and now renders to you according to your deservings? It is he (not we) that persecuteth you.

Nam confido dicetis, quid persequimur illum? Coc.

Secondly, Thus, For I trust you will say, why persecute we him? As if he had said, I have therefore made this profession; because, I hope, that when you have once heard it, you will deal more gently, favourably, and friendly with me, then hitherto you have done; you will say, why persecute we this man? You will begin to question your selves for what you have done, and take up better counsels and resolves for the future. This is a proper sence of the words, and comes near that intended in our translation.

Quare ergo nunc dicitis, persequamur eum. Vulg.

Thirdly, The vulgar Latine renders, Wherefore do ye now say, let us persecute him? This translation makes it a reproof of their purpose to oppose him, or a description of his Friends, still conspiring to persecute him. As if Job had heard them combining together, and encouraging one another against him; as some are expressed, against whom David prayeth (Psal. 64.) Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked (ver. 2.) Who whet their tongue like a sword, &c. (ver. 3.) They encourage themselves in an evil matter; they commune of laying snares privily (Ver. 5.) They search out iniquities, they accomplish a diligent search: both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart is deep (v. 6.) Solomon warns his son not to hearken when such sollicite (Prov. 1. 10.) If sinners entice thee, consent thou not; if they say, Come, let us lay wait for blood. Job according to this translation is here conceived reproving and chiding his Friends for such a combination, Wherefore do ye say, let us persecute him?

Æquũ jam esset ut in cordibus vestris compũgremini, dicentes, quare persequimur virum probũ, & rectè de deo, dequè divinis sentientem? Rab. Lev.

Fourthly, Our Translation gives the words the sence of an Exhortation, either to consider why they had already opposed him, or to repent of that opposition, Ye should say; that is, it is your duty, I exhort or advise you to say, Why do we persecute him? It is but time that you should now recollect your selves, and be in a better mind, that your hearts should smite you for what you have done, and that you should put this question home to your own souls, Why have we thus far troubled him? Or why should we trouble him any further?

Some joyn this verse with the former, thus, My grief and sorrow are so great, my pain is so painful, that my very reins are consumed within me; so that unless you had put off all humanity, unless your compassions were totally consumed in you, you would have said before this time, Why do we persecute a dry leaf? Why do we persecute a carkass, a dead man, a man whose reins are consumed within him. From the third of those readings, which reproveth their persevering or resolvedness to persevere in the way they were in.

Observe, To advise and resolve upon any sinful way, is a high aggravation of sin.

It is bad enough to sin for want of advice; but to sin advisedly is far worse. To fail or sin is common to men, yea, even to the best of men; but to resolve to sin, or to be resolute in sinning, is proper to the Devil, and the character of the worst of men. I have elsewhere in this Book had occasion to raise Observations of near affinity with this, and therefore I only touch it here.

From our reading, But you should say, why persecute we him? Job seems to tax his Friends with rashness and inconsiderateness; You should say; but you have not, you have not yet examined your own hearts, nor my condition as you ought.

Hence Observe, That as some speak they know not what, so others do they know not why; their actions out-run their reason, and they are more busie then wise.

Christ was persecuted to the highest, he was persecuted to death: But had his enemies said, Why do we persecute him? had they looked to their ground? Christ (Luke 23. 34.) makes their inadvertency the ground of his prayer for them; Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. They have not said, Why persecute we him? They were resolved, but not advised; Crucifie him, crucifie him; down with him, down with him: It must be so; but no true cause was shewed why it should be so. Many may say of their sinful wayes according to the letter of the Apostle (Rom. 7. 15.) What we do we know not. Paul speaks of himself as over-powered by corruption, What I do I know not; we translate, That which I do I allow not. Paul speaketh not of his sins of ignorance, or that he had done what was indeed sinful, not knowing, or not being convinced that it was a sin; and therefore we do not translate, I know not, as if Paul had been in the dark about his own doings; but, That I do I allow not; though I cannot but know that I have done sinfully, yet I do not favour or take part with any sin that I have done. When a godly man sins, he alwayes doth the evil which he allows not: but when ignorant men sin, they do the evil which they know not; and wicked men do the evil which they have no mind to know, they cannot endure to consider (as to sinfulness) either what they are doing, or what they have done. The fool offers a sacrifice, and Solomon would not have true worshippers like him; Keep thy foot when thou goest into the House of God, and be more ready to hear then to offer the sacrifice of fools, for they consider not that they do evil (Eccles. 5.1.) Some by the supplement of an adversative particle, render the Text thus, They know not but to do evil. They do evil while they do good, even while they worship God, and they cannot do otherwise. Our rendring is clearer, when they do evil they consider it not, they care not to be acquainted with the evil which they have done, or they act at a venture, whether good or whether evil, fall back or fall edge, never troubles them. Ignorant persons are such fools, that they know not when they do evil; wicked men are such fools, that they never consider or regard it when they have done evil.

of

Secondly, Observe, Before we do any thing we should take account of our selves why we do it.

There are two things we should take account of our selves about before we set upon any action. First, For what end we do it? Secondly, By what rule we do it? These two Questions we should put before all our actings: What is my design? What is my warrant? For according to the design, the heart and hand too are ordered in every undertaking. Singleness of eye, makes all our wayes single. Yet we must look as well to our warrant, as to our design; to our rule, as well as well as to our end. The Apostle bids us walk circumspectly (Ephes. 5. 15.) No man can walk circumspectly, unless he take notice of his ground, and see where he treads. To walk circumspectly, is to walk looking round about us. And unless we do so, we shall soon loose our way, and miss our end. We have a proverbial speech, Look before you leap; that is, consider before you act; A fools bolt is soon shot; he shoots before he sees his mark, and before he takes his aim; he neither observes the art of shooting, nor the mark at which he shoots. And because his bolt is soon shot, therefore his mark is never hit. To question our selves about what we do, is a great means to preserve our selves from doing amiss: And they most usually do well, who fear they may do ill. The Prophet gives this as the reason why many went on so grosly and fearlesly in idolatrous wayes (Isa. 44. 19,20.) None considereth in his heart, neither is there knowledge nor understanding to say, I have burnt part of it in the fire, &c. therefore it is, that he feedeth of ashes; a deceived heart hath turned him aside, that he cannot deliver his soul, nor say, Is there not a lye in my right hand? He is not able to put this thing to himself, or to question his heart whether he be right or wrong; he had never fed upon ashes had he but considered, that he had burnt part of his Idol in the fire. That man may do any thing sooner then that which is right and lawful, who never enquireth whether that be right or wrong, lawful or unlawful, which he doth: He cannot deliver his soul from the grossest Idolatry, from worshipping wood and stone, the works of his own hands, while he cannot question, Is there not a lye in my right hand? Am I not out of the way? Am I not deceived? If this man would but have asked himself the question, it is probable he might have seen or discovered the lye in his right hand: But he had not a heart to say this, and so his heart was deceived. An unconsidering person may soon be deceived: And the reason why he is not always deceived (if he be not) is only this, because he is not always tempted by deceivers. And hence it is that they, who love errors in opinion, or sinful wayes in practice, do not love to make doubts, or to raise questions concerning either their practices or opinions. As the way to fasten our selves upon duty, is to take up a resolution to do it, yea, to persevere in doing it; and where there is no resolving about what we do, there is nothing but unsetledness in doing it; as the Prophet toucheth (Jer. 5. 24.) This people hath a revolting back-sliding heart: They are altogether unfixed, you know not where to have them, or what they will be at. What is the reason? Neither say they in their hearts, let us now fear the Lord our God, that gives us rain, the former, and the latter rain in season. This was the reason why they revolted; they did not so much as say in their hearts, or pitch upon this thing, Let us fear the Lord. Now as men are unsetled in good, because they do not resolve to do this or that which is good; so they fall into evil, because they do not question, Why do I do this? Or is this which I do good or evil? They do not so much as say, Is there not a lye in my right hand? They ask no question for Conscience sake (as in some cases the Apostle adviseth we should not) and therefore they act so much against Conscience.

Thirdly, The words may have reference as well to what had been done, as to what they intended still to do, Ye should say, why persecute we him? That is, Why have we persecuted him? He may speak of an acted or antecedent, as well as of a subsequent or intended persecution.

Hence Note, To question our selves for what we have done, is an excellent means to bring us to repentance, and to break our hearts for the evil we have done.

What have I done? Is the question of repentance. The Prophet Jeremy (Chap. 8.6.) brings in the Lord taxing that people for their impenitency, and layes all upon this, I hearkened, and heard, but they spake not aright, no man repented of his wickedness, saying, What have I done? Every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battel: They sinned resolutely, because they never questioned themselves about their sin. We can never return, till we stop; nor recover out of an evil way, till we check in it. This Question is as it were the stop, the check, or arrest of the soul, What have I done? We cannot say to the Lord as Paul (Acts 9. 6.) Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Till we have first said to our selves, What have we done? This shews us the very genius of repentance, or of a repenting person, he is a man questioning what, or calling himself to a reckoning for what he hath done. Repentance is the review of our lives, and makes the soul answer to every particular, What hast thou done?

Further, If we look to this questioning in reference to the particular act of persecution; you should say, Why persecute we him?

Hence Note, Fourthly, We should be sure of a good ground before we oppose or persecute others.

We should question our selves in any ordinary thing we do, even in what we do for a friend we should question, Do I well in helping him? Much more when we oppose any man, should we say, Why persecute we him? What! persecute a man hand over head, oppose him without ground? It is hard to reprove a brother duly, much more to oppose him duly. We should examine our love, much more our anger. Be angry, and sin not, is the Apostles rule (Eph. 4. 26.) which implyes that it is no easie matter to be angry and not to sin. If we had a hundred eyes, and as many tongues, 'tis but need we should imploy them all to look about us, and enquire whether we are right or wrong, when we oppose or persecute a Brother. Where it is so easie for us to do wrong, we should consider and consider, whether what we do be right.

Fifthly, Note, To persecute or oppose another without just cause, is very sinful.

'Tis sinful not to shew kindness, and express love to those who deserve it; how sinful then is it to express unkindness and wrath towards those who deserve it not? It is a great sin to hold an error, or not to do good; then how great a sin is it to oppose another for doing good, or for holding the truth. To persecute him that walketh in holiness, or holds the truth, is to persecute Christ himself, who is The Holy One and the True. Persecution opposeth him whom all should adore, even Jesus Christ. Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Christ was persecuted in person while he was on earth, and he is persecuted in his members and servants now he is in Heaven. As to suffer persecution for righteousness sake, is one of the highest acts of grace: So to persecute the righteous, is one of the highest acts of wickedness, seeing this opposeth not only the Saints, but him, who is infinitely better and more excellent, then all the Saints.

The Apostle (Rom. 1. 32.) describing the extream sinfulness of the Gentiles, gives it thus, They knowing the judgment of God, that they that commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do it. He makes it the blackest part of their sinfulness, that they had pleasure in those that did evil. On the other side, we may say it is the blackest part of sin to oppose those that do good? not only not to have pleasure in them that do good, but to be vexed at and vex them that do it, is the fullest do it, is the fulleſt diſcovery of an evil heart. Moſt wicked men take pleaſure in thoſe that do wickedly, but they are moſt wicked who reſiſt thoſe that do good. As to love truth and goodneſs is better then to know them; ſo to hate truth or goodneſs is far worſe, then to be ignorant of, or to neglect them.

Sixthly, Job's Friends thought they were upon their duty; or that they were employed in a great ſervice for God, while they dealt thus rigidly with this diſtreſſed man.

Hence Note, Some perſecute others, and yet think they do God and man good ſervice.

There are two ſorts of perſecutors. Firſt, Such as oppoſe Conſcience; or perſecute others for their Conſcience ſake. Secondly, Such as perſecute others for their own Conſcience ſake; they do (in their own opinion) conſcientiouſly: They think that a duty, which upon tryal will be found their ſin. They do not perſecute, as the bloody Heathens did, to ſatisfie their cruel luſts; or as ſome bloody Chriſtians (in name) have done, and do, oppoſing the Truth againſt their light: But they do it according to their light. There are very few, but as they perſecute the Conſciences of others; ſo they perſecute upon the dictate of their own Conſcience; and think they have done a work acceptable to God, while they thus reject and reprobate their Brethren; yea, they glory in it, and put it among their moſt meritorious acts, as having deſigned the glory of God, and being carried on with zeal (ſuch as it is) for his glory. Theſe are deſcribed by the Prophet (Iſa. 66. 5.) Your brethren that caſt you out for my Name ſake (as there are many perſecuting enemies, ſo there are ſome brethren-perſecuters) Your brethren that caſt you out for my Name ſake, ſaid, Let the Lord be glorified. This was their aim, they did it to glorifie God: Thus they licked themſelves whole, when they wounded their brethren; they did no offence, but ſervice. So (Jer. 50. 7.) All they that found them have devoured them, and their adverſaries ſay, we offend not, becauſe they have ſinn'd againſt the Lord, the habitation of Juſtice, even the Lord the hope of their fathers. Chriſt is expreſs in this point (John 16.2.) The time cometh, that whoſoever killeth you will think that he doth God ſervice. This was once Paul's caſe (Acts 26.9.) I verily thought that I ought to do many things againſt the Name of Jeſus; I was bound in Conſcience, I could not ſuffer theſe men, and theſe wayes in peace, unleſs I would break my own peace. He ſpeaks as if his own Conſcience would have troubled him, unleſs he had troubled others for that which was, indeed, their Conſcience. Job's Friends were far enough from owning the name or title of perſecuters, and yet they did the thing, and ſpake the words which were very ſwords. Many love to perſecute; but all hate to be called perſecuters. As many hate vertue and goodneſs, who yet are proud to be called good and vertuous: So many love evil acts, which they diſdain to be denominated by. Job adviſeth his Friends, who eſteemed themſelves nothing leſs then perſecuters, to be beſpeak their own ſouls, and ſay, Why perſecute we him,

Seeing the root of the matter is found in me?

Job was aſſured (it ſeems) that the root of the matter was found in him; but it is not eaſie to find what this root of the matter was in Job. In general, by root we are to underſtand the bottom, baſis, or foundation, that which gave him eſtabliſhment, as the root doth to the tree. The Hebrew is, The root of the word. It is ordinary in Scripture to put word for thing, or matter. The root of the word is the root of the thing in controverſie between Job and his Friends (Eccleſ. 12. 13.) Hear the concluſion of the whole matter, or, the end of the word, Fear God, and keep his Commandments. There is nothing impoſſible to God; the Text is, There is no word impoſſible to God; that is, he can do whatſoever pleaſeth him. This root of the matter, or root of the word, is (as ſome ſay) the bottom of the buſineſs, the ſtate of the cauſe, or the cauſe ſtated. The Civil Lawyers call, the cauſe, the thing. And the Orator uſeth an expreſſion very near this of Job, where he titles the main matter in queſtion, the root of the queſtion, upon which all dependeth. What root he intendeth, we ſhall conſider further.

שרשרכר Radix verbi, verbum pro re ſenſu quo apud Juriſconſultos cauſa dicitur res. Bold. Radix verbi nihil aliud eſt quam fundamentum cauſæ ſeu rei; Cicero vocat ſtirpem queſtionis. Differo etiam

The Vulgar renders the whole Verſe thus; Wherefore do ye now ſay, let us perſecute him, and, we ſhall find the root of the matter againſt him? The root of the matter, according to that tranſlation, is taken two wayes.

(inquit) partem quæ eſt quaſi ſtirps quæſtionis. Cic. lib 4. de Finibus. Radicem verbi inveniamus contra eum. Vulg.

First, For ſome word which Job might unwarily let fall, upon which they would ground a further accuſation, or charge upon him, or juſtifie the charge and accuſation already brought againſt him. As if they had ſaid, Let us follow him cloſe, and he will quickly ſpeak ſomewhat to the diſadvantage of his own cauſe. It is indeed the uſual policy of perſecutors to ſeek matter againſt another, when none appears: And to provoke a man to ſpeak, till he ſpeak awry, or give them an occaſion to enſnare him in his ſpeech. Uſually in the multitude of words there is no want of error; and he that ſpeaks a multitude of words (as 'tis poſſible) without error, may ſoon have ſome of them erroneouſly interpreted. Perſecutors are greedy to hunt for and find out faults; they will rake in every channel, and never give over interrogating and ſifting, till ſomewhat drop, or fall, that at leaſt may bear ſome colour of offence. They make a man an offender for a word, ſaith the Prophet (Iſa. 29. 21.) A good man may quickly offend in a word; but it is the ſign and the work of an evil man, to make a man an offender for a word; eſpecially for a right, though a ſharp word; of ſuch the Prophet ſpeaks, as appears in the next clauſe; They lay a ſnare for him that reproveth in the gate: They get a word from him, and make that matter of offence. That is alſo the meaning of the Prophet when he ſaith, All my familiars watched for my halting. They would be glad to ſee him halt, that they might accuſe him for his halting. It is a duty to reprove him that halteth, that is, him that ſinneth; and it is a greater duty to watch over another to keep him from halting. But it is a wickedneſs to watch for a mans halting, in hope that he will halt, and that we may have an occaſion or ground to reprove him; ſuch reproofs proceed not from a ſpirit of love, but of revenge, as the Prophet diſcovers them; Peradventure he will be inticed (into ſome ſin or ſnare) and we ſhall prevail againſt him, and we ſhall take revenge on him. They were glad to ſee him halt, that they might ſay ſomewhat againſt him for halting. This was the diſpoſition of the perſecuting Phariſees (Matth. 22. 16.) They ſent ſome to entangle Chriſt in his talk. They had no matter ready, but they ſought it. Another Goſpel ſaith (Mark 12. 13.) They ſent certain Phariſees to catch him in his words: Chriſt ſpake the word, that he might catch men to ſave them: Theſe men laboured to catch Chriſt in his words, that they might accuſe and deſtroy him. This ſome would faſten upon Job's Friends, but I forbear them.

Qui malò ſtudio benè prolata audiunt, quid aliud quam contra aliquem radicē verbi quærunt ex qua loquendi originem ſumant & ramos pravæ loquacitatis in accuſatione dilatent. Greg.

Secondly, The root of the matter according to that reading is, Some ſecret ſin; let us follow him hard, let us but continue with him in diſpute, and we ſhall make him diſcover his boſom and heart at laſt; we ſhall find that hidden under ground evil, which is the root of the matter; even of all his diſtempered ſpeeches and paſſions againſt us, and of all the judgments and rods of God that have been upon him. Some one ſecret ſin is indeed often the root of many open ones; and though we may conclude, that any ſin may be the root of miſery and affliction, yet uſually it is ſome ſpecial ſin, that gives ſuck and ſap to the ſpecial troubles that either afflict the godly, or render the lives of wicked men miſerable. For though God might make every ſinful failing bear gall and wormwood, yet he doth not, but ſpares his people after many failings. And though death (which contains all penal evils) be the wages of every ſin, yet in this World God rarely payes it to wicked men, till their ſins become very full of ſinful evil: This Job's Friends are likewiſe here conceived to call the root of the matter, a diſcovery of which they ſuppoſed he would ſoon make (according to this expoſition) were he but a little put to it, and preſſed. Let us perſecute him, and we ſhall find the root of the matter againſt him.

But though this reading may yield ſome profitable meditation, yet I ſhall not inſiſt upon it, becauſe the words plainly appear as ſpoken by Job, and not by his Friends.

We ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him, ſeeing the root of the matter is found in me?

Secondly,

Secondly, Some have given this sence of the words, Ye should say, why persecute we him, seeing (ye ought to say each one of you judging himself) the root of the matter is in me? That is, The fault is in me, or I am the cause of this contention; I by my prejudices and unfriendly jealousies have been an occasion to stir the passion of this afflicted person, and to draw out this troublesome debate between us. Thus the latter words are made that form of acknowledgment, which Job's Friends should make, in charging the blame and fault, the root and rise of all upon themselves. But Radix metaphoræ & fiduciæ alloquendi dein est fides in servatore in quo habemus accessum. Cocc. Cum pia fide in deum radicatus sim, qua pervexi adhuc in mea integritate & nunc verba veritatis coram eo profero, ut fidei radicatæ in ipso fructus, non autem folia aut fallaces verborum flores quales vos effunditis, &c. Jun.

Thirdly, Rather say, These words have the form and force of a reason, upon which Job would perswade his Friends to forbear persecuting him, or why they should reflect upon and consider themselves as having persecuted him; The root of the matter is found in me.

The root of the word or matter, according to this interpretation is, first, grace and faith in his heart: As Believers are said to be rooted in grace, in love, &c. (Eph. 3. 17.) so grace of any kind is as a root in Believers. Faith in the heart is the root of the word in every mans mouth who believeth; and it is the root of the work in every mans hand that believeth. And so Job's scope in this speech may be thus represented: As if he had said, O my friends, ye wonder that I have spoken and done thus, I tell you the root of the word and work is in me; Faith makes me speak and do (faith is the root of our holy liberty and boldness in speaking and doing both towards God and man) (Psal. 116. 10.) I believed (saith David) therefore have I spoken: We also believe (saith the Apostle, 2 Cor. 4. 13.) and therefore speak. When once with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, then (presently) with the mouth confession is made unto salvation (Rom. 10. 10.) So that Job having made such an excellent confession with his mouth in the former words, here he would have his Friends know, that he did not speak by rote, but by the root of the matter which was in him: He believed with his heart, and therefore they should take heed, how they did oppose or persecute him, he being a true Believer. As if he had further said, This profession of my faith, should move you to bethink your selves better then to persecute me; for though you may find me a sinner, yet you may find that in me also, which doth interest me in the Redeemers love, who takes away sin. I am rooted in the Redeemer by faith, and through his strength I have walked in mine integrity, I have not spoken these things, in a vain flourish or ostentation of my self, but as an evidence of the grace of God in me, from whence as from a root, I bring forth not leaves and blossoms only, but I have my fruit in holiness, waiting for the end, Everlasting life.

Job nihil aliud vult dicere quã veritatem à parte suã stare, illam autem eleganti periphrasi vocat radicem verbi. Mendacium enim cum nihil sit, illud vere verbum dici debet, quod in veritate fundatur. Bold.

Secondly, By the root of the matter, we may understand his sincerity, or the uprightness of his heart. The testimony which God gave of him was, A man perfect and upright; and his own heart gave him that testimony also: As he professed faith in the Redeemer, so he loved him in sincerity. He had, as the Apostle Peter phraseth it (1 Ep. 3. 21.) The answer of a good conscience in himself, as well as a good answer in his mouth to them. He whose conscience makes a good answer to himself, can answer any man. As if Job had said, When my conscience asks me the question, What I am, and what I hope for? I can give it a good answer; and therefore I can easily answer you, and you should not easily trouble me. And indeed when once a man can answer himself honestly, he may answer all the world boldly. Sincerity is the root of the matter in every godly man. And he who is upright in what he saith and doth, needs not trouble himself what others say of him, or do against him. Men may (as we speak proverbially) cast their caps at him that is upright, they cannot much hurt him; Ye should say, why do we persecute him (what can ye gain by it, or what can I loose by it) seeing the root of the matter is in me?

ἐπεάτημα.

Our Annotators gloss it thus; Gods promises are rooted in my heart, and true piety is found there (both parts fall in with, or fill up the expositions given) therefore I should not be condemned by you. Now for as much as Job urgeth one of, or all these Considerations, namely, that he had the grace of faith, that he had made a right confession of his faith, that he was sincere, and right-hearted towards God, In all, Seeing (I say) he urgeth these considerations as a reason to stop, or give check to his Friends opposing, and persecuting of him. We may observe;

First, from the expression; and then from the connexion. From the expression, that Grace and truth are the root of a godly man.

They are as a root under a twofold notion.

First, For establishment: The root is to the tree as the foundation to the building, the strength and stay of it; so are grace and truth, faith and sincerity to a godly man: By these (for in these the strength of Christ is) he stands (Heb. 13. 9.) Be not carried away with divers and strange doctrines; for it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace, not with meats. The Apostle means the doctrine of grace, in opposition to the doctrine of meats. The ceremonial Law about meats doth not establish the heart; but the doctrine of grace doth: now as the doctrine of grace, so grace much more establisheth the heart, and will not suffer us to be carried away as the waves of the Sea, or as the clouds of the Air by contrary winds, to contrary points and practices, now forward, and then backward. They who are come to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, thenceforth are no more children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight (or cogging) of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lye in wait to deceive. But speaking the truth in love, they grow up into him in all things who is the head, even Christ (Eph. 4. 13, 14, 15.)

Secondly, Grace in the heart is a root, because it sends out juice or sap, and is the next cause of our fruitfulness in life: Grace in the heart, buddeth and blossometh at the hand, and tongue, in good actions, and savoury speeches. The whole man is filled with good fruit, where grace is a root in the heart. There is a root of this root, Jesus Christ is the root of our graces: But as Christ is the root of our graces; so the Grace of Christ in us is the root of all our holy actions. Christ is (Origo originans) the original and the originating root of our graces. Grace is (Origo originata) the originative root, or that root which Jesus Christ planteth in us, that by the continual supplies and moistenings of the Spirit, we may bring forth fruit in him and to him. As Original corruption is the natural root of the matter in us, as to the production of sin, and our unhappy fruitfulness in evil; so Grace infused or wrought in us, is the Supernatural root of the matter in us, as to our germination in holiness, and our happy fructification in goodness.

Secondly, From the connection, or argument couched in these words; Ye should say, why do we persecute him, seeing the root of the matter, Grace and Truth, are in me?

Observe, He that hath Grace and holds Truth, root-truths, should not be persecuted.

The Apostle (Heb. 12. 14.) exhorts to follow (or as the propriety of the word is, to persecute) holiness, that we our selves may reach and attain the highest degree of it: But we must take heed of following those with persecution (though it be but in hard words) who have (through mercy) attained, the least or lowest degree of it. For

First, They should not be persecuted by men, who are imbraced by Christ, nor be cast out by us, who are received by him. Them that hold the fundamentals of faith and holiness, Christ owns, therefore we should own them too. Job possibly had failings and errors; but he had the root of the matter: What though you my Friends and I do not agree in all things, yea, what though we differ in many things, and cannot reconcile these differences, yet I have told you the root of the matter. Why do you persecute me? Such a profession of faith as Job made contains the sum of the Gospel, or of the mystery of Christ; therefore they who hold it are not to be slighted, much less vexed, though they hold not all the truth, or are deceived into some things which are erroneous.

Dum arbor radicem habet, sperari potest eam repullulaturam & plus fructuum progenituram; ita homines inter vitia & nævos suos sanitatem præcipui capitis fidei retinentes, temere debet rejici.

Secondly, They that hold out the same fundamental truths, have the same Spirit of truth at least to enlighten them.

Thirdly, They who make such an outward profession of faith from a root of faith within, shall certainly be saved; Heaven shall receive them, and shall not we receive them? Heaven will open its gates to entertain them, and shall we thrust them out of the World? Why persecute ye me, seeing the root of the matter is in me?

And

And if they be not to be perſecuted, who hold the fundamentals or chief doctrines neceſſary to ſalvation, what ſhall we think then of their perſecution, who oppoſe thoſe that do not only hold fundamental, but moſt ſuperſtructive truths too, which belong to faith and a good life. Many ſuch have fallen under perſecution upon their diſſenting about ſome outward forms of order or worſhip.

Further, Job ſeems to be here his own witneſs, he doth not ſtay to receive teſtimony from his brethren, that the root of the matter was in him; but himſelf ſaith, the root of the matter is found in me; which may teach us,

First, They who have the root of the matter in them, may know they have it.

Grace comes from Light, and is Light. Grace carrieth Light to diſcover it ſelf by, unleſs God hide it from us, and put our light into darkneſs, our candle under a bed, or under a Buſhel. He that hath Grace, doth not alwayes know it; this root may lie ſo deep under ground, that he in whom it is, cannot ſee it, or ſay it is in me: Yet this root how deep ſoever, is diſcernable in it ſelf, and is often clearly diſcerned by thoſe in whom it is.

Secondly, It is lawful, and a duty in ſome caſes, for a man to give teſtimony to himſelf.

Job's Friends thought there was nothing in him but a root of wickedneſs and hypocriſie; but he ſaith, the root of the matter is in me. Let another praiſe thee, and not thine own mouth (ſaith Solomon.) That's moſt comly, and ſo it ſhould be; yet ſometimes a man muſt, and may ſpeak for himſelf, to maintain his own innocence, and advance the Glory of God, which may be darkned by the ſilence of man.

Thus far I have opened the firſt part of Job's Concluſion; namely, the direction and counſel which he gives his Friends to take them off from their bitter oppoſition, and to ſweeten or meeken their ſpirits towards him; Ye ſhould ſay, Why perſecute we him? ſeeing the root of the matter is found in me. He proceeds to a Commination, threatning them into this duty, if he could not perſwade them to it; Be ye afraid of the ſword, &c.

VERS. 29.

Be ye afraid of the ſword; for wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword; that ye may know that there is a judgment.

IN the former Verſe Job counſelled and directed his Friends; here he warns and threatneth them.

Be ye [afraid] of the ſword.

The word notes ſtrong fear; ſuch a fear as makes us flee or run from it: So ſome tranſlate the word here; whereas we ſay, Be afraid of, they ſay, flee from the face of the ſword: Fear puts many to their feet.

גור Timere aut expaveſcere in alicujus præſentia aut conſpectu terribili. Fugite ergo à facie gladii. Vulg.

Flee from the ſword; or be afraid of the ſword.

The ſword is an inſtrument of death. The ſword may be looked upon in a twofold hand.

First, In the hand of the Souldier; and ſo it is the ſword of war.

Secondly, In the hand of the Magiſtrate; and ſo it is the ſword of peace. Both ought to be the ſword of Juſtice? yet the latter is more properly called ſo. He (that is, the Magiſtrate) beareth not the ſword in vain: He beareth it to do juſtice, and to maintain peace. The ſword is one of the chief Emblemes of Magiſtracy and Power. We may take the ſword here as in either of theſe hands; Be ye afraid of the ſword; the ſword of the Souldier, and the ſword of the Judge or Magiſtrate.

Gladii nomine vindicta ſignificatur per nymiam inſtrumentalis cauſæ pro effectu.

Again, By ſword in Scripture, all manner of evils, puniſhments and revenges are underſtood; becauſe the ſword brings ſo many evils, and is ſo great a puniſhment, therefore any kind of evil, puniſhment or revenge comes under this title, the ſword. The Children of Iſrael cry out upon Moſes, that when he came to deliver them, he did but more enthral them; and therefore tell him (Exod. 5. 21.) Thou haſt put a ſword into the hand of Pharaoh to ſlay us, that is, thou haſt been ſo far from mollifying the heart of Pharaoh towards us, that thou haſt provoked Pharaoh to lay new troubles, and lay heavier burdens upon us, not only to our further ſorrow and affliction, but to our ruine and utter undoing. So the Lord ſpeaketh (Deut. 32.41.) If I whet my glittering ſword, and my hand take hold of vengeance, that is, if I prepare my judgments of what ſort ſoever, then I will render vengeance, &c. The whetting of the ſword notes the fitting and preparation of thoſe judgments, by which the hand of God taketh hold of vengeance.

And hence in Scripture, wicked men and oppreſſors, who bring the greateſt troubles, whether upon perſons or Nations, are called the ſword of God. (Pſal. 17. 13.) David prayes, Deliver my ſoul from the wicked, which is thy ſword. He calls them the ſword of God, becauſe they are often uſed by God as inſtruments to puniſh whom he pleaſeth, or rather thoſe (whoſoever they be) that have diſpleaſed him.

Impr vocat dius quia eò ut tanqu gladi punie quos Druſ.

Further, Job doth not only ſay, Be afraid of the ſword; but be afraid of the face of the ſword: Yea, the Original is plural; Be afraid of the faces of the ſword. The ſword hath and makes many faces, and they are all ill and ſad ones. In Scripture, ordinarily the face of a thing, notes that very thing whoſe face it is, or the preſence of it; ſo, the face of the ſword is the ſword preſent. Be afraid of the face of the ſword, that is, of the ſword when it appears. The ſword ſometimes wraps up its face in the ſheath, its face is hid; but when the ſword is drawn, then we behold the face of the ſword. So that to be afraid of the face of the ſword, is to be afraid of the ſwords appearance, of the ſword looking out of its ſcabbard, of the ſword drawn and brandiſhed. Some are very buſie and curious about the Phyſiognomy of the ſword, to tell us what the face is. The ſword hath its face. The two flats of it are as the cheeks of the face; and the glitterings of the ſword are as the eyes of the face which ray from it; and the edge of the ſword is the mouth of the face; and the point of the ſword is the tongue of the mouth. Thus they allegorize. I will not ſtay upon ſuch niceties. The face of the ſword is the inſtant preſence of the ſword; and ſo the phraſe is uſed in reference to other things (Pſal. 38. 5.) My wounds ſtink and are corrupt, becauſe of my fooliſhneſs. The Hebrew is, Becauſe of the face of my fooliſhneſs; or, before the face of my fooliſhneſs, that is, at the preſence of my ſin, or when I ſee the face of my ſins. Some have abundance of ſins, yet their wounds ſtink not, nor are corrupt, that is, they are never troubled for their ſins; Why? becauſe they do not ſee the face of their ſins: but at the face of my ſins, or the faces of my ſins, my wounds ſtink and are corrupt, that is my ſoul is troubled, and my conſcience is in a ſad condition. The Prophet uſeth this ſtrain in that famous promiſe of deliverance from the Babyloniſh yoke (Iſa. 10. 27.) It ſhall come to paſs in that day, that his burden ſhall be taken from off thy ſhoulder, and the yoke ſhall be deſtroyed, becauſe of the anointing: So we render it. The Hebrew is, His yoke ſhall be deſtroyed before the face of the anointing. Grammarians tell us, that before the face, in the Hebrew, ſupplies the place of the Prepoſition becauſe; which is the reaſon why we render, becauſe of, or for the anointing. But ſtrictly, the yoke ſhall be broken at the face of the anointing, or (as the word is) at the face of the oyl; that is, at the face of him who is anointed with oyl. Literally, Hezekiah, but ſpiritually and typically, Jeſus Chriſt, the Meſſias, the anointed of God. At the face of Chriſt, at his appearing, the Babyloniſh yoke is broken off from the neck of his people. When Chriſt appears, his enemies diſappear, and his people are freed from the yoke of Bondage. But to the point; as we read of the face of ſin, and the face of oyl (in thoſe Scriptures) ſo here, of the face of the ſword. It may well be ſaid, Be afraid of the face of the ſword; becauſe the ſword, of all things, hath the moſt dreadful face. Some men have terror ſtampt in their faces, they ſcare others with their looks. The ſword hath a terrible aſpect. The face of the ſword is as the face of Goliah was to the Army of the Iſraelites (1 Sam. 17. 24.) All the men of Iſrael (like women or children) when they ſaw the man, fled from him (we put in the Margin, they fled from his face) and were ſore afraid. Goliah was a monſter among men. A whole Army gave ground at his approach: The face of the man was dreadful, much more was the face of his sword. 'Tis said (Isa. 21. 15.) That as soon as the sword appeared and shewed its face, they feared, and fled; They fled from the swords, from the drawn sword, from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war. Now forasmuch as the sword in kind is so great an evil to man, and so terrible, therefore when that is threatned, we may expect any kind of evil. This one threatning comprehends all threatnings. Where the sword comes, fear will not stay behind (Jer. 6. 25.) Go not forth into the field, nor walk by the way; for the sword of the enemy, and fear is on every side. When the sword is abroad, all keep at home. So, Ezek. 21. 12. Cry and howl Son of man, for it shall be upon my people, it shall be upon all the Princes of Israel; terrors by reason of the sword shall be upon my people, smite therefore upon thy thigh, that is, use the most significant gestures and expressions of grief and sorrow. Hence observe,

A facie ſpientiæ meæ, He i. e. qua ſemper ha ante ocu mens.

A facie, mitur apu Hebræos l co Præpoſi tionis pro ter.

Peculiare eſt gladio & univerſo armorum ge neri ut faci em habere videantur, cum vel ſola facit & primo aſpectu terrorem injiciant.

First, The sword is a very dreadful evil.

That which is put for all evils, must needs be a very great one; we may spell and read any judgment in the sword: As it shews that peace is a great good, an exceeding great good, because peace is put for all good. When it is said, Peace be to you, all good is wished to you, every mercy is included in peace. So when 'tis said, The sword be to you, you may write any evil under that menace. While the sword is threatned, all miseries are threatned in one. The sword is a great evil, considered barely in it self; and it is a greater, considered in the consequents and effects of it. It hath it self a very dreadful face, but it leaves a more dreadful face of things behind it. That Land which before it, is as the Garden of God, behind it, is as a desolate Wilderness.

Secondly, In that Job thus threatens his friends, and warns them, Be ye afraid of the sword; take heed lest some sudden judgment fall upon you; observe,

We may use arguments from fear of judgments, both to dissuade from sin, and to persuade to duty.

Job was a preacher to his friends, and here he is upon a vehement dehortation, to take them off from that persecuting spirit spoken of in the former verse; here we have his argument or motive, the fear of the sword: you may run upon the swords point, while you run this course. The Apostle Jude (v. 23. of his Epistle) gives direction; Of some have compassion, making a difference; others save with fear, that is, make them afraid, terrifie and threaten them, that they may be saved. Some spirits must be dealt with gently, others roughly; therefore (saith he) make a difference; but rather then let any perish, save them with fear, skare them to heaven. Some must be led to heaven by the way of hell, and be cast into the fire, that they may be delivered from it: Save them with fear, pulling them out of the fire. 'Tis a desireable fear which is a means to pull a soul out of the fire. We are saved by faith, as that receiveth and taketh hold of Christ; we are saved by fear, as that takes hold of us, and driveth us to Christ. By faith we see and apply our help in Christ, and by fear we are brought to see our need of his help. Christ (Luke 12. 4, 5.) useth the argument of the fear of hell, to cure his friends of the fear of man, and to dissuade them from deserting him and the truth of the Gospel. I say to you my friends, be not afraid of them that can kill the body, and after that, there is no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear; fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say to you, fear him. See how he doubles upon that point of fear; fear him, yea, I say unto you, fear him. We may parallel it with that expression of Paul to the Philippians, Rejoyce in the Lord, yea, I say again, rejoyce. I eat not my word, but I aver it, and stand to it; as I bid you rejoyce, so I again bid you rejoyce. So saith Christ to his friends, fear. Some might object, Is this suitable counsel to a friend, to bid him be afraid? should they be kept in heaven-way for fear of hell? Enemies have cause of fear, but should friends? Yea, saith Christ, I say again to you my friends, fear him. 'Tis good to bid a friend fear, when that fear tendeth to his good. Paul (Rom. 8. 13.) writing to Saints, and applying the doctrine of free grace to the believing Romans, yet tells them, If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die, even die eternally; he threatens them with hell, who were candidates of heaven, and points them to death, who were passed from death to life, that he might keep them out of the wayes of death.

Some say, this is base to be kept from evil by fear; they take scandal at those who preach fear, calling it legal preaching.

I answer, It is indeed most noble to obey out of love, To fear the Lord and his goodness (Hos. 3. 5.) But yet it is good to fear the Lord and his wrath. It is most excellent to say, we fear the Lord, because there is mercy with him; but it is our duty to fear the Lord, because there is justice and judgment with him. A good heart will improve the judgments of God as well as his mercies, and the wrath of God as well as his love: A good heart is bettered by all the dispensations of God, both in his word, and in his works; if God speak death, it is an advantage to his spiritual life; and he mends upon threatnings as well as upon promises. Every word of God is good, and hath a savour of life unto life in it, by the working of the Spirit. It is best and most Gospel-like, when we can say as the Apostle directs (2 Cor. 7. 1.) Having these promises, we cleanse our selves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord; but it is well, when we can say, Having these threatnings, let us cleanse our selves, and perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord. It is a choice frame to say, as the Author to the Hebrews calleth us (Heb. 12. 28.) Seeing we have a Kingdom that cannot be moved, let us have grace to serve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear. Yet it is our duty to say, and a mercy when we can say it. Seeing we live in a Kingdom or in a State that is moved and shaken with judgments and troubles, therefore let us have grace to serve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear. Fear, either of trouble threatned, or of trouble felt, may be improved to purer actings of Grace, and a more acceptable serving of God.

I shall only add three things to shew what this fear rightly improved, will do upon the heart.

First, It doth not straighten, but enlarge the heart towards God. Thus the Prophet speaks of that holy fear which should follow, or be an effect of that glory of the Church, in the abundant access of the Gentiles to the Gospel (Isa. 60. 5.) Then thou shalt see and flow together, and thy heart shall fear, and be enlarged. Fear and enlargement go together. Fear, under a natural consideration, shuts and straightens the heart. A man surprized with fear, is less then he was in all his abilities, and seldom hath the use of any but those which discover his weakness. But spiritual fear, or fear spiritualiz'd, maketh a man more then he was, and better then he was; he is enlarged to God, and only straightned towards evil.

Secondly, This fear of threatnings and judgments will not cause us to run from God, whose the word of threatning or the works of judgment are; but it brings and keeps us nearer to God. As holy fear is a bridle to restrain us from sin, so it is a bond to hold us to duty (Jer. 32. 40.) I will put my fear in your hearts, and (what will this fear do? will it cause you to withdraw from me? No;) you shall never depart from me; the more you fear me, you shall keep the closer to me: None live so near God as they that fear him; as the fearing of God and the eschewing of evil are joyned together in Scripture, so are our fearing of God and strictest obedience to him.

Thirdly, It is such a fear as proceeds from high thoughts of God, not from hard thoughts of God. Some when they hear of judgment or of the sword of God, they have hard thoughts of God, he is severe (say they) wrathful, terrible, and therefore they tremble and are afraid of him. But the fear intended hath a better spring, it flows from pure reverential thoughts of God in his greatness and unparallell'd excellency (Jer. 10. 6, 7.) Forasmuch as there is none like thee, O Lord, thou art great, and thy Name is great in might. Who would not fear thee, O King of Nations? for to thee doth it appertain (or, it liketh thee) forasmuch as among all the wise men of the Nations, and in all their Kingdoms, there is none like unto thee. Here are high thoughts of God indeed; There is none like thee, thou art great, and thy Name is great, and among all the Nations there is none like thee: The wisest are not like thee in wisdom; the greatest are not like thee in greatness; the holiest are not like thee in holiness; therefore, Who would not fear thee? To be afraid of the judgments of God from high thoughts of his justice, righteousness, holiness and purity, moving him to do such things, is not a slavish argument, as some have said.

said, but that which may work upon the most ingenious and gracious spirit; and not only so, but (which may be a third Note from these words, Be afraid of the sword.)

It is our duty to fear the judgments of God.

We should fear the judgments of God while threatned, and only heard of; What though we see them not? What though we feel them not? What though we are not the persons intended in them, or to be smitten by them? yet the report of them, as directed against others, should make us tremble. When God threatned the old world with the floud, Noah was excepted; yet such was the temper of his spirit, that though he were the only favourite of God in all that age, yet his very hearing of that judgment (which he was assured not to feel) had this effect upon him (Heb. 11. 7.) By faith Noah being warned of God, of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an Ark to the saving of his house. He heard, and was afraid of the judgment, therefore he applied himself to those means which God had directed him to for the saving of himself and family. We read (Rev. 14. 7.) of a Vision which John had: I saw an Angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every Nation, and Kindred, and Tongue, and People, saying, fear God, and give glory to him. Why? for the hour of his judgment is come. When God sends the everlasting Gospel to be preached, he calls it the hour of his judgment. The preaching of the Gospel is the hour of mercy to some, but it is the hour of wrath to others, even to all refusers and contemners. Upon this denunciation or threatning of judgment, which should overtake the slighters and neglecters of the Gospel, all are warned to fear God and give glory to him.

Now, if we are to fear God for his judgments threatned, then we are to fear him more for his judgments inflicted. (Rev. 15. 3, 4.) Who would not fear thee, O Lord, and glorifie thy Name? &c. for thy judgments are made manifest. In the old Law when judgments were executed, 'tis said, They shall hear and fear, and do no more presumptuously (Deut. 17. 13.) They shall hear what hath been already executed upon offenders, and fear to offend. Moses there sheweth what all ought to do, not what all did, upon the appearances of judgment; and the executions of divine wrath upon high transgressors.

Fourthly, Observe how Job was dealt with by his friends when he thus bespake them, and warned them of the sword. Their words were as a sword in his bowels, they were very sowr and bitter against him; yet foreseeing their danger, and what evils their ill usage of him might bring upon themselves, he forgets both their former unkindnesses, and his own present pains, and minds them of those evils which were like to overtake them, if they persisted in the same mind. Hence note,

A good man will warn others of dangers, and labour to prevent their sorrow, though they have caused his.

Vir sanctus cum à pravis talia sustinet, non contra eos, sed magis pro ipsis dolet, ac mala eis quæ fugiant ostendit. Merc.

While they are doing him hurt, he will be keeping them from hurt; while they trouble him, he discovers much tenderness towards them. He doth not rejoyce, and say, their day is coming, let it come, let it overtake them: No (saith he, as Job) I see a black day coming, even the face of the sword, therefore be ye afraid of it, and labour to get out of the reach of it. The Prophet speaks much this sence to that hardned generation, who causlesly contrived and called for his death (Jer. 26. 15.) I am in your hands, do as it seems good and meet, (I do not so much stand on it, what you do with me, it shall be well with me; but I warn you to look to your selves, and to take heed of your own souls) but know for certain, if you put me to death, you will surely bring innocent bloud upon your selves, and upon this City, and the inhabitants thereof; for of a truth the Lord hath sent me to you to speak all these words in your ears. He doth not plead to be freed from their hands, but only lets them know their danger if they laid violent hands on him. He was not afraid of their sword, but he would have them afraid of the sword of God; Be ye afraid of the sword.

Quia ira iniquitates gladii Heb.

For wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword.

The Hebrew is, For wrath the iniquity of the sword. It is a short, and (as to words) an imperfect sentence in the Original. Hence the sence is supplied by Interpreters, with some variety of conjecture; Wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword. We supply the word bringeth; and render that word which properly signifieth iniquity, punishment (as it is also used in other places) by a Metonymie of the effect for the cause; punishment being caused by, or being the effect of iniquity; Wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword. There are divers other readings; I will briefly touch them, but insist only upon this.

Truncata concisa &c. Mo

First, thus; For, or because the sword is the revenger of iniquities. When the revenger of iniquity comes, it is high time to look to our selves, that we do no iniquity, or repent speedily of that which we have done. The sword (take it literally) is usually the great instrument in the hand of God to revenge his quarrel upon men of iniquity.

Quoniam vor iniq tatum e cinis est. Vulg.

A second thus; Be afraid of the sword; for wrath (namely, the wrath of God) is the desolation of iniquity. As if he had said, Go not on in this iniquity; for the wrath of God will be the destruction of iniquity and of you too, if you persist in this iniquity. The reason why it is rendred desolation, or destruction, is from a different rendring of the Hebrew, in which Language, a word of the same sound written with a different Letter, signifies both the sword and desolation: And as they are near in sound, so nearer in sence; where the sword comes, desolation seldom stayeth behind. How many Cities and Nations have been made desolate by the sword?

Quia ira (supple d iniquitat desolatio

חרב Gladium.

כרב Desolation sign. sæpe.

Thirdly, Wrath to the iniquities of the sword, that is, wrath hangeth over the iniquities of the sword. But what doth this translation mean by the iniquity of the sword? By the iniquities of the sword (some say) those iniquities are meant which are worthy to be punished by the sword. Wrath hangs over the iniquity of the sword, that is, Over great iniquities; or, as another, For bloody iniquities stir up the heat of anger; the iniquity of the sword is bloody iniquity, because great and bloody iniquities call for revenge by blood, and where revenge acts its part, anger is boiled up. Again, the iniquities of the sword, may be taken more strictly for those iniquities, of which he spake in the former verse, the iniquities of persecution, and undue vexation of our innocent brethren; these are sword-iniquities, and these provoke the wrath of God to take vengeance on persecuters by the sword. Hence another translates, For the sins of the sword are wraths. And so 'tis a direct predication, like that (Isa. 65. 5.) Where the Prophet brings in the Lord speaking of those hypocrites, that say, Stand by thy self, come not near us; These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day: That is, these are such as stir up a smoke in my nose, they make me angry, and these kindle a fire that burns in my breast all the day long, that is, these make me extream angry with them. So here, the iniquities of the sword (that is, the vexations of brethren) are wrath, that is, they kindle up the wrath of God, and make that wrath flame out to the consumption and destruction of those who have so provoked him. Those are the iniquities of the sword. From this last reading, and these two sences given upon it, take two brief Notes thus,

Ira iniquitatibus gladij. Reg. i. e ira immine iniquitatibus gladii Cajet. Vel ira divina ultio manet ulciscitur iniquitates gladii, i. e iniquitates gladio dignas. Nam æstum iræ (excitant) iniquitates cruentæ. Jun Nam delicta gladii, i. e innocentium. & fidelium persecutio est ardor, i. e. excitat ardorem dei, qui ipsum impellat, ut gladio vindicet in persequentes. Coc. Nam & hus sunt delicta gladii. i. e. excitant furorem & incendium in naribus meis faciunt me ardere ira. Quia iracundi scitis me, est ex iniquitatibus, quæ dignæ sunt ut gladio ulciscentur. Pag. Hæc vestra tam acerba adversus me commotio, non minus est letalis quam si gladio me transfoderetis. Bez.

First, Harsh judgment, or rigid censuring of others, is a provoking sin.

It is the iniquity of the sword, it is a sin which hath blood in it. Hence some put the Text into this Paraphrase; In as much as you provoke me thus to anger, it is such a sin as very well deserves to be revenged by the sword, or by the severest judgment. Another thus; Your harsh and bitter words against me, are no less wickedness, then if you stabbed me, or thrust me through with a sword, and it deserveth the punishment of the sword. David's complaint reacheth that interpretation (Psal. 42. 10.) As with a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me.

Secondly note, Harsh judgment upon others, calls for severe judgments upon our selves.

This also takes up the sence of our reading.

Wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword.

The word translated wrath, signifies burning. All wrath is hot. Some wrath is so hot, that there is no abiding it. Job having before threatned the sword, here tells us whence the sword cometh, what sendeth the punishment of the sword; wrath doth it. What wrath? There is a twofold wrath, with either of which this Text may comply.

אף Iram, חרה excandescentiam, קצף effervescentiam subitam, quandoque spumam bullamve significat. חמה calorem iræ denotat.

First, The wrath of God, who is provoked and stirred up by the iniquity of man; as if he had said, you have provoked God to wrath by your unkind dealing with me, that wrath will bring the punishment of the sword, that is, all manner of evils upon you.

Secondly, The wrath of man against man, that also stirreth up and bringeth the punishment of the sword. Whence are wars? &c. is the Apostles question (James 4. 1.) He answers, Are they not from your lusts that strive in your members? And is not wrath among those lusts? So that in reference to both, it is a truth, Wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword: The wrath of God against man, brings it, and the wrath of man against man, brings it. Hence observe,

First, If the wrath of God be kindled, terrible judgments may be expected.

What punishments, what consuming judgments doth wrath bring forth? The wrath of God may be specificated into any judgment, it produceth every evil. As the love of God carries in it any good, any mercy or blessing to his people, so doth his wrath every evil (Psal. 2. 12.) If his wrath be kindled, yea but a little, blessed are they that put their trust in him. When he saith, Blessed are they that put their trust in him, he means, wo to those that do not put their trust in him. If his wrath be kindled but a little, if it be but as a spark, it will quickly grow up to a flame, and consume all (Numb. 16. 46.) Moses bids Aaron haste to make the atonement; for (saith he) wrath is gone out from the Lord, the plague is begun. As soon as wrath goes abroad, it brings forth a plague. What that particular plague was, (intended by Moses) is not clear. Some take it literally for the sword; The plague is begun, that is, the stroak of the sword is among us. However, any plague or stroak may soon rise, when wrath is once risen.

Secondly, As wrath is put here for the wrath of man against man; Note,

The wrath of man brings a sword.

The wrath of man against man, brings the sword two wayes.

First, It brings the sword as it stirs up man to revenge; when men are angry, and give bitter words, they shortly after give blows: most of the wars that have been in the world, have risen from wrath. What the Apostle James (chap. 1. 15.) affirms of sin, the same we may affirm of wrath, though it be not sinful. When wrath is finished (or is come to its height and heat, it bringeth forth death. Dying Jacob giveth this as the effect of his two sons anger and wrath (Gen. 49. 6, 7.) In their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a wall; cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel. It is good to appease wrath, to heal breaches, to quiet spirits; for if wrath begin its work, who knows where it may end?

Secondly, The wrath of man bringeth the punishment of the sword, as it stirs up God to punish man; the wrath of man against man, is a sin which God will punish with further wrath. God often powreth out wrath, and he suffers men to powr out more of their wrath upon wrathful men. The Apostle speaks as much to the Church of Galatia (Gal. 5. 15.) If ye bite and devour one another; What was this biting and devouring? Did they like dogs gnaw one another? or like Canibals eat one anothers flesh? No; see (vers. 14.) what he means; Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy self; but if ye bite and devour one another. Every act opposite to that love which God commands us to exercise towards our neighbour, is a biting and devouring of our neighbour. They that are civil and well bred, yet in this sence may be found men-eaters, and devourers of their brethren. We bite and devour one another, when we are unkind, wrathful and vexatious one towards another. What then? Take heed ye be not consumed one of another. Take heed lest by walking so unlike Christians, and so unanswerably to the Law of Gospel-love, you provoke God to kindle such a fire among you and in you, as may prove an utter consumption. When Christians are not careful and ready to walk in love, as Christ hath loved us, God sometimes gives them up to a spirit of contention, and their breaches are like the Sea, which cannot be healed. Paul spake this to a Church, a very faulty Church, and this was one of their faults, want of love. What he spake to them, we may speak to any, whether brethren or others. Take heed that you do not bite and devour one another, lest you may be consumed one of another. Your unjust and unrighteous walkings, your cruel and harsh dealings, which are yet but to the vexing and heating one of anothers spirits, or to the devouring and eating one of anothers credit, may provoke such judgments, as shall destroy your persons, families and estates, till nothing be left; thus the wrath of man brings the punishment of the sword: As wrath works man to revenge himself, so it provokes God to execute revenges. When men are fierce towards each other, God is angry with them all, and will not suffer them to live in peace, who loved dissention. This judgment of God upon men is both the fore-runner and demonstration of a further, and that the Final Judgment. Job concludes and closeth his Discourse with a serious premonition of it.

That ye may know there is a judgment.

That ye may know.] That is, that you may be made to understand what ye have taken so little notice of, or do not at all remember.

Secondly, Take it for the event; then, That you may know, is, that you may feel what you will not be perswaded of. I tell you these things that you may know them, that is, that you may be convinced and perswaded that there is a judgment; or if you will not be perswaded of it, you shall feel it by your sad experience. Thus David prayeth against his enemies (Psal. 9. 20.) Put them in fear, O Lord, that they may know themselves to be but men; that is, that they may be convinced and perswaded of it. He speaks not of such as had either so high an opinion of themselves, that they were Gods; or so low an opinion of themselves, that they were Beasts or Devils; only they acted as if they had been more then men, and were not sensible of their own mortality. They who thus know themselves be to men, will not (in the Apostles sence, 1 Cor. 3. 3.) walk as men; that is, proudly or contentiously. And as there are but few who thus know themselves to be men; so there are as few, who know that God is the Lord. (Exod. 7. 8.) The Egyptians shall know that I am the Lord; that is, when I bring my judgments on them, then they will be constrained to acknowledge me in my almighty power and greatness, confessing that I am God alone, and that besides me there is none other. When men will not know God in his Word, nor in his Works of Creation and common Providence, he will make them know him in his Rod, and his works of Judgment and extraordinary Providence. So here, Wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword. That you may know, is, that you may be convinced by the Logick of the sword, by pains and punishment.

Hoc dico ut eum ad quem provoco justum judicē prius cogitetis quam id reipsa experiamini. Bez.

Ut cognoscatis quod ex jure est. Jun. i. e. ut saltem metu & horrore judiciorum ejus ad officium perfungendum ergo afflictū revocemini. Jun.

That there is a judgment.] The Hebrew word is infinitive, that to judge. The meaning is, that there shall be a time of judgment, or such a proceeding as we call judgment. Judgment is of two sorts. First, There is a Judgment of absolution Secondly, A Judgment of condemnation. We may take in both here; God will make you know there is a Judgment.

שרון pro אשר רון Quod judicare, i. e. judicatio Infinitivus, pro nomine verbali.

First, A Judgment of absolution on my part; God will determine for me according to the innocency of my cause in that day; he will set me right before all the world.

Secondly, A Judgment of condemnation on your part; you will be found faulty, and receive sentence according to your fault. But when should this Judgment be given? There are two times of Divine Judgment.

First, In this world.

Secondly, In the world to come.

We may understand it of both; That ye may know that there is a Judgment; that is,

First, That God doth moderate, order and guide things according to his infinite wisdom in this world: The world is not left to chance or hap-hazard; there is a providence of God, and he will bring a sword upon you, that you may may know that there is a judgment, or an unerring wisdom that orders all things. To every purpose (saith Solomon, Eccl. 8. 6.) there is time and judgment. That is, a proper season and a special manner of acting, upon the due observation whereof, the good success of every action doth depend: Now as there is a skill or judgment of man requisite to eve-your selves in the wrong judgment you give of me, yet ry purpose, to effect it; so there is a wisdom and a judgment of God to every purpose, to order and dispose of it, to reward or punish it.

Again secondly, That ye may know there is a Judgment, is, as if he had said, That ye may know a day is coming, wherein God will judge the world in righteousnes, though now you judge unrighteously; though now you please your selves in the wrong judgment you give of me, yet know there shall be a right judgment given of me and you too.

Hence observe, First, Man is not easily perswaded that God will judge him, that Judgments are coming, or that Christ will come to Judgment.

Though Job's friends were (in the main) holy and good men, yet he speaks of them as very insensible of their liableness to this judgment. The wicked (Isa. 28. 15.) make a covenant with death, and with hell they are at an agreement: There is no perswading of them that judgment shall overtake them; though all the world be overflowed with a deluge, yet they hope to stand dry; When the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us; for we have made lies our refuge, and under falshood have we hid our selves. But will any man knowingly make lies his refuge, and secure himself by falshood? I answer,

First, Some will. The lies and falshood, the subtilty and guile which they have used or resolve to use, is that which they trust to; they live by their wits and shifts, and so they hope to make an escape from death and danger.

But secondly, I conceive the Prophet represents these men scoffingly speaking the opinion which others, especially the holy Prophets had of all the plots and projects, of all the helps and means which they had prepared for their shelter in that rainy day fore-threatned; as if they had said, we know very well that you call all these (our outward strengths and secret policies, yea, our gods, whom you blaspheme for Idols, all these you call) lies and falshood; well, let them be so, yet we will venture our selves upon their fidelity, not doubting but that the overflowing scourge will have nothing to do with us, though others are undone by it. A man that pleaseth himself in doing evil, cannot easily believe that he shall suffer evil for doing it. And though the heart cannot put off the terror of present judgments, yet it will of future judgment, We are unwilling to know that which checks us in that which we are willing to do.

Secondly observe, They who do not act according to common principles, may be said not to know them.

Job speaks to his friends, who were not ignorant that there should be a judgment; but they judged him as if they had never looked to have been judged themselves, their actions did not speak what they knew; therefore he charges them with ignorance (1 Sam. 2. 12.) The sons of Eli were children of Belial, they did not know the Lord. Did not they know him, and yet Priests! not know him, and yet bred up under Eli the High Priest, a godly man! Could it be said of them, they did not know the Lord? Though they had a form of the knowledge of God in the letter of the Law, yet because their lives were unsuitable, and they acted as they who know not God, therefore 'tis said expresly, they knew not God. They threw off the yoke of obedience, they were sons of Belial, they walked not in the power of their knowledge, and therefore they are said not to know. When Manasses being carried away to Babylon in chains, began to come to himself (the Lord having thus humbled him by his affliction) the Text saith, Then Manasses knew that the Lord he was God (2 Chron. 33. 13.) Manasses being son to Hezekiah, a godly King, no doubt was tutored, and instructed to know that God was the Lord; yet Manasses never knew God to purpose, till he was taught by the Rod. Whatsoever truth we do not hold forth in life, we may be said not to know it, how much knowledge soever we have about it.

Thirdly, From hence note also, There shall certainly be a Judgment.

This point was handled before (vers. 25.) consult that verse about it.

Fourthly, From the connexion, when he saith, Wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword, that ye may know, &c. From the Connexion we may learn,

That, The present judgments of God are arguments of a future judgment.

When we see the face of the sword, some visible judgment, that teacheth us to believe a judgment as yet unseen. The dayes of judgment in this world, are intimations of that great day of judgment at the end of the world: Those are lesser dayes of judgment. And, as when God doth not bring judgments on sinners in this life, it hardens many in this opinion, surely there will never be a day of judgment. Atheists are extreamly strengthened in that mis-belief, they flatter themselves that there shall be no judgment, because they see none, and that sinners shall escape punishment alwayes, because they are not alwayes punished. Now as some are strengthened in their unbelief, that there shall be no judgment at all, because they do not see a present judgment; so when God doth visibly bring forth judgments here, it is a confirmation of faith to others, that God will reckon with all men, and bring every work and secret thing to judgment.

Again, Why doth Job say, That ye may know that there is a judgment. Was there no judgment then? Job found Judges, and judgment too: True, he complained often of his friends for judging him, but he looked on theirs as wrong judgment, and so as no judgment. Intimating that another kind of judgment should pass upon him, then what had yet passed. They should know that there is a judgment.

Hence observe, The judgment of God is an exact and perfect judgment.

In the day of mans Judgment, some receive good for evil, and others receive evil for good. But when we shall appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, then every one shall receive according to what he hath done in his body, whether it be good or evil. Some men are blind and cannot judge aright, others are brib'd or byassed, and so will not judge aright. But Christ knoweth all things and persons, and nothing can turn him aside against his knowledge. His judgment will be straight and equal judgment.

Sixthly, In reference to the persons upon whom he presseth this, That ye may know. You my friends, have judged me harshly and severely; he particularly applies his speech to them; which gives us this Note further.

They who judge others harshly, have cause to fear judgment.

Christ speaks as if judgment should pass upon none but such (Matth. 7. 1.) Judge not, that ye be not judged; for with what judgment ye mete, it shall be meted to you again. Judge not, doth not prohibit the judgment of man on man; not the judgment of the Magistrate, no nor all private judgment; but wrong, harsh, hasty, groundless judgment: with such judgment judge not; why? that ye be not judged: As if Christ had said, ye shall certainly be judged if ye do so. But shall only such be judged, shall not all be judged? Yes all shall be judged; but all shall not be judged as this sort of Judges shall, with a judgment of condemnation. In that speech of Christ, to be judged, is to be condemned. Again, 'tis true, this argument is applicable to all sorts of sins and sinners; Swear not, lie not, steal not, that ye be not judged. But though it be true of all, yet it is more specially applicable to wrong judgment, and injurious Judges. Judge not, that ye be not judged. Such shall surely be condemned. The Apostle (1 Cor. 4. 5.) is strict upon that point; Judge nothing before the time till the Lord come, that will bring to light the hidden things of darkness. As the former, so this Scripture doth not take all judgment from man, as (if in all cases) we should only appeal to God, or refer every cause to the last Judgment. But when he saith, Judge nothing before the time, his meaning is, judge nothing unseasonably, judge no person in reference to his spiritual state peremptorily or finally. We may judge the facts of men but take heed of judging their hearts. We may judge persons as they are, but we cannot conclude what they may be. We may judge what appeareth, but we must not judge by guess or by conjecture concerning those things which are hidden and appear not. The Lord (at last) will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: The Judgment of hidden things and of hearts, are reserved to him to whom nothing is hidden, and who knoweth the heart (James 4. 11, 12.) Speak not evil one of another (Brethren) he that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the Law, and judgeth the Law; but if thou judge the Law, thou art not a doer of the Law, but a Judge. There is one Law-giver, who is able to save and to destroy. Who art thou that judgest another? Our Law-giver is our Judge, and he who is the Judge of all, is as able to destroy by a sentence of condemnation, as to save by a sentence of absolution.

Lastly observe, The remembrance of the righteous judgment to come, should keep us in a holy fear, lest we judge our brethren unrighteously.

The remembrance of that judgment, should keep us in a holy fear of falling into any sin, but especially of falling into this sin of unrighteous judgment. The Apostle Paul (Rom. 14.) takes brethren off from judging and vexing one another about either the observation or forbearance of meats and dayes, which once had a plain and direct institution from God, and were then indeed abolished and laid aside; yet some judging their brethren for the use, and others for the disuse of them, being unsatisfied about their abolition, In this quarrel the Apostle interposeth (vers. 10.) Why judgest thou thy brother? Why dost thou set at naught thy brother? (Thus he rebukes and chides them) we shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ; for it is written, as I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. This thought that we must all bow to God in the day of Judgment, may abate our keenness, and cool our heats. This will cause us either in a loving compliance to bow one to another, or to take heed of wrathful violence, whether in word or action, to cause others to bow to us. Whereas they who have blotted the notion of that last Judgment out of their hearts and consciences, will not stand upon those acts which are greatest blots in their lives and conversations. The Chaldee Paraphrase glossing upon the History of the murder of Abel by Cain (Gen. 4.) assignes this as the occasion of it; Cain and Abel went out into the field, where discoursing some points of Religion, Cain said there was no day of Judgment, no account to be given of what is done here, no reward after this life; such were the Tenents of Cain: Abel held the contrary, and said there was a Judgment, and an estate after this life, a reward for the righteous, and punishment for the wicked. Cain having drunk in those false principles, not only judged, but rose up and murdered his Brother presently. Whether Cain and Abel had such a Dialogue or no, is questionable; but it is clear, as to the point in hand, that when a man hath once resolved, that there is no judgment, or hath not the notion fresh upon his spirit, he is apt to judge his brethren harshly, and then to act cruelly against them. No man knows whether either his hand or his tongue will stop in sinning, when once he hath thrown away this Bar, or laid aside the holy Bridle of this principle, That there is a Judgment.

Thus far Job's answer to the second speech of his second friend Bildad hath been opened; wherein he hath laboured to take all his three friends off from the fierceness of their opposition against him, and the harshness of their opinion of him, by the confession of his own faith, in the former context, and by remembring them in this of the account which they were to give to God of all their words and works, in the Judgment of the great Day. His third Friend Zophar takes up the Cause, and persecutes Job again upon the old quarrel, that surely he was a wicked man, a man of an evil life, because his life was so full of evils.

CHAP. XX. Vers. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

Then answered Zophar the Naamathite and said;

Therefore do my thoughts cause me to answer, and for this I make haste.

I have heard the check of my reproach, and the spirit of my understanding causeth me to answer.

Knowest thou not this of old, since man was placed upon earth,

That the triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment.

ZOPHAR no whit moved with the miseries, nor with the cries of Job, not at all satisfied with the serious confession which he made of his own faith, nor terrified with the severe threats of the sword of God against them, proceeds in his turn and time, to charge Job afresh with ungodliness, and that by an elegant description of the sudden and dreadful downfal of ungodly men.

For the clearing of the whole Chapter, we may consider,

First, The sum of what he here delivers, or his Argument.

Secondly, His scope.

Thirdly, The parts into which we may divide his Answer.

The sum or argument which he handleth is this, and he is only in this to teach and inform us, that wicked men enjoy but a very uncertain estate, how high and glorious soever they appear in this world. And that after a short time of pleasure, they are cast down and perish for ever.

His scope or aim in holding out this Doctrine, is to convince Job, that he was justly censured and dealt with by them as a wicked man, because God dealt with him as with a wicked man. The high prosperity in which he formerly lived, being vanished as a dream, his light turned to darkness, and all his joy wrapt up in sorrow: As if he had said, The change which thou hast had in thy outward state, saith to us that thy heart is not changed. If thy conversation had not continued bad, thy condition had continued good.

The parts of his Answer are three.

First, A short Exordium, in vers. 2, 3.

Secondly, A long Narration, from vers. 3. to the end of vers. 28.

Thirdly, We have a quick and cutting Conclusion in the close of the Chapter: This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed to him by God.

VERS. 1, 2.

Then answered Zophar the Naamathite, and said;
Therefore do my thoughts cause me to answer, and for this do I make haste.

THese words are a part of his Preface, wherein he moveth for attention; and he doth it from a kind of necessity that lay upon him to speak; from whence he would infer, infer, that it was surely a duty in Job to hear: When Paul said, A necessity is laid upon me to preach the Gospel, he implied a necessity in others to hear the Gospel preached. Therefore now, and for this, &c.

What doth this refer to? We may give it three wayes.

First, Upon the whole matter; as if he had said, I having well weighed and considered the tenor of thy discourse upon this great point of Gods dealing with man, and seeing how erroneous thou art in thy apprehensions about it, therefore my thoughts cause me to answer.

Secondly, And more principally, therefore, that is, because of what thou spakest at the close of thy last discourse, threatning us with the sword; Be ye afraid of the sword, for wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword; Therefore do my thoughts cause me to answer: As if Zophar had said, You speak terribly to us, you have threatned us with the sword, and have brandished or waved it before our eyes, like that flaming sword, which turning every way, was set to keep the way of the Tree of Life in Paradise, lest Adam should meddle with it. So, saith he, thou terrifiest us with the sword, as if it were drawn against us in case we should attempt further against thee; but I am so far from being terrified by thy threats, that for this very reason do my thoughts cause me to answer, and for this do I make haste. Perceiving how wrongfully you apply the judgments of God, it is time for me to rectifie and reduce you; considering also that the terror you powr out upon us, is fallen upon your self, and that you are wounded with the sword you speak of. Have you not felt the smart of it? doth not this argue that you are the man, and that you have hit your self while you aimed at us?

Thirdly, It may be referred to those reproaches (as he interprets them) and severe censures of their dealing with him. And then the reason is plain in the third verse, where the account of that therefore, is thus given; I have heard the check of my reproach, therefore do my thoughts cause me to answer, and for this do I make haste; we may put both these together, as if he had thus more plainly expressed himself, Thou hast not only threatned, but reproached; not only terrified, but checked and censured me; for this my thoughts cause me to answer, and for this do I make haste.

רעפי Therefore do my thoughts.] Thoughts are the first-born of the soul, our inward motions. The word which is here used in the Hebrew for a thought, is very elegant, properly signifying the boughs of a tree, because our thoughts shoot out from our minds, as branches do from a tree, the force of which word was opened, chap. 4. 13. Therefore do my thoughts

שוב Convertere, redire, est in Hiphil, ubi propriè significat redire facere, & quando de verbis agitur, respondere significat. Bold. Studium eloquendi stimulat, urget ac accelerat me. Jun.

Cause me to answer.] The expression notes an active putting forward, or a thrusting him on to answer, as if he had not been master of his own spirit, or could not withstand the impulses which were upon him. His thoughts did not only contain the matter which he had to answer; but they provoked, and (as we render) caused him to answer; or (according to the Letter) to return; my thoughts caused me to return; my thoughts presse me: As if he had said, It was my purpose to have given thee over, and to have medled no more with thee; but thy carriage hath been such, that I am compelled to answer; I must answer whether I will or no. The old Prophets when they received impressions from the Spirit of God, were no more in their own power, or they had not the command of their own words, they must speak what the Spirit dictated to them, they could not forbear. They could not say as the wicked are described (Psal. 12. 4.) Our lips are our own; no, their lips moved as the Spirit of God moved them. Thus the Apostle Peter describes them (2 Pet. 1. 21.) The Prophesie came not in old time (or at any time) by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the holy Ghost. Such a force there is in the word of the Text. Some interpret, as if Zophar would have Job understand so much, that he was moved with the Spirit of God, or that God inspired him to speak, and he could not be silent. David was under such a constraint (Psal. 39. 3.) My heart was hot within me, while I was musing, the fire burned, then spake I with my tongue. His thoughts caused him to answer. And in that Zophar saith, My thoughts cause me, &c. he seems to intimate, that though he spake zealously, yet he did not speak rashly, but had seriously premeditated or thought of the whole matter before-hand.

Hence observe, Thoughts press us to words.

They force their way out; it is a hard thing to keep in our thoughts: our thoughts are as conceptions, and our answerings are as the birth. Where the first is, the second must follow. Where there is a conception, there alwayes succeedeth either timely production, or abortion. Thoughts once conceived and formed, strive and struggle to come to the birth and see the light. The Apostle Paul useth such an an expression (Acts 18. 5.) Where the Text saith, that when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in spirit, Paul spake before; he reasoned in the Synagogue every Sabbath (vers. 4.) But after they came from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in spirit, or constrained; so pressed in spirit, that he could not hold; therefore it follows, I testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ; he had a new gale, a fresh breathing from Christ upon him; or as some render, a Spring-tide came in upon him, his spirit swell'd high, and overflowed the banks. The same word is used (2 Cor. 5. 14.) The love of Christ constraineth me, that is, the love wherewith Christ loveth me ('tis true also of the love wherewith we love Christ) this love constraineth me. Paul was not constrained by an outward violence, but by an internal virtue, to do, to suffer, to speak, to act whatsoever was his duty in the service of Jesus Christ.

Συνεχόμαι Intus apud se æstuabat.

Again, Whereas he saith, My thoughts cause me to answer; observe,

That, Before we answer, we should consider.

We should not speak till we think; nor utter a matter till we have beaten it out plain in our own spirits: Thoughts must form our words, and words should bear the form of our thoughts. He that speaks what he thinks not, speaks hypocritically; and he that thinks not of what he speaks, speaks inconsiderately. Unless the heart work before the tongue, the tongue will make but ill-favoured work. As we should deliberate long before we determine to do any thing, so we should use some deliberation before every thing we say. When Christ saith to his Disciples in that case of their being brought before Governors and Kings for his Names sake (Matth. 10. 19, 20.) Take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that same hour, what ye shall speak; for it is not ye that speak, but the spirit of your Father that speaketh in you. In this Christ doth not (as I conceive) forbid all care and fore-thought what to say (no more then he forbids all care and fore-thought about the things of this life) when he saith (Matth. 6. 25.) Take no thought for your life: He only forbids anxious distrustful cares and thoughts what to say; or that they should not like Orators or Advocates, strive to make studied Rhetorical Pleas and Apologies for themselves; forasmuch as in the due improvement and management of their talents, the Spirit would assist and supply them, yea, and if need were, give them immediate supplies, and be with their mouths (as he promised Moses, Exod. 4. 12.) to teach them what they should say. If their own thoughts could not, he would teach and move them to answer.

And for this I make haste.] The Hebrew is, Therefore haste is in me; I find a motion in me, and that motion forbids all delayes; some expound this haste by a kind of delight; for this I delight in answering, it is pleasant to me; we usually make haste to do those things we delight to do. That's a good sence; as it was prophesied of Christ (Psal. 40. 7, 8.) Lo I come, I delight to do thy will; there was haste and delight both together in Christ: It was written in the volume of Gods Book that he should do the will of God; and Christ came with haste and delight to do it: Zophar speaks near the same; It is my delight to answer: we render, for this I make haste, or, for this my haste is in me: There is a twofold haste; first, a foolish; secondly, a wise haste; a haste of indiscretion, and a haste of diligence; a haste that precedes deliberation, and a haste that follows deliberation; Zophar would be understood of the best haste, when he saith, I make haste; his meaning is, he made the haste of a diligent man, who having wisely deliberated what to answer, makes haste to answer; he would be understood to make the haste of an industrious man, not of a passionate man. Hence note, חוש Et deliciis affluere & festinare significat.

That, In a good work it is good to make haste.

The Apostles rule (Rom. 12. 11.) is, Not slothful in business. Some haste makes waste; and many make waste, because they make no haste; some make more haste then good speed; speed; others have good speed, while they make haste. David (Psal. 31. 22.) spake in too much haste, he spake before he had well thought of it; I said in my haste, I am cut off from before thine eyes. And again (Psal. 116. 11.) I said in my haste all men are liars; take heed of such hasty sayings as these: He tells us also of a commendable haste which he used (Psal. 119. 60.) I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy testimonies; this was the haste of diligence, the other was the haste of unbelief; he that believeth, will not make haste; either to do or speak what he hath not considered, or finds no warrant for, when he hath considered. To run on in a wrong way, is from our unbelief, or from our ignorance; but he that believeth and knoweth, will run in a right way; nothing provokes so much to a holy haste, as Faith doth. Faith moveth us to do the will of God, and not to delay: The Motto of one of the Ancients was, Make haste slowly: Another gives it as a rule, in the observation whereof, he obtained all his successes, Making no delay. The right stating of our haste and delay, gives a good issue to all our actions; sometimes haste is best, sometimes stay is best; sometimes we cannot be too hasty, sometimes we can hardly be too slow. Paul was resolute (Gal. 1. 16.) he made no stop, he would not stay for a conference; When it pleased God to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the Heathen, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: He went not to counsel, either with his own heart, or with the wisest heads, when once the mind of God was cleared up to him, and his conscience was attached with it. We cannot do that too soon which is alwayes to be done. Yet about many things we may say (as one was wont) Let us not make much haste, that so we may have done the sooner.

Again, Zophar looking upon Job as a man mistaken, and in a wrong way, saith, For this I make haste. Hence note,

It is our duty to hasten the recalling and reducing of those that are engaged in any errour, or departed from the way of truth and holiness.

Zophar's supposition is a rule for us to walk by, though his practice be not; he was mistaken in the object of his haste, not in the ground or rise of it. He that seeth his neighbours house on fire, should make haste to quench it; he that seeth him fallen into a pit, should make haste to pull him out; in a desperate disease, we make haste to the Physitian; such were Zophar's apprehensions concerning Job: He supposed his soul diseased, and ready to gangrene with erroneous opinions or sinful practices; and for this he made haste. As Paul speaks (Gal. 2. 5.) about false brethren in the things of the Gospel, to whom he gave not place, no not for an hour. Paul made hast to reduce them, he did not delay, no not an hour; so should we. As the Sun should not go down upon our wrath (we must make haste to be reconciled to an offended brother) so the Sun should not go down upon our zeal, we must make haste to recover a lapsed brother. He that maketh the former delay, giveth place to the Devil (as the Apostle speaks) to take an advantage against and prevail upon himself; and he that maketh the latter delay, giveth place to the Devil, to take advantage against, and prevail upon his brother.

Verse 3. I have heard the check of my reproach, and the spirit of my understanding causeth me to answer.

Some conceive that as these words hold forth what Zophar had heard from Job, so with what frame of spirit he heard it; as if he had said, I have heard it, and let it go; I will neither trouble my self nor thee about it, but take it patiently: I will not check or reproach thee, though I have heard the check of my reproach; that is, such a check or reproof as tends to my reproach and disgrace.

כלם Ad confusionem & erubescentiam pertinet.

The word signifies to make one blush; you have spoken such things (saith Zophar) as might make me blush if I were guilty; possibly he aims particularly at those words of chap. 19. 22. Why do you persecute me as God, and are not satisfied with my flesh? Where Job chargeth his friends with highest cruelty; ye have (upon the matter) eaten my flesh, and will ye destroy my spirit too? Now, saith Zophar, I have heard the check of my reproach. What! do we persecute you, who are come to comfort you? have we eaten your flesh, who mourn over your soul? why do you shame and dishonour us with this reproach?

Yet I conceive that which Zophar calleth the check of his reproach, was Job's stiffness and persistance in his opinion, still dissenting from his friends, and refusing to be brought over to their judgments. Hence note,

Man is apt to account it a reproach to be dissented from and gainsayed in what he affirms as truth.

Every dissent carrieth a reproof, yea, a reproach in it; he must have a patient ear that can hear himself reproved: Zophar's patience was so much moved with it, that he presently adds,

The spirit of my understanding causeth me to answer.

These words are near in sence with the close of the former verse; there he said, My thoughts cause me to answer; here, the spirit of my understanding causeth me to answer. First, Some interpret it of God, who is the spirit giving understanding: As if he had said, God hath caused me to answer. But rather, Secondly, The spirit of the understanding is the highest, chiefest and most sublimate faculty of the understanding; as if he had said, Not only doth my understanding in general, but the most refined part of it, that which is most free from the dregs of passion, the very spirit of my understanding moves me to answer. The Apostle useth such an expres (Eph. 4. 23.) Be renewed in the spirit of your mind; not only be renewed in the outward man, in practice and conversation, but be renewed in your mind; yea, in the spirit of it. Holiness is not only the renewing of the outward man, but of the mind, and not only of the mind, but of the spirit of the mind, that is, of whatsoever riseth up nearest to God, as the spirit of the understanding doth; our minds need renewing, and so doth the very spirit of them, both because corruption is got into the highest powers of the mind, and because we must serve God and answer one another with those highest powers, even with the spirit of our understanding.

Thirdly, The spirit of the understanding may be expounded by the force and power of the understanding. The spirit of every thing is the best and the strongest of it. And thus he seems to speak in opposition to the manner of Job's speech, which was such as made it (in his construction) a check rather then a counsel, and a reproach rather then a reproof. A check and a reproach proceed from passion, or from spleen; whereas counsel what to do, and reproof for what hath been done amiss, proceed from compassion, or from love. Thou hast spoken my reproach, and therefore thou hast spoken from thy own passion; but I will not imitate thee, I intend not to answer thee with my passion, but with my reason and with my spirit, the force and best of my understanding.

Lastly, When he saith, The spirit of my understanding causeth me, &c. He (possibly) would intimate, that he had understanding or knowledge enough to answer for himself, to retort Job's reproach, and make good his own assertion.

From this last clause of the Verse, observe,

We should not answer passionate speeches with passion.

The more we see others disturbed and heated with passion, the more cool and composed we should be; we should dispose our selves to the highest degree of patience, when we see others impatient; what others speak or write in anger, we should answer in love, and fall to work with our reason, yea, with (that, which hath more of the spirit of our understanding in it) our Graces. When we perceive those we have to deal with, over-wrought with their own distempers and corruptions, when we see plainly that the spirit of pride and contentiousness causeth them to speak to us, then we should strive to speak with them in the spirit of meekness, and the spirit of understanding should cause us to answer. Man hath this priviledge above beasts, that he hath an understanding; and not only so, but in this he is like to Angels, yea, to God himself; but unless he exerciseth his understanding, he acts as a beast: So the Psalmist concludes (Psal. 49. 20.) Man that is in honour, and understandeth not (that is, doth not exercise his understanding, or act suitably to it, but is led meerly by sense, or hurried by passion, this man) is like the beasts that perish. It is good to be full of affection; but it is best to work in the full assurance of understanding; affections without understanding, are blind, blind, and quickly run us upon a thouſand inconveniences. That duty which calls up all our affections, yet calls for a work of the underſtanding (Pſal. 47.7.) Sing praiſes with underſtanding. And if we ought not to perform any publick duty in the Church (thoſe in particular of praying and ſinging) ſo, as that others cannot ſet their underſtandings on work, then much leſs are we to perform any duty without the work of our own underſtanding (1 *Cor.*14.14,15.) If I pray in an unknown tongue (that is, in a tongue which others who joyn with me, know not, though I do) my ſpirit prayeth, but my underſtanding is unfruitful, that is, to them with whom I pray; my underſtanding in prayer is no benefit to them, unleſs they alſo underſtand what I pray. What is it then? I will pray with the ſpirit, and will pray with the underſtanding alſo; I will ſing with the ſpirit, I will ſing with the underſtanding alſo; that is, I will ſing and pray in an unknown tongue by that extraordinary gift of the Spirit, or as the Spirit dictates unto me; yet I will ſing and pray with the underſtanding alſo, that is, I will ſo explain or interpret my Pſalm or Prayer, that others may underſtand it. He is a Barbarian to others, who either ſpeaketh or prayeth what they underſtand not; and he is worſe then a Barbarian to himſelf, who ſpeaketh what himſelf underſtandeth not. An ignorant perſon wants underſtanding, and a paſſionate perſon cannot uſe his underſtanding; both are unfit to object or anſwer. When we anſwer like men, the ſpirit of our underſtanding cauſeth us to anſwer.

From the Preface thus briefly opened, Zophar deſcends to the matter of his anſwer, which he layeth down, firſt, more generally, at verſ. 4, 5.

Verſ. 4. Knoweſt not thou this of old, ſince man was placed upon earth?

Theſe words charge Job either with groſs ignorance, or a reſolved oppoſition of the truth againſt his own knowledge: As if he had ſaid, Job, thou wouldeſt perſwade us that thou art a knowing man; haſt thou not this among thy experiences? Is not this laid up among thy treaſures of knowledge? Knoweſt thou not this? Thus the words are a check of his ignorance or inadvertency. What haſt thou not known this? Knoweſt thou not that which every one knoweth? children can ſpeak of this; this hath been the courſe of God of old. As if he had ſaid, I am not ſpeaking paradoxes to thee and novelties, or things which fall out only now and then, but of the fixt and conſtant tenor of Gods dealings and adminiſtrations even from the firſt, or of old, long ago, from all ages and generations it hath been thus.

Fixa hæc & conſtituta divinæ providentiæ ratio omnibus nota eſt. Pined.

The word ſignifies ſometimes Eternity ſtrictly taken (Iſa. 57.17.) Thus ſaith the high and holy one that inhabiteth Eternity, that is, who hath neither beginning nor ending. Chriſt (*Iſa.*9.5.) is called the everlaſting Father, or, the Father of Eternity; not only in regard of the eternity of his being, but as he is the author of eternal life (here begun, hereafter to be perfected) unto all thoſe that believe on him, or have intereſt in him; as alſo becauſe of the everlaſtingneſs of his fatherly care of, and tenderneſs towards them. In other places the word ſignifies only a long time or a diuturnity (Pſal. 132.14.) There will I dwell for ever; that is, for many ages. So here, Haſt thou not known of old? Which is explained in the next words, ſince man was placed upon the earth? That is, ever ſince or from the creation of the world; for then man was firſt placed upon the earth. We may read the word Man, not as an Appellative, but as the Proper Name of the firſt man; Haſt not thou known this of old ſince Adam was placed upon the earth? The ſame word was the proper name of the firſt man, and is the common name of all men. Thus it hath been ever ſince Adam was formed and faſhioned out of the earth by divine art, and made up into that goodly fabrick, and then diſpoſed by a divine order to dreſs the Garden. The original word ſignifies to ſettle or place a man in his buſineſs or calling, as Adam was preſently after his Creation (Gen. 2.15.) And the Lord took the man (or Adam) and put him into the Garden of Eden to dreſs it and to keep it. Knoweſt thou not this, or that it hath been thus of old ſince man was (thus) placed upon the earth? Hence obſerve,

מנו־עֹר
Ex eo quod olim à ſæculo, à ſemper ab æterno, quod frequenter ſumitur pro magna duratione.

שִׂים
Poſitus arte & induſtria fabricatus, diſpoſitus certo loco, non caſu.

First, That, We ſhould acquaint our ſelves with the hiſtory of Gods dealing in all ages.

Doſt thou not know?] He ſpeaks it as a reproach to him, that he was not acquainted with what God had done in former times; there are ſome extraordinary caſes, that fall not out in every age: the providence of God hath ſome excentrical motions; but we may draw a line, and ſee the footſteps of many of his diſpenſations in all ages. Many works of divine providence are uniform, and run parallel in all times: Or if their face and appearance be not one and the ſame, yet it is not divers or contrary. Now, as it is a ſhame not to know common principles, ſo not to know common experiences. That which any man may know, every man ought to know, if it be that which is uſeful, and a duty for us to know.

Secondly, From the particular here intended, obſerve,

That, In all ages God hath declared himſelf againſt wicked men.

God never ſhewed himſelf a friend to ſinners, or a lover of iniquity; he declared himſelf againſt Adam when he ſinned, though he receiveth him into favour again. He declared himſelf againſt wicked Cain, he excommunicated him, and caſt him out; he declared himſelf againſt the old world by water: When they were grown ſo vile, that all the imaginations of the thoughts of their hearts were evil, he ſent a deluge, not to waſh, but drown them. He declared himſelf againſt the wickedneſs of Sodom and Gomorrah by fire, not to purifie, but conſume them. God never ſhewed good will to wicked men (he is alwayes conſtant to himſelf) as he never ſhewed ill will to any of the godly; there is not one teſtimony of either upon record in any age of the world.

Thirdly, From thoſe words, Since man was placed upon the earth; he doth not ſay, Since man was upon the earth; but placed.

Note, There is a divine ordination that ſets every man in his place upon the earth. Or, Man is placed and diſpoſed of by a divine ordination.

God hath appointed to every man where he ſhall be, and how he ſhall be employed. Time and place are ſet down by God; And as he hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation (Acts 17.26.) So the buſineſs of every man in that place of his habitation. When the Lord made man, he took and put him into the Garden of Eden; there was the bound of his habitation: And being brought thither, he ſhewed him his work, to dreſs it, and to keep it (Gen. 2. 15.) He left him not at large to the whole world for a place, but ſingled him his place; nor did he leave him at large for an employment; but ſhewed him his work. Adam did not thruſt himſelf into the Garden, but the Lord took him by the hand, led him to, and placed him in it, directing him what to do. Here was the divine ordination to a Calling. It is our happineſs when we are able to ſay, whereſoever we are, God hath placed us there, we have not thruſt our ſelves in. This is a great ſupport in any ſervice or buſineſs, when we can ſee that God hath called, and his hand conducted us to it; that we have not taken, but received it; that we are not come, but ſent unto it.

Zophar proceeds to expreſs or name that common truth, to which all ages have born, or may bring in their witneſs.

Verſe 5. That the triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, and the joy of the hypocrite for a moment.

Job having gained thus much upon his Friends, at leaſt, upon Zophar, that wicked men may enjoy outward proſperity in this world, is yet oppoſed upon the ſame account, becauſe, though they do proſper, yet it is but for a little time, ſo little, that they can hardly be known to have been at all in proſperity. For (ſaith Zophar) to this Aſſertion all ages give their ſuffrage; The triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, &c. We have in the two parts of the Verſe three pair of parallel terms. First, Triumphing and Joy. Secondly, The wicked man and the hypocrite. Thirdly, Short and a moment, Theſe in ſubſtance are the ſame.

The triumphing of the wicked is ſhort.

The word which we tranſlate triumphing, ſignifies not only joy, but joy proclaimed, that all may know it: Such is proclamatio ob fœlicitatem & rem successi; hinc Pavones dicti Rananna, à clamore, vel quia quasi gaudent de pulchritudine alarum suarum. Laus impiorum brevis est. Vulg, Cætum improborum à propinquo. Jun.

רנת
Ovatio, triumphus, læta

מקרוב De propinquo.

is that of triumphers after victory obtained in battel. It is applied both to honest and to sinful joy; yea, the word is also sometimes applied to sorrow, when sorrow is loud, and maketh an out-cry or lamentation: From this root the Hebrews derive that word whereby they express a Peacock; and they give the reason, both from the shrill cry of the Peacock, as also from the cause of that cry; the Peacock shouts (say Naturalists) looks upon his painted wings and goodly feathers, then he triumpheth; and so do wicked men, when they reflect upon their painted and spreading plumes, when they look upon their worldly splendor and greatness, then they triumph and sing. Some read, the praise; others, the song of the hypocrite. All rendrings laid together, do but reach the fulness of the Text, in setting out the hypocrites vanity, who ascending (as it were) his Chariot of pride and self-confidence, rides in triumph, and blesseth himself, as the only happy man. But,

The triumphing of the wicked is short.] Or according to the Hebrew, It is of near: This nearness may be taken two wayes; First, In reference to its beginning; it is not long since the triumph of such began. Secondly, In reference to its ending; the triumph of such shall not long continue; 'tis but a while since it rose, and within a while it will fall. We read of new Gods (Deut. 32.17. It is this word in the Hebrew, Gods of near new Gods) which your fathers knew not; ye have a certain race of Gods that were never heard of but of late, Gods of a late Date or Edition, and it will not be long but they will be out of date again; such is the triumphing of the wicked, it is not long since he began to triumph; a child may number the years which his prosperity hath lived, and the oldest man may out-live it. I find some Interpreters expressing the word by a local distance, rather then a distance of time. The triumph of the wicked is near, that is, it is not come from far: its pedigree and original is not from heaven, the far Countrey; but from the earth, to which it is a neighbour; and therefore (as all earthly things) it is fading, transitory, and quickly passeth away.

Hence observe, First, Wicked men may flourish in great prosperity.

Triumph is the height of prosperity: If ever Heathen Rome were seen in her glory, it was when her Cæsars having gotten some great victory, rode in triumph: To such a state may a wicked man ascend. I have seen the wicked in great prosperity (saith David, Psal. 37.) flourishing like a green Bay-tree; yea, they may flourish like the Cedars of Lebanon, or like the Oaks of Bashan. Let not their prosperity scandalize the Saints, or make them to stumble. Some know not what interpretation to put upon it, or how to bear it. Wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously, and holdest thy tongue, when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous then he? (Hab. 1.13.) This Point I have met with before; therefore I shall not stay upon it. But (which may easily take off this scandal) observe,

Secondly, That, A wicked mans prosperity is of no continuance.

It is but like a Statue of Snow before the Sun, soon defaced and melted down. It is but like some goodly Characters drawn upon the sand, which the next puff of wind blots out. He may have the pleasure of sin, but it is but for a season; his pleasures are scarce sweet at all; his pleasures are at best but a bitter-sweet, and that sweetness which is in them, doth not hold long: The triumphing of the wicked is short, both because lately begun, and because it shall soon end: yea, short, if we consider the utmost possibility of its continuance. How many casualties, decayes, changings and declinings are ready to invade and seize upon it every moment?

Further, The shortness of their triumph may be considered three wayes.

First, In reference to the constitution or nature of the things about which they triumph, or in which they rejoyce. Thus 'tis short.

Secondly, Short in reference to the general curse which God hath laid upon the creature; the creature at the best, is but a cistern, not a fountain; there is no water in it, but what is put into it; And since the fall of man, the creature is a broken, a crackt cistern, and cannot hold the comforts that are put into it; they quickly leak out and pass away like water spilt upon the ground, which cannot be gathered up again.

Thirdly, That which makes the triumphing of a wicked man yet shorter, is, a particular curse upon him for his personal sins and crooked wayes wherein he walketh. All his enjoyments are in themselves vanishing, and he by his own folly makes them more vain to him then they are in themselves.

From all it follows, That, A wicked man is a very miserable man.

His triumphing is short, but his declining is for ever; his prosperity is but for a while, but his misery is everlasting; all his good things will soon be gone, but his evils shall never end; his light is quickly put out, but when once it is dark with him, he shall see the light no more. The affliction which a Believer meets with in this life, is consistent with his happiness; or, he is not unhappy, though afflicted, because his afflictions are short, and his comforts everlasting (1 Cor. 4. 17.) Our light afflictions which are but for a moment, &c. This makes the life of a Saint happy while he is in affliction, his afflictions are light when heaviest, and short when longest, compared with that far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory: This also makes the life of a wicked man miserable while he is in prosperity, because his prosperity is but light and for a moment; and we may carry the latter part to the contrary sence, that light, short prosperity worketh for him an eternal weight of misery: For as earthly things are temporary in their nature and use to all, so being ill used and enjoyed without God in Christ, and a good Conscience, they prove eternal in their punishment; for the punishments and miseries that follow them, are eternal, and so they may be said to work an eternal weight of punishment; whereas the afflictions of the Saints are short in their burdensomness, yet eternal in their fruitfulness; for they work (not by the way of price, but of preparation) an eternal weight of Glory.

And the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment.

Lest the Title of a wicked man should be too broad, and Job should not take himself as concerned in this conclusion, because all knew him to be a worshipper of God, and one that made profession of Religion, therefore Zophar in this latter clause, adds the word hypocrite; which is most proper to those who are highest in profession. The joy of the hypocrite but for a moment.

Triumphing, in the former clause, signifies a more open deportment: There's no dissembling nor concealing of a Triumph. Joy may be more secret and retired; so some conceive Zophar speaking properly in reference to the usual distinct temper of the wicked and the hypocrite. A wicked prophane man triumphs and rants it, he makes all ring with his jollity. The hypocrite and false professor takes some stiller delights, and more moderate contentments; now (saith Zophar) this joy, though it be more reserved and close, is yet but for a moment, 'tis but like a punctum or point, which in the Mathematicks is so small a thing, that it hath no dimensions, unless imaginable; a point is less then the least line, or only the beginning of a line, it is but putting down his pen, and 'tis done; there needs no drawing, as in making lines. The worldly felicity of an hypocrite toucheth him only as a Globe doth a Table (in puncto) in a point; he hath but a touch of it, and then 'tis gone. A point is to a place, as a moment is to time, the least and last division of it: A point is indivisible in place, as a moment is in time. Thus the joy of the hypocrite is brought down to the lowest that words or thoughts can make of it. A hypocrite (against his will) toucheth worldly joy in regard of the time of his enjoying of it, as a Godly man willingly and designedly toucheth it, in regard of that frame or spirit with which he enjoyeth it, only in a point. He hath as little to do with worldly things as he can, he doth not lay the whole dimension of his soul upon them. He rejoyceth in the world as if he rejoyced not. Now this which is at once the duty and happiness of the Saints, shall be the punishment of hypocrite. These whether they will or no, shall have but a point or moment of worldly Felicity; whereas the other reckon reckon upon, and chearfully make account of it, as of no more. Though true joy in worldly things be theirs, yet they lightly esteem that joy. As for spiritual joy, that belongs to them alone. The Apostle (Phil. 4. 4.) exhorts all such, and only such, when he saith, Rejoyce in the Lord; I say again, rejoyce. The hypocrite hath no right to any joy (sorrow is his portion) yet he can as hardly be kept from rejoycing in the world, as the godly are hardly got to rejoyce in the Lord. Now though the hypocrites joy is most in outward things (he rejoyceth in Corn, Wine and Oyl) yet the joy of the hypocrite may go further, he may have joy in spirituals; for the hypocrite doth not rejoyce meerly as a wicked man, in the things of the world, he sometimes rejoyceth in the things of heaven (Mat. 13. 20.) The stony ground received the word with joy. The hypocrite may get a smatch of some tastes of the powers of the world to come, as the Apostle speaks (Heb. 6. 5.) For seeing hypocrites are not only enlightened about the things of this world, but also about the things of the world to come; they may have some joy in them; yet this strictly taken, is but a sensitive joy, or at the most, a rational, not a truly spiritual joy: A man may have a joy in and about spiritual things, yet have no spiritual joy; as a man may rejoyce in and about many worldly things, and yet his not a worldly joy; or as a man may have much knowledge about spiritual things, yet no spiritual knowledge of them; thus an hypocrite hath flashes of joy about spiritual things, but no spiritual joy: When a hypocrite hears a well ordered quick discourse and discovery of the joyes and happiness of heaven, of the grace and goodness of God, this from rational grounds may affect his heart, and so cause joy; but this joy of the hypocrite about spirituals, though it be better then his worldly joy, in regard of its object, yet it is no better in regard of its duration; for of this we may also conclude, 'tis but for a moment. As the hypocrite himself, so his joy is not built upon the rock, but upon the sands; it is not a Master-joy, a joy that can carry him out when sorrow cometh: A hypocrite cannot be as sorrowing, yet alwayes rejoycing; he cannot (as Paul saith, Rom. 5. 3.) rejoyce in tribulation, because he is not indeed united unto Christ, the true Isaac, or laughter of his people, the fountain of their joy. The hypocrites sorrow will last for ever, but all his joyes are only for a moment.

Improbis in mundo tribuitur Jubilum, quia non dissimulant quo gaudent, Hypocritis lætitia animo magis abscondita, quam verbis significata. Coc.

ערי רגע Ad instar puncti, ad momentum.

Licet vitam integram hominis duret humana fœlicitas, momentum durat.

Lastly, Consider the opposite state which Zophar would have Job take notice of.

The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment.

Hence it follows that there are some whose triumphing, and whose joyes are permanent and stable: The triumphing of the godly is for ever, and the joy of the sincere shall continue to everlasting. The joy of the Saints here is everlasting in the nature of it, though not in the actings of it; 'tis everlasting, as everlasting is opposed to a period, though not as to a pause. Their joy dieth not in this world, though sometimes it be sick, and languish. Some Saints have had their joy abiding in strength, when themselves were weak, and their joy not only alive, but lively as long as they lived; they have been carried to the grave in the embraces of Christ, and in the smiles of divine love. And as the moment of this life hath been a kind of eternity of joy to them, so eternity shall be to them but as a moment of joy; and yet every moment shall have (as it were) an eternity in it. Saints shall rejoyce for ever, yet their joy shall be alwayes as fresh and green as if new begun; as there shall be no removing of this joy, so no abatement of their sweetness in the enjoyment of it.

VERS. 6, 7, 8, 9.

Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach up to the clouds.
Yet he shall perish for ever, like his own dung; they which have seen him, shall say, Where is he?
He shall flee away as a dream, and shall not be found; yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night.
The eye also which saw him, shall see him no more; neither shall his place any more behold him.

Zophar having given his opinion about the vanishing prosperity of a wicked man, proceeds to amplifie and confirm it. He amplifies it,

First, By an hyperbolical supposition, vers. 6. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, &c. The Antithesis whereof is laid down, vers. 7. Yet he shall perish for ever; like his own dung, &c.

Secondly, He amplifies it by elegant similitudes; First, Of a dream. Secondly, Of a night-vision, vers. 8. Both which are prosecuted, vers. 9. The eye also which saw him, shall see him no more, &c.

Verse 6. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens.

It is a strong way of arguing, when we put the worst of our case, and yet conclude it good. We shew our selves able to hold out in the worst that is or can be, when we profess a stedfastness in that which is worse then is or indeed can be.

It is also a strong way of arguing, when we put the best of another mans case, and yet conclude it bad. He is not able to hold out in the best that is or may be, who cannot continue in that estate, which is better then any is, or indeed can be. Such is the intended strength of Zophar's argument in this place.

Though his excellency mount up to the heavens.

The Vulgar renders, If his pride ascend even up to heaven. The word in the original which we translate Excellency, he translates Pride. Properly it signifies that which is lifted up. There is an easie cognation between these two. For that which is high, or he who lifts up himself high, may be said to be proud. The Etymologie of the Latine word, to be proud, is to go over another, or to go above him. And usually they who are exalted above others, in high places of worldly honour and excellency, are also lifted up with pride. A lowly spirit in a high place, is very rarely found. The Hebrew word for a Prince, is derived from this Root, both because all Princes are exalted above the ordinary sort of men, and because most Princes are proud in the exalting of themselves. The word is used often in a good sence, as Psal. 62. 4. They only consult to cast him down from his excellency: That is, to cast David from that Royal Throne to which God had exalted him.

Si ascenderit usq; ad cœlum superbia ejus Vulg.

Superbire est super ire.

Princeps dicitur רוֹזֵן quasi elevatus aut sublimis.

The Septuagint translate, If his gifts ascend up to heaven. Gifts may be expressed by this word, because they do indeed lift him up in honour who is endued with them; as also because we are very apt to be lifted up with gifts; as the Apostle speaketh, 1 Cor. 8. 1. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. This sence is very suitable to Zophar's discourse of a hypocrite, who, though he hath not so much as one talent of true Grace, yet he may have five, yea ten talents of gifts; the gift of Prayer, the gift of Prophesie, the gift of utterance, &c. And with these gifts of heaven he is exalted and impregnated with those worst fumes of hell, Pride and Self-conceit.

Si ascenderint in cœlum dona ejus. Sept.

This form of speaking, to mount up to heaven, implies a gradation of four steps.

First, Heaven is high. Therefore to mount up to heaven, is to be in a high state of honour and excellency.

Secondly, Heaven is highest, and therefore to mount up to heaven, notes the highest ascent and elevation which man is capable of, or is attainable here on earth. When those Builders (Gen. 11. 4.) consulted and resolved, Go to, let us build a City and a Tower, whose top may reach to heaven, their purpose and plot was to build a Tower as high as it could possibly be builded. When Bibulus was extolled by the highest praises and acclamations of the people, Cicero the Orator speaks it thus, Bibulus is in heaven. The Poet speaks the same language, With my exalted head I will touch the Stars. As to be cast down to hell, signifies in Scripture-phrase the lowest dejection or depression; so to be lifted up to heaven, the highest exaltation. We find these two set in opposition (Isa. 14. 13, 14.) Thou (meaning the proud Assyrian) hast said in thy heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my Throne above the Stars of God, I will ascend above the heights of the clouds, I will be like the most high. But thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit, that is, thou shalt be cast into the lowest condition, as thou hast aspired to the highest. And thus Christ himself threatens that city which did not repent at the ſight of his mighty works (Mat. 11.23.) And thou Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, ſhalt be brought down to hell. Capernaum was lifted up both in her own opinion, and by thoſe real priviledges, the perſonal preſence of Chriſt there, his frequent preaching and Miracles; the contempt or non-improvement of theſe ripened her for ruine, bringing her to deſtruction, which looked like a hell upon earth, and ſweeping her at laſt from the face of the earth into that utter deſtruction in hell. Hell notes the loweſt degree of temporal as well as eternal miſery. And heaven notes the higheſt degree of temporal as well as of eternal happineſs.

Bibulus in cœlo est. Cic. ad Attic. Sublimi feriam sidera vertice. Hor.

which

Thirdly (which is more) to mount up to heaven, implies a kind of rivality with God in happineſs, or man preſuming to ſomewhat more then a man, a kind of Divinity among men. They who can patiently receive ſuch flattery as the Tyrians and Zidonians with the reſt of that throng beſtowed upon Herod, crying out, The voyce of God and not of man (Acts 12.22.) and they eſpecially who affect or require to be adored as God, as many Princes and very many of thoſe Luciferian Popes have done, theſe indeed may be ſaid to mount their excellency unto heaven, though in ſo doing, they have had but a phanſie of exaltation unto heaven, and have really debaſed themſelves below the earth; yea (as it follows in the next verſe) they have become in the eſteem of God and of Godly men, baſer then their own dung. For as that honour which is due and but commenſurate unto man, exalts and ennobles him that receives it, ſo every exceſs, eſpecially this ſpoken of (which is the moſt irregular and exorbitant exceſs) ſhames and depreſſeth him.

Fourthly, To mount up to heaven, carrieth in it not only the ſignification of a high, or of the higheſt eſtate on earth, but alſo of that, which is more then the earth can produce or advance any man unto, a certain, yea, an unchangeable and an unremoveable eſtate. There are no changes in heaven, and only there (except in hell) there are none. This earthly world paſſeth away, and the faſhion of it; therefore to have an excellency mounted up to heaven, is a preſumption to be (what God can make, and hath promiſed to make his Jacob or choſen people to be) an eternal excellency.

Take in theſe four aſcents, and then conceive how comprehenſive a ſuppoſition Zophar makes of the wicked mans worldly felicity, in theſe words, Though his excellency mount up to heaven. The next and laſt clauſe of the verſe is alſo of the ſame largeneſs and comprehenſion.

And his head reach unto the clouds.

עב Nubes obſcurior & craſſior; nubes etiam à ſuperiori radice dicuntur Neſhim, quaſi elevationes.

The word properly ſignifies thick and dark clouds. As if, ſay ſome, Zophar would intimate thus much; Though the wicked man lift up his head above all ſtorms and darkneſs, and ſeemeth to himſelf a ſuperiour to all dangers and diſaſters, yet he ſhall periſh. The head of a wicked man is above the clouds of heaven in aſpiring projects, while his heart is among or below the clods of the earth in covetous and curſed practices. Yea, he kicks at the God of heaven with his heel, while his head reacheth unto the clouds of heaven. While he ſaith in his heart, I will aſcend above the clouds of heaven, I will be like the moſt High (Iſa. 14. 14.) He ſets himſelf as an enemy, and is moſt unlike to the moſt High. Heathens have often perſonated proud men in ſuch a ſtile as Zophar expreſſeth them in, walking like the ſtars, and reaching the poſes of heaven with their head. As when the Pſalmiſt would ſhew the ſuper-eminency of the mercy and faithfulneſs of God, he ſaith (Pſal. 36. 5.) Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens, and thy faithfulneſs reacheth unto the clouds. So to ſhew the ſuper-eminency of the pride and folly of man, he is deſcribed mounting to the heavens, and reaching out his head unto the clouds.

Æqualis aſtris gradior, & cunctos ſuper, altum ſuperbo vertice attingens polum. Sen. in Theiſt.

This whole alluſion may be unto a Tree, full and high-grown, like an Oak, or a Cedar of Lebanon. To which the flouriſhing condition of the Amorite is compared (Amos 2.9.) I (ſaith the Lord) deſtroyed the Amorite before them, whoſe height was like the height of the Cedars, and he was ſtrong as the Oaks. Nebuchadnezzar, the greateſt Monarch then living, was repreſented to himſelf in a dream under this ſimilitude of a Tree, the height whereof was great, and whoſe height reached unto heaven (Dan. 4. 10, 11.) Thus Daniel interprets it (verſ. 22.) It is thou, O King, that art grown and become ſtrong, for thy greatneſs is grown, and reacheth unto heaven, and thy dominion to the end of the earth. When a mans dominion reacheth to the end of the earth, he in the ſtricteſt ſence of this alluſive language, may be ſaid (as to a worldly felicity) to reach his greatneſs, or that his greatneſs reacheth unto heaven. Hence obſerve,

First, A wicked man may get to the higheſt of worldly heights, to the greateſt of a worldly greatneſs.

There is nothing of this world ſo good, but an evil man may enjoy it. No power or honour on earth ſo high, but he may reach after and attain it, whoſe portion is in the loweſt hell. He may have any thing of, or all things upon the earth, about him, who hath nothing of heaven in him. His excellency may mount up to heaven, who hath not the leaſt ſhare in the leaſt heavenly excellency. Though Zophar's ſuppoſition be of impoſſibilities in the letter, yet according to the figure and tendency of them, they are very poſſible, yea, and have been often reduced to act by many Inſtances, both of prophane perſons and of hypocrites, advanced as high as the world could ſet them, or ſet upon the higheſt places and pinacles of power on the earth; and what is that but, in Zophar's ſtile, to be lifted up to heaven, and reach the clouds. Obſerve, Secondly, The higheſt worldly height and greatneſs cannot ſecure a wicked man againſt the hand of God.

The Lord by his Prophet (Iſa. 14. 15.) ſpeaks thus to that proud Prince, who would aſcend above the heights of the clouds, yet thou ſhalt be brought down. Climbing high hath been the cauſe of many a mans fall, it never protected any man from falling. Edom is threatned in the ſame Language by the Prophet Obadiah (verſ. 3, 4.) The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee, thou that dwelleſt in the clefts of the rocks, whoſe habitation is high, who ſaith in his heart, who ſhall bring me down to the ground? Though thou exalt thy ſelf as the Eagle, and though thou ſet thy neſt above the Stars, thence will I bring thee down, ſaith the Lord. Poſſibly there was no man on earth that durſt accept Edom's challenge, when he thus threw down his Gauntlet, and bid defiance in his heart to all the powers of the world; Who ſhall bring me down to the ground? But preſently the Lord accepted (or rather diſdained) the challenge, and undertook that vain boaſter upon higher terms then himſelf propoſed; not only though thou dwelleſt in the clefts of the rock, but, though thou ſet thy neſt (where no man ever ſet his neſt) above the ſtars, yet thence will I bring thee down. God is the high and lofty one (Iſa. 57. 15.) And therefore the loftineſs of man ſhall be bowed down, and the haughtineſs of men ſhall be made low (Iſa. 2. 17.) God is the high one, and he inhabiteth Eternity, that is, he is eternally high, his happineſs is as ſteady as it is lofty. But the higheſt of men (when they inhabit their higheſt longeſt) do but inhabit time; and moſt that are high, inhabit but a little time; yea, commonly they who are higheſt, inhabit the leaſt time. The triumphing of the wicked is ſhort. Men are high, but their time is in his hand who is higher then the higheſt; who is not only high as the heavens (which is the utmoſt ſtretch of mans ambition) but higher then the heavens; and not only higher then the heavens, but the maker of the heavens. And as it is the honour of God to exalt them who are low, ſo to abaſe thoſe who are exalted. He caſteth down the mighty from their ſeats, but exalteth the humble and meek. Many have ſtood faſter by caſting themſelves down before them; but none have ſtood by lifting up themſelves againſt him. As a godly man needeth not to fear, though he walk in the very valley of the ſhadow of death (Pſal. 23. 4.) So a wicked man hath cauſe enough to fear, and then to fear moſt, when he walketh upon the tops of the mountains, and ſets his foot upon the hills. This Zophar aſſures us in the next verſe.

Verſe 7. Yet ſhall he periſh for ever like his own dung.

Ὅταν δὲ δοκῇ πάνυ κατίσχειν, θεὸς αὐτὸν εἰς τέλος ἀπολεῖ. Sept.

The Septuagint renders theſe words paraphraſtically; For when he ſeemeth to be eſtabliſhed, then he ſhall periſh to the end. The word carrieth total periſhing, as well as the adjunct of time, for ever, ſpeaks it final. The word comes from a root ſignifying to overcome. For ever overcomes all. That which periſheth for ever, can never be recovered from periſhing. All ſhall be loſt, and it ſhall be alwayes loſt; his wound wound shall know of no healing, He shall perish, not to a not being, but from being what once he was. He shall neither be, nor be any more accounted, happy.

And as he shall perish utterly, so he shall perish basely, not only shall misery be upon him, but contempt; He shall perish

גלל Stercus à convolutione.

Like his own dung.] And because the word which we render dung, signifies to turn or roll together, in its original. Therefore some translate here, He shall perish, as soon as turned about. Mr. Broughton gives that sence, rendering thus; Turning a little he falls for ever. But our reading hath a fuller, though that also hath a true sence in it. He shall perish like his own dung. What is more base then dung? Because Idols or false Gods, are the basest and most abominable things in the world, they are therefore expressed by this word in the Hebrew; As if we should call them, Dung-gods, or stinking dunghil-gods, fit only to be thrown away, and shovell'd out of the world. For nothing makes a thing indeed so bad as an ambition that it should be accounted that which is best, when it hath not the least good in it. An Idol is accounted God, who is the highest and infinitely the most perfect being, when as in truth, it hath no being at all, or is as the Apostle speaketh, nothing in the world. And hence also hypocrisie is justly called the worst of sins, because it would be taken for grace, or reckoned for that which is the gathering together of all Graces, Holiness. Now as the Scripture calleth Idols dung, compared with God, or as being honoured (to whom they are so unlike) with the like priviledges of worship and dependence, as God is: so, all our real inherent righteousness, yea all things compared with Christ and our union with him upon Gospel Termes, are also called dung (Phil. 3.8,9.) When the Apostle would testifie with what holy indignation he rejected those things which were good in themselves, when joyned with, and taken in as a supplement to the pure worthiness of Christ, for our acceptance and Justification before God; he saith, I count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness. Thus any thing which either is in it self, or comparatively to somewhat else, most vile, is wrapt up in this Title, Dung. The Lord threatens the House of Jeroboam to bring evil upon it, and (saith the Lord) I will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone (1 King. 14. 10.) Dung is filthy and noysom, and because (as in homogeneal bodies) the least part of dung hath in it the nature of the whole, therefore when we take it away, we take it all away. A little of it offends and stinks, and therefore we cease not sweeping and removing it till it be all gone. The least of that which is naught is too much and too bad, unless it be all gone, we have the trouble of its all. The Lord hath a besom very fit for this dung (Isa. 14.23.) I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of hosts. And when the Lord would testifie with how much loathing he rejected the sacrifices and solemn services of the Jews, because of their hypocrisie and formality; he tells them by the Prophet (Mal. 3. 2.) I will spread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts, and one shall take you away with it. The best things corrupted or corruptly used, are worst. The ordinances of God are pure, but to the unbelieving all things are impure. God becomes dross, and holy things but dung to them who are so. Their services are reputed so, and their persons shall perish so, as the Psalmist speaks of the Midianites, of Sisera and of Jabin, who perished at Endor, and became as Dung for the earth (Psal. 83. 10.) Thus Zophar concludes of the wicked, specially including Job (whom some personate as sitting upon a dunghil) that he should perish for ever as dung, the vilest excrement, and which holds out yet more abhorrency in it.

Stercus hominis extremæ abjectionis & contemptus symbolum.

As his own dung.] The dung of some creatures is a perfume, and gives a delightful smell; the dung of many creatures is Medicinable and Physical; the dung of almost all creatures is some way or other profitable and useful; but the dung of man, or a mans own dung, is both useless and contemptible, loathsom and noysom. When railing Rabshakeh would express the utmost extremity of famine, to which Jerusalem should be reduced; he saith (2 Kings 18. 27.) Hath my Master sent me to thy Master, and to thee, hath he not sent me to the men which sit on the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you? Implying, that if they presently submitted not, they should quickly feel the utmost miseries of hunger and thirst, and be forced (which is an utter abomination to the apprehension of man) to take in what they had cast out, and be glad to stop the cry of their appetite with that, at which formerly they were wont to stop their noses. Ezekiel (to typifie a dreadful judgment) was commanded (among other things concurring in that woful scene) to bake his bread with dung that cometh out of man in their sight. And because this was very grievous to the Prophet, therefore though his using dung to bake bread with, could not be dispenced with, yet (by way of favour) the Lord condescended to a commutation of the dung (Ezek. 4. 15.) Then he said unto me, lo, I have given thee cows dung for mans dung, and thou shalt prepare thy bread therewith. Now if it were so loathsom to prepare or bake bread with mans dung, how loathsom is it to eat mans dung in stead of bread? All dung is vile, mans dung is vilest. To perish as dung, notes a very contemptible condition; but for a man to perish as his own dung, is to be cast into the lowest imaginable degree of contempt. He shall perish for ever as his own dung.

Hence observe, First, Wicked men shall perish.

They shall not only be troubled, but ruin'd. We (saith the Apostle of himself and fellow-Saints in suffering, 2 Cor. 4. 8, 9.) are troubled on every side, but not destroyed. Trouble so far as tryal and correction is the portion of the godly, but trouble to destruction and perdition, is the lot of the wicked.

Secondly note, Wicked men perish finally.

They perish for ever, yea they shall be for ever perishing. They seldom recover when they are down, or rise when they fall in this life; but none of them shall rise or recover in the next. The Church saith, Rejoyce not against me, O mine enemy, when I fall I shall rise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me (Mich. 7. 8.) But the wicked have cause to mourn when they fall, not only because they are fallen, but because they shall rise no more, and being once in that darkness, they shall never see light. Some have said (how uncomfortably and erroneously is no place here to discuss) that a godly man may fall from grace totally and finally; but that wicked men persevering in sin, shall fall so, both from their hopes and comforts, is assured us by the truth of God.

Thirdly observe, Wicked men shall perish disgracefully, as dung, as their own dung.

Their memory shall rot, and nothing shall remain of them but a stink or an unpleasing savour. It is recorded of King Jehoram (2 Chron. 21. 20.) that he died undesired. Many wicked men die not only undesired, but abhorred: As the Prophet Isaiah concludes (Chap. 66. 24.) They shall go forth and look upon the carkasses of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched, and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh. It is some abatement of misery to find pity, but to be at once destroyed and abhorred, or which is more, to be an abhorring, especially an abhorring to all flesh, is perfect misery. There are few men so bad but now they are esteemed by some; but ere long they shall be abhorred of all. And though all who see their misery shall abhor them, yet the perfection of their misery shall not be seen; as Zophar implieth in the latter part of this verse.

They which have seen him, shall say, Where is he?

To be seen may be taken two wayes.

First, Largely or vulgarly, for the bare beholding or view which we have of any thing or person.

Secondly, Strictly or specially, to see with reverence and respect, with much intention and observation; or to be seen as a wonder, with much astonishment and admiration. What is it that either ambition or hypocrisie desires so much as to be seen, and pointed at, there's the man? The Pharisees (who were hypocrites of the highest form) did all to be seen of men (Mat. 6. 5.) If the ambitious proud man act not in an open scene, and have not store of spectators, all his cost and projects miscarry and are lost. Who puts on his best cloaths, or makes himself very fine to stay at home, and sit in a corner? It satisfieth not a proud man, that he seeth himself (for though many a man is proud in his own eyes, yet he never thinks his own eyes enow to see him) nor is he pleased to stand in the view of a few, especially of his friends and daily familiars, he must set himself in the Sun or in the sight of all. He is never feasted, till he conceives the many feasting their eyes with seeing him. He would alwayes stand upon the stage, and be in pride (what the holy Apostles were made in scorn) a spectacle to the world, to Angels, and men. Some sinners are all for secrecy, such Job describeth (Chap. 24. 13, 17.) They are of those (the murderer, the theif, and the adulterer he means) that rebell against the light. The morning is to them as the shadow of death, if one know them, they are in the shadow of the terror of death. But there are another sort of sinners (the vain-glorious, the ambitious, the hypocrite I mean) who desire nothing more then worldly light. To lie in obscurity, is to them as the shadow of death, if one know them not (as to their appearances) if no man see them, they are in the shadow of the terror of death: Popularity is the Element in which this sort of men live; take them out of it, you take them out of the world. A hypocrite dies, unless (as Jehu desired) you come and see his zeal for the Lord of hoasts. A proud man is quite defunct and dis-spirited, unless you take notice of his port, and come see how large a sail his vessel beareth in the world, how he is attended, how sued and sought unto. In reference to such a sight as this, I suppose Zophar chiefly speaks here, They who have seen him, that is, who have seen and admired his splendor and greatness, even these shall say,

Pulchrum est spectari & digito monstrarier hic est.

Where is he?] He who was lately a mark of honour in every mans eye, he who was lately so great and spreading, that he over-shadowed all, and you could scarce see any man for him; is now diminished into an Atom, which no man can see; he is now to be numbred (though not in his nature, yet as to his former state) among invisibles: The man is not to be seen, they who have seen him shall say, Where is he? And they shall say this, first, in scorn; as those prophane enemies reproached holy David with his God, Saying daily (Psal. 42. 10.) where is now thy God? Thou didst not only promise but assure thy self of help from him, hast thou not boasted of him, as thy strength, thy buckler, thy high tower, and thy deliverer? Thus thou didst phansie thy god, and please thy self in these high Elogium's of him, and delightful dreams of deliverance by him; but where is he? As these (I say) spake prophanely and blasphemously of the great and faithful God, so we may speak truly and soberly of the greatest among faithless men, where are they? Or where is he? Where is that rich oppressor? Where is that ambitious Prince? Where is t'other cunning Polititian, what's become of them and their wealth, of them and their honour, of them and their wit and wisdom?

They shall say this, secondly, in wonder and astonishment, at the strangeness of his fall, and the totality of his destruction. Men shall be amazed to see him at such an ebb, at such a dead low water, who lately swell'd over all banks with such a spring-tide of prosperity. Men shall be amazed to see him groveling in a valley, who so lately walked upon the hills, and nested among the Stars. This shall make them say, Where is he? What, is he there? O thevanity of man! O the uncertainty of all worldly happiness! We find such queries, filled with this double mixture of scorn and wonder, propheſied concerning Babylon (Isa. 14. 4, 12, 16.) Thou shalt take up this proverb against the King of Babylon, and say, How hath the oppressor ceased? The golden City ceased? How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning? How art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the Nations? They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake Kingdoms; That made the world as a wilderness, and destroyed the Cities thereof? Is this the man that did these things? Is this he? How like a wilderness he looks himself? Behold how he shakes and trembles? Behold in how sordid and low a condition he now lies prostrate? He is now so little, that no man can tell what to make of him, or in what place he is to be found; he is now not only like a river running under ground, but quite exhaled and dried up, in so much that all may say, Where is he?

Hence observe, The sin of many men is visible, and may be read in the special judgments which are brought upon them.

The Lord is righteous in all his judgments, and he is (as we may say with reverence) even curious in some of them. What more exact and sutable, then to see vain-glory punished with obscurity; and that they should be No-body's in the world, who had an itch not only to be Some-body's (which hath a spice of ambition in it) but the Only-body's in the world? What more sutable then that they whose greatest desire was to be seen and taken notice of every where and by every one, should be reduced to such a little, to such a nothing, that no man can see where they are? Hypocrites do all to be seen, and anon themselves are not to be seen. Honour me before the people, say the sons of pride and ambition; and anon all the people see and scorn them, or scorn at them because they cannot be seen. They love the uppermost seats at the Table, and greetings in the Market-place; and anon themselves have not a Table to sit at, and are the cheapest ware, yea the trash and refuse of all the Market.

Now, besides the nature of worldly things and states in themselves (which are all subject to change, and the greater any worldly thing is, the more subject to change and to oppress it self with its own weight, as the very Heathens have often told us; I say, besides what is intrinsecal to the nature of worldly things) we must chiefly ascribe these eminent changes to the special providence of God, who being most high himself, and though invisible, yet only to be seen and adored in all we have or are, cannot bear it to see the creature set up himself to be seen. God would draw, (and it is his due) all eyes and hearts to himself, and therefore he will not long endure those who affect the drawing of mens eyes upon themselves. The eye of God will not spare those who either think highly of themselves, or love to be highly thought of by others. The Lord is pleased to set some of his servants not only high among men, but high in the hearts and thoughts of men; yet he is highly displeased when they or any in a vain ostentation make it their business to be so. And they who would thus be seen and exalted, shall see a day wherein (through their fall) God alone will be exalted. When any are designing to build high and reach Heaven with their Towers, (as they did, Gen. 11.) Then the Lord saith, Go to, let us go down and confound their language. Wo to high spirits and their high Towers when God saith, I will go down, for then both they and their Towers shall assuredly go down. No creature can stand when once God goes thus down. If God appear thus where is man? How and whither is he gone? Zophar seems to answer these questions in the next words.

Licet arma vacent cessentque doli, sidant ipso pondere magna, ceditq; oneri fortuna suo. Sen. in Agamem.

Vers. 8. He shall fly away as a dream, and shall not be found, yea he shall be chased away as a vision of the night.

This verse contains two similitudes, both which illustrate that one position which Zophar laid down in the two former verses, That wicked men shall perish for ever, and be seen no more.

He shall fly away.] To run is more then to go, and to fly is more then to run. Wings are too nimble for legs, and therefore in Scripture those things which move or pass from us with greatest celerity (though they have no wings, yet) are said to fly away. As for Ephraim (saith the Lord by the Prophet Hos. 9. 11.) their glory shall fly away like a bird, from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception; that is, whatsoever Ephraim most gloried in, and that was the multitude of their people (according to the Propheſie of Jacob (Gen. 48. 19.) and the Etymology of their name (Gen. 41. 52.) This glory shall depart suddenly, their numbers shall soon be lessened, either by the death of their children as soon as they are born, or by abortion in the womb as soon as they are formed, yea as soon as they are conceived. They who make such hast out of the world, that they die as soon as they began to live, may well be said to fly from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception. Thus saith

Zophar

Zophar of the wicked man, He ſhall flie away. And how ſhall he fly? As a bird? That's very ſwiftly; and the original word implies the flying of a bird, but the ſimilitude leads to that which will out-fly a bird, A dream or viſion of the night. A bird, even the King of birds an Eagle is but a ſlug or as a ſlow-worm to a dream. This wicked man ſhall fly away,

As a dream.] We may expound it two wayes; Firſt, Of the dream it ſelf. Secondly, Of the thing dreamed. Though ſometime both the dream and thing dreamed are fixed, the dream in the phanſie, and the thing dreamed in its fulfilling; yet many times the dream it ſelf is ſpeedily gone (as 'twas from Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 2. 5, 8, 10.) and the thing dreamed rarely comes. Yet Interpreters carry it rather to the matter or ſubject of the dream, then to the dream it ſelf. Many can retain the memory of a dream, but the matter dreamt of (which poſſibly pleaſed them much while they ſlept) is fled, or proves no ſuch thing when they awake. The Prophet deſcribes this elegantly and fully (Iſa. 29. 7, 8.) And the multitude of all the Nations that fight againſt Arial, even all of them that fight againſt her and her mountains, and that diſtreſs her, ſhall be as a dream of a night viſion. It ſhall even be as when a hungry man dreameth, and behold he eateth, but he awaketh and his ſoul is empty; or as when a thirſty man dreameth, and behold he drinketh, but he awaketh and he is faint, and his ſoul hath appetite, &c. I may add, a beggar dreameth of Gold, but he awaketh, and his purſe is empty: The priſoner dreameth of liberty, but he awaketh and findeth himſelf in irons. Such is the wicked man in his proſperity; his joy is but the joy of a dreamer, which quickly vaniſheth. Hence the Ancients phanſied that a dream had wings like a bird of the Air. The Pſalmiſt having learned in the Sanctuary, that the wicked are ſet in ſlippery places, and that as in a moment they are utterly conſumed with terrors, concludes in anſwer to Zophars alluſion (Pſa. 73. 20.) As a dream when one awaketh, ſo O Lord when thou awakeſt, thou ſhalt deſpiſe their image. When the Lord puts forth his power to the deſtruction of wicked men, then he is ſaid frequently in Scripture to awake. Now when the Lord is pleaſed thus to awake, he quickly awaketh wicked men out of their pleaſant waking dreams, and maketh them ſee that their felicity was but ſuppoſed and imaginary; for he ſhall deſpiſe their image, that is, he ſhall utterly ſpoil and make deſpicable, the painted pageant of their outward pomp. Which is elegantly called an Image, becauſe as an image it is a thing only to be looked upon, or for a ſhew. Though an image be made to the life, yet it hath no life in it; and ſo is valuable only for its appearance, not for its uſe. Such a dumb ſhew is the glitter and greatneſs of the world, and therefore rightly called, not only by the Holy Ghoſt, but by thoſe common Writers (who had any true judgment of the things of the world) an Image or an Idol; which alſo complies fully with the ſimilitude of a dream, in which the mind frames within it ſelf many images and repreſentations of things, which yet like Characters fairly drawn upon the ſand, are diſcompoſed and ſcattered by the next puff of wind. And becauſe an ordinary dream hath in it the leaſt, the ſhorteſt, and moſt uncertain enjoyment; therefore when we would ſhew that we never had the leaſt thought, or the leaſt to do about ſuch a thing we ſay proverbially, I did not ſo much as dream of it, or I had not ſo much as to do with it in a dream.

Antiqui ſomnia Deû fingebant volatilem & alitem. Bold.

Ne in ſomnio quidem, proverbialiter dicitur pro nulla ratione nullo tempore aliquid eſſe.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, The proſperity of a wicked man hath no real comfort in it.

There is no true ſatisfaction in a dream. And that which hath only a ſhadow or appearance of good in it, leaveth, when 'tis paſt and (as the Text ſpeaks) fled away, real impreſſions of evil. True ſorrows ſucceed imaginary joyes; and every man is made by ſo much the more unhappy, by how much he thought he had attained happineſs when indeed he had not. For, as thoſe things which have only an appearance of terror, are more terrible afar off then at hand; ſo thoſe things which have only an appearance of comfort, afflict more when they are afar off, then ever they comforted us when near at hand, and in a conceited poſſeſſion. As they who have been in a real poſſeſſion of good, ſo they who have had but an imagination of it, are more troubled when it is gone, then ever they ſhould have been, if they had never had it; diſappointments and failings of expectation about thoſe things which we hope to have, are as grievous, if not more grievous then the loſs of what we once really enjoyed. Now though a wicked man hath many good things while he proſpers, yet that which we properly call the dream of his proſperity, he never hath. For ſo much as he imagineth more in what he hath then is or can be in it (and ſo he alwayes doth) ſo much he dreameth.

Secondly note, The proſperity of a wicked man hath no tack or conſiſtence in it.

As a dream is not real, ſo it is not laſting. Many things which are real ſtay with us but a while, but thoſe things which are not real, cannot be ſaid to ſtay with us at all. I have from other Texts in this Book met with this point before, and therefore I ſhall not here ſtay upon it; yet there remains one clauſe more of this ſimilitude, which I ſhall only touch to heighten the intendment of it; He ſhall fly away as a dream,

And ſhall not be found.] When the Lord would ſhew how fully and clearly he pardoneth ſin, he ſaith (Jer. 50. 20.) In thoſe dayes, the iniquity of Judah ſhall be ſought for, and there ſhall be none; and the ſins of Judah, and they ſhall not be found; for I will pardon them whom I reſerve. Now as when a ſin is ſo pardoned that it cannot be found, it is an argument of the fulleſt pardon; ſo when a man or his proſperity is ſo fled and deſtroyed that neither can be fonnd, it is an argument of the fulleſt deſtruction. We may apply theſe words to both; the wicked man, his wealth and greatneſs ſhall ſo fly away, that neither of them ſhall be found. We may enquire as was ſaid in the former verſe; Where is he? And where is his? and find neither him nor his. What Peter ſaid to Simon Magus (Act. 8. 20.) is verified of him, his money, his honour is periſhed with him; or as another Scripture ſpeaketh, his memorial is periſhed with him. And as if Zophar thought it too little to give but one illuſtration of this truth, he confirms it by a ſecond, which is yet of near cognation with that already opened, and therefore I ſhall but name it.

Yea he ſhall be chaſed away as a viſion of the night.

He ſhall fly as a bird (ſaid Zophar before) here he ſhall be chaſed as a beaſt; the former word implieth a voluntary motion, this a violent. He ſhall be chaſed away,

As a viſion of the night.] There are two ſorts of viſions, as to the time of their appearance. Firſt, Viſions of the day; Secondly, Of the night. Viſions of the day fix more ſtrongly upon us, and are more permanent, viſions of the night paſs ſooner out of our memory, and are more tranſient. Therefore to ſhew the vaniſhing ſtate of the wicked man more fully he compares him to a viſion of the night. A viſion hath ſomewhat in it beyond ordinary dreams. All viſions are accompanied with the repreſentation of ſome outward ſhape to the eye or phanſie which many dreams have not; as was further ſhewed, Chap. 4. 13. to which place I refer the Reader, and ſhall proceed to the next verſe which bring up the concluſion of both theſe Alluſions.

Verſ. 9. The eye which ſaw him ſhall ſee him no more, neither ſhall his place any more behold him.

Theſe words Zophar takes out of Job's mouth (who ſpake the ſame thing in his own caſe, Chap. 7. 8, 10.) as if he would caſt him for a wicked man by his own confeſſion, and turn what he had ſaid upon himſelf. For the ſence of the Text the Reader may conſult that Chapter, there being nothing in theſe words of any ſpecial obſervation, beyond what was there offer'd.

The letter of the Hebrew may be thus rendred, The eye hath ſeen, and ſhall not add. 'Tis uſual in Scripture-phraſe, to ſay that he adds to do a thing, which doth that again which he hath done once or often before. And becauſe the Original leaves out the object of this ſight; therefore ſome refer it to the night viſion; tranſlating thus, The eye alſo which ſaw it (ſc. the viſion) ſhall ſee it no more. As if he had ſaid, the wicked man is like a night viſion, which being once ſeen diſappears and is ſeen no more. We fix it upon the wicked man himſelf. The eye which hath ſeen him ſhall ſee him no more. They who ſaw him

Oculus vidit & non addit. Heb.

Ut ſit Apodoſis præcedentis ſimilitudinis.

flouriſhing ſhall ſee him fading, till he fade quite out of ſight.

Neither ſhall his place any more behold him.

Which words may be expounded by a double figure, both frequently uſed in the holy Scriptures. Firſt, By an Enallage, His place ſhall not ſee him; that is, he ſhall not ſee his place, or he ſhall not be ſeen in his place: Secondly, By a Proſopopeia, by which thoſe acts which are proper to living creatures, or the perſon of a man, are aſcribed to things without life. The ſum and ſence of all returns to that which hath been already obſerved, the total ruine and extirpation of the wicked man, whether hypocrite or prophane.

VERS. 10, 11.

His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor, and his hands ſhall reſtore their goods.
His bones are full of the ſin of his youth, which ſhall lie down with him in the duſt.

IN the former words Zophar expreſſed the fleeting proſperity, the uncertain happineſs of hypocrites and wicked men; here he goeth on to enumerate ſome of thoſe evils which overwhelm wicked men, when once their worldly ſtate begins to totter, and the tide of their outward proſperity to turn: The firſt evil which he reckoneth up falls upon the children of the wicked man.

Verſ. 10. His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor.

Theſe words, in the face and letter of them, ſeem to ſpeak the ingenuity and piety of the wicked mans children; is it not a vertue to be courteous, civil and charitable to the poor, eſpecially to be ſo courteous and charitable, as not only to relieve, but even to ſeek to pleaſe the poor? Induſtriouſly applying themſelves to their ſupport and help, who were unable to help themſelves. This ſounds like a rare virtue; but if we examine the matter further, we ſhall ſee a very great curſe wrapt up as the portion of the children of the wicked man, in that they are here ſaid, To ſeek to pleaſe the poor.

רצה Favit, placuit, complacuit: propriè ſignificat gratum habere benevolentia proſequi.

They ſhall ſeek to pleaſe.] It is but one word in the Hebrew, and the root of it ſignifies to favour, to comply with, to pleaſe, or to be pleaſed with; it is often uſed in reference to the ſacrifices which were offered to God when he either did, or did not accept of them (Pſal. 51.19.) Then ſhalt thou be pleaſed with the ſacrifices of righteouſneſs: and in the negative (Mal. 1.8.) Offer them to your Governor, will he accept them, will he be pleaſed? Read, Levit. 19.7. & 22.25. The word is uſed in the ſame ſence (Job 33.26.) He ſhall pray to God, and he will be favourable to him; he will ſhew him favour by deliverance from his affliction. The old Counſellers ſpake this language to Rehoboam (2 Chron. 10. 7.) when he asked their advice how he ſhould anſwer the people that came to have the burden of their Taxes lightened, and their grievances redreſſed; they tell him, If thou ſpeakeſt favourably to this people (if thou be kind and pleaſe them as becomes a noble and gracious Prince) then they will be thy ſervants for ever. That Prince who hath got the love of his people, ſhall not want their ſervice: they will act obediently and ſerviceably unto thee, if thou doeſt but ſpeak favourably unto them; if thou doeſt but pleaſe them with good words, thou mayſt have thy pleaſure of them: So here, His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor; that is, they ſhall ambitiouſly, as it were, deſire the favour and friendſhip, the good will, and good word of the pooreſt; but how comes it to paſs, that theſe deſire to pleaſe the poor, and to have their favour? I anſwer, We are not to take it as if this ſprung from their charity or good nature, from the openneſs of their hearts, or compaſſion to the poor. Thus to pleaſe the poor is an act of Grace, at leaſt a very commendable work in us (as was intimated before) as well as it is a mercy to them. But when he ſaith, His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor, his meaning is, they ſhall be forced whether they will or no; they ſhall be neceſſitated to ſubmit to thoſe who are moſt neceſſitous.

דלים a דלל Hauſtus, exhauſtus fuit, viribus aut facultatibus.

The word which we render Poor, ſignifies thoſe that are ſpent and drawn dry; and it is ſometimes referred to the weakning of a man in his ſtrength, ſometimes to the weakning of his eſtate, when his purſe is drawn dry. Poor perſons are exhauſted perſons, ſuch whoſe veſſels are run down to the very lees; his children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe ſuch poor, the meaneſt of the poor.

Filii ejus attererentur egeſtate Vulg.

The Vulgar reads theſe words thus, his children ſhall be waſted with poverty; prodigality waſteth the eſtate, and poverty waſteth the perſon. The reaſon of this reading is becauſe that tranſlator derives the word which we render to pleaſe, from a root which ſignifies to break, to ſpoil, to daſh one againſt another; ſo it is uſed (Gen. 25.22.) The children ſtrugled in the womb, or daſhed one againſt another, as if they had been contending for place before they had a place in the open world. Thus here (ſaith he) his children ſhall be daſhed or waſted with poverty, or by the poor. When the poor riſe and rage, the rich cannot ſtand before them. The poor ſhall impoveriſh his children; the Septuagint renders it, The leſſer ones, the minors, perſons of the inferior and lower rank ſhall deſtroy his children. This tranſlation carrieth a clear ſence as to the mind of Zophar, and the ſcope of the place; it ſheweth the miſery of a wicked man to the full, to ſay, The poor ſhall deſtroy his children; the needy, the hungry ſhall devour and eat them up. There is a ſpecial finger of God in that, 'tis more then to ſay his children ſhall be deſtroyed by the mighty and ſtrong; as when a poor word pulleth down the ſtrength of ſin, and Satan, this advanceth the name of God. And the Apoſtle tells us, that the deſign of God, in ſending out his word in ſo mean a dreſs, and by ſuch powerleſs inſtruments, is, that his own power may be the more ſeen, and magnified. Thus when poor men ſubdue the mighty, the might and revenging power of God is in it. And as this ſpeaks the juſtice and power of God, ſo the miſery of thoſe men. To be oppreſſed by the poor is the foreſt oppreſſion (Prov. 2.3.) A poor man that oppreſſeth the poor, is like a ſweeping rain that leaveth no food.

Abſtractum pro concreto; egeſtate, i. e. per egenos, q. d. viliſſimi in illos ſævient & dominentur. Pined. Filios ejus diſperdant minores. Sept.

Filii ejus placebunt egem.

There is a ſecond reading which differs ſomewhat from ours; whereas we tranſlate, His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor, this ſaith, His children being poor ſhall pleaſe; that is, all ſhall be pleaſed to ſee his children poor; this hath a clear ſence, ſhewing the portion and puniſhment of a wicked man; every one ſhall like it well to ſee his children go a begging. The evil which befals them will be a kind of good to the beholders, and they will ſay, 'Tis well beſtowed. Yea, as ſome give the intendment of this rendring; The poor ſhall think themſelves well paid for all the wrong they have received, and the miſeries they have undergone, when they ſee his children in miſery. That curſe is threatned (Pſal. 109. 12.) Let there be none to extend mercy to him, neither let there be any to pity his fatherleſs children; while all is pulled from him, and they left not worth a groat, none ſhall think them worthy of compaſſion, or beſtow a tear upon them. It is a great miſery when none grieve to ſee us in miſery. If ſympathy be no eaſe to the afflicted, yet it is an honour to them.

Filii ejus placabunt mendicos vel paupe-res. Reg. Pag. Mont. Adeo miſeri erunt ut cogantur placare iratos, tenuis fortunæ homines. Vatabl. Erunt paupériores pauperibus & miſerrimis miſériores.

But I ſhall pitch upon our own reading; The children of wicked men ſhall be brought ſo low, that they ſhall be glad to ſeek the favour and good will of thoſe who are poor; or thus, His children ſhall ſeek to appeaſe the poor, even thoſe poor whom their father wronged and oppreſſed. They ſhall be conſtrained to flatter and fawn upon thoſe, over whom their father inſulted, and upon whom he trampled. Which ſuites well with the next clauſe; And his hands ſhall reſtore their goods. The ſum of all is this, His children ſhall be poorer then the pooreſt, and more miſerable then the moſt miſerable.

Hence obſerve, That Children of evil parents fare ill, and are ſcourged as a ſcourge to their parents.

This point hath riſen from former paſſages, I ſhall only take notice of one dreadful example out of Scripture to verifie and illuſtrate it. We read (2 Kings 2. 23, 24.) that more then forty children were deſtroyed by two ſhee-bears for mocking the Prophet Eliſha. Juſtine Martyr queries upon it; why did the Prophet call for revenge upon children, who hardly underſtand what they do, much leſs do any thing upon deſign? He anſwers, though we ſhould ſuppoſe they were children ſo young that they could not underſtand the evil of this action, yet having learned this from their parents, God ſent this judgment at once to puniſh

Voces ipſas pueri à parentibus edoctí erant, quare puerorum clade parentes flagellavit. Illud enim aſcende calve, proſcindendi per detractionem Eliæ aſſumptionis gratia proferebant. q. d. abripiat te quoq; ſpiritus ut iſtidem à te liberemur. Juſt. Mart. quæſt. 8.

the children and the parents; that they might be smitten in this destruction, which fell upon their children, because they had given their children no better instruction, or rather because they received such bad instruction from them. For doubtless they had learned that scoffing language from their Elders, at least by hearing them speak so, if not by teaching them to speak so; Go up thou bald head, go up thou bald head. Which scoff and reproach they cast upon Elisha in allusion to the rapture or carrying up of Eliah; as if they had said, Go thou up also to Heaven, even as Eliah did, that we may be rid of thee as well as we are of him. Children are apt to imitate their parents in every thing, but they are best at imitating those things which are worst. They quickly write after ill Copies. And they who imitate the moral evils of their Fathers, shall be sure to inherit their penal evils, and have new ones prepared for them.

Secondly observe, It is a great punishment upon parents, either to see their children come to misery in the world, or if misery come upon their children after themselves are gone out of the world.

Though Zophar here describes the misery of the wicked mans children, yet his scope is to set forth the misery of their parents, who are smitten upon their childrens backs. When Noah awoke from his Wine, and knew what his younger son had done unto him, as also how Cham saw his nakedness, and mocked, he (not out of a vain passion as some parents will when their children displease them, but) by divine inspiration, or being fill'd with a prophetick spirit, pronounceth a curse upon him; yet he put his sons name into the curse, not his: And he said, Cursed be Canaan (Gen. 9.24, 25.) why Canaan? It was Cham the father of Canaan that sinned, yet when Noah comes to curse, he doth not say, cursed be Cham, but Canaan; not that Canaan should be cursed, and his father escape, but it was to shew that Cham should certainly be under a curse; for seeing his posterity should be under a curse, then much more he; for as much as besides what fell upon him personally, the curse falling upon his posterity, was also his. When a curse falls upon children the father is cursed, as in the blessing of the children the father is blessed (Gen. 48. 15, 16.) Joseph brought his two sons Manasseth and Ephraim to his aged father Jacob, that they might receive his blessing, who laying his hands upon their heads, Blessed Joseph, and said, God before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day, The Angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads. Now as Jacob in blessing the children of Joseph, blessed Joseph himself; so Noah in cursing the children of Cham, cursed Cham himself. A very Heathen hath observed concerning the Tyrant Dyonisius, that though he escaped free and untoucht in person from the vengeance which his sacrilegious wickedness deserved; yet his sons were involved in so much misery, that in them he being past feeling suffered, and being dead paid dearly enough for his stoln dainties. The light of nature, as well as Scripture, tells us that evils falling on posterity are reckoned upon the parents score.

Valerius, lib. 1. cap. 2.

Thirdly observe, It is an eminent piece of divine justice when either they or the children of such as have afflicted others, and made them poor, are forced to sue, and submit to them, though poor, and to seek their favour.

This piece of divine retaliation the Prophet doth at once threaten, and promise; he threatens the enemy with it, and makes a promise of it to the children of God. (Isa. 60. 14.) The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee, and they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet, and they shall call thee the City of the Lord, the Zion of the holy one of Israel. This is the honour that shall be done to Zion, and the shame that shall fall on Zions enemies. The posterity of those that afflicted Zion shall come bending to her. We have a promise near that (Rev. 3. 9.) Behold, I will make them of the Synagogue of Satan (who are they? Such as oppose the Church of God, bitter yet secret enemies to Christ) which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; Behold, I will make them to come and worship at thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. Some will never know nor acknowledge, that God loveth his people, till themselves are put under their feet, and subdued to their power. 'Tis prophesied (Psal. 45. 15.) The rich among the people shall intreat thy favour. That Psalm holds out the effect of grace; but when the Lord saith in this prophesie, I will make them come, and worship at thy feet; it implies only an act of Justice. They who have scorned and trampled thee under their impure feet, shall fall down at thy feet and give thee reverence.

Fourthly observe, That man is brought to the lowest state of affliction who is put to seek the favour of those who are low; how poor are they who seek to please the poor?

It was the curse of Cham, A servant of servants shall he be; that is, he shall seek and submit to those who are meanest; to be a servant is to be in a mean low condition, and therefore Christ is said to humble himself when he took upon him the form of a servant. To be a servant of Rulers and great ones is to be lessened; but to be a servant of servants is to be as low as low can be. And therefore Abigail spake of her self at the lowest rate when David sent for her to be his wife and companion (1 Sam. 25. 41.) Behold let thy handmaid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my Lord. Solomon tells us (Prov. 29. 26.) That all men seek the Rulers favour. When men are in great place and power, no wonder to see all seek to them; but to see a great throng, at the door of a poor man, to see many wait and attend at his gates, putting up petitions to him, doth it not conclude that these suiters are brought to a very low conditon? yet God will make those who have been proud and lifted up, stoop thus low. I find Job aggravating his sorrow in a strain near this; for having said at the close of Chap. 29. I chose out their way, and sate chief, and dwelt as a King in the Army; but now (as he begins Chap. 30.) they that are younger then I have me in derision, whose fathers I would have disdained to have set with the dogs of my flock. As to be derided and despised by those that are our inferiors, is an affliction in a high condition; so much more to be forced to submit to them and seek their favour. And this not only because it is a disparagement to condescend to the pleasing of those who are poor, and inferior, but because it is so hard to please them. Usually the lower sort of people are people of a low spirit. And commonly they who are Masters of no estate, are Masters but of little reason or ingenuity; how rude a thing is the ragged multitude? How hard a task hath he, who must make it his business to please them? 'Tis no small skill and toil to please some Princes and rich ones; wise men have their humors sometimes, which will neither suffer them to be easily pacified towards those who have offended them, nor pleased with those that serve them. But how shall we please them at any time who seldom if at all know what will please themselves; and who through their want of breeding and discretion insult over and grow upon those most who seek most to please. Any man of a lowly mind may easily be pleased. But men of low estates are for the most part, hardest to be pleased. To please some is a pleasure; but he shall never want work or trouble, who is forced (as these in the Text) to please the poor.

And his hands shall restore their goods.

Some render, For his hands, &c. making this clause the reason of the former, why the wicked mans children should be in so low a condition as to please the poor, even because their father before his death restored all his ill gotten goods to the right owners, and so had nothing left in stock, wherewith to make provision for them his children.

To restore is a good work; shall the wicked man be in this good mind, to restore the goods which he hath taken from the poor? This were an act of Justice (a parte post) and an argument of his repentance for all his injustice which he had acted (a parte ante.) Restitution flowing from true repentance and godly sorrow is a work of Grace; but here is restitution without either repentance or sorrow, except because he could hold what he had gotten no longer. For

There is a twofold reſtitution.

Firſt, Willing, upon the touch of conſcience, that we have done wrong to others. So Zacheus (Luke 19. 8.) Behold half my goods I give to the poor, and if I wronged any man by forged cavilation, behold I reſtore four-fold.

Secondly, There is a forced reſtitution, when the providence of God, not any motion of repentance, maketh a man reſtore: when either juſtice or violence compels him to reſtore; that's the reſtoring here meant; he ſhall reſtore not what he would, but whether he would or no. He ſhall not reſtore from any trouble of his own mind at what he hath done, but becauſe troubled and queſtioned for what he hath done, or as (verſ. 20. of this Chapter ſpeaks) he ſhall vomit it up again. God will give him that, which will make him diſgorge himſelf of his ſweet morſels. Thus we muſt underſtand it of a violent act upon him, and not of any intendment by him. He hath no mind to do thoſe right whom he hath wronged, but they whom he hath wronged, call upon him for, and demand their right.

There are different readings. Some thus, His hands ſhall reſtore his iniquity; that is, the things which he hath gotten by iniquity; others thus, his hands ſhall reſtore his violence, or that which he hath gotten by violence. The ſin by which any thing is gotten is ſet as a mark upon it; that is elegantly and juſtly called violence, which hath been gotten violently. As that (with like elegancy and juſtice) may be called fraud, which was fraudulently gotten. A third ſaith, His hands ſhall reſtore his ſtrength; which may run in the ſame channel of interpretation; his ſtrength, that is, that which he by his ſtrength hath forcibly taken away from others. Laſtly, the Text is read, His hand ſhall reſtore his ſorrow; which may be explained thus, his hand, or his act (our hands being the chief inſtruments of action, are put for action) ſhall bring ſorrow upon him. He by his ſin ſhall bring upon himſelf that miſchief, or thoſe evils which he hath brought upon others; and this (not unfitly) may be called, the reſtoring of them. A wicked man draweth down miſery upon himſelf, and is the contriver of his own troubles. For as he that doth good to others, doth good to himſelf; ſo (by the rule of contraries) he that doth evil to another, doth worſe to himſelf; therefore their own hand may well be ſaid to reſtore or bring ſorrow and miſery upon themſelves, even that ſorrow and miſery, which themſelves had brought upon their brethren. Thus the Pſalmiſt concludes of ſuch a man (Pſal. 7. 16.) His miſchief ſhall come down upon his own head; His miſchief is the miſchief which he hath loved and acted. Sin is like a ſtone caſt againſt the wall, which bounds back; or rather like a ſtone caſt up to heaven, which falls on his head who caſt it up. One of the Ancients giveth this ſence of the words, He ſhall burn his fingers with what he hath done, or ſorrows ſhall burn his hands: he put out his hand to take away what belonged to others, but he burnt his fingers by it. Theſe various readings are occaſioned by going to a different root for the pedigree of this word; yet all fall into that general ſence which our tranſlation holds forth; His hands ſhall reſtore their goods which he hath taken by violence and ſtrength of hand, or by any ſecret evil and unlawful way. So Mr. Broughton, and his hands recompence his wrongs.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That as he who repents truly doth willingly reſtore what he hath unlawfully gotten, ſo God will force the impenitent oppreſſor to reſtore what he hath gotten whether he will or no.

As his oppreſſion was an act of violence upon others, ſo his reſtitution ſhall be an act of violence upon himſelf. One Lion makes another Lion give back his prey; all ſhall be reſtored, if not into that particular purſe from whence it was taken, yet into ſome common purſe.

Secondly, Note further, It is a vexation to a wicked man, to part with, and reſtore that which he hath unjuſtly gotten.

He doth it not as a duty, but as of neceſſity, as a thing which he cannot avoid. It is his puniſhment not to continue in his ſin; though indeed it is his greateſt puniſhment to continue in the love of his ſin, while he parts with, or rather is ſeparated from the matter of it. I ſhall not here further inſiſt upon the nature of this great duty, the reſtoring of what hath been unduly gotten. That will fall in more properly at verſ. 18. of this Chapter.

Only take notice of this one thing from the Text; which ſaith, His hands ſhall reſtore; as implying a puniſhment upon the wicked man, not only in this, that they who had been wronged by him ſhould recover their goods again from him, but that he ſhould be forced to return them with his own hands. As a godly man rejoyceth to do good with his own hand, ſo 'tis a pain to a wicked man to do it; he would willingly do every duty by proxy, or by his Deputy, eſpecially thoſe (and ſuch is reſtoring) which charge ſhame upon him for his former doings.

Verſ. 11. His bones are full of the ſin of his youth, which ſhall lie down with him in the duſt.

Zophar ſeems to retain the ſame order in ſetting down the puniſhment of a wicked man, which God did in the affliction of Job; God ſpoiled the outward eſtate of Job, firſt, deſtroying his Cattel and his Children, and then filled his body with diſeaſes. Thus the proſperous eſtate of a wicked man, is firſt broken; ſecondly, his Children ſhall be poorer then the poor; thirdly, his body, or bones are full of the ſins of his youth: The miſery of the wicked man is here ſet forth from the cauſe of it, The ſins of his youth. The alluſion ſtands thus, That look as a deboiſt young man by his wanton and riotous courſes gets bodily diſeaſes which ſoak into his bones, and ſuck out his marrow; ſo the judgments of God of any kind conſume and waſte all the comforts of a wicked man, which together with his wickedneſs, follow or rather drive him out of the world.

The original runs thus, His bones are full of his youth, or of his youths. The word is plural, and in propriety ſignifies to hide, or to lie hid. For youth or young men come not abroad to action, but are kept cloſe in their Fathers houſes, or in Schools of learning and education. When he ſaith, His bones are full of his youth, the meaning is, they are full of thoſe miſeries and ſorrows, which the ſins of his youth have deſerved and acquired. Upon this account ſome render the Text thus, His bones are full of his ſecrets, that is, of his ſecret ſins: Man commits many ſins in ſecret, the world takes no notice of them; and his ſin may lie long in ſecret, as ſecretly as the marrow lieth in his bones, though indeed it be not marrow but rottenneſs and poyſon in his bones. The word is uſed (Pſal. 90. 8.) where Moſes thus complaineth, Thou haſt ſet our iniquity before thee, and our ſecret ſins (or ſins of youth) in the light of thy countenance; that is, thou ſeemeſt to call us to an account for the ſins of our youth, or for our ſecret ſins; thoſe ſins which have lain in the dark, are not only brought to light, but ſet in the light, and that not only in the light of mans knowledge, but in the light of the knowledge of God. As it is our higheſt mercy when God lifts up the light of his countenance upon our perſons, ſo it is our ſaddeſt affliction, or a fore-runner of very ſad afflictions when God ſets our ſecret ſins, or the ſins of our youth in the light of his countenance; ſo that in either reading the meaning is the ſame.

Oſſa ejus repleburtur ipſius adoleſcentia, i.e. pœnis quas ſibi ſceleribus adoleſcentiæ acquiſivit.

Oſſa ejus repleta ſunt occultis. Mont.

There is a twofold expoſition of theſe words, ſome referring them to the puniſhment of this wicked man, others to a further deſcription of his ſin; we may take in both: Mr. Broughton's tranſlation gives this as a deſcription of the puniſhment of this wicked man; His bones ſhall feel full pay for his youths pranks; that is, he ſhall be fully puniſhed, being an old impenitent. Sin is often put in Scripture for puniſhment. But what are we to underſtand by theſe bones? His bones are full; bones in a ſtrict ſence are (as it were) the timbers and rafters of the body which maintain and keep up the whole fabrick. Here by bones we may underſtand, firſt, any thing that is ſtrong or firm. So, His bones are full of the ſins of his youth, is, his greateſt ſtrength hath fill of puniſhment; for the bones are the ſtrongeſt part of the body.

Secondly, By bones we may underſtand the whole outward man (Pſal. 141. 7.) Our bones lie ſcattered at the graves mouth, that is, our whole body is ready to drop into the grave; again, All my bones ſhall ſay, &c. (Pſal. 35. 10.) that is, my whole man, body and ſoul ſhall ſay. Sometimes the bones are put ſpecially for the ſoul (Pſal. 51. 8.) David prayeth, that God would reſtore to him the joy of his ſalvation, and that the bones which he had broken might rejoyce.

Where

Where by bones, he means the spirit, the inward part; for though the mind of a man be an immaterial substance, and hath no corporiety in it, yet the strength of a man is in his spirit; as the bones are the strength of the body, so the mind is the strength of the whole man. When a mans spirit is broken, we may well say, His bones are broken. In this sence we may understand that of David (Psal. 6. 2, 3.) Have mercy upon me, O Lord, for I am weak; O Lord, heal me, for my bones are vexed; that is, my spirit: so (Psal. 38. 3.) There is no soundness in my flesh, because of thine anger, neither is there any rest in my bones; that is, the outward, the inward man, my flesh and spirit, are unsound and restless, by reason of my sin; so that we are not to interpret bones, as opposed to flesh, but as they denote the best and strongest of man, body and soul; and then, to say, His bones are full of the sins of his youth, is as much as to say, his youthful sins draw trouble quite through him, they leave nothing of him untoucht or untainted. Thus we may expound the words, as implying the universality and extension of the wicked mans punishment, it shall soak into his very bones and marrow. When Satan desired leave of God to touch the skin and bones of Job, his meaning was, let me have liberty and commission to strike him quite through, without and within to afflict both soul and body. So that, this phrase, His bones are full of the sin of his youth, intimates him both sinful and miserable all over.

Hence observe, First, That youth is very subject to, and usually very full of sin.

Every young man commits sin enough to fill his bones when he is old; young men are so prone to sin, that Solomon tells us (Eccles. 10. 11.) Childhood and youth are vanity, and surely youth is more vain then childhood. Children are vain, because little and so unable to do good; youth is vain, because so able and active to do evil. The ancient Poet said of youth, it is like wax to evil, you may work it into the shape of any monster, and put what stamp you will upon it, as upon wax; yet this Text and the point now issued from it are specially intended of those young men, whose wayes have been foulest, and whose lives most vitious; such as act not only vainly, but reproachfully, or so as deserves reproach. What Ephraim (Jer. 31. 19.) being upon his repentance, spake of himself nationally taken, many have cause to say of themselves personally, I am ashamed because I have born the reproach of my youth; that is, now I feel, and am sensible of those sins of my youth, which expose me to reproach: 'Tis our duty to repent of our old-age sins, but repentance insisteth usually most upon the sins of youth; which argueth that those sins press most. David in special prayeth (Psalm 25. 7.) Remember not against me the sins of my youth, thereby implying the sinfulness and slipperiness of that age. The Apostles exhortation to Timothy and Titus, (1 Tim. 4. 12. Tit. 2. 15.) both young men, Let no man despise thy youth, warned them and teacheth us, that as unconverted young men usually run such courses, so converted young men are apt to fall into such acts of sin, as render them despicable; and the same Apostle fastens some sins in special upon youth, as haunting that age and state (2 Tim. 2. 22.) Fly youthful lusts; old age hath its proper lusts, and so hath youth.

Cereus in vitia flecti, monitoribus asper. Horat. in Arte Poet.

Habet pueritia innocentiam, senectus prudentiam, Adolescentia sola est invalida virtibus, infirma consiliis, vitio calens, &c. Ambros.

There are seven sorts of special sins: First, Such as appertain to, and most commonly shew themselves in this or that age of mans life. Secondly, There are sins more proper to some Countries and places. Thirdly, To the season or times wherein we live. Fourthly, There are special sins of mens special callings, dealings and tradings in the world. Fifthly, Of their conditions, whether poor or rich, great or small. Sixthly, There are special sins following the constitution of the body, whether Sanguine, Chollerick, Flegmatick, or Melancholly. And seventhly, There are special sins hanging about our relations. The bones of some are full of the sins of their relations and constitutions; the bones of others are full of the sins of their conditions and callings; the bones of not a few are full of the sins of the place, time, or age wherein they live; the bones of many are (as the bones of Job were supposed to be) full of that special age of their lives, their youth. The sins of their youth-age, are visible in their old-age, and the sins of their first age prove the sorrows of their last.

Secondly observe, Till sin be repented of, and pardoned, the punishment of it remains.

It is impossible to remove the punishment of sin from the guilt of it; and it is impossible to remove the guilt of it by any means, but the pardon of it. Bones full of sin, shall not want pain: cast out sin by repentance, take hold of pardon by believing, and then punishment is cast out, and must let go its hold.

Thirdly, As bones are taken extensively for the whole man;

Observe, That the punishment of sin reacheth as far as sin reacheth.

If sin get into your bones, punishment will follow; as there are sins of the flesh, and sins of the spirit, so punishments of the flesh, and punishments of the spirit; there is nothing so strong, so deep, or retired, but punishment will find it out: not only the skin and flesh, but the very bones shall smart, yea and the soul too. Wo to them (saith the Prophet, Isa. 29. 15.) that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark; for though their counsel be deep and their works in the dark, yet wrath will see its way to overtake them, and fill their hearts with wo. An impenitent person shall have punishment enough, he shall have his fill of it, till he vomit, yet he cannot vomit it up, or disburden his pained conscience. As he filleth up his measure of sin, so he shall have his measure of sorrow full; the time will come when all the ungodly shall be filled with the wrath and righteous judgments of God, as now they are filled with wrath and unrighteousness one against another. Saints have their fulness of grace in Christ, and having received grace, they fill up their measure, Till they come to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; and when once they have attained and are arrived to a fulness of Grace, they shall receive fulness of joy in glory. In thy presence is fulness of joy; all their bones shall then say, Who is a God like to thee? (Psal. 35. 10.) Not a bone but shall have its fill of joy; every mans bones shall be full at last, Good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over shall God give into their bosoms. The bones of the Godly shall be filled with the goodness of God, and the bones of the wicked shall be filled with that wrath of God which their own sins have deserved. His bones are full of the sins of his youth.

Again, These words may be expounded as a description of a wicked mans perseverance in sin. The sins which he had in his youth, he hath them still, he hath not lost nor put off one of them. Those filthy lusts which like so many running sores corrupted the forepart of his life, corrupt the latter, running still upon him, and ceasing not.

Hence note, All the sins of youth remain in and upon the oldest of impenitent persons.

Old impenitents keep a stock or treasure of their youth-sins, laid up not only in their bones, but in their hearts; as God maketh them to possess the sins of their youth in punishments; so they possess the sins of their youth, if not in practice, yet in affection and pleasing contemplation. Suppose a wicked man grown old and unable by weakness to act sin, yet the habit of sin is not weakned; his sin remains as it were young and green, though he be a sinner of a hundred years old; though he be spent and dry, yet his sins are vivid, warm, vigorous and youthful; Time weakens sinners, but it cannot weaken sin; though the marrow be spent out of his bones, yet his spirit is as full of sin as ever his bones were of marrow. Man is a vessel strongly sented and seasoned with sin by nature, and till the grace of God cleanse, and regenerate him, the taste of the cask never goeth out. And as this is true in reference to the pollution and filthiness of sin, so also in reference to the guilt of it. A wicked mans bones are full of that also. Sin unpardoned and unmortified, carries death and wrath in it continually. He is said, To treasure up wrath against the day of wrath (Rom. 2. 5.) Why so? because he treasureth up guilt; every sin bringeth in some further guilt, and the guilt of them all, as well as the filth of them all, as also that wrath which is due due to them all, is treasured up with them; no guilt can be got off from any sin, but by the blood of Christ, and that through the free mercy of God; now this man hath nothing to do with the blood of Christ, and therefore he hath nothing to do with mercy.

Further observe, It is the greatest misery to persevere in sin.

As sin brings all misery with it, so it self is all misery. No evil can be added to a sinner so bad as his sin is. As grace and holiness considered abstractly are a greater good, then all outward, yea then many inward blessings and rewards. So sin considered abstractly, is a greater evil then all outward, yea then all those inward curses which are only punishments (*Rev.*22.11.) He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still; that is, let him sin his bones full and his belly full. (Ezek.24.13.) Because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged; that is, I have given thee means to purge thee, but thou wast not purged; thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more; as if he had said, thy remaining sin shall be thy punishment, and that shall draw down punishments in kind, as the Prophet adds, Till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee. Sin is a bad bed-fellow, the company of it for a night is burdensom and dangerous, then how bad a grave-fellow is sin; yet so it will be to all impenitents, as Zophar further expresseth himself at the close of the verse.

Which shall lie down with him in the dust.

Or, sleep with him when he lieth down; that is, when he dieth, and goeth to the dust, his sin shall live and go with him. It is an Hyperbolical strain, noting that sin will never leave the wicked man neither alive nor dead, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. It filled his bones while he lived, and it will fill his grave when he dieth: unless a man die to sin before he dieth, his sin will live with him when he is dead. The damned in Hell have all their sins about them; when they shall have been in Hell millions of years, yet then their bones will be full of sin; that which was the cause of their being cast to Hell, shall be their everlasting companion there. For as (*Rev.*14.13.) Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, they rest from their labours, and their works follow them. When a believer dieth, his righteousness and holiness die not: the good works which he hath done, die not, but lie down in the dust with him; they perfume his memory on earth, and they go up with him into Heaven. So we may say, Wo to those that die out of the Lord, from henceforth, and for ever, for they shall not rest from their labours, and all their sins, their works of wickedness shall follow them: How glad would sinners be if they might go to the dust of the grave, yea to the flames of Hell, and sin not go with them. Hell is as full of sin as it is of misery; and if it were not full of sin, the misery would be but little in comparison of what it is; there is weeping in Hell, but neither repenting, nor pardoning; man cannot repent there, and God will not pardon there. And hence it is, that though there be continual weeping in Hell, yet there can be no removing of sin out of Hell; repentance and pardon remove sin, but weeping alone will not do it; therefore Hell is full of sin, though full of tears. So we may apply that of Moses (*Deut.*29. 20.) The Lord will not spare him, but then the anger of the Lord, and his jealousie shall smoak against that man, and all the curses that are written in this book shall lie upon him. The curse shall lie upon him as long as sin lieth upon him. When Christ spake the utmost evil of the sins of the Jewes, and the utmost of their misery in their refusal of himself who came to take away sin; he tells them, I go my way and ye shall seek me, and shall die in your sins (John 8.21.) Ye shall seek me, but it will be too late; it is a misery to live in sin, but O what a misery is it to die in sin? They that die in sin shall rise in sin, and stand before Christ in sin, and how shall they be able to stand before him? The Prophet (*Ezek.*24.6.) compareth the people of the Jews, to a pot whose scum is in it; we may say of all impenitent unbelievers, their scum boils in; sometimes the scum appears to them, and they may be thinking to take it off, but the scum boils in again, and there it remains for ever. This is the Hell of Hell, sin goeth down to the dust with sinners. We may say (in allusion to that of Peter, Act.12.) that every wicked man sleeps in the grave, as he in the prison, bound not only with two, but with a thousand chains. The sins of believers go to the grave before them. Sin dieth while they live, and they have a life which shall never die. The sins of unbelievers go to the grave with them; while they live they are dead in sin, and by sin they fall into that death from which there is no recovery unto life. Some sinners are long lived in the body, and they have a hope of dying to sin, when they are ready to die in nature; as if they carried repentance in their sleeves, and could command it when they pleased: No man hath repentance in his power; and the longer any man lives in sin, the more power sin gets to hinder repentance. And they seldom receive this power of repentance from God, who have long abused his patience; therefore die they shall in their sins. When they cease to live here, sin shall not, nor shall they ever want a will to sin, when they are in that state, wherein (properly) they cannot sin.

Hæc dicendi formula significat non prius cessare peccare quam vivere impium.

VERS. 12, 13, 14.

Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue:
Though he spare it, and forsake it not, but keep it still within his mouth:
Yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of Asps within him.

JOB proceeds to describe the miseries of a wicked man, most of all of an Hypocrite, by an elegant metaphor or similitude taken from meats, which are sweet in the taste, but deadly in the effect; and however the passages of this similitude are somewhat obscure and dark, yet the sence and meaning of it is plain and easie; in which we may take notice in general, that a wicked man is compared to a glutton, eating greedily and vomiting filthily. More distinctly,

Introducit impium tanquam gulosũ atq; voracẽ, & quæ summa aviditate voravit, paulo post sædissimè vomentem. Pined.

First, That sin is compared to meat.

Secondly, That the actings of sin are compared to the eating, chewing, and digesting of meat.

Thirdly, The delight that goeth with sin, is compared to the sweetness, and well tastedness of meat.

Fourthly, Continuance in sin, to the holding of meat under the tongue, and keeping it in the mouth.

Fifthly, The punishment of sin is compared to poyson mingled with meat, or to poysonous meat.

Sixthly, The effects which follow this punishment are compared to torments vexing the bowels, and to vomiting.

Seventhly, The issue of all is compared to death; He shall suck the poyson of Aspes; The Vipers tongue shall slay him.

Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth.

The word which we translate Wickedness, signifies any kind of sin, yet some restrain it here to that particular sin of the mouth, or tongue, evil speaking, oaths, and blasphemy; these are sweet and pleasant to prophane mouths, as the praise of God is to the mouths of the righteous. There is a second restriction of this wickedness (which is more proper) to the sins of oppression and fraudulent gain (*Gen.*6.7.) God saw the wickedness of man that it was great in the earth; but what was the special wickedness of that age? The holy Story tells us it was an age of violence, there were mighty men, who were mighty oppressors of men: They are called, men of renown, at *vers.*4. whose chief was Nimrod, A mighty hunter before the Lord. We may take wickedness in the Text both wayes; first, in the General; secondly, in Particular; for the sin of violence, and wrongfully obtaining the things of this life, which is specified at *vers.*15. He hath swallowed down riches.

Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth.] Sweetness is the suitableness of the humour which is in meat and drink, to the salival humour in the mouth or palate; sweetness to the taste is nothing but this suitableness; wickedness is suitable to corrupt nature, therefore wickedness is sweet, and hath a pleasant taste, as those meats which are most congruous to appetite; Though it be sweet in his mouth; the mouth is added, because sensation is made there; for when the meat is passed from the mouth to the stomach stomach, there's no more taste of it, unless it send back fumes to the mouth, which are usually unpleasant and distastful. The sensitive part of the soul which is affected with the pleasure of sin, is here compared to the mouth; so that, whatsoever internal delight a man takes in the committing of any iniquity, or in any iniquity committed, that is the sweetness of it in his mouth; while the inferior faculties of the soul are pleased and take contentment in sin, they may be said to taste it.

Optimè per os significatur voluntas inferior & appetitus sensitivus. Tunc peccator versat malum in ore suo dum in concupiscentia & voluntate inferiori illo delectatur. Bold.

From the similitude in general,

Observe, That, sin is as food to the soul of a natural or carnal man.

Yea it is as food to the natural part of a regenerate man; sin is the food of lust. The first sin was committed by eating the forbidden fruit, and now every sin is the eating of some forbidden fruit. Sin is meat and drink to the sinner, not only in reference to the effect, because it brings in the bread which some men eat: as Solomon speaks (Prov. 4. 17.) They eat the bread of wickedness, and drink the wine of violence; that is, they eat and drink that bread and wine, which hath been gotten by wickedness and violence; now (I say) sin is food not only in the effect and consequence of it, but also (as obedience and doing the will of God is to godly men) in the very act; the adopted sons of God say (in their proportion) as Christ said, John 4. This is my meat and drink to do the will of my Father which is in Heaven: Wicked men say also 'tis their meat and drink to do the will of Satan, who is indeed their Father: Nature is as hungry and thirsty after wickedness, as grace is after righteousness. As there is a hunger and thirst after spirituals, so after carnals: The natural man is not content, till he have his fill of them. The reason why there is so much labouring pains taken to commit sin, is, because there is a hungring pain provoking to it; we say of natural hunger, It breaks through stone walls; that is, it stirs us to overcome all difficulties, and labour hard for the supply of nature. Many have so much bread at home, that it is a trouble to them because they are no more hungry, who yet are so hungry after sin, that it puts them to a continual trouble of breaking through stone walls, the greatest difficulties to come at it. The Philosopher calls those who are given up to pleasure, who (as the Apostle speaks of the wanton widdow, 1 Tim. 6. 5.) Live in pleasure, as if that were their only element, or who account it their blessedness to do so; he (I say) calls such, The most importunate men; I conceive he meaneth that such are most eager in pursuing all those means which may satisfie them with pleasures, and are restless till they have attained them. A poor man pinched with want is an importunate man, you cannot get him from your doors; he is hungry, hunger putteth him on; so it is with every man whose heart is set upon sin, he is an importunate man, nothing can stop him; though he meet with denials, yet he reneweth his motion; though he meet with rebukes, yet he is not answered; yea though he meet with blows, yet he will on again. Hunger must get somewhat, or loose all; and many of these hungry ones for the getting of a poor somewhat (a dry crust, a bare bone, indeed a very nothing) have lost all.

Qui beatitudinem in voluptate collocant sunt homines importunissimi. Arist. l. 1. Eth. cap. 5.

Secondly observe, There is a present sweetness in sin.

Sin is not only meat, but sweet meat; not only bread, but pleasant bread to an evil heart. Daniel for some weeks eat no pleasant bread; he eat bread to keep life and soul together, but he forbare feasting or good chear. Sin is a feast to a carnal man, it is his good chear, yea it is dainties to him. We have that word (Psal. 141. 4.) where David speaks of wicked men, Incline not my heart to any evil thing with them that practise wicked works, and let me not eat of their dainties. These dainties may be expounded (as was said before) either for the prosperity that comes in by wicked practices (some by wicked wayes get not onely ordinary food but dainties) or those dainties are sin it self, they feasted themselves in doing evil; Lord let me not eat of their dainties, if that be their food I had rather starve then eat with them (Prov. 9. 17.) Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant: Stollen water and secret bread are sinful practices, which are so much the more sweet, by how much they are more secret. This bread of secresies is pleasant bread and sweet meats to a wanton spirit; as the Word of God and holy actings are pleasant bread to a gracious heart. David saith of the Commandments of God, They are sweeter to me then honey, and the honey comb (Psal. 119. 103.) What was thus sweet to him? Not the bare word of the commandment only, but obedience to the Commandment, or these Commandments requiring his obedience; the word of the Commandment is sweet to none but such as do and obey it; the word is gall and wormwood to a disobedient spirit, but to a David it is sweeter then the honey, yea then the sweetest part of honey; if there be any part of the honey that is more honey then other, thy Commandments are that part; therefore he adds, They are sweeter then the honey, or the honey comb. But what sweetness is there in the honey comb? We are not to take the comb alone without the honey; but when he saith, sweeter then the honey comb, the meaning is, sweeter then the honey that cometh immediately out of the comb: That honey which drops from the comb without pressing is counted purest and sweetest. There is not only meat and drink to believers in obedience, but honey and sweetness; and such likewise for a while is wickedness to the wicked.

Thirdly, From the intendment or scope of the similitude, which is to shew what putteth carnal men upon the pursuit of sin, what it is that provokes them to it; no man acts but he seeth some reason for it: a beast is provoked with somewhat proportionable to a reason, though he hath no reason. Zophar giveth us this sweetness as a reason why a wicked man pursues and is so greedy of his sin.

Hence observe, It is some expected sweetness in sin, which provokes to the acting of it.

When Satan tempts to sin, he playes the Orator, and presents some consideration of profit, or pleasure, or credit. In the Parable of the Sower it is said the Word of God was choaked (Luke 8. 14.) The thorny ground received the Word, but it was choaked; by what? There are three choakers mentioned in that place; first, The cares of the world; secondly, The deceitfulness of riches; thirdly, Pleasure: These choak the Word; that is, they will not suffer a man to practice, and submit to the Word. Pleasure is one of the three choakers, if not the first and chiefest of the three; pleasure quickens the principles of sin, and hightens desire after it. When the woman was tempted to eat the forbidden fruit, the Text saith (Gen. 3. 6.) The woman saw that the tree was good for food, and pleasant to the eye, a tree to be desired to make one wise, and then she did eat; here were all sorts of motives, external, internal, sensitive, and intellective, to draw her to that sin. And thus the Lord deals with his people, to draw them on in the wayes of holiness; he tells them of the sweetness, pleasantness, peaceableness of his wayes (Prov. 3. 17.) The wayes of wisdom are peace, all her paths are pleasantness: Thus he allures the soul to walk in his wayes. The wayes of wisdom considered abstractly, are not only the best, and most honourable wayes, but 'tis sweetest also to walk in them; yet because the Lord knows we are flesh as well as spirit, therefore he tells us of sweetness and pleasantness, of peace and profit, of gold and silver to be had in his wayes; and indeed he infinitely out-bids sin and Satan for our service. Godliness is profitable for all things. First seek the Kingdom of Heaven and the righteousness thereof, and all other things shall be added to you. What can we desire more then that by which we may obtain all our desires. As God himself is not any particular, but an universal good; so godliness is not profitable only for this or that particular good thing, but for all good things. Thus God is pleased to invite us to himself, and into his wayes by the sweet bait of benefits; and thus Satan provokes into the ways of sin, he perswades, and many find by experience, that wickedness is sweet in the mouth. The carnal man is led by sense, and liveth like a beast; Satan handles and fits him accordingly. He feeds him with sweet meats; But though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, Voluptatum blanditiis delimiti, ad ea gerenda omnia quæ prava sunt impellimur. Arist. l. 2. Eth. cap. 3.

Voluptas bonum pecoris est. Sen. Epist. 92.

Though he hide it under his tongue.

These words carry on the former allusion to eating. For as a glutton that gets a sweet morsel between his teeth, is loath loath to loose the delightsom taste of it, and therefore doth not hastily chew and swallow it down, but eats it by degrees; such men of appetite and palat-pleasures will say to others when they are eating, Think what you are doing, taste pleasure. Thus doth the carnal man deal with his sin, he chews it long, he keepeth it close, and hideth it under his tongue.

כחד Est negare, negando celare dissimulare.

The word in the Hebrew which we translate to hide, is more proper to the work of the tongue in speaking then in eating; and may imply thus much, that as a man who hath got a sweet morsel, hides it under his tongue in eating, so a carnal heart that lives and delights in sin, useth his tongue to hide or keep it from revealing. The word signifies hiding with the Tongue. The heart is the shop wherein, and the tongue the instrument whereby those artificial coverings and vails are made, by which the wicked man hideth his sin. The tongue hideth both what we are, and what we have done, as Rachel hid her fathers images, or as Rahab hid the spies who came to Jericho, lest the searchers should have found them. Thus the carnal man covers his sin with his tongue. And this is the right character or property of a false hearted hypocrite; so that Zophar struck at Job secretly, as a hypocrite, while he spake of hiding sin under the tongue.

הכחיר Est plerumq; de medio tollere aquarium abolere, ut dicere possis non fuisse. Teget peccatum sermone ficto & fraudis pleno. His verbis figurat hypocritam & obliquè Jobum perstringit. Jun.

Hence observe, The wicked mans tongue is the cover of his sin.

The tongue of a sincere heart is the discoverer of his sin. For as with the heart man believeth, so with the tongue or mouth confession is made (of our faith in God) unto Salvation (Rom. 10. 10.) as also of our sins against God unto pardon and remission. I said I will confess my sin unto the Lord (saith repenting David, Psal. 32. 5.) and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Now as the tongue of a good man discovers his sin, so the tongue of a wicked man hides it; and that three wayes.

First, By plain denying that he hath done it.

Secondly, By dissembling or concealing what he hath done.

Thirdly, And most ordinarily by excusing it; though he cannot conceal the evil done, much less deny it, yet he hath somewhat to say, to render the doing of it less culpable then others conceive it. To which purpose the heart promps the tongue with a thousand excuses; the hypocrite is elegantly said to hide his sin under his tongue, because by carnal reasonings and fair words he makes so many excuses for it; he guilds over the rotten post, and paints the filthy sepulchre of his heart and life with oyly words, dropt from a dissembling tongue. A deceitful heart and a dissembling tongue cannot live asunder. As it is the glory of God to conceal a thing, that is, a sinful thing (Prov. 25. 2.) So it is the glory of God for man to declare his sin. Thus Joshua exhorts Achan, My son give glory to God, and make confession (Josh. 7. 19.) But it is the shame of a man, and a dishonour to God for a man to hide his sin. Many hide their sins for shame, but that hiding will produce greater shame. He that covers his sin shall not prosper, (Prov. 28. 13.) If we do not cover our sins God will. Our covering of our own sins by excusing them, brings the curse, (few sins hurt except we cover them) but if God cover them by forgiving them, we are blessed (Psal. 32. 1.) Blessed is he whose sin is covered. God covers the sin of a believing and repenting soul; but the impenitent unbeliever covers his own. He hideth it under his tongue.

Again, We find the word used to another sence in Scripture, which may further clear up this point; to hide under the tongue, is sometimes to meditate, or revolve a thing in the mind; for when once a word is spoken, it is out of the tongues keeping, but while we meditate we keep it under the tongue (Cant. 4. 11.) Thy lips, O my Spouse, drop as the honey comb; honey and milk are under thy tongue; honey and milk, that is, honey words, sweet pleasant words are under thy tongue; my Spouse is now meditating and considering how to speak sweat and pleasant words to her beloved, these words are not yet upon but under her tongue. That of David (Psal. 66. 17.) reacheth this sence; we translate, I cried to him with my mouth, and he was extolled with my tongue: The Text may be rendred thus, I cryed to him with my mouth, and his exaltation was under my tongue; that is, I was considering and meditating how I might lift up and exalt the name of God, and make his praise glorious; holy thoughts are said to be under the tongue when we are in a preparation to bring them forth; and so are unholy thoughts (Psal. 10. 7.) His mouth is full of cursing, and deceit, and fraud; under his tongue is mischief and vanity; that is, he speaketh evil and is devising how to speak worse; his words are wicked, and his devisings are more wicked. Thus as in reference both to good and evil, there is a hiding under the tongue to prepare for speaking; so there is a hiding under the tongue that the thing may be concealed, and not at all spoken; that's the hypocrites art; for as prophane persons care not to proclaim their sins, they make their tongues the trumpet of their vanity, they declare their sins as Sodom; so the hypocrite is busie to make shadows for his sin, and to gloss it over with fair pretences, lest it come to light.

Cum enim dulce fuerit in ore ejus malum abscondet illud sub lingua sua. Vulg. Si dulcescebat in ore ejus malitia mentiebatur eam sub lingua sua, i.e. mentiendo tegebat. Tharg. Philoxenus.

Again, We may expound this latter banch as an effect of the former, which also comes up clearly to the point in hand. Because wickedness was sweet in his mouth, he will therefore hide it under his tongue: To which sence the Chaldee Paraphrast speaketh, If wickedness was sweet in his mouth, he did bely it, or hide it by a lye, under his tongue. As lying is it self a great sin, and every sin hath somewhat in it of a lye, so many sins are concealed by lying. That sweetness which causeth a wicked man to commit it, causeth him also to retain and hold it, or as the Text speaks, To hide it under his tongue. We read of an antient Glutton who wished his neck were as long as a Cranes, that so he might keep the taste of his meat; there is such sweetness upon the taste of a natural man in sinning, that he wisheth he might retain it long upon his spirit, and is troubled if he quickly part with the pleasure of his dainty morsels.

Zophar hath not yet done with these suppositions, we have had two of his Thoughts already; Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue, he is not satisfied in these two; but gives us two more in the next verse, one expressly, the other by implication.

Vers. 13. Though he spare it, and forsake it not, but keep it still within his mouth.

This verse is of the same tendency with the former, which hath been already opened. In vers. 14. we have the application of the similitude, whereof this is but a further illustration; Though he spare it, and forsake it not, but keep it still, &c. This expression for the manner of it, suits that which we read (Joh. 1. 20.) where John being asked whether he was the Christ, he confessed and denied not, but confessed I am not the Christ; so 'tis here said of a wicked man, he spares his sin, and forsakes it not, but keeps it, to shew the intentness of his spirit upon his sin, he will by no means let it go.

Parcius agitur peccato non statim transmittens aut deglutiens elabi sinens. Pined.

The words still pursue the metaphor of eating, for a glutenous person (as was intimated before) eats for eating sake, or for pleasure, not for strength to glorifie God, which should be the end of our eating. Now though this moral glutton be not sparing at all in the eating of his meat, that is, in the committing of his sin; he eats, that is, sins heartily, yet he spares his meat while he is eating it, he will not eat it hastily, but with a kind of deliberation; as some eat their meat so greedily that they scarce taste what they eat, so others eat it so slowly, as if they thought they could never taste it enough, or have enough of it. 'Tis thus also in sinning; some sin in a kind of hurry or suddain passion, they scarce know what they do, while they are doing evil; or they are to any sinful occasion what a carnal heart is to any good occasion or to any occasion of doing good, glad when they are rid of it; but others sin lingringly, and think they never stay long enough upon it; they sin feelingly and desire (as that Roman Tyrant desired men should die) to feel themselves sin. Such as these (I conceive, according to Zophar's scope and mind) may be said to spare their sin. They do not spare to commit it, but they commit it sparingly, as being loath it should spend off their hands too fast. The Original word here used, signifies to spare, as we ought out of pity and compassion; hence not sparing and not pitying are put together, Ezek. 5. 11. it signifies also to spare what should not be spared; to spare not only that which is in our our power, but which is our duty to deſtroy. Some ſpare being moved with a fooliſh pity, and others with covetouſneſs. We may find a mixture of both in Saul's ſparing the Amalekites. His Commiſſion ran ſtrictly, thus (1 Sam. 15. 3.) Go and ſmite Amaleck and utterly deſtroy all that they have, ſpare them not; but verſ. 15. Saul being queſtioned by Samuel, anſwers, The people ſpared the beſt of the ſheep, &c. they would ſpare Amaleck, when God had ſaid, ſpare them not. Saul pretends devotion, it was for ſacrifice; but indeed 'twas pride or covetouſneſs, or at the beſt a groundleſs pity which prevailed with him. In this ſence we are to take it here: Though he be very tender towards ſin, as if he were afraid the winds ſhould blow upon it; though he deal gently with it, as David gave inſtructions to his Army concerning Abſalom; though (according to the Alluſion in the Text) he ſpare it as a pleaſant morſel, which he would be alwayes eating and never eat up, yet it will be bitter to him, &c.

חמל Dimittere relinquere intactum. Propitius esse.

Hence obſerve, A carnal man is merciful to his ſin, and favourable to his luſts.

The Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 8. 32.) God ſpared not his Son; that is, he did not deal with him in a way of pity when he was in the place of ſinners, but delivered him up (namely to death) for us all; but ſinful hearts are kind and pitiful to their ſins; though they hear that ſin will damn them, yet they will not give their ſins an ill word, much leſs a wound; they ſpare them, as Saul ſpared Agag and the fat cattle. Sin is ſpared three waves, Firſt, When not confeſſed; we bring ſin forth to tryal and arraignment by confeſſion.

Secondly, When we do not paſs ſentence upon it, nor judge our ſelves for it; ſo the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 11. 31.) If we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged of the Lord. We ſhould ſay this ſin deſerves death, and we deſerve to die for it, elſe we ſpare it.

Thirdly, We ſpare ſin when it is not actually put to death, though we condemn it; ſome confeſs the iniquity of their ſin, who yet will not part with it. And ſin like a malefactor caſt by the ſentence of the Judge crieth for mercy, or as a priſoner of war for quarter, when the life of it is in danger; ſin ſaith as thoſe ten men to Iſhmael, (Jerem. 41. 8.) Slay us not; Why? What hath ſin to ſay for it ſelf why it ſhould not dye? Uſually it ſaith as thoſe men in the Prophet did, We have treaſures hid in the field. Spare us ſay covetouſneſs and oppreſſion, deceit and fraud, We have treaſures and riches for you; ſpare me ſaith uncleanneſs, I have pleaſures and delights for you; ſpare me ſaith another, I am but a little one; ſpare me, this is the firſt time, I have been committed but once, or twice; ſpare us cry they all, we are your kindred, fleſh of your fleſh, and bone of your bone. Thus ſin cryeth for ſparing, and the Hypocrite is very willing to hear this cry, and ſpare his ſin, though he thereby wound and be cruel to his own ſoul. Therefore what Solomon ſaith concerning the chaſtning of a child, I ſay, concerning the deſtroying of thy ſin, ſpare not for its crying. Fooliſh pity deſtroyeth that which is more worth then a City, yea then a world, the pretious ſoul; we may ſay (as it was to Ahab in that caſe when he ſpared Benadab and let him go (1 King. 20. 40.) Becauſe thou haſt let a luſt go which God hath appointed to deſtruction, therefore thy life ſhall go for its life; take heed of ſparing, and pitying your ſins, as you bear any pity to your own ſouls, or deſire that God ſhould ſpare and pity them; if we ſpare our ſins, God will not ſpare us, Deut. 29. 20. Remember God hath appointed every luſt to death, if it hath not a death of mortification here, you ſhall have a death of miſery hereafter; if you ſpare what God hath appointed to death, your lives ſhall go for its life. There is a ſparing cruelty as well as a puniſhing mercy; it is mercy to puniſh ſome perſons, and cruelty to ſpare others; but it is mercy to puniſh all ſins, and cruelty to ſpare ſo much as any one; we may call every ſin as Chriſt doth Judas the traytor, A ſon of perdition, either actively or paſſively; if it be not deſtroyed, it will deſtroy. Sin is actively a deſtroyer, therefore let it be deſtroyed; if you deal not with it as a ſon of perdition, it will be your perdition.

Crudelitas parcens, miſericordia puniens.

Further, The Septuagint read it with a negation, Though he ſpare it not; their negative hath the ſame ſence with our affirmative. Though he ſpare it not; that is (in alluſion to meats) though he eats freely of it; we ordinarily ſay when friends are at Table with us, Pray do not ſpare; ſo when a wicked man gets ſin under his tongue, he eats like a glutton, greedily, ſo the Apoſtle deſcribes ſuch, Being paſt feeling they commit iniquity with greedineſs; They eat and ſpare not, they do not ſin with moderation or temperately, but are like Epicures in ſinning, they ſin inſatiably. But becauſe the negative is not in the Hebrew reading I ſhall not ſtay upon it; yet (I ſay) the general ſcope and intendment of both readings is the ſame. For if he ſpareth it, it is becauſe he loves it, and if he ſpare it not, it is becauſe he liketh it. Though he ſpare it,

Quamvis non parcet ei. Sept. i.e. non parcè & moderate, aget cum iniquitate, ſed ardenter & inſatiabiliter.

And forſake it not.] In purſuance of the ſimilitude of eating, the ſenſe is made out thus; Though he ſpare it, as loath to let it go down into his ſtomach, for when once the meat is down, 'tis loſt to the pallate, therefore he parts with it by leiſure. But more properly to forſake, notes theſe two things; Firſt, To withdraw outward communion; Secondly, To withdraw inward affection; the withdrawing of communion is the effect of withdrawing affection; for if once a man withdraw his heart from another, he quickly withdraws his preſence. Every where in Scripture carnal men are ſaid to forſake God both wayes (Jer. 2. 13.) This people hath committed two great evils, they have forſaken me the fountain of living waters; that is, I have no more of their company, they do not love me, therefore they deſire not communion with me. The word is uſed by David the figure of Chriſt (Pſal. 22. 2.) as alſo by Chriſt himſelf when he hung upon the Croſs, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? The Lord at that time did interclude or ſtop his preſence from his Son, he did not manifeſt himſelf to him; there was as it were, for that preſent, a kind of intermiſſion of the ſenſible actings of the love of God towards him: Chriſt being thus denied that communion which he had alwayes enjoyed with the Father, cryed out, Why haſt thou forſaken me? But as the wicked man ſpares his ſin, and will not hurt it, ſo he would never be out of its company, much leſs forſake it utterly.

עזב Dereliquit.

Hence note, That, a wicked man is very faithful and conſtant to his ſin.

Solomon gives that rule of love, Thy friend and thy fathers friend forſake not (Prov. 27. 10.) a man ſhould not forſake his own friend, much leſs ſhould he forſake his fathers friend, or a friend to the family: Thus ſaith a carnal heart, this ſin is my friend, and he looks upon it as his fathers friend; his ſin poſſibly is as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, (1 Pet. 1. 20.) A vain converſation received by tradition from his fathers; ſin deſcends as well as land. Many inherit vanity, and hold it (as it were) by their fathers copy. And if at any time a Hypocrite forſakes the practice of ſin, yet he doth not forſake his reſpect to it; he may leave off the exerciſe, yet not withdraw his love. Many conſiderations may break off his actions, but nothing breaks off his affections. A wicked man ſaith to his ſin, as God to Joſhua, I will not leave thee nor forſake thee.

The laſt clauſe of this verſe, is but the affirmative of this negative.

Nulli manifeſtabit, & propter hoc nullus ei peccatum occultum diſſuadebit nec aliquid remedium adhibebit, quod adhibetur peccata ſua confitentibus. Aquin.

But keep it ſtill within his mouth. Never confeſſing it.

Solomon puts thoſe two together, He that confeſſeth and forſaketh his ſin ſhall have mercy. He that hath no mind to forſake his ſin, hath no deſire to confeſs it. He that would keep it in his hands, would alſo keep it within his mouth. But what gets he by this concealment? Let the next verſe inform us, which contains the Application of the whole ſimilitude.

Verſ. 14. Yet his meat in his bowels is turned.

Though wickedneſs be ſweet, though he hide it under his tongue; though he ſpare it, &c. Suppoſe all this, that a wicked man hath been very tender of his ſin, and nouriſhed it long, what's the benefit? Where's the fruit? Yet his meat in his bowels is turned; that is, the many diſhes and courſes that he hath had in this banquet of ſin, all this meat in his bowels is turned; how turned? Every thing that is eaten, if there be a digeſtion made of it, if the ſtomach can

can do its work, is turned. Naturalists call it Assimilation, when the meat eaten is changed or turned into the substance of the body. But here the meaning is, It is turned into another thing then what it was when it was in his mouth; that is, he finds the effect of it in his stomack to be such as if the meat were not that which he had eaten, it doth not turn to nourishment, but to poyson, as the next clause expresseth; His meat in his bowels is turned.

It is the gall of Asps within him.

So Mr. Broughton reads it, His meat in his bowels turneth into the gall of Asps within him; We say, His meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of Asps within him; The sence is the same; For this turning of his meat in his bowels (as our translation expresseth it) is not the turning of it to nourishment, but into poyson.

Fel serpentũ portione maximè copiosum. Plin.

The gall of some creatures is poyson, yea the most deadly poyson; Aristotle, Pliny, and others that write the History of Animals, tell us that the gall of Serpents is full of poyson, and they have exceeding copious galls; yet there is a further elegancy in the words, suiting a secret in nature: it was sweet in the mouth, now it is gall. Those meats which are sweetest to the taste turne most to bitterness and choller in the stomack. So there is a gradual continuance of the metaphor, sweetness turns to bitterness, and not only to bitterness, but to gall; and not onely to gall, but to the gall of Asps, which is not onely bitter, but poysonous. There is a bitterness that hath wholesomeness in it, and is medicinable, there is also a poysonous bitterness. The wild bitter Gourd put into the pot was deadly; but of all poysonous bitternesses, the bitterness and poyson of Asps is most deadly. There are many remedies or antidotes against Poyson. And there may be remedies found against the poysonous bitings of all Serpents, except that of the Asp, which as the ancients affirm, killeth in four hours, notwithstanding the use and application of the most soveraign remedies; insomuch, that the biting of the Asp is gone into a proverb, for An immedicable evil.

Quæ dulcia sunt facilè in bilem & amaritudinem convertuntur. Gal.

Adversus viperarum omniumq; serpentum morsus remedium invenitur, aspide una excepta. Ælian.

Morsus aspidis proverbio dicitur de malo immedicabili.

There is another consideration in the gall of Asps, that carrieth the point more fully; for though that gall be death, and death without remedy, yet it causeth a kinde of a pleasant death. The biting of the Asp stupifies, and then kills. The person bitten falls presently into a sleep, which is a short death, and then dies, which is a long sleep. Though the person bitten be in present danger of death, yet the pains of death are not felt. It is storied of Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt, that when she saw her Husband Mark Anthony ruined and dead, having laid violent hands upon himself; when she saw all lost, the City of Alexandria (where she thought to secure her self) taken, and her power utterly broken; she so much disdained to be a captive, and to be brought in triumph to Rome, that out of the greatness of her spirit, she chose to put Asps to her breasts and die; which she did upon this natural consideration, not onely because she knew they were present death, but because they would put her to least pain, or make her altogether senseless of pain in dying.

Aspidis veneno afflicti somno in mortem solvuntur.

Hence observe, First, That how pleasant soever sin is in the acting, it is bitter in the end.

Holiness is sweet in the way and end too: wickedness is sometimes sweet in the way, but alwayes bitter in the end. Solomon gives this in plain assertions (Prov. 20.17.) The bread of deceit is sweet to a man, but afterward his mouth shall be filled with gravel. And again (Prov. 23.31, 32.) Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it gives its colour in the cup; that is, take heed lest the sight of it ensnare thee to intemperance and drunkenness. Some love to see their wine sparkle and brisk in a clear christal glass, it pleaseth them to look upon it, and see it as well as to taste and drink it. But look not on it, so as to lust after it; why? At the last it bites like a Serpent. The bread of deceit is gravel afterwards, and the sweet wine bites at last; 'tis pleasant to look to in the cup, and pleasant to the taste, but if you be overtaken with it, your bowels will find it turned to the gall of Asps. The Prophet (Jer. 2.19.) saith to such, Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backslidings shall reprove thee. But is sin it self a corrector and a reprover of sinners? The acts of sin do neither correct nor reprove, but the effects of it do both; so the Prophet seemeth to expound himself in the latter part of the same verse, Know therefore and see (namely, by the event) that it is an evil thing and a bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God; that is, thy forsaking of God (such is every turning aside to, and embracing of sin) will procure thee much evil, and provoke God to make thy life bitter unto thee. We may say to every one who delights in sin, as the charge is given against Babylon (Rev. 18.7.) How much thou hast glorified thy self, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow shall be given to thee; how much of the one, so much of the other. Thy sin was sweet in thy mouth, but it will be turned to the gall of Asps in thy bowels.

Secondly note, Sin hath not only bitterness in it, but there is death in it.

All gall is bitter, but the gall of Asps is deadly. Sin is a deadly poyson; for though it be pleasing a while, yet 'tis killing in the end. The bitterness that floweth from sin, is the bitterness of death: If after it hath yielded us a little unsatisfying pleasure, it should only conclude in pain, this might not only discredit it in our opinion, but provoke us to cast it for ever both out of our affection and practice; how then should our hearts be turned from it, and rise against it, when we are assured that this pain is as a poyson, and that this poyson is unto death?

Thirdly note, Though sin be deadly, yet it leaves the sinner senseless of death.

Sin destroyes, and the man knows not what hurts him. Every Evil is by so much the worse, by how much it leaves us less apprehensive of the evil it doth us. Those wounds may be most mortal, of which at present we feel least pain.

Lastly observe, It is a dangerous thing to keep sins counsel, or to conceal it.

The wages of sin (committed) is death. But the wages of sin concealed, is the worst of that death. Every sin acted, hath in it the seed of death, but sin hidden under the tongue, and kept in the mouth, by denying, dissembling, or excusing it, is a deadly poyson. The Gospel hath a remedy against that death which is deserved by the acting of sin; but it hath no Antidote against the poyson of a studied and continued concealment of sin; 'Tis the gall of Asps within him.

VERS. 15, 16, 17.

He hath swallowed down riches, and he shall vomit them up again, God shall cast them out of his belly.
He shall suck the poyson of Asps, the Vipers tongue shall slay him.
He shall not see the rivers, the floods, the brooks of honey and butter.

THE similitude between sin in general, and pleasant, though poysonous meat, which Zophar pursued in the three former verses, is here contracted to a particular sin, the unjust obtaining of riches, the root of which is covetousness, or the love of money, and that the root of all evil (1 Tim. 6. 10. 'Tis the root of all moral evil or sin, and so the root of all penal evil or trouble, whether to our selves or others, as appears in this context.

He hath swallowed down riches.

The word implieth eating with insatiable appetite; every man that eateth must also swallow, but a glutton is rather a swallower then an eater. He throws his meat whole down his throat, and eats (as we say) without chewing. The rod of Moses (turned into a Serpent) swallowed up the rods of the Egyptian-sorcerers. The word is often applied to expres oppression (Psal. 35.25.) Let them not say in their hearts, ah, so would we have it, let them not say we have swallowed him up; that is, we have made clear riddance of him, he is now a gone man for ever. The ravenous rage of the adversary is described in this language (Psal. 124.3.) If it had not been the Lord who was on our side, when men rose up against us (that is, if we had one less then God, though the greatest of creatures on our side) then they had swallowed us up quick. The Church is comforted (Isa.

(Isa. 49. 19.) with an assurance of freedom from such swallowers; They that swallowed thee up are far away; thou hadst those by thee that were ready to devour thee (as it is said Revel. 12. 4. The Dragon stood before the woman for to devour her child as soon as it was born) But thy oppressors shall be sent packing; they who heretofore swallowed thee, shall not stay within sight of thee. Thy swallowers are swallowed up. The metaphor is taken from wild beasts which greedily devour their prey; He hath swallowed down riches.

Est Metaphora ducta ab immanibus bestiis, quæ alias feras uno ictu deglutiunt.

Hence observe, Riches are a sweet morsel to a worldly minded man.

And he is usually most pleased with those riches which he gets by unrighteousness. What he tears from the backs, and pulls out of the bellies of others, delight his back and belly most. Some care not so much for the riches they get, as for the sinful wayes by which they get them; It contents them more to over-reach another, then to enrich themselves. Augustine confesseth of himself, that in his youth he would steal fruit, not because he cared for the fruit, but because he delighted to steal; so we may say of these, it is the wrong, not the gain which pleaseth them: Stollen waters are sweet, and this makes them sweetest to some, that they are stollen. 'Tis rare, if he that swalloweth down riches, be not a swallower of the poor, if his particular rising and filling, be not the falling and emptying of many.

Appositè significatur per verbum devorare, quod est sine delectu quicquid objicitur, sive salubre sit, sive nocivum carpere.

Again, When a man swallows and devours greedily, he doth not well discern what he eats, he takes little notice whether his meat be wholsome and fit for nourishment or no, he eats without due respect either of quantity or quality. This sets forth the temper of worldly men, and gives us a second Observation.

Greedy covetous persons care not what it is they have, so they may have it.

A just man considers every penny he gets, and asks his own heart, how he came by it; A righteous man is as careful what money he puts in his purse, as a temperate man is what meat he puts into his stomach: He examines his title and enquires whether it be his right or no. He would not enjoy any thing without the good will of God, or with the wrong of his brother. The way in which he gains is more considerable to him, then the gain; and whence he hath it, then what he hath. But all is fish that comes to a wicked mans net, though it prove a Serpent not a fish; as appears by the issue of his greedy getting, or swallowing, laid down in the latter part of the verse; He hath swallowed down riches, and,

He shall vomit them up again.

קיא Vomuit, evomuit, propriè de cibis.

What we eat moderately, we digest, concoct, and turn to good bloud for the support of nature; but if a man eats intemperately, his stomach turns and he falls a vomiting; A glutton gets more meat down then others, but he gets less strength by it. The Pelican hath his name in Hebrew from this root, because having eaten Shell-fishes he vomiteth them out again as soon as they are a little boiled in his craw, that he may pick out the fish and leave the shell. The Prophet (Jer. 25. 27.) tells us of a vomit which the wrath of God gives a sinful people; Therefore thou shalt say to them, thus saith the Lord of hosts the God of Israel, drink ye, and be drunken, and spue and fall, and rise no more. What was it they should drink? it was a cup of judgment, they had been drinking liberally the cup of sin before, now God puts a cup of sorrow and bloud to their mouths, and they must drink till they spued, and stagger till they fell, and so fall as not to rise any more. And as wicked men shall drink the cup of wrath till they spue, so themselves shall at last be spued out. They are to a Land as unwholsome meat is to the stomach, the burden of it. Hear that severe warning to the people of Israel (Lev. 18. 26, 28.) Ye shall therefore keep my Statutes and my Judgements, and shall not commit any of these abominations, neither any of your own Nation, nor any stranger that sojourneth among you, that the Land spue not you out also, when ye defile it, as it spued out the nations that were before you.

קאה Pelicanus à vomitu; conchas enim à calore ventris coctas rursus evomit ut testis rejectis esculenta seligat. Plin. lib. 10. cap. 30.

But whence is it that the wicked man vomiteth up what he hath devoured? To clear that, consider there are four sorts of vomiting.

First, From the fulness of the stomach, by excessive eating and drinking.

Secondly, From the filthiness or foulness of the stomach, by eating and drinking those things which are unwholesome and unclean.

Thirdly, From the weakness of the stomach; Some are not able to retain, no not a little, and that good food, because their stomachs are ill.

Fourthly, From a secret antipathy, or averseness to that which is eaten. The vomit in the Text is not caused any of these wayes. A wicked man doth not vomit from the averseness of his spirit to his sin, he liketh it well enough; nor from the weakness of his spirit to sin, he is mighty to act and digest the worst of sins; nor doth he vomit because of the foulness of his spirit, that never troubles him; the fouler any mans spirit is, the more retentive it is of sin: nor doth it proceed from his fulness of sin; for how full soever he is, yet he is hungry still, and saith not, it is enough.

Whence is it then that he vomiteth?

I answer, By distinguishing again of a two-fold vomiting.

First, Free and natural: Secondly, Forced or artificial.

Some vomit alone, others have vomits given them; some vomit by the strength of medicines, others vomit by the strength of nature. The wicked man doth not vomit up his ill-gotten goods naturally, but violently; not freely but forcedly. The gain of fraud and oppression may be said to be vomited up two wayes.

First, By repentance; Secondly, by expence.

Repentance in general is called by the ancients, The vomit of the soul, and that is applicable to any special repentance. And repentance upon this special account of unlawful gain (as also repentance upon what account soever may be) is two-fold.

First, There is a repentance rising from godly sorrow; thus repenting Zacheus vomited up his ill-gotten goods. For when Christ was come to his house, Zacheus stood and said unto the Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken any thing from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold (Luk. 19. 8.) This gracious vomit his soul received by the power of the Spirit of God, provoking him to repentance; and happy it is for them that have swallowed down riches unduly, if the Lord give them this repentance of godly sorrow to vomit them back again.

Secondly, There is a vomiting of riches by a repentance which ariseth only from worldly sorrow and gripes of conscience, not from any change of the mind; so Judas having swallowed down the thirty pieces of silver (the price of bloud) for betraying Christ, vomited them up by repentance, such as it was, a repentance proceeding from worldly not from Godly sorrow (Matth. 27. 4.) Then Judas when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought the thirty pieces of silver to the chief Priests, and Elders, and cast them down, and departed, and went and hanged himself. The Apostle (2 Cor. 7.) saith that worldly sorrow causeth death. Sin causeth eternal death, and this kind of sorrow for sin causeth temporal death; some pine and languish to death in worldly sorrow, and others (like Judas) by the violence of it thrust themselves violently out of the world, and die. Meer vexation enforceth some wicked men to be honest, and to cast up what they have unjustly gotten; 'Tis not the tenderness of their consciences, but the sickness and pain of them, which puts them upon this. As some men say the reason why they refuse or abstain from eating such or such meat, is not because they do not love it, but because it doth not love them; it makes them sick if they eat it: So the reason why some vomit up the unrighteous mammon which they have swallowed, is not because they do not love it, but because it doth not love them, but hath made them sick. The Whale that swallowed up Jonah, found him hard meat, his stomack could not digest that morsel, he must vomit him up for his own ease. Riches in the belly of many an oppressor is like Jonah in the Whales belly, a trouble to his stomach, and he must vomit them up again, not out of love to righteousness, or hatred of sin, not out of pity to the oppressed, or charity to the poor, but for his own present ease, and yet, if go no further, how poor an ease will that prove? Such as this described is all the vomiting here meant. And in this Zophar doth not set forth the duty, but the punishment of a wicked man; For though it be better to restore any way, then to retain that which is ill gotten, yet a man is not made better who restoreth only thus. And we may say of such a repentance, it is to be repented of.

Again; As there is a vomitting of riches by repentance, so secondly, by expence. And this also is twofold.

First, By a willing expence; some men swallow down riches for prodigality; they spend profusely, what they get sinfully. What one lust brings in, another lust carrieth out. One lust is as a rake to gather, and another as a fork to scatter. A conjunction of both these may be found in the same man. For there are two sorts of covetous men. Some get meerly to hoard and lay up, their nest is full of eggs, and yet they can scarce afford themselves one, but sit brooding upon them to hatch more. A second sort of covetous persons extort and get meerly to spend; By covetous practices, they make provision for wanton and luxurious practices. These vomit what they have swallowed, by a willing expence.

Secondly, Others vomit what they have swallowed by forced expence; such troubles and Law-suits are brought upon them, that what they have violently or fraudulently gotten from others, they are compelled to refund, and pay back again; as appears yet more clearly in the next clause.

God shall cast them out of his belly.] These words shew what kind of vomit his is. The word in the Hebrew signifies both God and an Angel. The Septuagint render, An Angel shall cast them out of his belly; And their Interpreters expound it of an evil Angel, who is the tormenter of this evil man; we refer it to God, as being a part of his divine justice, thus to repay unjust men; God shall cast them out of his belly. An oppressour having gotten riches into his possession hopes to hold them; But God sends out his writ of ejectment, and turneth him out of their possession, or them out of his. The word which we render cast out, carrieth a double, and that a contrary signification; it signifies both to possess, and to dispossess, to put in, and to thrust out of an inheritance. So the word is used (Josh. 23. 5.) in reference to the Canaanites, whom God dispossessed; And the Lord your God, he shall drive them out of your sight, and ye shall possess their Land. In both parts of which verse we find the same word. As God cast the Canaanites out of their Land to place his own people there, according to his promise; so God will cast all ill-gotten riches, those riches especially, out of the belly of wicked men, which they have gotten from his people, contrary to his command. (Zach. 9. 4.) Behold the Lord will cast her out (that is, Tyrus) why will the Lord cast out Tyrus? Tyre was a merchandizing City, an oppressing City; Tyrus heaped up silver as the dust, and fine gold as the mire of the streets, verse. 3. yet the Lord will make her poor, and naked, he will level her heaps of gold and silver, and smite her power in the Sea. The lot of proud oppressing Tyrus and her riches shall be the lot of every oppressour and his riches, God shall cast them

Out of his belly.] That is, out of his barns and gardners, out of his chests and store-houses; wheresoever he hath hoarded his riches, that's his belly, and from thence they shall be cast.

Hence observe, First, The worldly man is unwilling to part with his worldly portion.

Here's an act of violence, God casts them out of his belly, and pulls them from him by an act of justice, as he had unjustly pulled them from others. He can let his bloud go as easily as his wealth.

Secondly, Note, Man may get, but he cannot hold what he hath got unjustly.

What God giveth he will maintain, what is sinfully swallowed down shall be vomitted up with shame. I will punish Bell in Babylon, and I will bring forth out of his mouth what he hath swallowed up (Jer. 51. 44.) What was that? he had swallowed the riches of the Nations round about him. Thus the Prophet Isaiah represents him boasting (Chap. 10. 13, 14.) I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treasures, my hand hath found as a nest the riches of the people. But as some Princes politickly connive at their Subjects oppressions, till they get great estates, and then squeese all into their own coffers, and leave them naked; so the great God permits some to fill themselves like spunges, by sucking in the substance of others unrighteously, and then makes them return and render it back by his righteous judgments, Whatsoever is gotten by sin, is not given by God; and whatsoever is not given by God, he threatens to take away: they who are rich, but not by the blessing of God, shall be made poor by the curse of God; therefore the Psalmist concludes, A little that the righteous man hath, is better then the great riches of the ungodly; This betterness, ariseth two wayes: First, From the excellency of the conveyance, and that in three respects; First, the little which the righteous man hath, comes to him by the purchase of Christ. Secondly, He hath it by the promise. Thirdly, by the special providence and fatherly goodness of God to him. A little thus conveyed to the righteous man is better then the greatest riches of many ungodly. Secondly, It is better in reference to the sureness of it: there is a flaw in the title of wicked men, and therefore God will one time or other question their possession. The righteous hold their temporals as well as their spirituals (in capite) by Christ their head; and hence it is that they have a sure estate in and hold of both.

This should admonish all to consider what riches they swallow down; He that hath got much honestly, may spoil all by mingling a little with it dishonestly gotten. For as he that hath eaten divers wholesome meats, may yet lose the comfort and nourishment of them, by feeding upon some one unwholesome dish; and by this means undergoes a double evil; First, in eating that which is bad, and then in vomiting up good and bad together; so 'tis in this case. Christ useth an argument (warning men to take heed of unjust gain) much higher then this (Mat. 16. 26.) What shall it profit a man if he gets the whole world, and loseth his own soul? Put all unjust gain into the ballance with your soul, and see what you get by that, while you lose this? The argument in the Text is also very pressing; What shall it profit a man to get a mass of worldly riches unjustly, and by that gain lose all that he hath justly gotten. If injurious dealing did indammage our estates only, what advantage is there in dealing injuriously? But Zophar urgeth yet further in the next verse.

Verse. 16. He shall suck the poyson of Asps.

These words may be taken either as a distinct similitude, or as the conclusion of the former. There is a double reading; some thus; He shall suck the head of the Asp. The same word in the Hebrew signifies the head and poyson, because the head in those venomous Serpents holds the poyson. We translate this word (Rosh) Gall. (Deut. 29. 18.) Lest there be among you a root that beareth Gall (or a head) and Wormwood. That is, lest any person among you should commit this wickedness (namely, Idolatry, or the worship of strange gods) which will be as distastful to God as Gall is to man, and which will be bitter as Gall to the man who commits it, whether we consider the bitterness of repentance if it be pardoned, or the bitterness of pain, if he (persisting in it impenitently) be punished. And hence this very word is used again to signifie Gall, in that Prophetick Psalm of the passion and pains of Christ for our sins (Psal. 69. 21.) They gave me also gall for my meat. Any Gall is so bitter and unsavoury to the taste, so offensive and troublesome to the stomack, that 'tis a kind of poyson, and some venomous creatures carry their poyson in their Gall.

He shall suck the poyson of Asps.] That is, He shall find that most bitter and deadly to him, wherein he thought to find much sweetness and delight. As if he had said; Thou who hungerst after the estates of the poor, I tell thee, when thou art sucking them as at a honey-comb, thou art but sucking the poyson of Asps. While the covetous oppressour is in the act of sin, he saith, it is sweet and good, he little thinks he is sucking poyson, the deadly poyson of the Asp: It is misery enough to suck poyson at any time, but to suck poyson while we think we are sucking milk or honey is a greater misery. There are none so mistaken as they who take wrongfully from others. As there is a sinful sparing, so a sinful getting which tends to poverty; and he who thus

ירש Hæreditavit possedit etiam hæreditate & possessione ejecit.

ראש Significat tum caput tum venenũ, quod capite aut dentibus serpentis venenum inest. caput aspidis fugiet. Vulg.

Perinde edet ei maleficium ac si venenũ hausisset potentissimum, aut à vipera fuisset morsus. Jun.

thus gathers, do worſe then ſcatter; For, He ſhall ſuck the poyſon of Aſps, and (which ſpeaks the ſame or a worſe fate to him)

Nullum animat tanta celeritate linguam movet ut ſerpens, adeo ut triplicem linguam habere videatur, cum unam ſit. Plin. l. 6. c. 37. Iſid. lib. 12.

The Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him.] That is, he ſhall ſurely die, the iſſue ſhall be his ruine. The poyſon of Aſps is deadly, and that the Vipers tongue is preſent death, we have clear evidence (beſides what is aſſerted by natural Hiſtorians) from Scripture record. When Paul had eſcaped from Ship-wrack, and was come on ſhoar at Malta, the Barbarians ſhewed him kindneſs, and made him a fire, out of which when a Viper came and faſtned upon his hand, they looked when he ſhould fall down dead, concluding he was a murtherer, whom, though he eſcaped the Sea, yet, vengeance followed him to land, or (as that Text gives it) would not ſuffer him to live (Acts 28. 4.) So that, when Zophar ſaith, The Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him; The meaning is, he ſhall be as certainly and ſuddenly ſlain, as if a Viper had bitten him. The Vipers tongue is worſe then the Lyons tooth, and gives ſo mortal a wound that every touch is death. When John the Baptiſt, as alſo Chriſt would ſhew how hurtful and dangerous the Scribes and Phariſees (among the Jewes) were, they call them, A Generation of Vipers (Matth. 3. 7. Matth. 12. 34.) Theſe Vipers never gave over till they had ſlain Chriſt. There's no eſcaping if a Viper bite; and of them Chriſt ſaith (Matth. 23. 33.) O Generation of Vipers, how ſhall ye eſcape the damnation of hell? It ſhews that the moral Viper is as dangerous as the natural, when we read that the former ſhall not eſcape the wrath of God, as man cannot eſcape, being ſtung, by the latter. The Vipers tongue is the Embleme of any remidileſs evil. And ſuch ſhall befal the covetous oppreſſour, The Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him.

Hence note, The miſchief that a wicked man doth to others, ſhall return upon his own head.

While he impoveriſheth his neighbour, he undoeth himſelf; while he is ſucking others, he is ſlaying himſelf. Solomon deſcribes a combination of evil-doers, whoſe feet run to evil, they make haſt to ſhed bloud; But he concludes (Prov. 1. 18.) They lie in wait for their own blood, and lurk privily for their own lives; ſo are the wayes of every one that is greedy of gain, which taketh away the life of the owners thereof: They made haſt to ſhed the blood of others, but the event proved that they laid wait for their own bloud. Sin is the great Deceiver; The harm-doer is always the greateſt harm-receiver. He that layeth ſnares, layeth them for others, but he catcheth himſelf. And therefore Solomon reſolves it directly (which yet we are to underſtand of the event, not at all (which makes their caſe more miſerable) of their intention) They lurk privily for their own lives. All their lurking and plotting recoyles upon themſelves; Their own iniquities ſhall take them, and they ſhall be holden with the cords of their ſin, as the ſame Solomon expreſſeth it, (Prov. 5. 22.) As, He that is wiſe (that is, holy and righteous) ſhall be wiſe for himſelf (Prov. 9. 12.) That is, though he only intended the Glory of God, and the good of others, wholly denying and leaving out himſelf, yet himſelf ſhall be the chief gainer by it in the end; ſo he that is fooliſh (that is, wicked and unrighteous) ſhall be fooliſh to himſelf. Though he only intended the hurt of others, yet he ſhall be the chief, poſſibly, the only hurt-receiver in the end, as it follows in the latter part or croſs part of the ſame Proverb, If thou ſcorneſt, thou alone ſhalt bear it. The greateſt hurt which any man can do his brother by any wrong done to him, is ſo little comparatively to what he doth to himſelf, that the Scripture caſts the whole upon himſelf; He alone ſhall bear it. While he gives his brother a bitter portion to drink, himſelf drinks the poyſon of Aſps; While he wounds his brother with hand or tongue, the Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him.

Per linguam viperæ ſignificari poteſt alius impius contraria loquens. Pined.

Viperæ lingua ſymbolū eſt linguæ detractatoriæ.

Further, By the Vipers tongue, we may underſtand any oppoſer, who riſeth up againſt and accuſeth this fraudulent or violent oppreſſour. An accuſing tongue, eſpecially a falſely and maliciouſly accuſing tongue, may well be called a Vipers tongue. In which ſence, principally, the Scribes and Phariſees are called a Generation of Vipers. Detraction wounds deeply, and a wound in the reputation is hardly healed. When the Ægytians would deſcribe a man ſmitten with a detracting tongue, they were wont to paint a Baſilisk, who kills ſuch as come near to him with his breath. And the Vipers tongue hath alſo been (among the Ancients) an Emblem of the ſame ſignification.

Hence note, Oppreſſours ſhall not want accuſers, and they who have ſmitten others in their eſtates, ſhall be ſmitten in their names.

Such get riches to themſelves, a name, and they (ambitiouſly, as the Pſalmiſt hath it) call their Lands after their own name, hoping thereby to immortalize their memories. But their project fails them, and as they never deſerved nor had a good name, ſo they ſhall not long have a Great one. If good men do not cry them down, ſome or other as bad as themſelves ſhall. The Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay them.

Deus quidam magnam tanquam carnificinam uſus eſt ſumendam de aliis pœnalis Plut. de ſer. Num. vindicta.

Verſ. 17. He ſhall not ſee the rivers, the floods, the brooks of honey and butter.

Non ſumi pro jejuno viſu ſed delectabili qualis cum poſſeſſione uſu rerum cietur; in videre pro uti & exviri; vide ad actionem reliquorum ſenſuū tranſfertur. Aug. lib. 10. Confeſſ. 35. & Epiſt. 112 ad Paulin.

Theſe words continue the miſery befalling a wicked man; He hath gained unjuſtly, but he ſhall not poſſeſs what he hath gained. He ſhall not ſee; that is, he ſhall not enjoy. Seeing is not taken here for a naked hungry ſight of theſe things. He may ſee the floods, rivers, and brooks of honey and butter with his eye, but he ſhall not have a comfortable uſe of them. Sight is ſo noble a ſenſe, that it is put for all the ſenſes; eſpecially for that which is the deſire of all the ſenſes, enjoyment. We render that of the Preacher (Eccl. 2. 1.) Enjoy pleaſure; the Text is, See pleaſure. Pleaſure is the object of every ſenſe, and that which every ſenſe naturally looks for, is the enjoyment of pleaſure. The ſight of the beſt things without enjoyment, doth rather afflict us then pleaſe us. Thus here, they ſhall not ſee, that is, they ſhall not have a comfortable or pleaſurable enjoyment, of the rivers, floods, and brooks; here is an elegant heap of words, all being of a near ſignification, and concurring to make an Hyperbolical ſpeech, ſignifying greateſt abundance of good things; honey and butter are put ſynecdochically for all good things. Rivers, brooks, floods, denote the fulleſt ſtore and plenty of them. Or theſe words may note theſe three things to us diſtinctly.

First, Plenty in the word flood; we may have water in a pond or ciſtern, but floods are the exceſſes and over-flowings of water.

Secondly, Perpetuity in the word river; floods fall quickly; Torrents riſe with the fall of rain, or the diſſolving of ſnow, and when this hath been a while diſſolved and that fallen, they fall again. But rivers keep a conſtant ſtream, being fed by conſtant ſprings. When the Lord ſaith (Iſa. 48. 18.) Then had thy peace been as a river; The meaning is, that in caſe of their obedience, their peace had been continued. And when the Lord promiſeth (Iſa. 66. 12.) I will extend peace to thee as a river; He aſſures them that their peace ſhall continue for ever.

Thirdly, The joyning of theſe three together, floods, rivers, brooks, may imply variety of kinds, or the confluence of all ſorts of good things, both little and great together. Brooks are little rivers, and rivers are great Brooks. Floods are the inundations or ſwellings of both beyond their banks.

He ſhall not ſee theſe rivers, floods, and brooks, of honey and butter.

And who ever did ſee them? Rivers and brooks of water, as they are uſeful and delectable, ſo every where ſeen. But where ſhall we ſee rivers or brooks of honey and butter? This is a high ſtrain of Rhetorick, noting only (as was toucht before) greateſt abundance; yet in ſome Countries there is ſuch abundance of honey and butter, that, they may be ſaid to have (almoſt) in the letter, rivers and brooks of them. It is ſaid (1 Sam. 14. 25.) that when the people of the Land (in purſuit of the Philiſtims) came to a wood, there was honey upon the ground, and (verſ. 26.) the honey dropped. Here were rivers of honey, flowing honey. The land of Canaan is often deſcribed by this Periphraſis, A Land flowing with milk and honey (Exod. 3. 8, 17. &c.) Job ſpeaking of his former flouriſhing eſtate, gives it in this language (Chap. 29. 6.) I waſhed my ſteps with butter, and the rock poured me out rivers of oyl. They who eat butter and honey are ſuppoſed by ſome to have more then neceſſaries (though others expound it for plain Country food) even dainties to feed upon (Iſa. 7. 22.) Butter and honey ſhall every one eat that is left in the Land. And this is the food which the Virgins son our Immanuel was propheſied to eat at the 15th verſe of the ſame Chapter; Butter and honey ſhall he eat, that he may know how to refuſe the evil and chooſe the good. That is, that he may grow up to years of diſcretion, and ſo be able to diſtinguiſh between that which is morally good and morally evil.

Further, Some underſtand butter and honey allegorically, for ſpiritual good things; The butter and honey of the Land of promiſe were indeed ſhadows of heavenly things. And this amounts to a ſorer judgment upon the wicked man, whoſe portion, how great ſoever it is in temporals, ſhall be nothing in eternals; His whole lot falls on this ſide heaven, and the things of heaven. But I rather keep to the literal ſence, which ſuits clearly with the words foregoing; He ſhall ſuck the poyſon of Aſps, the Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him: there's an end of him; he ſhall not ſee the rivers, &c. of honey and butter which he looked for.

ic deſcribitur ſordidum avari dominis inſenium, qui quamvis bonorum omnium copia ſuperundet nihil tamen ex bonis ſuis ſumit. Cajet.

Laſtly, Some give the meaning as if the ſordid diſpoſition of a covetous worldling were here deſcribed; who though he doth abound with the things of this life, yet he doth not ſee them; that is, he hath not a heart to make uſe of them, but keeps all in priſon; His rivers and brooks when in their higheſt flood, are as dried up to himſelf; This (I grant) is a judgement viſible upon many covetous wicked men, who as much want what they have, as what they have not. But I paſs this alſo, and ſhall inſiſt only upon our firſt interpretation, He ſhall not ſee the rivers, &c. Then he had hopes to ſee, that is, to poſſeſs and enjoy them; He made ſure of them, but they paſſed away, and proved not ſure to him.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, A worldly man hath great expectations, he promiſeth himſelf huge things in the world, whole rivers, brooks and floods of honey and butter.

Small matters will not ſerve his turn, he dreams not only of Gold, but of golden mountains, and golden ſhowers; he dreams of rivers and floods of gold; What pleaſant dreams of eſteem, honour, and riches hath he; He phancieth that all ſhall not only honour, but humour and adore him; He promiſeth himſelf, that he ſhall be able to do what he will, and make whom he pleaſeth ſtoop to him, that none ſhall dare to ſpeak a word, or riſe up againſt him: What fine imaginations have many about this world, but they reckon (as we ſay) without their Hoaſt. For,

Secondly, Obſerve, God often cuts wicked men ſhort of their expectations.

He ſhall not ſee the rivers, &c. of honey and butter; He looks for them, but he ſhall not ſee them; He hopes, but he ſhall be aſhamed of his hope. What the Poets phancied of Tantalus, is true and accompliſht in him. He is Tantaliz'd, ſtanding up to the chin in thoſe floods and rivers, of which he cannot drink; he hath pleaſant apples touching and playing upon his lips, which yet he cannot taſte. He thought himſelf happy in getting great things, but, his miſery is, he cannot enjoy what he hath gotten. Solomon ſaith of a ſloathful man (Prov. 12.27.) He roaſteth not what he hath gotten in hunting; his meaning is, he will not hunt for his meat, he will take no pains for his living; if he have any roſt-meat, it is not what himſelf, but what his friends or forefathers have hunted and caught for him. We may ſay the ſame of many covetous men, who though they take pains enough in hunting for their living, who though they riſe early, go to bed late, and compaſs Sea and Land in the purſuit of riches, yet they roſt not what they have got; though they have gotten much in this hunting, yet God denieth them the comfortable enjoyment of it: And he doth it two wayes; Firſt, God ſometimes taketh the man away from his gettings, as is inſtanced (Luke 12.) in the rich man, who ſaid to his ſoul, Thou haſt goods laid up for many years; He had rivers and brooks, which would never fail, nor be dried up, as he dreamed, but he ſaw them not; for God ſaid to him, Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee; then whoſe ſhall thoſe things be which thou haſt provided?

Secondly, God takes away what he was poſſeſſed of, he pulls all out of his hands, or from between his teeth. When he hath good things about him, and is reſolving to take his fill of them, then God ſends a flood of wrath, and ſweeps away his floods of riches; ſo that he cannot ſo much as behold them any longer with his eye. Thus the Lord threatned his ancient people in caſe of diſobedience (Deut. 28. 31.) Thine oxe ſhall be ſlain before thy eye, and thou ſhalt not eat thereof; thine Aſs ſhall be violently taken away before thy face, and ſhall not be reſtored to thee. That which he hath laboured for, ſhall be taken away, and not reſtored; his loſs ſhall be irrecoverable. Or himſelf ſhall be compelled to reſtore what he hath laboured for, he ſhall not ſwallow it down, as Zophar ſhews in the next verſe, where he gives us in plain words, without a figure, a further account of the wicked mans non-enjoyment of what he had wrongfully ſpoiled and ſtript others of, in hope to make himſelf a happy man.

VERS. 18, 19.

That which he laboured for ſhall he reſtore, and ſhall not ſwallow it down; according to his ſubſtance ſhall the reſtitution be, and he ſhall not rejoyce therein.
Becauſe he hath oppreſſed, and hath forſaken the poor, becauſe he hath violently taken away a houſe, which he builded not.

IN the former verſe Zophar aſſures Job that the wicked man ſhall not ſee the rivers, the floods, and brooks of honey and butter; that is, he ſhall not enjoy the golden abundance he dreamed of. Here Zophar tells him why or whence this comes to paſs.

What he laboured for he ſhall reſtore, and ſhall not ſwallow it down.

The Hebrew is, He ſhall reſtore his labour; The original is conciſe; What we render by eight words in our language, is but two there. But how can labour be reſtored? We may clear it three wayes.

משיב יגע Reddet laborem.

Dabit pœnas pro labore & moleſtia quam aliis inſtixit. Pined.

First, Taking labour for the miſery and trouble which the wicked man brought on others. Then to reſtore labour, is to be puniſhed and troubled in proportion to the trouble which he put others to. Troublers of others ſhall not want trouble themſelves. Trouble ſhall be reſtored or paid back again into their own boſomes.

Secondly, He ſhall reſtore labour; That is, the profit and fruit of their labours, whom he had wickedly oppreſſed or defrauded.

Thirdly, By labour, we may underſtand any fruit or profit of his own labour as well right as wrong; our Tranſlation holds forth that ſence; That which he laboured for (or the profit which came in by his labour) ſhall he reſtore. The word which ſignifies labour, is extendable to all kind of labour, but properly to that which bringeth in profit, and advantage, ſuch as men take in trading and commerce, (Hoſ. 12.8.) where the Prophet ſpeaks of Ephraim under the Title of a Merchant; And Ephraim ſaid, yet I am become rich, and have found out ſubſtance; in all my labours (which I have taken for my profit) they ſhall find none iniquity in me. (Prov. 23.4.) Labour not to be rich; and it notes ſuch a labour for riches as is accompanied with much toyl of body, eſpecially with reſtleſneſs of mind: it implyeth not only (as is commanded Gen. 3.) Eating bread in the ſweat of the face, but in the vexation of the heart.

Græco nomine reſpondet, & notat laborem cum moleſtia & laſſitudine.

Zophar doth not ſay, He ſhall reſtore his goods or eſtate, but what he laboured for; teaching us that the things of this world are ſuch as men toylingly yet willingly labour for; riches are ſo much laboured for, that the ſame word ſignifies both labour and riches.

Hence obſerve, Man is very ready to take pains for worldly things, for the things of this life.

We can freely beſtow many thoughts upon, What ſhall we eat? what ſhall we drink? and wherewith ſhall we be cloathed? Chriſt ſeeing the thoughts of men run ſo much to the world, pull'd them quite out of the world; Take no thought (Matth. 6.26.) not that it is ſinful to think what we ſhall eat, only we muſt not be thoughtful or full of thoughts about it; or Chriſt ſpeaks comparatively, take no thought for this world in ballance with the next. Beſtow your thoughts upon better queſtions then, What ſhall we eat? what ſhall we drink? how ſhall we be cloathed? Labour an anſwer to theſe queſtions, How ſhall we be ſaved? how ſhall ſhall we make our calling and election ſure? how ſhall we honour God? how ſhall we ſerve our generation? Man is ſo apt to over-act his labour for the world, that Chriſt in another place ſeemeth to put a total prohibition upon that labour (Joh. 6. 27.) Labour not for the meat that periſheth, but for that which indures to everlaſting life; though a man labour very hard for the things of the world, yet all the way is down-hill to his nature, and the wheels of his ſpirit move ſo faſt, that (as the Ancient Moraliſt ſaid in another caſe) He hath need of trigging. In all theſe worldly labours man needeth not a ſpurr, but a bridle. Our ſpirits are ſo fleet in this purſuit, that we muſt have weight laid on us. Labour not for the meat that periſheth. The Prophet (Iſa. 55. 1.) calls aloud to buy ſpirituals; Come and buy wine and milk without money, or without price: But men had rather beſtow their pains and labour for the world, then take heavenly things at the loweſt rates, upon the eaſieſt price, yea without price; as the Prophets rebuke intimates in the next words, Wherefore do ye ſpend your money for that which is not bread, and your labour for what ſatisfieth not. Bread in Scripture comprehends every good thing, and that which is not bread is good for nothing. Bread ſatisfies the hunger of man and renews his ſtrength, but that which is not bread cannot ſatisfie. All the things of this life (which are our bread) are no bread in compariſon of the things of Chriſt, eſpecially of Chriſt himſelf, who is living bread, the bread of life, and that an eternal life; yet Chriſt who is the beſt bread, better then bread, is little laboured for; and that which hath ſo little of bread in it, that it is not bread, is every mans labour, and the only labour of moſt men.

Etiamſi laboreſuo, lacunam damni à Deo illati expleturus ſibi videatur, fructum tamen non percipiet. Jun.

Again, Labour ſignifieth that which a man hath gotten by honeſt endeavours, and in righteous wayes. That which is unduly gotten, is not (properly) ſaid to be gotten by labour, though a man hath laboured much in getting it. Thus labour is oppoſed to ſtealing (Epheſ. 4. 28.) Let him that ſtole ſteal no more (what ſhall he do then?) but rather let him labour working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. So we may take it here, this man hath gotten much wickedly, and he hath gotten ſomewhat honeſtly, he ſhall ſuffer damage in his honeſt gains, becauſe he hath gained diſhoneſtly. He ſhall reſtore his labour, or what he hath laboured for. A little ill gotten poyſons that which is well gotten; as was touched before.

And ſhall not ſwallow it down.] The word was opened at the 15th verſe; where it is ſaid, he hath ſwallowed down riches; It may be enquired, how Zophar ſaith here, He ſhall not ſwallow it down? To clear that you may conſider of a two-fold ſwallowing.

Firſt, There is a ſwallowing by rapine, and violence; thus the wicked man ſwallowed down riches at verſe 15.

Secondly, There is a ſwallowing for nouriſhment, and ſuſtenance, for ſtrength and ſupport; Thus 'tis ſaid here, He ſhall not ſwallow it down. A man may be ſaid to ſwallow down what he hath gotten, and to digeſt it, when his eſtate thrives, as the body doth with meat well digeſted. This is the ſence of the place here, What he hath laboured for he ſhall reſtore, he ſhall not ſwallow it down; That is, it ſhall not be converted either to his perſonal benefit, or to the benefit of his family. As before, He ſhall not ſee, is, he ſhall not enjoy, ſo now, he ſhall not ſwallow, is, he ſhall not thrive or wax ſtrong in ſtate by all his gettings.

Illis non fruetur diu. Merc. Cum mox vomit perinde eſt ac ſi non abſorbiſſet.

Yet we are not to underſtand the Text, as if this were plainly the lot of every wicked man, but thus it is with many, and thus in ſome ſence it is with every wicked man. For, Either God doth not ſuffer him to hold that long, which he hath gotten unjuſtly, or it doth him ſo little good while he hath it, that he may be ſaid not to have had it; The longeſt contents of this life, are of ſo ſhort a being, that they may be ſaid not to be at all.

Hence obſerve, A wicked man hath no true profit by all his labours.

The promiſe to the Godly is (Pſal. 128. 2.) Bleſſed is the man that feareth, he ſhall eat of the labour of his hands: He that feareth God, ſtands under the influence of that ſweet promiſe; He ſhall eat the labour of his hands. It is ſaid of Chriſt in the Prophet (Iſa. 53. 11.) He ſhall ſee of the travail of his ſoul, and ſhall be ſatisfied. Chriſt laboured hard and he did eat the fruit of his labour; He ſaw and daily ſeeth of the travail of his ſoul; many believe and are ſaved; The ſaving of ſouls is the fruit of the travail of Chriſts ſoul. Thus in proportion a Godly man ſeeth of the travail of his ſoul, and is ſatisfied, he labours, he takes much pains, in his place and calling, he hath many weary dayes, and ſome waking nights, but by the bleſſing of God, his labours are fruitfull; He eats his labour to the refreſhing of himſelf and family, and to the bearing up of his credit in the world. The ungodly ſhall not find it ſo at all, or ſhall not long find it ſo; he muſt reſtore his labour, and not ſwallow it down.

According to his ſubſtance ſhall his reſtitution be.

The word which we tranſlate reſtitution, ſignifies any kind of change. It is rendred by recompence (Job 15. 31.) Vanity ſhall be his recompence, or the change that he ſhall have is from bad to worſe, even into vanity: ſo the word is uſed, Ruth 4. 7. Levit. 17. 10, 23. Some give the ſence thus, He ſhall be as poor as ever he was rich; His change ſhall be according to his ſubſtance. Our Tranſlation ſuppoſeth Zophar giving the rule of reſtitution, According to his ſubſtance ſhall his reſtitution be.

Hence obſerve; If that which is ill gotten be not reſtored, it ſhall.

If men will not reſtore willingly, God will make them reſtore whether they will or no; though man hath no mind to it, yet he muſt. It is a duty to reſtore what we borrow, much more what any man hath violently taken away. Owe nothing to any man, but to love one another (Rom. 13. 8.) Love is a debt which is alwayes owing, and ſhould be alwayes paying; There can be no diſcharge of that bond. When we have paid much love, we ſtill owe more. But other debts muſt not only be paid, but may be diſcharged. If a man muſt not alwayes owe what he hath borrowed, then much leſs where he hath defrauded. Oppreſſion whether ſecret or open is a crying ſin; and until reſtitution be offered or really made where the party offending is able, or really deſired where he is unable, the mouth of it cannot be ſtopped. This being ſo neceſſary a duty, I ſhall for the clearing of it briefly touch theſe five things, And ſhew

First, What reſtitution is; Secondly, what muſt be reſtored; Thirdly, who muſt reſtore; Fourthly, to whom we muſt reſtore; Fifthly, the proportion of it.

To the firſt queſtion, What is this reſtitution? I anſwer, It is an act of communicative juſtice, whereby the wrong which we have done to another is recompenced, and he again re-eſtated in his own. To give to the poor is a duty, yet an act of charity. But to reſtore (though to the rich) is not only a duty, but an act of Juſtice.

Secondly, What muſt be reſtored? That which hath been unjuſtly gotten; yet the meaning is not that a man muſt alwayes reſtore what he hath taken away in ſpecie, or the thing it ſelf in kind. If the value and worth of it be reſtored, that ſufficeth; yet it doth not ſuffice to reſtore the bare value of that which hath been taken away. For (as Caſuiſts ſpeak) there are two things to be conſidered in reſtitution.

First, The damage done to the perſon wronged, by detaining his goods. Damnum emergens lucrum ceſſans.

Secondly, The hindrance of that profit or benefit, which probably he might have made by their continued enjoyment and poſſeſſion. In ſtrictneſs the wrong doer muſt account to the wrong ſufferer in both theſe, elſe the wrong done is not repaired according to the nature of reſtitution.

Thirdly, 'Tis queſtioned, Who muſt reſtore? Some may be concern'd in making reſtitution who were not the immediate actors of the wrong. There are ſeven ſorts of perſons who may be involved under the duty of reſtitution.

First and principally, they who perſonally did the wrong.

Secondly, If they have not made reſtitution, their heirs who poſſeſs their eſtate are bound in conſcience to do it.

Thirdly, They are engaged to reſtore who have given aſſiſtance to the damage of others, either by force, command, or counſel.

Fourthly, They, who though antecedently they had no hand in doing it, neither as principals nor abetters, yet gave their after-conſent or approbation to it.

Fifthly, They, who having power in their hands to prevent the damage or wrong of others, having knowingly neglected to put it forth for them.

Sixthly, They, who having lawfull power in their hand to relieve the wronged, have yet ſuffered them to lie under thoſe wrongs unrelieved.

Seventhly, They, who willingly conceal the wrong which they know hath been done to another, or being called refuſe to give teſtimony, or bear witneſs according to their knowledg, that ſo he might be righted. All theſe are under an obligation to reſtore, becauſe they are all partakers in and ſo guilty of the wrong.

Fourthly, To whom muſt we reſtore? I anſwer; First, Reſtitution muſt be made to the perſon wronged; For to wrong one man and reſtore to another, will not make up a reſtitution. This diſcovers their error and miſtake, who having by their extorſions ground the faces of the poor, yea to enrich themſelves, have impoveriſht many rich, yet think it a ſufficient amends, if they build an Hoſpital for thoſe poor whom they never ſaw, much leſs wronged in perſon; Whereas the Laws of reſtitution ſay, The perſon wronged muſt be repayed. To give to the poor at large is charity, but no reſtitution; yet to give to the poor what is not juſtly ours, is no charity. No man can indeed do an act of charity, but he that hath done or is ready to do all acts of Juſtice. God doth as much hate robbery for charity to the poor now, as he did of old for ſacrifice or burnt offerings to himſelf. So that till a man hath reſtored and done all men right, he is not in a capacity to give to the poor; and to how many poor ſoever he gives, he makes no reſtitution, unleſs he gives to thoſe individual perſons (if they may be found and will receive it) whom he hath perſonally wronged. Secondly, If ſuch be not living, then reſtitution muſt be made to their heirs or Executors, to whom the right and diſpoſition of their eſtate doth belong. Thirdly, If neither the man himſelf, nor his heirs are to be found, then the perſon offending muſt reſtore to God; he muſt put his ill gotten goods into Gods Treaſury. The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs of it; he gives to all, and yet he looks to receive from many. Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance (Prov. 3. 9.) God hath a double treaſure, to which we are to bring our ſubſtance, that we may honour him. First, All the godly are Gods treaſury; ſuppoſe they are not in extreme want, and ſo need not the gifts of charity, yet God takes it well, and as done to himſelf, when we beſtow upon ſuch the gifts of bounty, for their encouragement and more comfortable ſubſiſtance in this world. Secondly, The poor, chiefly the godly poor are Gods treaſury; I do not ſay we muſt examine every poor man to know whether he be godly or no before we give; but ſuch as we know to be godly we ſhould not fail to give to before others. That's the rule of the Apoſtle; Do good to All, eſpecially to thoſe who are of the Houſhold of faith (Gal. 6. 10.) Thus there will never want perſons to whom reſtitution may be made; if the man cannot be had, nor any of his who was wrong'd, then reſtore to God. Any godly man, eſpecially a godly poor man is Gods Treaſury.

The fifth thing queſtioned is the proportion, or how much muſt be reſtored. The Text Anſwers and reſolves it, thus; He ſhall reſtore all his ſubſtance, or, all that he hath in the world ſhall go to make good the wrong which he hath done; yet more clearly to the rule of reſtitution, according to his ſubſtance is this. Suppoſe he be not able to make full reſtitution, yet according to his ſubſtance, that is, ſo far as he is able, ſo far as his eſtate will reach he ſhall reſtore; Half a loaf is better then no bread, in reference both to the receiver and the reſtorer. When we cannot do what we ſhould, yet we muſt do what we can. Further, divers Scriptures reſolve the proportion of reſtitution. The Law given the Jewes ſaid (Exod. 22. 1.) If a man ſhall ſteal an oxe or a ſheep and kill it or ſell it, he ſhall reſtore five oxen for an oxe, and four ſheep for a ſheep. The reaſon of this difference why the Law made the proportion fivefold in oxen, and but fourfold in ſheep, might be this; becauſe the owner loſt the labour of his oxe, and the profit of that was to be valued in reſtitution; but ſheep are not for labour. Solomon makes the proportion higher (Prov. 6. 34.) If he (that is, the thief) be found, he ſhall reſtore ſevenfold. But ſuppoſe the man were not worth ſo much as he had ſtoln, how could he reſtore ſevenfold? The next clauſe anſwers that caſe; He ſhall give all the ſubſtance of his houſe; That is, if he be poor, yet let him not be ſpared, but take all. But ſeeing the Law of Moſes made the proportion fivefold, why is it there ſaid, He ſhall reſtore ſevenfold. To ſalve this, Junius tranſlates (Septies) ſeven times. And gives the meaning thus; Let him reſtore often, even as often as he is found ſtealing; or this phraſe of reſtoring ſevenfold, imports not any addition in thoſe times to the penalty of the Law, becauſe of the encreaſe of that ſin, and the proneneſs of men to it, as ſome (I conceive unwarrantably) expound the place; but only that the thief ſhould make full ſatisfaction. So the word is uſed Pſal. 12. 6. In the 22. of Exodus v. 4. it is ſaid; If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether it be oxe or aſſe or ſheep, he ſhall reſtore double. At the firſt verſe the ſtoln oxe was to be reſtored fivefold, and the ſheep fourfold; how doth this conſiſt with the 4th verſe, He ſhall reſtore the oxe and ſheep double. The reaſon is, becauſe the firſt verſe ſpeaks of the oxe and ſheep either kild or ſold; This 4th verſe ſpeaks of the thief taken (as we ſay) in the manner, or preſently apprehended with thoſe goods in his hand; The owner being by this ſpeedy diſcovery and recovery of his goods, put to leſs dammage, the penalty of reſtitution was leſſened. Another Scripture ſpeaks of reſtitution in an example (Luk. 19. 8.) Zacheus ſtood, and ſaid to the Lord, behold Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken any thing from any man by falſe accuſation I reſtore him fourfold. Zacheus makes a double diſpoſition of his eſtate; firſt, to thoſe who were poor; Secondly, to thoſe whom he had impoveriſht whether poor or rich; Zacheus was ſure his eſtate would hold out to reſtore fourfold to thoſe that he wronged, elſe he could not have given half his eſtate to the poor.

Now though we cannot in theſe times enforce theſe rules of proportion taken from the Judicials of Moſes, ſtrictly upon the conſciences of men; yet we may draw down theſe two concluſions for our direction in this thing.

First, That in Reſtitution the Dammage of the perſon wronged ſhould be fully repaired.

Secondly, That if the wrong-doer be not able to give ſo much as will fully repair the dammage, then according to his ſubſtance, or to the utmoſt of what he hath he is bound to reſtore.

Reſtitution muſt be made according to the ſubſtance unjuſtly gotten, or according to the ſubſtance of the unjuſt getter. They who reſtore willingly as true Repentants do, will always give back (if they have it) according to the ſubſtance unjuſtly gotten. But they whom divine vengeance forceth to reſtore, ſhall give back, ſore againſt their wills, according to their own ſubſtance, how much ſoever it is, yea though it be much more then they have unjuſtly gotten; God will take all from him who hath no will to reſtore any thing. That's Zophars meaning when he ſaith here; According to his ſubſtance ſhall his reſtitution be.

And he ſhall not rejoyce therein.

Wherein ſhall he not rejoyce? It may be taken two ways.

First, In this reſtitution, it pleaſed him well enough to oppreſs and do wrong, but he ſhall take no pleaſure in reſtoring and doing right; he ſhall not do it willingly as Zacheus, who rejoyced more in reſtitution then ever he had done in oppreſſion; but the wicked man here ſpoken of is forced to reſtore, and therefore cannot rejoyce therein.

Secondly, It refers rather to the eſtate which he had gotten by oppreſſion: He ſhall reſtore it, and ſhall not rejoyce therein; that is, his ill gotten goods ſhall adminiſter no content to his mind. Beſides, there is more meant by this expreſſion then is expreſſed, when Zophar ſaith, He ſhall not rejoyce in it; the ſence is, he ſhall have ſorrow with it, or it ſhall be a vexation to him. The word which we render rejoyce, is emphatical, it ſignifies to rejoyce with boaſting, yea with inſulting, a proud rejoycing. The word is applied unto the Peacock; Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the Peacock, or wings and feathers unto the Oſtrich? (Job 39. 13.)

Solent hujuſmodi extenuationes frequenter inveniri in ſacris.

13.) Gaveſt thou the rejoycing wings to the Peacocks; the Peacock is brag of his feathers, and ſpreads his plumes, and then cryeth out, and ſtrutteth as it were exulting and boaſting in his beauty. This word is alſo uſed (Prov. 7. 18.) Where the Adultereſs ſaith, Come let us take our fill of love until the morning, let us ſolace our ſelves with loves. Such is the joy of wicked men in worldly enjoyments, they ſpread their plumes, they look upon their eſtates, houſes, and lands, upon their gold and ſilver, as a Peacock on his tail, or as filthy lovers forethink their unclean embraces, and then boaſt and pride themſelves. So did Nebuchadnezzar walking in his palace and diſcourſing with his own vain heart, Is not this great Babel, which I have built, &c. Thus the worldly man always would, but his joy is often ſtopt. He ſhall not rejoyce therein.

Hence note, Firſt, The things of this world are the matter of a carnal mans rejoycing.

When a godly man hath the world at will, he hath no will thus to rejoyce in it: he rejoyceth in theſe things (as the Apoſtle directs 1 Co. 7. 30.) As though he rejoyced not. His joyes indeed are in God. Many ſay, who will ſhew us any good? David anſwers (Pſal. 4. 6.) Lord lift thou the light of thy countenance upon us, thou ſhalt put gladneſs in my heart more then in the time when their corn and wine increaſed. Job (Chap. 31. 25.) gives us this proteſtation of his own integrity, and uprightneſs, that he lived not in worldly joyes, though he had much of the world; If I rejoyced becauſe my hand hath gotten much, &c. It is a duty to bleſs God for what we have, and to take comfort in the uſe of it; but to rejoyce in the creature, is to put it into the place of the Creator, and to commit Idolatry with it. As it is the higheſt act of Grace to make our boaſt of God all the day long; ſo it is the higheſt and vaineſt acting of corruption to make our boaſt of the world, though but a moment. Let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdome, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches; But let him that glorieth glory in this, that he underſtandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord, &c. (Jer. 9. 23, 24.) Theſe checks given to humane gloryings, ſhew in what man delights to glory. And when man is moſt ſet and bent upon theſe gloryings, God delights to check him moſt, and to ſay, He ſhall not rejoyce therein. We are never ſo near the loſs of theſe rejoycings, as when we make ſureſt of them.

Again, We may take this rejoycing in a lower ſence, for thoſe common contents and refreſhings which by the ordinary providence and bleſſing of God are received in the uſe of the creature. Thus God is ſaid to fill the hearts of men with food and Gladneſs (Acts 14. 17.) He gives not only meat but mirth, and a kind of natural muſick with it. And indeed when he ſpreads a Table for us, he likes it well to ſee us eat our meat with gladneſs, as well as with ſingleneſs of heart (Acts 2. 46.) If we take rejoycing in this ſence; Then the words, He ſhall not rejoyce, yield us this Obſervation.

God can ſeparate joy from the injoyment of the creature.

Many enjoy that which they cannot rejoyce in; there is a vaſt difference between the having of outward things, and taking comfort in them; theſe are diſtinct gifts of God (Eccleſ. 5. 19, 20.) Every man alſo to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoyce in his labour, this is the gift of God. Whoſoever lives hath a natural power to eat, yet many live in the abundance of riches and wealth, who have not a hearty power to eat; They have a portion, but they cannot take it, or rejoyce in it; They have meat, but no muſick. God can make muſick at a poor mans Table; Though he hath but a cruſt of bread, and a cup of water, yet he ſhall have muſick with it, he ſhall rejoyce in it; whereas though the rich man hath muſick at his Table, yet he ſhall have none in his ſpirit. (Eccleſ. 5. 17.) All his dayes he eateth in darkneſs, he hath much ſorrow: this alſo is a ſore evil. But how is it ſaid, that All his dayes he eateth in darkneſs? What hath he not a candle to eat by? yes he may eat by Sun-light and Candle-light too, he may have outward light enough, yet he eats in darkneſs, that is, with diſcontent, and trouble of mind; he hath no joy in what he hath, his ſweeteſt morſels are eaten with ſour ſawce. He poſſeſſeth much, yet is as having nothing. For this word is gone out againſt him; He ſhall not rejoyce therein.

Zophar having thus deſcribed the puniſhment, returns to the ſin of this wicked man.

Verſ. 19. Becauſe he hath oppreſſed and forſaken the poor; becauſe he hath violently taken away a houſe which he builded not.

This verſe, as it ſtands between, ſo it gives the reaſon both of the 18th and 20th verſes. Here's the reaſon why he ſhall reſtore what he hath laboured for, ver. 18. Becauſe he hath oppreſſed the poor; this alſo is the reaſon why he ſhall not feel quietneſs in his belly (ver. 20.) The word which we tranſlate to oppreſs, ſignifies oppreſſion joyned not only (as all oppreſſion is) with injuſtice, but with extremity, tyrannical oppreſſion, without mercy, or moderation, without hoe or hold. Some give full ſcope to their rage, and wrath, they put neither bond nor bridle upon their covetouſneſs and cruelty; ſuch are characteris'd by this word, which moſt properly notes, breaking in pieces; we ſay uſually when men fail in their eſtates, ſuch are broken; ſome break through their own neglect and careleſneſs, many are broken by the harſhneſs and ſeverity of others. And as the wrath of man breaks many, ſo the juſtice of God breaks not a few (Iſa. 24. 19.) The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean diſſolved, the earth is moved exceedingly. Wicked men break and oppreſs the poor, God breaketh the richeſt Nations for their wickedneſs. We read in Scripture, firſt, of breaking the head; ſecondly, the teeth; thirdly, the horns; fourthly, the bones; fifthly, the armes of the wicked: All ſhew the breaking of their power, till there be no healing. And thus (to the utmoſt of his power) doth the oppreſſour break the poor. And for this God puniſheth the oppreſſour. Becauſe he hath oppreſſed, &c.

רצץ confregit, contrivit, ad ſummam inopiam redduxit.

Hence note, Oppreſſion is a vengeance-bringing-ſin.

The Lord tells the Jewes that it was but a vain thing for them to think of freeing themſelves from feared judgments by prayer and faſting, unleſs they did let the oppreſſed or broken go free, and break every yoke (Iſa. 58. 6.) The Scripture every where thunders againſt this ſin. They ſhall have judgment without mercy who have ſhewed no mercy (Jam. 2. 13.) With what face can they ask or expect mercy from God, who ſhew none to man?

Secondly, Note; The poor are moſt ſubject to oppreſſion.

They meet with moſt oppoſition, who are leaſt able to make defence. We may be deceived and cozened by the weak, but all oppreſſion is from a greater power. And they uſually are oppreſſed, who have very little, or no power at all, The poor. And this diſcovers not only the ſinfulneſs, but Firſt, The diſingenuouſneſs of that ſort of men. They are low-ſpirited and cowardly, they dare not meddle with their match, but oppreſs the poor who are not able to deal with them.

Secondly, It diſcovers their inhumanity and incompaſſionateneſs; they oppreſs the poor, whom they ſhould pity and relieve; they take away from thoſe to whom they ſhould rather give. The Prophet ſpeaks of ſuch (Mic. 3. 2.) Who hate the good, and love the evil, who pluck off their ſkin from off them, and their fleſh from off their bones; That is, they take from thoſe who have leaſt, and they take all from them; to take away a mans cloaths is an act of extream oppreſſion, but to pull off a mans skin, that's inhumane, yet there is a degree further, they take not only skin but fleſh too; they who are very poor, may be ſaid to have nothing but skin upon them, yet the oppreſſour will have that. Zophar proceeds yet further Becauſe he hath oppreſſed and forſaken the poor.

Or according to the letter of the Hebrew, left men poor; that is, having ſpoiled and peeled them, he left them in a poor condition. Some read it as a puniſhment, not as a ſin; Therefore he ſhall leave them poor, that is, his own children. But I rather take our ſence, as a diſcovery of his ſin; He hath forſaken the poor. To forſake is to withdraw help, aſſiſtance, counſel, protection, any thing which might do another good. Theſe words may be expounded as an aggravation gravation of the former sin, oppression; As if Zophar had said, because he hath not only oppressed but forsaken the poor, denying them all help, when he hath made them unable to help themselves, Therefore evil shall be upon him, &c.

עזב deſerere, derelinquere, negligere.

Hence note, That as it is sinful to forsake the poor, though we have never oppressed them, so to oppress and then forsake them is far more sinfull.

Though we have not taken from them, yet if we have not given them; though we have not made them naked, yet if we have not cloathed them, this will be charged in that Great day (Matth. 25. 35, 36.) we find the poor complaining (Act. 6. 1.) In those dayes when the number of the Disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widdows were neglected in the daily ministration. Neglect of the poor, especially of the Godly poor, is a sin in all, especially in the Churches. How great then is their sin, who make many poor, and then neglect them; let them sink or swim, 'tis all one to them. For a man to take some care of, or bestow some Almes upon the poor whom he hath oppressed, is no satisfaction for his sin, but not to take care of the poor whom he hath oppressed, is a great aggravation of his sin.

Because he hath violently taken away the house which he builded not.

גזל rapuit, aperte abstulit res aut personas.

These words are (upon the matter) the same with the former; He hath violently taken away; 'tis but one word in the Hebrew, He hath not taken away by stealth, by tricks, and deceits, but in open view. Some take away houses which they builded not, craftily, and upon pretensions or colours of Law and right; others take them away violently without any colour of right. The former is as unjust a way of taking as the latter. But the latter hath not only injustice in it, but impudence. These are so far gone in sin, that they are past shame; They declare their sin as Sodome, they hid it not. These are the Nimrods of the earth, mighty hunters. They violently take away, &c. There is a twofold interpretation of the words; some make the latter part of this clause as the punishment of the sin spoken of in the former part: He hath violently taken away a house, and he shall not build it; That is, he shall not have ability or opportunity to build. He took away a house, intending to fit it for himself, but before he could do it, God took him away. He took away a house, therefore he shall not build it. His oppression of others shall be punished with his own disappointment. Again, Others read thus; He pulls down mens houses, but he never thinks of repairing them: He is so far from restoring four-fold, that he would not restore a fourth, no nor a farthing. But rather, as we render, the whole clause is a description of his sin; He hath violently taken away a house which he builded not; That is, he hath by force invaded and seiz'd upon that which he had no title to, upon that on which he never bestowed either pains or cost: House, is here expressed by a Synecdoche for any thing, whether lands, or goods, or money, which belong properly to another man.

Domum rapuit & non ædificavit.

Hence note, It is a crying sin to take that which others have laboured for.

The idle servant (Matth. 25. 24.) layed this aspersion upon his Master, I know thee that thou art a hard Master; how proved he that? Thou reapest where thou hast not sown; if a man sow he ought to reap, and he that hath strawed should also gather. What the idle servant charged God with, is indeed the temper of many earthly minded men; let whoso will build the house, they will take it if they can; if power stand not between them and their neighbours house, between them and their neighbours estate, their own conscience doth not. As to do this to any man is a great sin, so for a man to have this done to him is a great affliction. God threatens it as a sore judgement upon his own people (Deut. 28. 30.) Thou shalt build an house, and thou shalt not dwell therein. Then who shall? An enemy shall, He shall take away the house which thou hast builded, and turn thee out of house and home. Many rich men gather in the labours of the poor; such seem to act by that rule (which will be no rule for them) to him that hath shall be given, but he that hath not from him shall be taken away even what he hath. Some because they have much think they must have all; as for those who have not, that is, who have but little, they think they must have nothing at all. As there are many Idle poor who will not labour for bread to eat; so there are some covetous rich, who eat the bread which the poor have laboured for. The Apostles command to the Thessalonians was, That if any would not work, neither should he eat (2 Thes. 3. 10.) Drones deserve no honey. All the bread which is eaten and not (where ability is) in some way or other laboured for, is stollen. Idle persons shall be judged as Thieves, though they eat that which is freely given them, yea though they have bought it with their money. How then shall they be judged, who will not suffer those who work to eat; nor them to have a house to dwell in, who have been at the pains and charge of building one, who violently take away what they never brought together, nor laboured for; This is the oppressours practice, and his sin, set down in this verse; his punishment hath been spoken of before, and is again expressed in another kind and form with the additions of a strong asseveration to seal it fast upon him in the next verse.

VERS. 20, 21, 22, 23.

Surely he shall not feel quietness in his belly, he shall not save of that which he desired.
There shall none of his meat be left, therefore shall no man look for his goods.
In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits: every hand of the wicked shall come upon him.
When he is about to fill his belly, God shall cast the fury of his wrath on him, and shall rain it on him while he is eating.

Zophar pursues his former purpose, still drawing out the sad estate of a wicked man: he shew'd us his sin in the former verse, Because he hath oppressed and forsaken the poor, &c. Now follows his punishment, Surely he shall not feel quietness in his belly. He that hath disquieted so many shall have little quiet himself; and he that would not suffer others to rest in their houses, shall have no rest in his own heart. Surely he shall not feel quietness. This verse may contain both a description of the sin, and of the punishment of this wicked covetous man. Some interpret it as a description of his sin; of the fury of that sin of covetousness which is never quiet; He shall not feel quiet in his belly; That is, his mind shall never be satisfied. Others interpret it as a description of his misery. I conceive we may take in both; This is his sin, and this is his punishment; not only because his sin is his punishment, but because this punishment falls upon him for his sin; his sin was unquiet unsatisfiable desires, and now he is punished with an addition of fresh desires, which will not be satisfied; As he gave up himself sinfully, so God gives him up judicially to vile and earthly affections. The Lord hath many external punishments for sin, and he leaves many under internal punishments, or penal sins. When sin is made a punishment, it is the most dreadfull punishment. But to the words.

Surely he shall not feel quietness.

Non novit pacem, i. e. Non sentiet sedatam sitim aut famem etiamsi nulla voraverit.

The Hebrew is, He shall not know peace or quietness, he shall not find his craving appetite, his hunger and thirst after the world appeased, how much soever of the world he hath devoured; no, though he should have devoured the whole world. He shall not (as it were) know the measure of his own belly; nor how to proportionate his desire to a comfortable enjoyment, being meerly led by unsatisfiable and boundless lusts. Thus he feels no quietness in his belly. Zophars language continues in the former allusion to a gluttonous eater, who eats till his belly akes, and crammes himself till his stomach is rather sick then satisfied.

By the belly, we are to understand the appetite, those powers of desire which take in, and concoct faster then the stomach can, and hold infinitely more then the belly can. When the natural belly is full, this is empty and hungry. This Zophar might intend while he saith, He shall not feel quietness in his belly. For as when there is a convenient portion received into the body; this fulness is the quieting of

of the stomach, and of those natural powers, that draw and suck in the food, and pray for it: so there is a filling of the mind to the staying, appeasing, and quieting of its appetite, which usually exceeds the bodily appetite. There is a moral appetite as well as a natural appetite, and that is most hardly satisfied, and filled. It is so hard to be filled that all the good things in the world cannot fill up the room and stowage of it; and therefore the covetous wretch cannot feel, or know quietness in his belly. This is his punishment, after all that he hath scraped, and hoarded together, yet the man saith not, it is enough. David (Psal. 17. v. 14.) describes the men of the world, who have their portion in this life, whose belly thou fillest with thy hid treasure: they are full of Children, and leave the rest of their substance for their babes. That is, thou givest them enough to satisfie nature, thou fillest their bellies; thou openest they treasures, thy store-house, thy granery, thy wardrobe; thou openest all that wherein any good thing is laid up, either for back, or belly: (so by a synecdoche we are to understand it) thou fillest them with thy hid treasures, with treasures hidden in the bowels of the earth; but when they are at the fullest, when they are stuffed till their bellies are ready to break, and enough remains of outward enjoyments for their children after them, yet (as Zophar here speaks) They feel no quietness in their belly. So the Tygurine translation renders it excellently; The man scrapes together a huge heap of wealth, but yet he shall not find that he is wealthy. He shall not at all feel his wealth when he hath all this.

Non sentiet in ventre suo quòd opulentus sit. Tygur.

Hence observe, The desire of a wicked man is never full, how full soever his estate is.

He hath a moral belly which nothing can fill, though his natural belly be filled (Prov. 13. 25.) The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul. 'Tis possible a righteous man may not have enough to eat for the satisfying of his body, he may rise a hungry from his dinner, he may rise with an appetite, because he hath not enough; yet if he hath but a little, a morsel of bread, a sallet of green herbs, when ever he eats, he eats to the satisfying of his soul, that is, he blesseth God though he have but a little, and is content: though his hunger be hardly satisfied, yet his soul is plentifully satisfied. But, as for the wicked man (saith Solomon there) The belly of the wicked shall want. I conceive, belly in that place of the Proverbs is to be understood as here in Job. The punishment which is ordinarily inflicted upon wicked men, is not want in their purses, but want in their spirits; their hearts are in want, while their houses abound. As it is better, so far easier for a man to fill his belly then his eye. Here in the Text the covetous mans belly is his eye, nothing of this world can fill that, and yet he neither desires nor endeavours to have it filled with any thing but the world. Hence, when he is at his highest food and feasting (seeing he hath nothing to feed his spirit with, not a dish for his soul) he doth but increase, not appease his souls appetite; creatures can no more quench that thirst than wood can quench and extinguish fire. For as the Moralist telleth us, The thirst of covetous men is not from want, but from a disease. And that desire which proceeds from a disease, and not from want, is not stopped but provoked by what it receives; so that whatsoever you bestow upon such a man, is not the end of his former longings, but a step to new and fresh ones. What can appease desire, when desire is a disease? Labour to get the disease, the distemper that is in your desires cured, and the wants which your desires move about will soon be supplied, or not complained of.

Avarorum sitis non est vera aliqua naturæ indigentia sed morbus. Quod non ex inopia sed vitio nascitur, quicquid illi congesseris non finis erit cupiditatis sed gradus. Sen. de Consol.

The Dog-Appetite, or hunger of which Physitians speak, is like the covetous mans appetite. Some men have such a bodily appetite, they eat, and eat, and yet are hungry; the more they eat, the more they may; they eat, and cannot be satisfied: such is the soul appetite of a covetous worldling; he feels no quiet in his belly, he still calls for more, and when he hath it he would have more, and the more he hath, the more he would have. The horse-leach hath two daughters, Crying, give, give. There are three things that are never satisfied, yea four things say not it is enough (Prov. 30. 15.) This Horse-leach is desire, by the two daughters of the Horse-leach may well be meant covetousness and prodigality; both these cry, give, give; The former cries give, To keep; the latter cries give, To spend; neither of them saith, it is enough: The one would ever have more to keep, and the other would have more to spend: They feel no quietness in their bellies. Their present havings kindle fresh desirings; and in stead of staying, do but whet their appetite.

The Naturalist observes, that the Horse-leach hath no thorough passage, he takes much in, but he lets nothing out, and therefore breaks, and kills himself with sucking. The covetous man is like the Horse-leach in this, he is all for taking in, he would not have any passage out; he would let nothing go by way of expence, but never thinks enough comes in by way of revenue. Nothing can satisfie desire but God, not riches, not greatness, nor power; The blessing and favour of God with what we have satisfieth, and that will satisfie with a little. Therefore if you would feel quiet in your belly, if you would have desire satisfied; Say not, If I had so much I should be quiet, if I had so much I should be well; if I had such a proportion of estate I should be content. That which gives quiet in any portion, is, first the favour and presence of God; secondly, that it is received from the hand of a father; thirdly, that it comes to us in the Covenant of grace; fourthly, that it is the purchase of the bloud of Christ; fifthly, that it is an answer of prayer, and a blessing from above upon honest endeavours. Such considerations as these, whether it be much or little which you have, will make you feel quietness in your belly with what you have. Else the greater your portion is, the greater is your unquietness.

Plinius lib. 11. Nat. Hist cap. 34.

Secondly, Note further, That as this non-satisfaction is the punishment of a wicked man, so it is his sin; It is a sin not to be satisfied, as well as it is a misery not to be satisfied. The Apostles rule is, Be content with the things that you have; that is, be quiet, sit down; we ought to feel quiet in our belly with our portion, and bless God for our allowance in every condition. Contentation is a liberal portion; contentation hath been highly honoured as a vertue, by Heathens, It is a grace among Christians. Contentation, is the rest of the soul, or to use Zophars language, The quietness of the belly. We may further expound this Negative, He shall not feel quiet in his belly, as Negatives often are in Scripture, by an Affirmative of the contrary; And so, He shall not feel quiet, is, he shall feel much vexation, trouble, and distress; his belly shall be pained, that is, his mind shall be in perpetual turmoyle. There are many Scriptures of the like form with this, which carry more in the interpretation then in the expression, (1 Cor. 15. 58.) Know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord. The Apostles meaning is, your labour in the Lord shall have abundant reward. Again, Isa. 57. 21. There is no peace (saith my God) to the wicked; the sence is, Trouble is their portion. Thus here, he shall not feel quietness, is, he shall be much disquieted. There is no middle of participation between these two.

He shall not save of that which he desired.

This clause contains another part of the covetous mans punishment: He is much for getting, and more for saving. But

He shall not save.] The Hebrew word signifies sometimes to save by flight (1 Sam. 22. 1.) David escaped to the cave of Adullam. He saved himself by flight. It is used also to signifie bringing forth, or deliverance in Childbirth (Isa. 66. 7.) Before she travailed she brought forth, before her pain came she was delivered of a manchild. We translate it to another sence, He shall not save; that is, keep, preserve, or maintain that which he hath desired.

פלט Liberatus fuit, evasit, peperit, in lucem emisit.

That which he desired.] The letter runs thus; He shall not save in or of his desire: The word in the original signifies an earnest desire, a thing earnestly desired, or extreamly coveted. (Josh. 7. 21.) Achan makes this confession of sin; When I saw among the spoils a goodly Babylonish garment, and two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold, of fifty shekles of weight, then I coveted them and took them. It is the word here used; He shall not save of that which he desired; that is, of that which he coveted to have with strong desire. Achan got a goodly garment and a golden wedge, but he was so far from saving them that he lost his own life. The Prophet Daniel is called a man of desires (Chap. 9. 23.) that is, a man greatly desired, or beloved; God was (as it were) in love with with him. So (Cant. 2. 3.) As the apple trees among the trees of the wood, so is my beloved among the sons: I sate down under his shadow with great delight. Or delighted, and sate down, or I desired to sit down with great delight. Christ is the Desire of Nations, that is, he whom all Nations (to whom his beauty is revealed) greatly desire. Here is the punishment of this wicked man, he shall not save that wherein his chief pleasure lay, his Benjamin, the son of his right hand, the child of his desire; The desire of his eyes shall be taken, yea pulled from him. Now according to the two-fold interpretation of the verb before, given, we may here give a double exposition of the whole sentence.

חמד Summè desiderare. Ad verbum, in (i.e. de) optato suo non servabit. q. d. non fruetur optatis aut iis, quæ ei in deliciis erant. Drus. De desiderabili suo non servabit. Merc.

Ἐν ὀπτασίαις αὐτῶν ἐ σωθήσεται. Sept. Cum re desiderabili sua non proripiet se. Jun.

First thus, By that which he desired he shall not be safe, or escape, he shall not deliver himself. So divers render it. And the Seventy also expres the former clause in the abstract, rendring it thus, He shall not be saved in his desire; that is, he shall not save nor deliver himself by it. So Mr. Broughton, By that which he desired he shall not be safe.

Hence note, When a wicked man hath gotten what he would, he is never the near, or not the nearer to safety.

He is not safe by that which he desired. He saith, if I could get such an estate, and make sure such an interest, and engage such friends, I should be safe. But by that which he most desired, he shall not be safe, be it riches, or friends, or correspondency with the best and greatest in the world, none of these shall be his safety. There is such a threatning upon men of the world (Isa. 44. 9.) They that make a graven image are all of them vanity, and their delectable things shall not profit. It is this word, their desirable things. Which you may understand, either by their gold, or by their Gods; either by their riches, or their Idols: Which were their desire, and as they supposed, their safety. Michah in the book of Judges, when he had got an Idol to worship, and a Levite to his Priest, concluded; Now know I that the Lord will do me good (Judg. 17. 13.) But their delectable things should not profit them, or be their safety, whether they be things desired superstitiously or covetously, whether they be things of the world, or an Idol, which is nothing in the world, as the Apostle speaks (1 Cor. 8. 4.) that is, it is of no worth or value, it hath no power or vertue to do good or deliver from evil. These delectable things shall not save them, when God will destroy them. Though a wicked man had his choice of all that he desires for his protection, yet he cannot be safe. His desires rise not above the creature, which cannot save it self, much less be safety to others. There is no safety but under the shadow of the Almighty; we are never hid till we hide our selves in his pavilion. The wicked come not under that shadow, nor shall they ever enter that pavilion. Their desires never carry them indeed that way, and therefore they shall not be safe by that which they desire.

Secondly, As his desireable things cannot save him (according to the former reading) so (according to ours) he shall not save of that which he desired; that is, he shall save nothing of it. All shall be wasted and vanish away upon which he built his felicity; Though he have it, yet he shall not be able to hold or keep it; not so much as a bit or a shread of it, not so much as the gleanings or parings of it. That's the meaning of, He shall not save of that which he desired. All will escape, get out, and break prison. He thought he had laid up his goods, his gold and silver, safe enough, even as prisoners within Iron grates, under lock, and key, yet these will escape and be gone. Thus Mr. Calvin renders, He shall not keep his desire, or that which he hath so much desired.

Hence observe, When a wicked worldling hath gotten all that he desires, yet he cannot hold it.

When he hath what he would, he cannot keep what he hath. There are two usual expressions in Law Conveyances about Lands or houses; To have, and to hold. Many come to the habendum, but not to the tenendum; they have, but cannot hold: Their goods and gains slip away between their fingers.

The desirable things of the Saints are safe to them; As they have, so they shall hold them; they shall save the things they desire; and the things they desire shall save them: their great desire is after spirituals, and these will stick by them: O how great is the goodness that thou hast laid up for them that fear thee, (Psal. 31. 19.) The goodness of God is great, and God hath laid it up: it is in the treasury of God, and his is a safe treasury. When he hath laid up goodness and mercy for us, we need not fear, nor go to any Ensurance Office for security. The moth cannot corrupt, nor can thieves break through and steal these treasures. But as for the ungodly man it is not so with him, for he and his, he and his golden mountains shall be as the chaffe which the wind driveth away; He shall not save of that which he desired.

Zophar yet enlargeth this dolefull Narrative.

Vers. 21. There shall none of his meat be left, therefore shall no man look for his goods.

Zophar had said immediately before, He shall not save of that he desired, there shall not be a scrap left; Here he saith, None of his meat shall be left. It being of the same sence with the former, I will only open the words and note the different reading.

Non desunt qui שריד in masculino accipiunt; non erit residuus ei, &c. superstes hæres qui ejus bona fruatur. Mere. Nihil fecit residuũ cibo ejus, i. e. nihil reliquit ex iis quæ manibus habebat quod in posterum comederet, confidens se statim rapturum unde viveret. Rab. Lev.

First, Some for, None of his meat shall be left, or remain, render it by a person; There shall none be left; The word is used most frequently for a remainder of men, not of things; none shall be left for his meat. If he save any of his worldly estate, if some of his meat be left, yet no heir shall be left to enjoy it after him.

Some of the Rabbins interpret it as a further aggravation of the greedines and cruelty of this man; There shall none of his meat be left. He will eat up all at once; he is resolved to oppress and ravine for more against the next meal; he cares not though all be spent to day, he will oppress afresh to morrow. He is resolved not to want as long as any about him have any thing. Such Nimrods (as Christ speaks, but in a quite other sence then Christ spake it, Matth. 6. 34.) Take no thought for the morrow; Christ would have us do so with dependance upon his provision, they do so upon presumption of their own. Greedy Lyons have no store-houses, but make an end as soon as they can of what is gotten, and then out to get more.

None of his meat shall be left.] The Hebrew strictly thus; Nothing shall be left to eat. Though he may leave many eaters behind him, yet nothing shall be left to eat, or, none of his meat shall be left.

There is a threefold apprehension about these words.

Tam parcus est in victu quotidiano, ut cum vix sibi satis sumat, nullæ remaneant reliquiæ sibi. Cajet. Describitur gulositas impii qui de abundantia mensæ suæ nulli peregrino refectionem præbet.

First, Some expound them as intimating the baseness of this mans spirit. He keeps so poor a house (as we say) though he be a rich man, that when dinner is done, there's none of his meat left, there's not a scrap nor a crust, not a bit of broken bread left to give to a beggar waiting and craving at his door. His provision is but just enough to serve for himself and his family.

Secondly, Others expound it not of the base narrowness and niggardliness of this mans spirit, but of his luxury, and lavishness. He is profuse in his own expences; he cares not what he layes out upon his own back and belly; but as for the poor, they may starve at his door, he hath nothing left for them. The rich man (Luk. 16.) fared deliciously every day, but had not a crum for Lazarus, all was wasted in gluttony and drunkenness. When David in distress (1 Sam. 25. 11.) sent for some relief to Nabal, the Text saith, Nabal kept a feast at his house like a King, yet he had nothing for David; Shall I take my bread, and my water, and my flesh, which I have killed for my shearers, and send it to men whom I know not whence they are? Some feast like Kings at home, and all their bounty keeps at home. 'Tis truly said of these, None of their meat is left.

But thirdly, I rather understand this Text as a description, not of his expensiveness, or penuriousness to himself, or others, but of his extream poverty, sent upon him as a punishment by the hand of God.

None of his meat shall be left. That is, he shall scarce have enough for himself. The wicked are oft reduced to a morsel of bread: God never leaves taking from them till all be gone. As David professing his own experience, saith, I have been young and now am old, yet I never saw the righteous forsaken, nor their seed begging bread; they had alwayes some of their meat left. So Zophar (it seems) had observed in his experience, many wicked men forsaken and themselves begging bread. They who have nothing left of their own, must of necessity ask or steal from others; None of his meat shall be left. And this interpretation suits best with that which followeth:

Ita omnibus spoliabitur bonis ut nihil reliquum ei erit, quo vesci possit.

Therefore

Vocem Hebræam deducunt à חול parturire, & Itgunt, non parturiet, vel non multiplicabitur bonum ejus. Pagn. Vatabl. Peg.

Therefore no man shall look for his goods.] There is a threefold exposition of this passage also: Some derive the word which we render to look from a root that signifies to bring forth, or to multiply. And so the sence is given thus; None of his meat, that is, of his estate or goods, shall bring forth for his good, or multiply to his profit. If a man do not encrease, he comes to nothing; if he spend, spend, spend, if he be always giving out, and never bring in, though his estate be great, 'twill soon be gone; Unless a mans estate be growing and multiplying, he cannot (as we say) hold his own. In a short time there will be none of his meat left. As vegitables grow properly, so also inanimates have a kind of growth. A mans estate groweth; gold and silver grow by addition and multiplication, though not by augmentation. Thus riches bring forth. Now I say, if there be continual spending, and carrying out, and no coming in, no growing, or increase, such a man must needs come to poverty. What God said at first to the cattle, and beasts of the earth; he saith to all that a man hath, Encrease and multiply; And when he saith, Multiply not, all must needs decrease, and the owner must lie under the curse of want, when what he hath is under the curse of Barrenness.

A חיל quod significat robur. Non roborabitur bonum ejus. Rab. Abra. Propterea non manebit prosperitas ejus. A יחל quod est expectare.

Secondly, Others derive the word from a root that signifies to be strong, or strength; rendring thus; His meat or estate shall not be strengthened; that is, his prosperity shall not continue. Mr. Broughton renders it so; therefore his goods continue not; there shall be no tack in them.

Besides these two rendrings we take a third, and all three meet in the general punishment of the wicked man; Let no man look for his goods. We derive the word from a root signifying to expect and wait for a thing; therefore no looking for his goods; we put in those words (no man) Therefore no man shall look for his goods. Which is as much as to say, he shall have nothing left; for if a man hath any thing, some or other will be looking for it, and making title to it. He that hath abundance shall not want heirs. So that, when Zophar saith, No man shall look for his goods; The plain meaning is, He shall die a beggar, and leave no estate worth the looking after, or suing for. He shall not need to make his Will, or appoint Executors; The wrath and justice of God shall dispose of all before he dieth, there is no man needs to gape for his death. When a rich man is sick, many gape for his death, hoping that somewhat will fall into their mouths. Sometimes children are poring upon the day of their fathers death, and looking for his goods before he leaves them. But this man shall have nothing to leave, and therefore none shall look for what he hath.

Filius ante diem patris inquirit in annos.

Lastly, They who render the former part of the verse by a person, There shall none be left for his meat, give the sence of this latter part thus; Seeing none of his children, family, or kindred are left, Therefore there shall be none to look for his goods.

Vers. 22. In the fulness of his sufficiency, he shall be in straits, &c.

The scope of this verse and the next, is to set forth the season or nick of time in which the Lord will reckon with this sinful oppressour (vers. 22.) In the fulness of his sufficiency, (vers. 23.) When he is about to fill his belly. These are the times, or the advantages that God picks out to deal with this man in.

כמלאות מפקן Cum replebitur sufficientia ejus.

In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits.] The letter of the Hebrew is, When his sufficiency shall be filled. The word signifies to suffice, or satisfie, and fill up. So (1 King. 20. 10.) In that threatning raging Letter sent by Zenacherib; The dust of Samaria should not be enough for handfuls for the men that follow me. It shall not suffice for handfulls. The word also signifies to clap the hands together, or to smite the hand upon another part of the body, and this under a threefold notion.

First, To clap the hands in anger, and vexation, (Numb. 24. 10.) Balak clapt his hands together (his anger being kindled against Balaam) when he could not have his will.

Secondly, In sorrow; Jer. 31. 19. After I was turned, I repented, and after I was instructed I smote upon my thigh.

Thirdly, It notes clapping the hands for joy; and that two wayes.

First, For joy at the hurt of others: (there is such a wickedness in the heart of man to rejoyce at the fall of his neighbour) (Lament. 2. 15.) All they that go by clap their hands and hiss, seeing Jerusalem in sorrow.

Secondly, For joy at our own good; or when our selves receive good; so in the Text; In the fulness of his sufficiency, or when he hath so much that he claps his hands for joy, when he is in the highest plauditie of his own happiness, then he shall be in straits.

In the fulness of his sufficiency.] Here is a gradual elegancy: for a man to have a sufficiency, is a very comfortable estate; enough, (as we say, for meat, and cloathing) is all. Give me neither poverty, nor riches, feed me with food convenient, was Agurs prayer. Sufficiency is, at least, a competency; but the fulness of sufficiency is more. Such sufficiency is abundance, if not superfluity, or superabundance. There is an abundant grace of God (where sin abounds, grace abounds.) But besides abounding grace, there is superabounding grace, or (as it were) an excess of grace, an hyperbole of grace (Rom. 6. 20.) So some in this life have an hyperbolical estate, an excessive vast estate in riches and creature-comforts. They have enough, and more then enough; such is the importance of this expression; In the fulness of his sufficiency, Cum putabit sibi abunde satis superesse & suppetere & sufficere omnia ad fæliciter & lautè vivendum necessaria, &c. Merc.

He shall be in straits.] There is nothing more opposite to sufficiency then straits, especially to fulness of sufficiency. He shall be in straits; in outward straits, and inward straits, in straits on the right hand, and in straits on the left. In the fulness of his sufficiency, he shall be full of straits. The word is applicable to any kind of trouble, because what trouble soever a man is in, it straitens him; it straitens his spirits, it straitens his designs, every way he is straitned. To be in straits is to be in such affliction, that a man knows not which way to turn himself, or what to do next. Every affliction is a kind of prison; great afflictions, straiten greatly, and shuts us up fast in prison.

Hence observe, When it is best with wicked men in their own opinion, or according to their present possession, then their worst is approaching.

I will not stay upon the general discourse of this common theam, but only shew four wayes distinctly in which a carnal man may be said to be in straits in the midst of his sufficiency, or in the fulness of it.

First, Carnal men are in straits in the time of their sufficiency, as being troubled what to do with their abundance. That's the case of some. I need give no other proof of it then that represented (Luk. 12. 19.) which at least supposeth, that such a thing may be. There was a certain rich man, whose ground brought forth abundance, and he said, What shall I do with all this? The man was troubled what to do with it; he was hard put to it for stowage, or where to bestow it: He must pull down his barns, and make bigger. This is a strait that carnal men are in, in the midst of their sufficiency: but I question whether that be here intended.

In anxietate erit sollicitus quomodo eam conservat. Drus.

Secondly, A real strait is upon him, how to keep his abundance, how to protect what he hath gotten. He is in many straits about this point, how to protect his store that it be not lost, and taken from him. What shall I do to keep this treasure? how shall I hold it? I am afraid it will get away from me. It is a common speech; A great ship, is a great care; a great deal of the things of the world are a great worldly burthen; they that are in the fullest sufficiency of outward things, their estates and possessions bring them in as great an increase of troubles as of revenues. As they have plenty of riches, so they cannot avoid plenty of business and labour about them. Some old rich men have said, they were then as hard put to it to keep their riches, as they were in their younger dayes to gather and heap up riches.

Magna navis magna cura.

There is a third strait, which is worse then the former; as he is straitned to keep what he hath; so God in judgement gives him this strait in his fulness, that he fears his fulness is not full enough, and that his sufficiency is unsufficient for him; in the fulness of his sufficiency, he is thus in straits. There is an inward strait in his outward enlargements; when, indeed, he is rich, he is, in conceit, poor. For as it is with hypocrites in reference to spirituals, they think they have a fulness of sufficiency in them, when indeed they are in straits, in poverty and want: as Christ tells the Church of Laodicea (Revel. 3.) Thou saist I am rich, and and full, and need nothing, and knowest not that thou art poor, and empty, and naked, and blind, and wantest all things. Now I say, as in spirituals hypocrites oft conceit themselves full, when they are really empty: so in temporals, a worldly man often conceits himself empty, when he is really full. He saith, I have nothing, I am a poor man, I have scarce enough to serve another year, when indeed he is rich, and hath gold and silver, lands and goods enough for many years. This strait God brings wicked men into, in the midst of their sufficiency. This is a grievous curse, that while a man is laying field to field, land to land, bag to bag, and heap to heap, yet withal his mind and spirit is troubled and straitned, as if he had nothing, or were worse then nothing. One of the Ancients describes this strait of a covetous man, with abundance of lively Eloquence; Give me (saith he) a covetous man, daily seeking and stretching out the bounds of his habitation, as if he meant to live alone, and exclude all neighbourhood. Tell me now, doth this man (whom the whole earth cannot hold) seem to thee to be enlarged or straitned? Surely how far soever he extends the line of his possession (while that which he hath is not enough to him) he is locked up within the narrow compass of his own opinion.

Constitue mihi avarũ villarũ quotidie terminos proferentem excludentem vicinos: ntrũ is tibi dilatari an coarctari videtur, quem tellus ipsa non capit? quantacunq; spatia domus suæ porrexerit, claudit tur angustis opinionis suæ finibus, cui quod habet non est satis. Ambros. ser. 6. in Psal. 128.

Fourthly, Besides this internal and metaphorical strait, there is a plain literal strait into which God casts the wicked man, when he supposeth himself setled in the fulness of his sufficiency. That's the time God takes to bring him to it, when he stands upon the highest pinacle of worldly prosperity, then down he goes. In the Prophesie of Daniel (Chap. 4. 4.) we read what the Golden head Nebuchadnezzar speaks of his fulness. I Nebuchadnezzar was at rest in my house, and flourishing in my palace (here was a fulness of sufficiency, (ver. 29,30.) At the end of twelve months he walked in the palace, and said, Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the house of the Kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my Majesty? Here he boasts of the fulness of his sufficiency; now (vers. 31.) While the word was in the Kings mouth, there fell a voyce from heaven, and said, O King Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken, The Kingdom is departed from thee, &c. Thus he was brought to straits in the midst of his fulness. Again, Chap. 6. While Belteshazzer was in his height with his Nobles, in his chear and wine, he saw a hand-writing upon the wall, which made him tremble, and that very night Babylon was taken, and himself taken away in the fulness of his sufficiency. So in the Prophesie of mystical Babylon, in the fulness of her sufficiency she shall be in straits, (Rev. 18. 7, 8.) She shall be glorifying her self, the very moment before her ruine (they who glorifie themselves, judge themselves in a fulness of sufficiency) By how much she glorified her self, so much torment give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit as a Queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow: therefore shall her plagues come in one day. When she saith, I sit as a Queen, not only free from plagues, but full of majesty; then her plague comes. When the Apostle said to the Corinthians, Ye have reigned as Kings without us (1 Cor. 4. 8.) he checks their conceit of their own spiritual sufficiency, or sufficiency in spirituals, without the contribution of his aid and help, as the former words of that verse expound his meaning; Now ye are full, now ye are rich. And when Babylon saith, I sit as a Queen, her meaning is, that she hath a fulness of sufficiency, both in spirituals and in temporals, and then, even then, her plague comes. (Psal. 92. 7.) When the wicked spring as grass, and all the workers of iniquity flourish, it is that they may be destroyed for ever. And (to give but one instance more, 1 Thes. 5. 3.) When they shall say, peace and safety, (not only peace, but safety, all is quiet, and all will be quiet,) then sudden destruction shall come on them as travail on a woman with child, and they shall not escape. The straits of a woman in travail, and her sorrows, how terrible are they? and as these are alwayes unavoidable to her that is with child, so they are often sudden, when immediately before she was eating or sleeping, at ease and quiet: This is the wicked mans doom, he is not only punished but surprised; In the fulness of his sufficiency, he shall be in straits.

Every hand of the wicked shall come upon him.] Then there will be many hands upon him, for there are many wicked; yet there is a difference about that word which we render wicked; It hath two other significations besides that in the Text.

First, It signifies a labouring man, and in the verb to labour; so the rendring is made in these termes; Every hand of the labourer shall be upon him. There are two wayes in which that may be understood. First, say some, The hand of the labourer is, the hand of those who labour to help him. The sence which is intended by these Interpreters seems to be that of Solomon (Prov. 11. 21.) Though hand joyn in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished; That is, though many with united forces labour to uphold and defend him, yet the curse of God shall break through and consume him; his helpers shall help in vain, and they who labour for him, shall labour in vain; for the decree is gone out against him, down he must; All the world cannot save him. In the fulness of his sufficiency, he shall be in straits, even while many are labouring to keep him out of them. This is a truth, but I pass it, as supposing it not intended here.

עמל Significat 1 impium. 2 calamitosum. 3 laboriosum. Omnis manus laborantis veniet super eum. Etiamsi accesserit ei omnis manus laborãs. i. e. etiamsi omnes homines laborent in ejus commodum. Rab. Abra. & Isid. clar. Manus laborãtis, i.e. pauperum & mercenariorum, quos impius sua mercede & labore fraudavit. Rab. Lev.

Again, The hand of the labourer may rather be the hand of such poor as he set to work. Every hand of the labourer shall be on him. He found many poor labourers work, but he did not find them bread, he pinched them, and used them hardly, he oppressed and deceived them in their wages; as the Apostle James complains, (Chap. 5. 1, 4.) Go to now ye rich men, weep, and howl, for the misery that shall come upon you; behold the hire of those labourers which have reaped down your harvest cryes. These poor men who sweat at his work, and were sent home sad with tears in their eyes, not with money in their purses; every hand of these labourers shall be upon him: So Mr. Broughton renders it, Each hand of the injured and grieved shall come upon him; he injured and grieved the labourers, they laboured in body for him, and his cruel usage was worse then labour to their spirits. But as he took from the labourer, so the labourer shall take from him. Every hand of the labourer upon him.

Secondly, The word signifies, a man any way distressed or brought to misery. And then the meaning may be this; not only as before, that the hand of the poor who had laboured for him, but the hand of the rich whom he had impoverisht, the hands of all those whom he had unjustly vexed, shall come upon him and vex him.

Thirdly, The word as it signifies a labourer, and a man in misery; so a wicked man, as we translate it here, and frequently in other places of Scripture. The same word signifies labour, misery, and wickedness; because there is so much labour, and misery, so much trouble and vexation in wickedness; every hand of the wicked shall come upon him; God will let out the spirits of evil doers to take vengeance on him for his evil deeds.

In vadent eum omnes iniqui parati ad injuriam inferendam. Vatabl.

Hence note, God often makes one wicked man scourge another.

As God usually makes wicked men the scourge to his own people, so sometimes to one another. One Lyon destroys another, and a ravenous wolf sucks the bloud of a ravenous wolf. This point hath been formerly hinted, and therefore I insist not upon it; but proceed to the next verse, which insists still upon the reason of the wicked mans destruction.

Vers. 23. When he is about to fill his belly, God shall cast the fury of his wrath on him.

This verse, as was said before, is of the same sence with the former, setting forth the special time of Gods wrath upon the wicked man.

When he is about to fill his belly.] The Vulgar renders the words thus; O that he had filled his belly, that God might pour on him the fury of his wrath! As if he had wished for the filling up of the measure of the sin of this man, that he might come to his punishment; because till sin hath finished its work, the work of Judgment seldom begins. But the words sound threatning, not wishing, and are rather a prophesie then a prayer; When he is about to fill his belly, God shall do this.

Utinam impleatur venter ejus ut emittat in eum iram furoris sui. Vulg. Non votum est sed prophetia. Merc.

A second renders thus; Let it be that he fill his belly, yet God will pour upon him the fury of his wrath. As if he had said, all his riches and fulness shall be no fence against the wrath of God. The wicked call riches, their strong Tower, but the strong Tower that riches can make, is no defence, it is but as a paper-wall against the wrath of God. His full belly makes but the fairer mark for the arrows of the Almighty.

Esto ut impleat ventrem suum, Deus tamen emittet ei furorẽ iræ. Tygur.

We

We render it as respecting his action; When he is about to fill his belly, when the man thinks to take the fruit of his labours, he having been busie in projecting, and acting, intendeth to sit down in quiet, and feed upon what he had gotten; but when he is about to fill his belly, even in the very act, God shall cast the fury of his wrath upon him.

Dimittet iram, non cohibebit neq; continebit indignationem suam, sed faciet liberam potestatem suæ justitiæ sæviendi in impium.

God shall cast,] Or send it out. The wrath of God is sometimes (upon the matter) restrained, and kept in; as the Prophet speaks of the compassions of God, what is become of them? are they restrained? (Isa. 63.15.) The compassions of God used to come forth, but then they were restrained, or did not shew themselves. God was pleased to deal with them as if he had laid aside or put off all bowels of compassion. So the wrath of God is restrained, or held in sometimes. Men sin and wrath stirs not; God deals as if he had forgotten to be angry; But anon wrath lets flie. God shall cast fury and wrath, or the fury of his wrath upon him; he shall cast, and send it, as a dart, or an arrow out of a bow, or as a stone out of a sling, or as a thunderbolt from the clouds: God shall cast it upon him; the Text doth not express who, but the scope clears who it is; He, that is, God shall cast, either immediately, or mediately by some hand, commission'd by him for that work of judgment. God shall unprison, and let loose the fury of wrath, that is, his furious wrath, or hot fuming smoaking wrath upon him. Thus he speaks to shew how extreamly the Lord is heated and heightened against wicked men. Thus Mr. Broughton renders; God will send his hot anger upon him. The anger of his nostrils. A phrase often used to signifie Anger, because of the appearance and tokens of Anger there, Exod. 11.32. Isa. 5.25. And in divers other places which the reader may consult. This anger in the nostrils is opposed to the anger in the heart; for when the Scripture speaks of the anger of the nostrils, it notes anger acted, and put forth in execution. The Lord hath treasured wrath, he hath wrath in his heart when he seems to favour wicked men, and to shine upon them: wrath is not alwayes in his nostrils breathed and poured upon them.

Iram naſ. Heb.

God shall cast the fury of his wrath upon him, or upon it.

בו Utroq; modo potest accipi. 1. In ipsum impium. 2. In id quod paravit ad ventrem explendum. Masculine tamen potius accipiendum videtur ex eo quod sequitur. Merc.

It is taken both wayes. If we say upon it; The meaning is, upon his goods, or upon what he hath; When he is about to fill his belly, God shall pour his anger upon his Table, or upon his meat. We take it personally, upon him, upon the wicked man himself, who when he thinks to receive the greatest pleasure, shall feel the greatest smart, God shall pour fury upon him. The observation which this passage offers, is the same with what was observed in the close of the former verse, therefore I shall but name it.

When wicked men are full of hopes to take their fill of worldly joy, then God fills them with worldly sorrow.

This was said before, In the fulness of their sufficiency they shall be in straits. So that when we see wicked men at the fullest, or in their fulness sitting down to rest, to eat, drink, and be merry with what they have gotten, we may look on it as the presage of their approaching ruine. The Angel Intelligencer, who was sent abroad to see what was done in the world (Zech. 1.11.) brought back this report, that he had gone to and fro, and Behold all the earth sate still, and was at rest; All were about to fill their bellies. By earth, he means Babylon, or the Babylonians, the temporal power of that State, in opposition to the Church of God, they were all at rest, and said in their hearts, surely the world will never change, yet presently after they felt the greatest change, ruine fell on that Empire. This may comfort the people of God, when they see the real enemies of truth and righteousness in highest security; for then the day of their calamity is near, even at the doors. There is a twofold fulness, which wicked men usually have before their ruine. First, a fulness of sin. Secondly, a fulness of prosperity; they come to their fulness in both, and then comes their end. (Gen. 15.16.) The sins of the Amorites are not yet full; therefore the Amorites cannot be destroyed yet; and the Church of God cannot be delivered yet, but when the sin of the Amorites is full, God will destroy them, and deliver his Church. God leaves them as Christ speaks to the Pharisees (Mat. 23.32.) to fill up the measure of the iniquity of their fathers, and then he will deal with them. Now as there is a fulness of iniquity, so there is also a fulness of worldly prosperity; when the wicked have had their portion, their reward in the world, when as beasts they are fed and fatted with good things, or are about to fat themselves, then they are for the slaughter. So the Lord concludes concerning those oppressours (Amos 4.1.) Hear this word ye Kine of Bashan that are in the mountains of Samaria, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy, &c. The Lord God hath sworn by his holiness, that lo the day shall come on you, that he will take you away with hooks, and your posterity with fish-hooks; when the fulness of your worldly prosperity and fatness is come, then God shall take you away, or send leanness among your fat ones. And again (Chap. 6.1.) Wo to them that are at ease in Zion, and trust in the mountains of Samaria, which are named chief of the Nations, to whom the house of Israel came. These (vers. 3.) put far away the evil day, and caused the seat of violence to come near; They lay upon beds of Ivory, and did eat the Lambs out of the flock, &c. While they were thus dissolved into mirth and musick, a woful voice sounded in their ears (vers. 7.) Therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive, and the banquet of them that stretched themselves shall be removed. The very now of their freest joy, was the now of their captivation and sorrow. Zophar, as if this were hardly believed at all, or could never be enough believed, presseth and repeateth it again, in the last word of the verse in hand.

And shall rain it upon him while he is eating.

This is but an explication or repetition of the former words; When he is about to fill his belly, God shall cast the fury of his wrath, and rain it on him while he is eating. There are two words to be considered in this clause.

First, Raining.

Secondly, While he is eating.

He shall rain it.] Here is a terrible shower, a shower of fury, of wrath, God shall rain it. God is said to rain wrath.

First, To note the suddenness of it; rain (many times) comes very unexpectedly.

Secondly, To note the unavoidableness of it: there is no stopping of the rain, who can stop the bottles of the clouds but God himself? he can stop them up when he pleaseth; but all the power on earth cannot. This rain is such that there is no avoiding of it; we may get out of the ordinary rain into our houses, or under covert; but the rain of Gods wrath soaks through every house, how strongly soever leaded or covered; There is no shelter (but Christ) against the storms of divine wrath. He is a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest (Isa. 32.2.) but besides him nothing is.

Ideo pluvi-endi verbo utitur, quia ut pluviæ vehementi è cœlo decidenti nemo potest resistere, ita, &c. Merc.

Thirdly, He is said to rain wrath, to shew the quantity of it, there shall be abundance, he will pour it down on you. Rain is opposed to dew: it shall not only come as the dew, or as a few heat drops, but as a soaking sweeping rain. The Prophet exhorts (Hos. 10.12.) Sow to your selves in righteousness, reap in mercy, break up your fallow ground: for it is time to seek the Lord till he rain righteousness, that is, till he send Christ, who is made to us of God righteousness in abundance; or till he pour out his Spirit upon you, who will cause you to bring forth the fruits of righteousness abundantly. As the raining of righteousness, so the raining of wrath, notes abundant wrath. It shall rain upon him

While he is eating.] There is a threefold rendring of that. For the word which we translate eating, signifies flesh, either that which is eaten, or that which doth eat; living or eating flesh most properly, though it also signifie dead flesh, or that which is eaten. So Mr. Broughton, He will rain upon him into his flesh; That is, upon his body; and the body by a synechdoche is put for the whole man, body, and soul. As if he had said, God hath not a quarrel only with this mans estate and his goods, but with his flesh, and bones, yea, and with his soul, too; he will vex him soul and body: So that as before he shewed what God would do upon his estate, that should be consumed; so now what upon his person; wrath falls upon his body, upon his very back; He shall rain it upon him, into his flesh.

בשרו Caro pluet super eum, etiam in carnem ejus, è corpus ejus.

Secondly, The word signifies as the flesh of a man, or living flesh, so, any flesh, dead flesh prepared to be eaten, or any thing which is eatable. Hence the name of the place where Christ was born was called Bethelem, that is, the house of bread. And thus it is rendered here, he shall rain it upon him, even upon his bread, or upon his meat. As God, when his own people are eating, and their table spread, he not only rains a blessing upon them, but upon their meat also, that is, he commands their meat to strengthen and refresh them. So when the wicked man is about to fill his belly, the curse falls not only upon him, but upon his meat; God shall rain on him, even upon his meat.

לחם Cibus omnis est a hinc בית לחם Bethlehem dicta quasi regio frumenti ferax, domus panis. Merc.

Our translation refers to the person in the act of eating, not to the meat which he eateth. The general meaning of either translation meets in one; For though wrath may fall upon a mans person, and not upon his meat; he may thrive with what he eats, grow lusty and strong, while he is under wrath; yet whensoever wrath falls upon the wicked mans meat, it is in order to his person or himself. He shall rain it upon him while he is eating. How exact is the wrath of God? For at the instant when a man is eating, he of all other times would lay aside fear, be chearful, and rejoyce; Then he unbends himself, though he have been busie all the day; If any come to him he saith, I pray let me alone at meal, that I may be merry with my wife and children, with my friends or neighbours; when I am at my meat, let me be quiet. But when he is eating, wrath is dropping; God picks out that time on purpose to put a sting into his punishment, and to make his misery more remarkable. Such (Mat. 24. 38.) is the description of the judgment that came upon the world, it rained upon them indeed, when they were eating; As it was in the dayes before the flood, they did eat and drink, and were marrying, and giving in marriage, till the day that Noah went into the Ark. Christ expresseth those things especially wherein men take most worldly contentment, eating, and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage. To these that age let themselves loose, or set themselves upon; these are not sinful in themselves, but they used them sinfully, that is, sensually, to satisfie their lusts, and please their senses; therefore the Spirit of God fixeth the judgment upon that season, they were eating, and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage, and then God rained upon them the fury of his wrath. The children of Israel lusted after flesh (Psal. 78.) and the Lord gave it them; He rained flesh upon them as dust, and feathered fowls like as the sand of the Sea (vers. 27.) But he rained wrath upon them with it (vers. 30, 31.) While their meat was yet in their mouths, (while they were eating) the wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and smote down the chosen men of Israel.

All these instances concenter fully in Zophars Text; That In the fulness of his sufficiency, and while he is taking his sweetest content in his sufficiency, God rains down wrath.

Pluet super eum bellum suum. Vulg. מלחמה Bellum a לחם vesci, edere, quia in bello homines se invicem cadendo devorant & absumunt.

Further, The old Latine Translator gives the words thus; And he shall rain his war upon him. This difference ariseth from the copiousness of the Original word, Lechem, which as it signifies eating, or any thing eaten; so also war and battel. The reason is, because the sword is a devourer, and in war men eat up one another; Nation eats up Nation; as men eat other flesh, so war is an eater, and devourer of men: therefore the same word may well signifie, to eat, and to make war. And this Translation, though the Grammatical form of the Hebrew is wrested by it (and therefore I lay it by) yet renders the scope of the Text fully, and answers that of the eleventh Psalm (vers. 5, 6.) The Lord tryeth the righteous, but him that loveth violence his soul hateth; upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire, and brimstone, and an horrible tempest, this shall be the portion of their cup. Which (I conceive) may (in pursuance of Zophars similitude) be thus illustrated, as if he had said, when he is drinking, when he hath a cup of sweet wine in his hand, or some delicious liquor at his lips, God shall rain fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest into or upon his cup; the wrath of God shall fill his cup, and so be (as it were) the portion of it. While the wicked man is drinking, wrath is the portion of his cup; and while he is eating, wrath is the portion of his dish. God shall rain it on him while he is eating.

Zophar having thus far carried on this point, shewing what God will do with the wicked man in all his enjoyments, shews yet other wayes and instruments, which God prepareth and armeth to vex and ruine him.

VERS. 24, 25, 26.

He shall flee from the iron-weapon, and the bow of steel shall strike him through.
It is drawn, and cometh out of the body, yea the glittering sword cometh out of his gall: terrors are upon him.
All darkness shall be hid in his secret places: a fire not blown shall consume him: it shall go ill with him that is left in his Tabernacle.

ZOphar having said (vers. 22, 23.) That God pours the fury of his wrath upon the wicked man when he thinks himself safest and furthest removed from it, even in the fulness of his sufficiency, and when he is about to fill his belly (then God deals with him; and rains upon him while he is eating, mingling his blood with his bread, his tears with his wine) He proceeds in this context to shew,

First, The instruments.
Secondly, The effects of that wrath or judgment.

The instruments are four,

First, The iron-weapon.
Secondly, The bow of steel.
Thirdly, The glittering sword.
Fourthly, A fire not blown.

Here are store of arms to make war upon the wicked man. We have here also the effects of this dreadful war, and these are of two sorts.

First, Upon himself.
Secondly, Upon others.

The effects which appear upon himself, are of two sorts.

First, Outward.
Secondly, Inward.

The outward effects, First, he shall be stricken through with them. Secondly, he shall be consumed with them. The inward effects are fears or terrours; which are testified by that consequent, his flight, He runs from the iron-weapon, and the bow of steel.

The effect which is upon others is laid down in the close of vers. 26. It shall go ill with him that is left in his Tabernacle: not only shall wrath overtake him, but it shall overtake those that appertain to him. Thus of the analysis or parts considerable in this context.

Vers. 24. He shall flee from the iron-weapon.

He shall flee.] Flight is the pace of a coward. So the word is used all the Scripture over; The wicked man hath no heart for good, and he hath as little against evil. His spirit is gone, and at the approach of danger his body is going or rather running; his spirit is fallen from his heart into his heels; and he defends himself by his feet, not by his hands: when the iron-weapon comes, the righteous will rather die, then run, if duty bids them stay: but the wicked Shall flee from the iron-weapon.

The word which we translate iron-weapon, signifies all sorts of hand weapons, or weapons with which we strike at hand, such as are the sword, and spear. The word properly signifies to salute, or kiss: And the reason why these kind of arms and weapons, are expresst by that word, is, because a man fights with them face to face: and comes near to an adversary, even as if he came to salute or to kiss him. There are weapons with which we may fight at a distance, and never come near our enemy.

נשק Denotat omne genus armorū quæ manu agitantur; radix significat osculari eò quod hujusmodi armis non nisi cominus & à parte anteriori vultus cui oscula intigisolent, feriunt. Bold.

He shall flee from the iron-weapon.] That is, from all sorts of hand-weapons, with which we oppose and smite our assailants, or defend our selves.

Some interpret this iron-weapon, not literally, but tropically for the plague, or pestilence, or some deadly disease, which according to the language of Scripture, is compared to that iron-weapon the sword, or to an arrow (1 Chron. 21. 27.) when the Angel was sent to destroy the People of Jerusalem with the pestilence, after David had numbred numbred them, the Text saith; The Lord commanded the Angel, and he put up his sword again into the sheath thereof. The pestilence is the sword, and the stroak of it is like smiting with the sword. In the ninety first Psalm, that other instrument of death, the Arrow, signifies the plague (vers. 5.) Thou shalt not be afraid of the terrour by night, nor of the arrow that flieth by day; That is, of the pestilence. And even in prophane Authors, terrible diseases, such as the pestilence, are called the weapons of their Gods, with which they contended, and made roar with mortal men. This metaphorical sword, and arrow of the pestilence, is a weapon from which many flee as fast as from the sword of the fiercest enemy. Yet I conceive, that is not intended in this Text; the iron weapon here, including all manner of outward instruments of divine wrath which wound the wicked man. He shall flee from the iron weapon. We translate it as a direct assertion; He shall flee. Some render it as a supposition; If he flee from the iron weapon; Or as Mr. Broughton, When he flees from the iron armour. And then the other part of the verse joyns with it thus; When he fleeth, or if he flee from the iron weapon, the bow of steel shall strike him through. And though there be not that particle of supposition expresst in the Hebrew, yet it is usually understood in Texts of this significancy. Mal. 1.4. They shall build, and I will pull down; That is, if they build, I will pull down; or whensoever they begin to build, I will begin to pull down. So here, He shall flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of steel shall strike him through; That is, if he flee from the iron-weapon, or whensoever he thinks to make an escape by flying from the iron-weapon, then the bow of steel shall strike him through. According to this reading the whole verse is a proverbial speech, implying thus much; That while a wicked man flies, or seeks to avoid one evil, he shall fall into another; When he flees from the iron-weapon, the bow of steel shall strike him through. Like that of the Latines; He fell upon the rock, while he thought to escape the gulph.

Βέλη ἐκεβόλα Απολλωνος. Homer.

Fugientũ ab armis ferreis, transverberat eũ arcus chalibeus. Merl.

Ubi se putavit leviora pericula effugisse, in graviora incidet. Merc.

Incidit in Scyllã cupiens vitare charybdin.

The bow of steel shall strike him through.

The bow, that is, the arrow of the bow, or the bullet put into the bow: for from the bow of steel sometimes arrows, sometimes bullets are discharged; the arrow, or the bullet with which this steel bow is charged shall strike him through. The word rendered to strike through, signifies excision or cutting off; and hence the Hebrew phrase, A Son of Excision, answering that of the Greek, which we expres, a son of perdition, that is, a man devoted to total destruction. The bow of steel shall strike him through, cut him off, or quite destroy him. A bow of steel is the strongest bow. David, to shew the extraordinary strength which he expected to receive from God, saith, A bow of steel shall be broken by mine arms (Psal. 18.34.) To draw a bow of steel, shews strength, and to break it shews more strength. A bow of steel gives a deadly blow, and smites home.

חלם excindo unde בני חלום filii excisionis. Drus.

Again, This word, which we translate, to strike through, others render, to change. The bow of steel shall change him, that is, kill him; death is our great change. Further, The word is rendred to pass by. The arrow often misseth the mark, sometime it glides by the mark, or doth but graze upon it. Taking this Translation, the sence of the whole verse riseth thus; Suppose the wicked man flee, and make his escape from the iron weapon; suppose also that the steel bow be discharged at him, and the arrow pass by, and not hit him; suppose, that he escape the first weapon, and the second, yet (saith he in the next words) The glittering sword shall come out of his gall; another weapon is ready to do it.

חלף Pertransire; pertransibit eum arcus, q.d. eia, ita fit quod impius fugerit ab armis ferreis, sed & pertransierit eum arcus, numquid ideo immunis erit. Bold.

According to this exposition, these two verses are connected as they connect the two parts of this verse, who give it (as was lately touched) thus, If he flee from the iron-weapon, the bow of steel shall strike him through. Now the supposition is carried one step further. If he flee from the iron-weapon, and the bow of steel miss him, or glance away, yet the glittering sword shall come out of his gall. But rather take it according to our reading: He shall flee from the iron-weapon, and the bow of steel shall strike him through. Here are many terms, and variety of warlike instruments; The Text being (as it were) the Inventory of a little Magazine, or Armory of weapons.

Whence Observe, God hath instruments of all sorts at command, with which to punish wicked men.

We have here the Iron-weapon, and the bow, here is sword, and fire. God cannot want means to take revenge upon those who rebel against him. As the Lord hath various instruments of mercy for the protection and defence of his cause and people. (Cant. 4.) In the Tower of David there hang a thousand shields, that is, shields enow. God hath many and manifold instruments of defence to protect and safegard those that trust upon him; he hath a thousand shields for them. Now as the Lord hath a thousand shields, or defensive weapons, for the protection of his own people, so he hath a thousand bows and arrows, and spears, and swords, to wound and destroy his or their enemies. How can God want weapons, who can make any thing a weapon? For as the Baptist told the Jews who gloried in their fleshly descent from Abraham, as if God were tied to Abraham's line, or as if they being out of the way, God knew not how to be supplied with a people; I tell you (saith John) God is able of these stones to raise up Children to Abraham, (Mat. 3.9.) As if he had said; Think not that God will be straitned for a people, if he remove you, for he can raise another people to himself out of those who are as unlikely, and in humane reason as much indisposed to shew forth his praise as these stones are. Even thus, if all weapons and visible means for the destruction of wicked men were removed, God can make any thing a weapon, he can make an iron weapon out of a straw, or the grass of the field. As God can easily supply himself with instruments to serve his providence for the good of those who are vessels of mercy and heirs of salvation, so he can quickly have a supply of instruments to annoy those who are vessels of wrath and children of perdition.

Secondly, We may take notice how these weapons are described in their Effectualness, Striking through, &c.

Whence Observe, The weapons and means which God useth for the punishing of wicked men, shall be effectual, they shall do their work.

What ever weapon God sends on his errand shall do it to purpose, the bow of steel strikes through. It doth not give a light wound, and skare the flesh a little, but goes to the heart, and cleaves the bones. God hath a mighty arm, and according to the might of his own arm, is the might of his instruments. As they act not by their own will, so not by their own might. What the Apostle speaks about the weapons of our spiritual warfare (2 Cor. 10. 4.) They are not carnal, but mighty through God. What to do? To pull down strong holds, to lay all level, to subdue all sinful powers, or the power of sin within us. What, I say, is spoken of those spiritual weapons, is true also of these corporal and visible weapons, the sword, the bow, and the arrow; when God sends them forth to execute his will, and fulfil his counsels, they are not carnal, but mighty through God. Though they are weapons of flesh, yet they are not, like flesh, frail and powerless; though they are weapons of flesh, as to matter and form, yet they will declare themselves weapons of spirit, as to the effect and success; they shall prevail over the strongest enemies, and strike through the thickest of their defences. The Lord can weaken the strongest weapons of the enemies, and so blunt their sharpest edge, that they shall do no hurt, but be as a wooden dagger in the hand of him that wields them, of how well tempered metal soever they are made, and how well soever their edge be set. This is it which the Prophet assures the Church of in the name of the Lord (Isa. 54. 17.) For having made a promise of salvation and safety to the Church, it might be objected, how can we be safe, who have so many enemies, so many weapons formed against us? how can we be safe when so many Smiths are at work, making swords, and forging instruments of death against us? The Lord answers (vers. 17.) No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper. I grant there are many forming weapons, whetting and preparing their swords against thee; but no weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper. Now (I say) as the Lord gives check to all weapons that are formed against his people, and saith, they shall not prosper, they shall not hurt the least of my children, the meaneſt of my ſervants. So, if himſelf form a weapon againſt the higheſt and mightieſt of his enemies, it ſhall proſper to their deſtruction; the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike them through, and the fire ſhall conſume them to the very ſtumps. That is a ſecond note from the effectualneſs of theſe weapons here deſcribed.

Thirdly, When God is about to rain down judgment and war upon the wicked man; what doth he? The Text ſaith, He flees from the iron weapon; that is, he endeavours to flee from it, he doth what he can to eſcape.

Obſerve this from it, The ſtudy of a wicked man, when trouble is upon him, is not how to improve, or make good uſe of it, how to get his heart humbled under it, and his life bettered by it; but only how to get it off, or how to get away from it.

Here is not a word in the Text of humbling himſelf when he ſees the iron weapon, here is no mention of ſuing to God, and ſeeking to make his peace with him, here is no acknowledgment of his ſin, that he deſerved to be wounded and deſtroyed; but all the matter is how to eſcape, how to get out of the reach of danger. He never labours to make his peace with God, but only ſtrives how to avoid the war of God. There is another frame of ſpirit in believers, they do not make it their work to run from the judgments of God, but to make a right uſe and improvement of them; when the ſword comes, or the arrow comes, they enquire how to give God the glory of his ſmitings and woundings, they flee from thoſe weapons only by fleeing to God. Whereas wicked men flee theſe weapons, by fleeing from God; godly men flee them, by flying to God, that is, they make God their refuge, their hiding-place; If they hide themſelves from the iron weapon, they hide themſelves in God; If they run from the iron weapon, they run to God. God is a godly mans Tower, and Fort, and hiding place; he flies unto, and into God, that he may be ſafe.

Fourthly, As this ſhifting and fleeing, when the iron weapon comes, notes the impenitency of wicked men, who never think of turning to but only of running from God: ſo it notes alſo the cowardiſe and baſeneſs of their ſpirits.

Hence Obſerve, A wicked man hath no courage in an evil day.

When troubles riſe, his ſpirit falls; though he may make a buſtle, yet he hath no heart, no true fortitude; he either flees, or is meditating a flight. And 'tis no wonder that a wicked man ſhould flee being purſued; when Solomon tells us that he fleeth, when none purſues him. It is no marvel if he flee at the ſight of the iron weapon, when he flees meerly from a fanſied weapon. How can he but flee from the ſtroak of the ſword; when another Text tells us, that he flees at the very ſhaking of a leaf. They who are fearleſs of doing moral evil, are moſt fearful at the appearance of pœnal evils.

Fifthly, He flees, but what doth he get by it? When he fleeth from the iron weapon, the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through. What gets he now by his flight?

The point is this, The ſhifts and evaſions of a wicked man ſhall not profit him.

That is, when he fleeth, he ſhall not flee, or he ſhall not eſcape. If he get out of the ſtroak of one weapon, another weapon ſhall ſtrike him; or according to the ſecond interpretation of the words, ſuppoſe he flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of ſteel miſs him alſo, yet the ſword ſhall come out of his gall. So that by all his evaſions, he ſhall not evade the face of danger. As a carnal heart hath a thouſand deviſes and ſhifts to excuſe his ſin; but his deviſes and excuſes do but faſten ſin more upon him: his conſcience gets no eaſe at all by his wit; yea his conſcience is more wounded by the excuſes and pleas that he makes for his ſin. Such alſo is the fruit of all the evaſions and deviſes of a wicked man to get out of danger; they bring him and danger nearer together, or they entangle him in worſer dangers. We have a clear Text for that, (Iſa. 24. 18.) And it ſhall come to paſs, that he who fleeth from the noiſe of fear ſhall fall into the pit, and he that cometh up out of the midſt of the pit ſhall be taken in a ſnare. He is remedileſs after all his remedies. There was but a noiſe of fear, when he fled, danger was at a diſtance; but while he is fleeing from the noiſe of fear, he falls into the mouth of danger, a pit: And being in the pit, he ſtrives and ſtruggles to get out, hoping yet to find his deſired ſafety and enlargement, but then he falls into a ſnare, a worſe evil then the pit: He that falls into a pit, is at liberty to get out; but he that is in a ſnare is bound faſt, he can get no further, ſtill his caſe is worſe and worſe. We find the ſame ſucceſs in the Propheſie of Amos, (9. 1.) I ſaw the Lord ſtanding upon the Altar, and he ſaid, ſmite the lintel of the door that the poſts may ſhake, and cut them in the head, all of them, and I will ſlay the laſt of them with the ſword. As if he had ſaid, there ſhall be an utter ſlaughter; for the firſt two or three men may be ſlain, yea hundreds may be ſlain, yet the laſt may eſcape: but when he ſaith, The laſt ſhall be ſlain, the meaning is, I will ſlay them all, or all of them ſhall be ſlain. But will theſe men ſtand till the ſword come to them, will the laſt man ſtand when he ſees the ſword deſtroy thoſe ſo faſt that were before him? No, it may be he will flee, yet ſaith God, I will ſlay the laſt: for, He that fleeth ſhall not flee away, that is, he ſhall not deliver himſelf, nor eſcape by flight. The ſame Prophet ſpake as much before (Amos 5. 18,19.) Wo to you that deſire the day of the Lord, to what end is it for you? The day of the Lord is darkneſs, and not light; As if a man did flee from a Lyon, and a Bear met him; or went into the houſe, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a Serpent bit him. It will not be either unprofitable or beſides the point, to open this Text a little. Wo to you that deſire the day of the Lord. Why doth the Prophet thunder out wo againſt them that deſired the day of the Lord? Was there ſin in that deſire? was it a fault to wiſh for the day of the Lord? The day of the Lord, of which he there ſpeaks, is a day of judgment, or a day of tryal; why ſhould the Prophet denounce a wo againſt thoſe who deſire that day? It is a part of the character of the Saints in the New Teſtament, To love the appearing of Chriſt (1 Tim. 4. 8.) Saints long for the day of the Lord, they pray for it, and O that the day of the Lord would come; why then doth Amos ſay, Wo to you that deſire the day of the Lord?

I anſwer, The Prophet may be underſtood,

Firſt, Of thoſe, who in a kind of prophane boldneſs deſired the day of the Lord, as ſome will do, calling God to judge them, or wiſhing that God would come to judgment; not that they have ground of confidence in the day of judgment, but only to clear themſelves in the judgment, and from the cenſure of men. The Prophet might well ſay, Wo to you who thus deſire the day of the Lord; you think you are hardly dealt with now by man; But it will be worſe with you in the day of the Lord.

Secondly, As there are ſome who in a bold prophaneneſs of ſpirit ſeem to deſire the day of the Lord, ſo there are others who call for and invite it impudently in ſcorn and mockery. Such are deſcribed by the Prophet (Iſaiah 5. 19.) Wo to them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin as it were with a Cart-rope. That ſay, let him make ſpeed, and haſten his work that we may ſee it, and let the counſel of the holy One of Iſrael draw nigh and come, that we may know it. They who draw iniquity with cords of vanity; that is, who make haſt to ſin, ſaid, let him make ſpeed, and haſten. What ſhould he haſten? The day of judgment, or thoſe judgments which the Prophet had often threatned. As if they had ſaid to the Prophet, You have often told us of the day of the Lord, and that he would reckon with us ſhortly; let him make ſpeed, and haſten the work that we may ſee it, and let the counſel of the holy one of Iſrael draw nigh; you have long ſpoken of it, as near, even as at the doors, but as we feel, ſo we believe no ſuch thing. The Apoſtle Peter Propheſieth of ſuch (2 Pet. 3. 3.) In the laſt dayes there ſhall come ſcoffers, walking after their own luſts, and ſaying, Where is the promiſe of his coming? for ſince the fathers fell aſleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the Creation. Where is the promiſe of his coming? Pray, let us ſee the performance of it. Wo to you that ſcoffingly deſire the day of the Lord, you will find it no jeſting matter when once it comes, it will be a ſad a black day to you, who now make your ſelves merry with it.

Thirdly, Thus, Wo to you that deſire the day of the Lord, being conceited of your own innocency, as ſure (in your own ſence) that God will acquit and pronounce you

you innocent. For the Prophet speaks of those who had fallen under and were vext with the reproofs of the word; these desired the day of the Lord, supposing he would deal more gently with them then those Prophets had done, he would not be so severe, or not judge them so bad as the Prophets reported them to be; saith he, Wo to you that desire the day of the Lord, because you think his Prophets and Ministers handle you too roughly; you know not what you say; if our day be so terrible, how terrible will the day of the Lord be? It will be as if a man should flee from a Lyon, and a Bear should meet him: you think we are Lyons, if you flee from our day, the day of the Lord will be as a Bear, it will tear you worse. When (in this case) you appeal from us to the tribunal of God; it is as if a man leaning on a wall, and a Serpent should bite him; such you will find the day of the Lord when 'tis too late. What's our day to the day of the Lord? The day of the Word is a terrible day of judgment upon the consciences of wicked men. But the day of the Lords Judgment is far more terrible. Some have had a hope that the hell of the damned beyond this life, is not so bad as the hell of conscience, when a man is condemned of himself in this life, and have therefore even wisht for that hell, that they might be eased of this; yea some have ventured upon hell, thrusting themselves by a violent hand out of this world, that they might escape the hell of a perplexed conscience, which they felt in it. Whereas alas, it is but fleeing from a Lyon to meet with a Bear, or going from the heat of the Sun into the heat of the fire. Thus the Text in Amos (taken in either of these senses) is a proof of the point in hand, that wicked men who would avoid this or that judgment of God in this life, do but run themselves upon some worser judgment here; even as they who would avoid the judgment of God in his word shall find a sorer judgment at the end of the world. Moses useth that phrase of fleeing seven wayes, twice in one Chapter (*Deut.*28.7.25.) At the seventh verse, it is threatned against the enemies of the people of Israel, in case they did obey; and in the twenty fifth verse 'tis threatned against Israel, in case they disobeyed, that they should flee seven wayes. The meaning is not that they should have seven or many wayes of escaping, or that in any of these wayes they should be safe; for the intent of Moses is to shew that they should no way or no where be safe: For they should be assaulted and compassed about with so many dangers, that they should flee seven wayes, that is, all manner of wayes, endeavouring to escape, but they should escape in never a one of them: though they fled seven or seven hundred wayes, yet God would send a sword, as many wayes after them, or if they mist and escaped one sort of evil, another should be ready at their side; As Zophar hath it, He shall flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of steel shall strike him thorow.

Vers. 25. It is drawn, and cometh out of his body.

What is drawn? We may refer it to the arrow of the bow before spoken of; The bow of steel shall strike him through, it is drawn, and cometh out of his body. Out of what body? Some by the Original word which we translate body, understand the Quiver in which the arrow was; for the quiver is to the arrow as the body is to the soul, The sheath of it. Now saith he, it is drawn, and cometh out of his body; that is, it is pulled out of his quiver, and put into the bow ready to be shot: Thus Mr. Broughton, The Arrow shall be drawn and come out of the quiver: Others conceive, that by body, we are to understand the body of him that shoots, because the Archer hangs his quiver by his side, and when he pulls out an arrow, it is as if he pulled it out of his body.

Lastly, Take it properly, it is drawn, and cometh out of his body, that is, out of the body of the wicked man, against whom it was shot, it strikes him through, and cometh out of his body beyond him. And so it is a circumlocution to express a deep and deadly wound. It is (that is, the bow is) drawn, and cometh out of his body; That is, the shot hits the man and comes out of his body. So the next clause suits it.

Yea the glittering sword cometh out of his gall.] As if he had said; As soon as he is stricken through with the arrow, he shall be run through with the sword too. The word which we translate glittering sword, properly signifies lightning, and in that language the blade of a sword, because when a man brandisheth a well furbished sword, it glitters and flashes in the eye like lightning. So the Prophet Ezekiel describes the sword, (Chap. 21. 9, 10.) A sword, a sword is sharpned, and also furbished; It is sharpned to make a sore slaughter, it is furbished that it may glitter. And as it signifies a sword, so also (upon the same ground) the head of an arrow; For if the head of an arrow, of steel, or brass, be made very bright, it glitters in the air like lightning, as a sword doth; And we read in Scripture of making arrows bright as well as swords; as the same Prophet speaks in the same Chapter (vers. 21.) The King of Babylon stood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two wayes to use divination: he made his arrows bright. And (*Zech.*9.14.) His arrows shall go forth as lightning. Thus we may render it here, keeping still to the allusion of lightning; The bow of steel shall strike him through, it is drawn, and cometh out of the body, and glittering it comes out of his gall. So, Mr. Broughton; The arrows shall be drawn and come out of the quiver, the head shall be in his gall; That is, the head of the arrow. But whether we expound the word (Barak) of the sword or of the arrow-head, it makes no difference as to Zophars scope, which is only to shew that the wicked man shall certainly receive a deadly blow.

There is yet another translation, which draws up the Text into the form of a similitude, taking the word (Barak) in its proper sense, for lightning, thus; The bow of steel shall strike him through, it is drawn, and cometh out of his body, and shall pass through his gall like lightning; As if he had said, it shall pass speedily and swiftly; an arrow or a bullet from a strong bow passeth like lightning. What makes such speed as lightning? Indeed the motion of an arrow is slow and sluggish in comparison of lightning; and therefore in Scripture the coming of a thing or person like lightning, notes the most sudden coming. When Christ would set forth the quickness and unexpectedness of his appearance, he saith, As the lightning cometh out of the East and shineth even unto the West, so shall the coming of the Son of man be (Mat. 24.27. And thus to say, a sword or an arrow shall pass through the gall as lightning, carrieth this sense, it shall pass suddenly. The vulgar translation keeping it to that literal construction of the Hebrew, useth the participle, and lightning in the bitterness of it; that is, in the bitterness of that death which follows the wound inflicted: Death is bitter, and those things which death in them, may well be said to have bitterness in them. These words being thus an enforcement of the same thing more lively to describe the unavoidable destruction and sudden death of this wicked man, by some killing weapon, sword or bow, or any of like use and nature, I will only give this Note from it;

The wound which God gives his enemies, is an incurable wound.

He that is stricken through the gall, is past cure; we had that word (Job 16.) Where complaining, he saith; He hath poured my gall upon the ground; that is, he hath given me a deadly wound. When a beast is kill'd for food, the gall is poured out, lest that should imbitter the parts about it: And if once the gall be wounded through, there's no remedy against death. The Lord can send a Judgment, which shall be like an arrow passing through the gall, which all the Physitians in the world cannot heal. When the people of Israel saw their wound, they went to this King, and to that King, to the Assyrian, and to King Jareb, yet they could not heal them, nor cure their wound, (*Hos.*5.13.) They were as a people stricken through the gall. God can give wounds which no Balsom of mans devising or compounding can cure.

Terrors are upon him.] These words shew the inward effects of the judgments of God upon a wicked man; Terrors are upon him. The word is Emims, which in Scripture is sometimes used, to note a sort of terrible people (*Deut.*2.10.) The Emims dwelt there in times past, a people great, and many, and tall, as the Anakims. The Emims were a great and tall people, a race of Giants; and they had their name Emams from a root signifying fear, because their great stature, and vast limbs raised the passion of fear in their beholders. Emims are terrible ones. So, some render it here, The Emims shall fall upon him, that is, men of fierce and cruel spirits, men of mighty power, and implacable malice.

Acies vel lamina gladii appellatur Hebraicè ברק fulgur, quod fulgoris more splendeat.

Et fulgurans in amaritudine sua. Vulg.

נוח & נר proprie corpus metaphoricè vagina. Egrediens de vagina sua. Vulg.

Exlit è corpore i. e. evagina, quæ est velut corpus gladio intra quam continetur, vel si ad sagittam referas est pharetra. Merc.

But we take the word properly, as noting inward terrour: fear, and anguiſh take hold of a man, worſe then any Emims or Giants in the world; A man were better to have all the ſons of Anak take hold of him then the fear of which the Text ſpeaks. This argueth the compleatneſs of a wicked mans miſery, he ſhall not only feel the iron weapon, and the bow of ſteel, and the glittering ſword, outward terrours, but he ſhall be fill'd with inward terrours. His ſoul is wounded worſe then his body. Some interpret it near this ſenſe, of evil ſpirits and furies that vex the minds of wicked men, as if legions of theſe ſhould be alwayes about him. The vulgar Latine ſaith, The horrible ones ſhall fall upon him. This point hath been ſpoken to at large (Chap. 15.24. & Chap. 18.21.) and therefore I ſhall not proſecute it in this place, but refer the Reader to thoſe former diſcuſſions of it. Only take this Obſervation:

Venient ſuper eum horribiles. Vul.

God can wound within, as well as without.

He hath weapons to ſmite the ſpirit, as well as the fleſh; when the arrow and the ſword are in the fleſh, fears and terrours ſhall beſet the ſpirit of his enemies. Man can both ſpeak and act terrible, but God only can ſend out Terrours. Terrours are upon him.

Verſ. 26. All darkneſs ſhall be hid in his ſecret place.

All darkneſs] Imports darkneſs of all ſorts, and of all degrees. All darkneſs, is whatſoever can be called darkneſs. Or all darkneſs, is perfect darkneſs, pure darkneſs, darkneſs without the leaſt mixture of any light; Darkneſs which hath nothing but darkneſs in it. God is all light; Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, He is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all. There is not the leaſt tincture of darkneſs in him. The portion of this man is all darkneſs, and no light, no comfort at all, wholly darkneſs. So the word (Col) is uſed (Eccleſ. 12.13.) Fear God, and keep his Commandments, for this is (Col ha Adam) All man, that is, the whole duty of man. Thus here, All darkneſs ſhall be upon him. We may diſtinguiſh this darkneſs, into outward, or inward darkneſs; ſpiritual or corporal darkneſs. I have upon other paſſages ſpoken of both: therefore I forbear here. All darkneſs ſhall

Quaſcunque quæſierit latebras, ubi ſe tutũ fore putat & immunem à dei Judicio, id nihil ei proderit, ubiq; ei abditæ erunt tenebræ calamitatũ. Merc.

Be hid in his ſecret place.] Trouble ſhall lie cloſe like a thief to ſurpriſe him; As men hide themſelves in darkneſs, ſo this mans darkneſs ſhall be hid. Both words ſignifie to hide, or to lay a thing up. We may interpret it firſt of trouble upon the ſpirit of the wicked man. The mind and conſcience are ſecret places; Now as the mind and conſcience of the wicked man is defiled (Tit. 1.15.) as well as his hand and tongue, ſo his mind and conſcience ſhall be darkned, there ſhall be nothing but darkneſs there.

Secondly, Whereas he ſaid before, The wicked man ſhall flee; and he that flees, betakes himſelf to ſome ſecret place (hiding places are ſecret places.) Some therefore interpret it thus; He ſhall flee to ſome hole, or thicket in his retirement; but when he comes thither, all darkneſs ſhall be hid there, that is, he ſhall find no ſafety in thoſe places to which he flees for refuge. When he flees from affliction, he ſhall find affliction. The place whither he goeth for refreſhing, ſhall be filled with ſorrows. And the houſe of his expected freedom from trouble, will be but a ſtore-houſe of trouble, or his houſe of bondage. He that is himſelf unholy and prophane in all places, ſhall never find any place a Sanctuary to him.

All darkneſs ſhall be hid in his ſecret place.

Another renders it thus; All darkneſs ſhall be hid becauſe of his ſecret, that is, his ſecret ſins; As if he had ſaid, would you know why this wicked man is followed with ſword and arrow without, and with terrours within; all this pœnal darkneſs is upon him, becauſe ſinful darkneſs is hid in his ſecret place, or becauſe he keeps his ſin ſecret. He (as was ſhewed in the former part of the Chapter) hides it under his tongue, and keepes it cloſe. All darkneſs ſhall be upon him, becauſe of this beloved darkneſs remaining in him. Mr. Broughtons tranſlation ſeems to hold out this meaning, All darkneſs ſhall be hid up for his ſtore; and he puts in the margine, for his ſtore of ſin; he hath ſecretly laid up a ſtock and ſtore of ſin; which ſtock and ſtore of ſin is anſwered with all manner of darkneſs, with a ſtock and ſtore of puniſhment. This ſenſe hath occurred in divers paſſages, therefore I will only name the Obſervation,

The darkneſs of ſin bringeth darkneſs of ſorrow.

They who lay up ſtore of iniquity in ſecret, ſhall one time or other find a ſtore of miſery laid up for them. If we hide ſin and provide ſecret places for it, God will hide darkneſs for us in our moſt ſecret places. They who (when light comes towards them) love darkneſs more then light, ſhall be ſure to meet with darkneſs, where they moſt expected light.

A fire not blown ſhall conſume him.

What is this fire not blown? This circumlocution ſpeaks more then ordinary fire; we ordinarily make fires by blowing; but this is A fire not blown.

There are divers apprehenſions about this fire.

Firſt, A fire not blown, is expounded by ſome, metaphorically, of a fire in the conſcience; Many a wicked man finds fire in his boſome; an evil conſcience is like a flaming furnace, much worſe then Nebuchadnezzars furnace of fire when heated ſeven times more then ordinary. None have been ſo tormented and ſcorched, as they who have been caſt into theſe burnings; but I paſs that.

Secondly, Others by this fire not blown, underſtand corporal diſtempers; As if Zophar in this touched upon Jobs diſeaſed body; A fire not blown, ſhall conſume him. The Text may very well bear that notion; for there are many hot and fiery diſeaſes. Such fires are threatned (Deut. 28.22.) The Lord ſhall ſmite thee with the conſumption, and the feaver, and with an inflammation, and an extream burning. Here are three bodily diſeaſes, which (without ſtraining) may be called, A fire not blown; A feaver, and an extream burning, and an inflammation. God conſumes ſome men by ſuch fires. Job had much and very ſad experience of them.

Thirdly, Many of the Greeks interpret this fire not blown, of hell. There needs no bellows to kindle that fire. The breath of the Lord as a river of brimſtone ſhall kindle it, Iſa. 30. ult. Tophet is prepared of old. It needs no blowing to make it burn. But though the fire of hell may be called a fire not blown, yet I conceive this Scripture hath no relation to it.

Ignis Gehenna cum ſit incorporeus, neque ſtudio humano ſuccenditur, neque lignis nutritur, ſed creatus durat inextinguibilis, & ſuccenſione non indiget, & ardore non caret. Greg.

Fourthly, Others expound this fire not blown, of thoſe extraordinary fires which God ſends from heaven, to deſtroy enormiouſly wicked men. Thus he rained fire upon Sodom and Gomorrha, which conſumed thoſe Cities (Gen. 19.24.) We read alſo of ſuch fires in the firſt Chapter of this Book, where it is ſaid, The fire of God deſtroyed Job's ſheep; poſſibly his friends would mind him of that here, as in many other paſſages, they cloſely hint to him the manner of Gods dealing with him.

Fifthly, A fire not blown, may be taken for the extream heats and ſcorchings of the Sun; Theſe in Scripture are called burnings, yea they are called fire, and we may truly call them, A fire not blown. (Joel 1.20.) The beaſts of the field cry unto thee: for the rivers of water are dried up, and fire hath devoured the paſtures of the Wilderneſs. What fire? only the heat of the Sun. God ſent heat and drought which burnt up the paſtures of the wilderneſs; and this the Prophet calls a fire. And beſides the heat of the Sun by day, the very cold of the night is a fire not blown; In the ſpring of the year, while the fruits and corn of the earth are young and tender, God many times ſends a Blaſting, which by a ſtrange kind of cold burns and ſcorches the budding fruits. The Latines call this uredo, which properly ſignifies a burning, we call it Blaſting.

חסיל a rad. חסל Conſumere; aptiſſimè illa frugum uredo ignis non ſuccenſus dicitur quia non ab homine ſed à deo ſuccenditur.

Sixthly, A fire not blown may be interpreted of that which is the kindler of all penal fires, namely, the anger and wrath of God. The wrath of God is often in Scripture compared to fire, Pſal. 78.21. Pſal. 18.4. Deut. 4.24. And ſo the ſenſe is, A fire not blown ſhall conſume him, that is, the anger of God ſhall conſume him. There is no ſtanding before the wrath of God: when that burns, it burns to conſumption. Hence the Apoſtle exhorts the Saints to beware of this fire (Heb. 12. ult.) Let us have grace to ſerve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear, (take heed of provoking God to anger) for our God is a conſuming fire.

Seventhly,

Seventhly, A fire not blown, is any great or terrible judgment. War is such a fire (Ezek. 20.47.) Behold I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green-tree in thee, and every dry-tree; That is, all sorts of people, rich and poor, strong and weak, young and old, shall be consumed; The flaming fire shall not be quenched. Great fires need no blowing, the business is to quench, not to kindle them. Fires made of green fewel will not kindle without much puffing and blowing; but dry light fewel is so conceptive of fire, that the very smell of fire puts it into a flame. The Judgments of God take oftentimes as suddenly as fire doth in stubble fully dry, as suddenly as a spark in tinder or Gun-powder; yea the green-tree, is as combustible in this fire as the fear and dry. And as this fire is easily kindled, so it is as hardly quenched. That which the Church speaks of her love to Christ (Cant. 8. 6,7.) is as true of the wrath of Christ against the wicked; The coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame. Many waters cannot quench this wrath, neither can the floods drown it. Mr. Broughton renders the Text, thus; An unquenchable fire shall eat him up. That fire needs no blowing to kindle it, which cannot be quenched.

Eightly, A fire not blown, may be a soft gentle fire; as if he had said, he shall consume secretly, and without noise.

Lastly, That which I rather pitch upon, is, by the fire not blown, understand those judgments which come no man knows how, sudden unexpected judgments. We have two sorts of fires; some fires are intentional, that is, we purpose to make them; such fires are for our use and service; nor is any thing more serviceable to us then fire; this intentional fire, is a fire blown. But Secondly, there are casual fires, accidental fires; A fire takes in a house, we see all on a flame, no man knows how. Those Judgments of God, whose beginnings and instruments we see not, are to us, as a casual fire, a fire not blown. I conceive, this is it which Zophar chiefly aims at, A fire not blown shall consume him. He is consumed, but he can give no account who or what kindled the fire.

Hence Observe, God can raise up troubles, consuming troubles, immediately, or without any appearances from the creature.

He causeth some fires without mans blowing; God needs not the help of the creature, either to do good or to do evil; As he himself forms the light, so he creates darkness, (Isa. 45. 7.) What the Apostle saith of our glorious estate hereafter (2 Cor. 5. 1.) If the earthly house of this Tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands; that is, a house not made by the hand of man, but built by the immediate power of God; the same may be said of the calamitous state of many here, Their house is unmade or pull'd down, not with hands; They are ruin'd, but they cannot say which way; they are consumed, but they cannot say by whom the fire was kindled. There are many fires in the world, that is, troubles and evils which we may easily see how they come, and by whom they were blown up; there are bellows which blow up fires, the fires of discord and contention among brethren. These fires consume, Cities, and Countries, and Nations. The Prophet (Amos Chap. 7. 4, 5.) speaks of God contending by fire, which as we may interpret of war and drought, so of discords and jealousies in the bowels of that nation. These fires are too much blown in many places, to the consumption of many, and the hazard of all. And 'tis no hard matter to find out the bellows: We commonly call men of strife Incendiaries; they blow up and foment unnatural fires, by bitter speeches and provoking language. 'Tis the study of some men to kindle fires between party and party, between State and State, yea to make them of the same state and party suspitious of one another, till all be in a flame. How hath this fire been blown in these dayes? and we have sometimes seen the bellows themselves (as they well deserved) burnt in it. By the blessing of the righteous (saith Solomon, Prov. 11. 11.) the City is exalted; But it is overthrown by the mouth (that is, by the contentious words, and dividing counsels) of the wicked. These stir the coals, and blow up the fire. (Prov. 29. 8.) Scornful men bring a City into a snare, or, set a City on fire, as the Margin expresseth it. But though such men, and their enflaming practices are often discernable by all, yet sometimes the fire of trouble and contention kindles, while every one stands wondring who blowed it, or which way it was kindled: both Nations and persons have been ruined by an invisible hand; they are consumed and undone, that they know; but how it came about, they know not: as to them it was by a fire not blown. Some have complained, that it was more then all their misery to be under misery whose original they knew not. The Heathens have taken notice of this, as a great aggravation of sufferings. Not so much as this ease is given to the miserable, to know whence their misery came, or by what hand they were undone.

Nec hoc levamen deriquearumnis datum est, Videre salte & nosse quo pereant malo. Sen. in Agam. Act. 3.

The Lord hath infinite wayes to kindle fires upon us, and we shall not see who are the bellows that do it. That which is said of the fire in hell, It hath heat in it, but no light in it, is verified of many Judiciary fires here on earth; They have heat in them, but no light in them; Not only hath the afflicted no light of comfort in them, but no light of knowledge about them. 'Tis a smothering fire, and in this sense it may also be called a fire not blown; for the breath of the bellows in blowing draws the more subtile vapour out of the fuel, and causeth the flame: where there is no blowing, there is little flame: Such fires like the fire of hell, have heat, but no light. This should make us afraid to blow up the fire of divine displeasure against us, either by open or secret sins; seeing the Lord can consume sinners by secret fires, and kindle a flame upon them without blowing. It may be terrible to the Monarchs and Powers of the world to remember, what is prophesied by Daniel, That they shall be destroyed by a stone cut out without hands (Dan. 2.34.) that is, without any visible means, or humane preparations. It should make all Nations tremble before God, and take heed how they lift up their hands against him who can break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, the Gold, that is, all their power, even their most solid and best compacted power, by a power they never suspected, and whose original and rising they are not acquainted with. A stone cut out without hands, and a fire kindled without blowing, are expressions of the same general tendency; teaching us what great things God can do without noise, by unobserved yea unsuspected wayes.

Secondly, Note, If God send a fire, it will take.

A fire not blown shall consume him. Though it may seem a fire that lies dead, as that commonly doth which is not blown, though it look like a fire that hath no force, no flame in it, yet God will make it a consuming fire. There is no standing before the least of Gods judgments: when he commands them, execution shall be done. As was further shewed in opening the effects of the Iron-weapon, and of the bow of steel, which strike and pass through the gall of those who are the marks of Gods provoked indignation. Neither shall these arrows smite, and this fire not blown consume the wicked man in person only, but they shall reach all that relate and appertain unto him, as appears in the last clause or close of this verse.

It shall go ill with him that is left in his Tabernacle.

The word which we translate to go ill, signifies in the root of it, moral evil, as much as penal evil. These two are so near that they may well be expressed by one word: where moral evil goes before, penal evil will follow after. It shall go ill with them that do ill, unless their evil deeds be pardoned. It went ill with Christ while he was procuring pardon for evil-doers; and therefore it must needs go ill with them who are unpardoned. It shall (surely) go ill with him, or he shall be wringed, saith Mr. Broughton,

רַע aut à רָעַע contero, aut à יָרַע male habuit. Drus.

That is left in his Tabernacle.

This is expounded two wayes.

Some thus, A fire not blown shall consume him, and though he be left in his Tabernacle, yet he shall be afflicted. So 'tis meant of the wicked man himself, who if he escape the danger abroad, yet shall not be safe in his own house. They who give this sense relate it to Job; For when the fire of affliction had consumed his estate, yet Job was left in his Tabernacle, and supervived those calamities. Now saith Zophar,

Zophar, suppose he be left in his Tabernacle, yet it shall be ill with him: As if he had said, Thy children, and thy substance are consumed, and thou art left in thy Tabernacle; but doth it not go ill with thee? Thou art full of diseases without, and hast a troubled mind within. There is a truth in that.

But I rather conceive that this latter clause respects those who belong to the wicked man, then the wicked man himself. This renders the judgment more compleat and extensive. The Original word which we translate left, is applicable to things and persons. Some restrain it here in the first signification to his estate and goods. As if he had said, Fire shall consume him abroad, and if there be any thing left in his Tabernacle, any goods, fire shall destroy them too. It shall go ill with that which remains, if there be a poor pittance left, he shall be wringed in that, or that shall be wrung from him.

שריד Tum ad personas, tum ad res referri potest. Merc.

Secondly, We refer it to a person, to his children, and relations. As he himself shall fare ill, so they that are his shall fare no better. That the sins of wicked men redound to, and draw judgments upon their posterity, or those who are left in their Tabernacle, hath been observed from other Texts of this Book, and therefore I forbear to draw out or enlarge upon that point here.

VERS. 27, 28, 29.

The heaven shall reveal his iniquity: and the earth shall rise up against him.
The increase of his house shall depart, and his goods shall flow away in the day of his wrath.
This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed to him by God.

Zophar having in the former passages of this Chapter set forth the miserable estate of a wicked man; in these three verses he winds up all, and concludes his discourse with a re-inforcement of his misery, by the joynt suffrage of heaven and earth against him, and by the determinate counsel and purpose of God concerning him.

The heaven shall reveal his iniquity, &c.

In the sixteenth Chapter, verse the eighteenth and nineteenth, Job had appealed to heaven, and earth, and as it were provoked both, to declare and speak what they could against him; O earth, cover not thou my blood, my witness is in heaven. Here Zophar tells him he shall have his wish, heaven and earth shall unite to discover his blood, that is, the bloody sins which he had committed, they shall bring in their testimony, and condemn him; The heaven shall reveal his iniquity, and the earth shall rise up against him.

The heaven shall reveal.

There is a twofold revelation.
First, Formal and expres.
Secondly, Virtual and equivalent.

Latini per Metonymiã cœlum pro incolis cœlestibus terram pro terrigenis accipiunt.

In proportion to this twofold revelation, there is a twofold notion of heaven.

First, Some by heaven, understand the inhabitants of heaven, or they whose place and seat, is chiefly in heaven; The heavenly dwellers shall reveal his iniquity. Who are they? First, God himself, whose throne is heaven, as the earth is his footstool. Secondly, The Angels. Thirdly, The Saints; who though they dwell upon the earth while they are in the body, yet even then their conversation is in heaven; and when they go out of the body, their spirits go to heaven, or return to God who gave them; and therefore they may well be reckoned among the dwellers in heaven. If we expound heaven in the Text of these, and these revealing the iniquity of this wicked man, then the revelation is formal and expres: God himself, the good Angels, and good men, shall in their several degrees and capacities reveal his iniquity.

Secondly, Take the heavens properly and literally, and so they may be said to reveal his iniquity virtually, or equivalently, while they by the powerful dispose of God, hold out that which carrieth a signification of it. As the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy-work (*Psal.*19.1.) so (in a sence) the heavens declare the sin of man, and the firmament sheweth what his hand hath wrought. Those judgments which fall from heaven cry out of and reveal the iniquity of wicked men on earth; sin troubles not only our own houses, but the powers of heaven. Some interpret the present place, as if Zophar did here intimate the fire which fell from heaven upon Job's flocks of sheep, and devoured them; as also the wind which smote the house where his children were feasting, and destroyed them. 'Tis proper enough for us to say, and very profitable for us to confess, that the heavens reveal or declare the wickedness of men, as often as extraordinary fires from heaven, or impression from the air by winds and storms scorch and smite them in person, or spoil their possessions.

Further, The heavens declare, when the heavens are shut up, when their influences are stopt, when they withhold the rain. As God threatens in the old Law (*Deut.*28.23.) The heaven that is over thy head shall be brass; That is, It shall yield thee no more moisture then brass doth. When the heavens are as hard brass, they declare the hard-heartedness of men, or that their hearts are like brass; as the Prophet concludes of the stubborn and unreformed Jews (*Jer.*6. 28.) Thus the heaven shall declare his iniquity.

Hence Note, The iniquity of man shall be revealed.

Cœlum & terra tanquam testes in ipsam judicis sententiam exequuntur, negando benedictionem & vim suam. Coc.

There is nothing hid, but it shall be made known; and rather then it shall not, senseless creatures shall make it known; and that which hath not a mouth shall utter it. The heaven shall reveal, &c. Yea if nothing else will reveal the iniquity of man, mans iniquity will reveal it self. Sin will prove like the ointment of the right hand of which Solomon saith (*Prov.*27.16.) that it bewrayeth it self. There is no way for us to get our sin covered, but by revealing it, nor hid, but by confessing it, *Psal.*32.1. Blessed is the man whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sin is covered. Covered, how? Not with any covering of our own. The Prophet complains of such coverings, and shews the uselesness of them. (*Isa.*31.1.) They cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit. There are some that cover their sins, but it is with a cover of their own making, not with that covering which the Spirit of God hath made. The covering which the Spirit makes is only the free-grace and love of God in the righteousness of Christ; this is a covering of the Spirits making. Now they who cover with a covering which is not of this making, do indeed discover their sinfulness instead of covering their sin. For as the Prophet there adds, These coverings are narrower then that a man can be wrapped in them. And with whatsoever of our own we hide our sin, we do but shew our nakedness. Mercy covereth those iniquities which we confess, and those which we conceal, shall be discovered by Justice. The heavens shall declare his iniquity.

Secondly, Observe, The extraordinary motions or suppressions of the heavenly powers, reveal the sins of men.

Unusual apparitions in the heavens, fiery meteors and lightning, stormy winds and tempestuous confusions in the air, mind us of those confusions which rage in the lives and hearts of men. When the clouds of heaven are not dissolved into refreshing showers, when they do not give out their vertue to cherish and quicken the earth, these stops and checks are witnesses of mans iniquity; The heaven shall declare his iniquity;

And the earth shall rise up against him.

That is, all earthly things shall appear his enemies, and proclaim war against him. Inanimates, the very stones of the field, Vegetables, the trees of the wood, Sensitives, the beasts of the earth shall rise up against him. As when 'tis promised (*Chap.*5.23.) that the stones shall be in league with the godly man, and the beasts at peace with him (that is, he shall have benefit by them, and no hurt) this reveals his integrity and innocency. So when the Lord causeth the stones to fall out with a wicked man, and the beasts to turn upon him and rent him, this reveales his iniquity; yea not only these creatures, which are upon the earth, but the whole body or bulk of the earth declares it self his enemy; when God strikes the earth with barrenness, that it doth not bear nor yield its strength, when he denies the wicked man bread to eat, wine to drink, with other common conveniences ces for this life, then the earth may be said to rise up against him. When man looks to the earth for corn, wine, and oyl, and findeth none, but it is as iron under him; when the grass withers, and the fruits of the earth are burnt up, this reveals his iniquity, and convinceth him of his barrenness in doing good, and fruitfulness in doing evil. Thus the earth riseth up (as an enemy, or as a witness) against him.

Hence Note, All creatures arm against the wicked.

The wicked are Gods enemies, the creatures will take part with their Lord. He is the Lord of Hosts, he can muster an host of worms, of lice, of flies, of any thing, of the most contemptible things upon the earth against the wicked of the earth; The earth is the Lords, and the fulness thereof. As the earth and the fulness of it is at the Lords command and dispose, so also is the earth and the emptiness of it, the earth and the barrenness of it, at his command and dispose. The earth shall rise up against him.

Vers. 28. The increase of his house shall depart, his goods shall flow away in the day of his wrath.

The increase of his house.] The word which we render increase, signifies properly, a bud, a bloom, or blossom. And it is interpreted two wayes.

First, For the children of the wicked man; and though I find not the word applied in Scripture to children, yet indeed they are the chief increase of a mans house, they are his buds and blossoms. This increase of his house

Shall depart.] Or as the Original may be translated, go into captivity. So some take it here, His children shall go into captivity, they shall be made bond-men and bond-women in a strange Land, or unto strangers.

Secondly, As the word is applied to their children, in a metaphor, so properly to their riches or profits; These also are the increase of a mans house, his buds and blossoms: many wicked men blosom, bud, and grow green in outward prosperity, as David speaks, I saw the wicked like a green bay-tree. These buds and blossoms, or (as we render) this increase of his house shall depart. His treasure shall be led captive, taken and spoiled, or become the portion of strangers.

גלה Revolare migrare.

Again, As the verb signifies to depart and be led captive, so likewise to reveal, or to make a thing appear. Thus 'tis translated in the former verse; The heaven shall reveal his iniquity. Some give it that sence here; The increase of his house shall be revealed, or made to appear: which may be taken two wayes.

First, Thus, He hath secret riches, or riches in secret, he hath hidden treasures (treasure is expressed by a word in the Hebrew, which imports hiding, because men are apt to hide and lay up their treasures) treasures do not lie abroad, they are closely lodged. But saith Zophar, his treasures that were hid shall appear, or be brought forth. Those treasures which have not seen the Sun for many years, shall be seen in the open light. So the words are a predictive threat upon the increase of the wicked mans house; he hoarded and shut all up, he kept his gold and silver prisoners under lock and key, under irons and bolts, but a time shall come, when God will reveal the increase of his house, and bring all to light, the locks shall flee open, and the prisoners shall come forth. God will take away their coverings, and present those concealed treasures to the view of spoilers. The increase of his house shall be revealed. That's one way.

Secondly, The revealing of his increase may be expounded thus; God will make it appear at last how this man came by his increase, how he got his estate; he hath gotten much, and hath gone long for an honest man in common reputation; but God will make it appear, that he compassed this increase by indirect courses, by fraud, oppression, by deceit, and guile, by grinding the faces of the poor, or by wronging the rich; God will make it appear, that his sin, not his diligence, much less a blessing from above, gave him that great increase. This is a good sence; The increase of his house shall be revealed, the man shall be laid open, and it shall be manifest that his goods were ill gathered.

We render according to the signification of the word, not by revealing, or manifesting, but by departing. The increase of his house shall depart, or go into captivity; his treasures shall be taken, and transmitted into other hands. Thus the Lord threatned Hezekiah, a good King, (yet God threatned him) that the increase of his house should depart, and depart in this sence, that it should be carried captive (2 Kin. 20.17.) Behold the dayes come that all that is in thy house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store unto this day, shall be carried into Babylon, nothing shall be left, saith the Lord. Hezekiah fell under that temptation of pride and vain-glory; He was ambitious to have it known in Babylon, what a rich Prince he was; therefore the Lord laid this judgment on him; The increase of thy house shall depart and be carried captive. Thou hast been forward to shew thy riches to strangers, therefore strangers shall spoil thy house, and transport thy riches into a far Countrey. Our glory ng in riches, or in any thing but God, provokes God to stain our Glory. Thus Zophar threatens the wicked man; The increase of his house shall depart.

And his goods shall flow away in the day of his wrath.

The Hebrew is, Flowing away in the day of wrath; we supply those words, his goods, yet the sence is full in the Original without them; The increase of his house shall depart, and flow away in the day of his wrath. We say, And his goods shall flow away in the day of his Wrath.

Flow away.] It is a metaphor taken from waters; and that two wayes; Either from water spilt upon the ground, of which the wise Woman of Tekoa said, There is no gathering it up again. Or from the ordinary flowing of water; there is an ebbing of water, and a flowing in of water. Here flowing away is ebbing. The flowing in of water is the flood; but the flowing away of water is the ebb. His goods shall ebb, they shall decrease, and flow away. The motion of some waters flowing away is swift, and with a kind of violence. Thus the increase of his house shall flow away, there shall be no stopping, no staying of it. What the Psalmist speaks of persons, is true also of things, (Psal. 90.5.) Thou carriest them away as with a flood. Floods are carried with a mighty force; so the goods of a wicked man flow away, or are carried as with a flood.

Again, The allusion may be to those waters which flow away insensibly. The decrease of some waters is not to be seen, yet they flow away and decrease. Such also is the decrease of some wicked men in their worldly enjoyments, they do not flow away violently, but slowly, and are long in decaying. In deep still Rivers you can hardly perceive the water move, and yet it moves; or that it ebbs, but yet it doth, till it comes to a dead low water. As it is with all trees and plants, we may perceive they have grown, but we cannot see them grow; so it is with many waters, we may perceive they have fallen, but we cannot see them fall. Thus insensibly at least the wicked mans Highest-flown estate, and the increase of his house shall flee away.

Thirdly, We may apply the allusion to waters which are carried or divided into many streams or rivolets. Thus the wicked mans increase flows away; God makes many cuts and sluces, to draw out his estate this way, and that way; this part runs into such a channel, and that into another; fire shall consume some, and water some, violent enemies shall take some, secret thieves, and unfaithful servants shall take the rest. Thus it shall be divided into several channels, till the flood be made dry. The increase of his house shall flow away.

And when?

In the day of his wrath.

Of whose wrath? In the day of the wrath of God. That is, when God appears angry, and manifests his wrath. There is no change in God; As he is not at all moved by any passion, so that which for our understanding is expressed of him by a passion, doth never move. His love and his wrath, his favour and his displeasure, are fixed from everlasting to everlasting. The Scripture calls that a day of Gods wrath, when he puts forth his wrath in the visible tokens and evidences of it; as that also is called in Scripture a day of his mercy, and grace, of his patience and long-sufferance, when he declares himself in grace and mercy to his people: so then, the day of wrath is that season, whensoever it is, wherein nothing but wrath and visions of amazement

amazement appear to wicked men. There is a twofold day of wrath, a leſſer, and a greater. The leſſer day of wrath is here in this world; when judgment breaks forth, and divine anger is ſtampt upon every former enjoyment. The great day of wrath is in the world to come. Then wrath ſhall be poured out to the utmoſt. That will be a day, as of the revelation of the righteous judgment of God to all, ſo a day of the revelation of the dreadful wrath of God to moſt. Zophar here intends the former, the leſſer day of wrath. The increaſe of his houſe ſhall flow away in the day of his wrath.

Hence Note, When judgment goes forth, wrath goes forth.

There are dayes of great affliction to the godly, which are not dayes of wrath, but of love, Whom I love I chaſten. There may be a time, when the increaſe of a believers houſe departs, and all his goods flow away like a ſtream, and yet that no day of wrath, but only a day of trial. Floods of temptation do not drown, but waſh the furniture of grace, that increaſe of the ſoul never flows away. But judgment is ever mingled with the wrath of God, in the cup of ungodly men: perſonal Judgments are ſo, and ſo are publick judgments: Wo to a provoking people when judgment appears, for that is the appearance of wrath, and bears in its face the image of a fiery indignation to conſume the Adverſary. Moſes ſaw wrath in that plague with which God ſmote the people of Iſrael (Num. 16.46.) There is wrath gone out from the Lord, the plague is begun. And therefore he haſtens Aaron to the duty of his place. Take (ſaith he) a Cenſer and put fire therein from off the Altar, and put on incenſe, and go quickly to the Congregation, and make an Atonement for them. Thoſe ceremonial atonements, typified the Atonement of Chriſt, who alone delivers us both from preſent wrath, and from that wrath which is to come.

Secondly, From the effect of this day of wrath; The increaſe of his houſe ſhall depart, and his goods ſhall flow away in the day of wrath.

Obſerve, If the wrath of God go forth againſt a man, no good thing will ſtay with him.

His increaſe will be gone, riches will ſay, we muſt depart and flow away; credit will depart, health will depart, friends will depart, if once wrath come in preſence. God is wroth with thouſands of wicked men, whoſe increaſe doth not depart, nor do their goods flow away, they rather flow in abundantly; but if once God declare and let out his wrath, their fulneſs turns to emptineſs, and their increaſe haſtens to be gone. If God be for us, who can be againſt us? And if God be againſt us, what can be for us? As the love of God eſtabliſheth the creature to us, and makes that which (like quick-ſilver) can hardly be fixed, as firm to us as a rock of Adamant; ſo the wrath of God ſhakes our hold of the creature, and makes thoſe things which we looked upon as a rock of Adamant, our lands, our friends, our comforts and relations, diſſolve like ſnow before the Sun, and flow away like water. There are three wayes, in which the increaſe of a mans houſe departs and flows away in the day of Gods wrath.

Firſt, By prodigality, and that ſometimes his own; God gives up ſome to ſcatter and ſpend that vainly, which they got here unjuſtly; but moſt uſually it flows away, and the houſe of the wicked man with the whole increaſe of it, is (as we ſay) thrown out at the windows, by the prodigality of a ſpend-thrift heir.

Secondly, His increaſe departs by the oppreſſion of others. As he took violently or fraudulently from others; ſo God gives him up to ſons of violence and fraud, who take all from him. Thus the Prophet threatens (*Iſa.*33.1.) When thou ſhalt ceaſe to ſpoil, (A wicked man may ceaſe from ſome ſin, not becauſe he repents of it, but becauſe he is glutted with it, or barred from it; now when thou ſhalt thus ceaſe to ſpoil) thou ſhalt be ſpoiled, and when thou ſhalt (upon theſe terms) make an end to deal treacherouſly, they ſhall deal treacherouſly with thee.

Thirdly, His increaſe flows away by a ſecret curſe. A man ſees the increaſe of his houſe departing he knows not how, he perceives his goods flowing away, but he can give no reaſon of it. For as ſome men increaſe, and goods flow in unto them they ſcarce know how themſelves, their care and labour hath not been more then other mens, yet they grow rich beyond other men. As the Lilly attains her beauty (as Chriſt ſaith, Mat. 6.) without labour or ſpinning, ſo it is with ſome, they get the beauty of the world, though (comparatively) they neither labour nor ſpin for it; wealth drops into their boſoms, and golden ſhowers fall into their laps. Now, (I ſay) as ſome grow rich they know not how; ſo others grow poor they know not how. When they are called to an account, they cannot ſay how their eſtate waſted: Ask them, have you had bad debts? No: Have you had loſſes at Sea? No: They are undone, but ſee not what hath done it. What the Prophet (*Hag.*1.6) ſpeaks of wages earned, is true of all their wealth gained, it is as put into a bag with holes, or pierced through. While a man takes his mony out at the mouth of the bag, he knows how it goes away, and what becomes of it; but if his bag have holes in it, and his mony ſlip out there, he cannot ſay what's become of it; Holes in the bag are nothing elſe but a ſecret curſe. That alſo is meant by the ſame Prophet (*verſ.*9.) When ye brought it (that is, your goods) home, I did blow upon it, or blow it away. If God do but blow or breath upon our good things in anger, they are blaſted and preſently blown away, or they melt and flow away. The Prophet (*Iſa.*64.1.) ſpeaks of the flowing down of the Mountians; O that thou wouldeſt rent the heavens, that thou wouldeſt come down, that the mountains might flow at thy preſence. Mountains are firm and abide for ever in their place; Rivers flow, but who ever ſaw mountains flow? What mountains doth he mean? not natural, but metaphorical mountains; the mountains of humane ſtrength, riches and greatneſs: theſe, ſome pile up as ſo many mountains, to ſecure themſelves by; they call riches their mountain, and worldly power their mountain. (Holy David looked upon his power and riches as a mountain, Pſal. 30.7. Lord in thy favour thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong.) But if the Lord rent the heavens, and come down in a day of wrath, theſe mountains flow away; and what was ſuppoſed as ſtedfaſt as a rock, proves as unſtable as water.

Zophar in the laſt verſe of this Chapter, winds up all in a rhetorical acclamation.

Verſ. 29. This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed him by God.

As if he had ſaid, Review what I have ſpoken, conſider my words again, I cannot abate you one ſyllable, this, and all this that I have ſaid is true, I will not recal a tittle of it; This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed him by God. Both parts of this verſe carry the ſame mind and meaning.

This is the portion of a wicked man from God.] The word which we render portion, ſignifies ſweetneſs, as alſo flattery, becauſe many are delighted with flattery; flattering words are ſweet words. So 'tis rendred Chap. 17.5. Some taking that ſence of the Original, conceive Zophar ſpeaking ironically, or in a kind of ſcorn to Job. As if he had ſaid, Thou haſt expected good from God, or that he ſhould ſpeak kindly to thee; thou haſt waited when ſweet ſuggered words ſhould drop from heaven into thine ear: here are the flatteries, theſe the ſoothings which God will give thee; remember what I have at large diſcourſed; that's thy portion; Thy glory ſhall be made as dung; thy Children ſhall beg; the enemy ſhall devour thy ſubſtance; the ſteel bow and the ſword ſhall ſtrike thee through; wrath ſhall rain upon thee when thou art eating; Theſe are delicates prepared for thee, theſe the pleaſant morſels thou art like to have. We render, This is thy portion, or thy part. And ſo it is an alluſion to the manner of feaſting, and banquetting, where the meat is divided into ſeveral diſhes and meſſes, every one hath his part, or portion, or ſo many have their meſs: Now ſaith Zophar, this is the meſs of meat that God hath provided for a wicked man, here are the diſhes, and the courſes which ſhall be ſerved up to his Table, in ſorrowful feaſt; This is the portion (or proviſion) of a wicked man.

Pars, portio tralatio à conviviis, ubi cuiq; ſua portio etiam calix dabatur. Druſ.

From God.] The word is Elohim, which is applied to God as a Judge; As if he had ſaid, God the moſt wiſe juſt and impartial Judge, hath ſet this out for his portion. He hath not ſaid this in haſt, or given it out in paſſion, but but as a Judge upon mature deliberation, and the ſerious weighing of his caſe. God loveth judgment, and this is the award, the Judgment, which he hath paſſed concerning ſuch a wicked man.

And this is the heritage appointed him by God.

נחלת אמרו Hæreditas dicti ejus. Hæreditas verborum ejus. Vulg. Hæc eſt portio quã ipſe ſibi comparat ſermonibus ſuis & maledicentia ſua. Jun. Portio ſermonis ejus, i.e. ejus quod adverſus eum dictum eſt & decretum à domino. Merc. Rab. Sol. מאל à deo forti & potenti ad exequendum decreta & judicia ſua in impiũ Merc.

The Hebrew is, This is the heritage of his word from God: ſo ſome render it; we put in the margine, This is his decree from God. The Original may be taken, either for the word of the wicked man, or the word of God himſelf. Some interpret in the firſt ſence; This is the heritage of his word, by, or from God; that is, God hath ſet out this heritage as due to him for his word, or words; all this ſhall come upon him for his ill words, or blaſphemies. This is the heritage of his word; this he hath got by his ungoverned tongue, and unſavory language; Words coſt many a man dear.

But underſtand it rather of the word ſpoken againſt him by God; And ſo word is put for decree or appointment; as we tranſlate, The heritage appointed him by God: That is, God hath determined thus concerning him by an irrevocable decree. As mercies are under an appointment, ſo alſo are Judgments. Every heritage of man is laid out by God.

We have God in both parts of the verſe, but under two different titles in the Original. In the former part, Elohim, here El. This is the portion of the wicked man from Elohim the Judge, and the heritage appointed him by El, the ſtrong God, or the puiſſant. As if he had ſaid, Let not the wicked man think (though it be a hard ſentence) to avoid the execution of it; for as the Judge is juſt to determine that which is his due, ſo he is ſtrong to ſee the execution done. This is the heritage appointed him by the ſtrong, the mighty, the powerful God; who will not abate any thing in the execution of what he hath ſpoken, and declared againſt him.

κλῆρος τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς. Sep. ab epiſcopo à viſitatore dei haud dubio providentiã & pervigilẽ oculũ in impios qui ſe eum latere putant ſignificare voluerunt. Deus eſt παντεπίσκοπος. Dionyſ.

The Septuagint render this word ſomewhat differently; This is the heritage appointed him by the Biſhop or Overſeer, which is a periphraſis of God, who hath the view and inſpection of all, who is the viſitor General and ſuperintendent of mankind. Hereby intimating the provident and watchful eye of God over all the wayes of men, to protect and reward the righteous, to puniſh and take revenge upon the wicked.

Obſerve Hence, Firſt, The portion of a wicked man is decreed, and appointed by God.

The portion and heritage of the Saints is of Gods appointment. And as he doth it, ſo they are willing he ſhould do it, yea, it is their comfort that he doth, and will do it. They would not be their own carvers, nor have the ſetting out of their own portion, either in temporals or eternals; It pleaſeth them beſt that all ſhould be of Gods appointment. Thus it is with wicked men too, whether they will or no. They would fain be their own carvers, they would have another portion, either for matter or meaſure in this world then God aſſigns them. If he aſſign their portion in good things (as he doth ſometimes) yet they would have it larger then he gives, they would have more then he appoints, they are not ſatisfied with his proviſion. But when their portion is aſſigned in wrath and judgments, they cannot at all ſubmit to that, yet they muſt, for it is appointed them by God. The portion of a wicked man may be conſidered under a double notion. Sometime it is called wages, ſometimes, an inheritance. Wages, is due to a ſervant, an inheritance is due to Children, or to a Son; under both theſe notions the portion of a wicked man is ſet out in Scripture. It is wages for his ſin-work; He is the ſervant of ſin; and, The wages of ſin is death, all manner of deaths; ſin payes all its ſervants in Black-money. And as the wages, ſo the inheritance of ſin is death, the portion which wicked men receive as children of wrath, as children of the Devil (ſo Chriſt calls them, Joh. 8.44.) is nothing elſe but death, their whole eſtate lies in the valley of the ſhadow of death. The troubles of this life are at leaſt the ſhadows of death, or a kind of death, and they are their portion; The diſunion of ſoul and body at the end of this life, is death in kind, and that is their portion. The everlaſting ſeparation of ſoul and body from the face or favourable preſence of God, is the moſt deadly death. This alſo is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed him of God.

That this is their portion, ſtands in a double oppoſition.

Firſt, To the opinion which others have of them. The men of the world account them very happy, and think they have a good portion. But this is the portion appointed them by God; though many flatter, and applaud, admire and adore their felicity, as if they were the only men in the world, yet in oppoſition to this, ſaith God, miſery is their portion, they are the moſt unhappy men in the world.

Secondly, This portion appointed by God ſtands in oppoſition to what their own hearts appoint them, or at leaſt point them to; their own hearts ſpeak peace, and aſſure them all is well, and ſhall end well; For as flatterers and fawners never deal plainly with them, nor tell them of their miſerable end, ſo neither do their own hearts. (Pſal. 36. 2.) The wicked man flatters himſelf in his own eyes, till his iniquity be found hateful. He thinks his way is good, and that his end ſhall be better; he hears of, and delights in nothing but flattery; others flatter him, which is bad and dangerous enough; and he flatters himſelf, which is worſt and moſt dangerous of all. In oppoſition to both theſe flatteries, 'tis ſaid, This is the portion of the wicked man from God. God tells him it will be thus, and he doth not flatter. (Pſal. 11. 5.) The Lord tryeth the righteous; he layes many afflictions upon his own people, but upon the wicked he will rain an horrible tempeſt, this ſhall be the portion of their cup. And again (Pſal. 75. 8.) In the hand of the Lord there is a cup, the wine is red; (red with wrath, in the day of Gods wrath) It is full of mixture (it hath no mixture of good, no ſweetneſs at all in it, but all ſorts of evil are mingled in that cup) and he powres out of the ſame (upon many occaſions he powres it out in the world) but the dregs thereof all the wicked of the earth ſhall wring out and drink. They have not only the cup, but the dregs of the cup, that is, the worſt of the cup; For as in a good cup, the deeper the ſweeter, ſo in an evil cup, the deeper the worſe: the dregs are the worſt, the bottom is the bittereſt of a bitter cup. Therefore God puts this word into the Prophets mouth (Iſa. 3.) Say to the righteous it ſhall be well with him: ſay to the wicked it ſhall be ill with him; tell him, evil ſhall be his portion, tell him from me it ſhall be ſo. The wrath of God is revealed from heaven, againſt all unrighteouſneſs; Tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doth evil; That is, on every ſoul that lives and dies doing that which is evil.

But here a Queſtion ariſeth; Is it thus with all wicked men? How are we to underſtand this propoſition; This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed him by God? Do not wicked men divide the good, the beſt things of this world among them? Is not pleaſure their portion, and riches their heritage? Do not the tabernacles of robbers proſper? as Job ſaid, Chapter the twelfth, Have not they the fatteſt ſhare, and the faireſt lot in this life? How then doth Zophar (ſpeaking of temporal judgments and troubles) ſay, This is the portion of a wicked man from God? when we daily ſee wicked men, not a few, enjoying a pleaſant portion. Do not the diſpenſations of God vary from his threatnings and and comminations? or how ſhall we reconcile this propoſition with our experiences?

I anſwer, Though God gives wicked men, many portions of outward good things in this world, yet that doth not abate, much leſs croſs and contradict this commination. God gives ſome wicked men a great portion in the good things of this life upon many accounts, yet the event is not good to them upon any account.

Firſt, God gives them a portion as they are his creatures, how ſhould they live, and ſubſiſt elſe? God maintains all that he hath made, he is the houſholder. Under that relation of creatures they have alwayes ſomewhat in the world, and under another relation they may have very much. For

Secondly, Some wicked men are in the relation of his ſervants. And we may call the good which they have in in the world, their wages, or a reward for some good service they have done in the world. The purposes of God are fulfilled, and his providences served, even by wicked men, and some wicked men do him eminent service. They who are evil, may do that which is good, for the matter, in the eyes of God. For though it be not possible to please God without faith (Heb. 11.7.) yet it is possible to serve him without faith; or though God be never pleased with the person doing a work without faith, yet he may be pleased with that work which is done without faith. A wicked man may do what God would have done, that pleaseth him, and he throws him in somewhat as wages for his work; sometimes, very great wages. Jehu, a wicked man, a man of a naughty heart, yet he did the work that was in Gods heart, in destroying Ahabs house. Now, saith God, take the Throne for four generations, a great reward, a whole Kingdom, and for four Generations to a wicked man (2 Kings 10.30.) God will not be behind-hand with any. They that have been instrumental for him, shall have so much as their work comes too; they who do it for a temporal reward (many will be very zealous for an outwardly real reformation, both in matters of Religion and civil administration, while not only their hearts are unchanged, but their lives unreformed, and all this they do to set themselves up in a worldly interest; now, even these) shall have their peny, they shall not loose their reward.

Thirdly, There is a kind of necessity that some wicked men should rise high, and be great, that they may be fitted to do the works which God hath appointed; as those others (of whom I spake last) are raised high, to reward and pay them for the work which they have done. As

First, For the scourging of other wicked men. God suffers one wicked man to prosper to vex another. Sometimes he scourgeth a whole Nation, by one wicked man; therefore he must prosper much. Usually there is a proportion between the work and the instrument. Great scourges are made of Great men.

Secondly, For the trying of his own people; if wicked men were not high, powerful, and prosperous, they could not persecute the righteous. They who will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution. And there are some kinds of persecution which ungodly men (though they never want will, yet) cannot act till they have gotten power. Weak ones can mock and scoff; but they who kill and destroy must be strong.

Fourthly, Wicked men prosper that they may have opportunity to shew what is in their hearts, how vile they are. Half the wickedness of man appears not, if his portion be always short in the world. Many wickednesses in the heart of man cannot discover themselves and appear above-board, till they themselves are above and aloft in the world. For as afflictions upon the people of God, discover many corruptions in them which they did not think of, as murmuring, unbelief, and discontent, &c. They thought in their prosperity, that they could have born such a cross patiently, and quietly, and have taken it well at Gods hands; but when it comes upon them, they find corruptions stir, which till then stirred not. Therefore (Deut. 8.2.) God caused the people of Israel to wander forty years in the wilderness, to prove and try what was in their hearts. God knew, intuitively, what was in their hearts, but they did not know it, they did not conceive that there was so much vanity, and unbelief there, till God led them about and about to try them. So, wicked men, though their corruptions flow out fast enough, yet if they should be always kept to hard meat and want, their lusts would be stifled and starved, though not at all mortified. As the wit and parts of some are kept down by their poverty, so also are the lusts and wickednesses of many. But worldly affluence and warmth draw out corruption, as well as affliction doth: riches and power let the lusts and wickednesses of men loose as well as their wits and learning. Hazael was a cruel man, but he did not believe that there was so much cruelty in his heart as indeed there was (2 King. 8.13.) When the Prophet told him what he would do; Doest thou think I am a dog (saith he) that I should do such things as these? The Prophet replied; The Lord hath shewed me that thou shalt be King of Syria. As if he had said, thou shalt have a great portion, and much power put into thy hands, and then the wickedness of thy heart will appear fully; thou dost not know how nought thou art now, thy lust lies close in thy own spirit; But when thou art King of Syria, thou wilt have scope for thy cruelty, and then it will appear that I am a true Prophet in foretelling thee what bloody, what cruel work thou wilt make. It would never be known how bad some are, if they should not enjoy much worldly good.

Fifthly, The Lord gives some wicked men a rich portion in temporals, to take off the loves and to dull the desires of the godly to them. For when they see the best things of the world in their hands who are evil, they cannot but remember that God hath provided better things for them. And if God bestow so much upon those who rebel against him, and are his enemies, what hath God in store for them who love him, and are loved of him?

Sixthly, Hereby God commends his own patience, long-sufferance, and goodness. These Attributes are highly honoured and advanced by it. We also by this pattern are instructed to patience, long-sufferance and goodness towards others, though evil men and our enemies. Christ presseth love to enemies, by the example of God himself, (Matth. 5.45.) He makes his Sun to shine upon the good, and upon the evil, and the rain to fall upon the just and unjust. The Lord gives wicked men a portion here for our instruction; That we might learn to do good to our enemies; to feed them when they hunger, and when they thirst, to give them drink.

Seventhly, The good which evil men receive from God, leaves them without excuse, this stops their mouthes for ever; What can they say, when God pours out the vials of his wrath upon them who kickt against him, while he fed them and fill'd their vessels with abundance of outward blessings. As they who despise this riches of his goodness treasure up to themselves wrath against the day of wrath; so, they shall have nothing to plead for themselves in the day of wrath. These are some of those accounts upon which wicked men, to whom God hath appointed misery as their portion, do yet at present receive a portion of outward prosperity.

But though upon these, and other considerations which might be added, the Lord puts exceptions to this general rule, That misery is the portion of a wicked man; yet the truth stands firm. For in that some wicked men are priviledged from it, it is a confirmation that all are lyable to it; Exceptions ratifie the rule: that some wicked men are exempted and excused from trouble, shews that is the proper portion of them all.

Again, I answer, First, This is fulfilled in the letter upon very many wicked men: look upon their lives, their portion is misery; though they scrape and heap much together, though they bud and blossom, yet their encrease goes into captivity, and their goods flow away: Their pompe is brought down, and their beauty is stained. 'Tis rare to find a wicked man flourishing to the end of his dayes, or his hoary head going to the grave in peace. As David observed of the Godly (Psal. 37.25.) I have been young and now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread. So they who have been young and now are old, have often seen the wicked who prospered a while, yet at last forsaken, and their seed begging bread.

Secondly, The Proposition stands firm upon this ground; because misery is the desert of wicked men; 'tis their heritage as they are children of disobedience, and their wages as they are workers of iniquity. Wrath is the portion appointed for them, though they have it not presently in their hands. We say of a child who is heir to a great estate, such lands are his heritage, his portion, though he hath nothing in possession, but the bread he eats, and the cloathes which he puts on. We say of a condemned malefactor, death is his portion, because he deserves death, and the sentence is gone out against him, though he be reprieved for many years after.

Thirdly, Though some wicked men are not actually in a miserable outward condition, yet they are subject to it every moment. The cloud hangs over them, and who can tell how soon it may break? The word is out, the decree is past, and who can tell how soon God may seal

seal the Writ for execution, or command the judgment written to take hold of them, or be done upon them. They have no fence for it, no plea, nothing to keep it off, or avoid it with. He that may justly expect evil at any time, is at no time free from it.

Fourthly, The very present prosperity of wicked men is a punishment to them; their Table is their snare, and that which (according to the nature and use of it) should have been for their welfare, becomes (as the Psalmist speaks, Psal. 69. 22.) a trap. Their good is evil to them, and it had been better for them if they had never had so much good. For as it had been better for a man not to have known the way of righteousness, then after he hath known it to turn from the holy commandment delivered to him, (2 Pet. 2. 21.) so it had been better for a man not to have enjoyed worldly happiness, then while he hath it, to be found out of the way of the holy commandment; seeing as the knowledge of truth, so the fruition of good, encrease the sin, and so the misery of those who abuse and walk unworthy of them. And because evil men always abuse the good which they enjoy, therefore the enjoyment of good is worse to them then the suffering of evil. And as God chastens and smites his own children in love, so he forbears to smite the wicked in anger; not to be punished is their punishment. The soarest stroak which revolting Israel felt, was expressed in these words, Why should ye be stricken any more? (Isa. 1. 5.) When wicked men prosper, it is a fore-runner of their perdition. So that if they have not misery their portion in kind or in the letter at all times, yet they have it in truth and reality. There is a threefold evil springing to a wicked man out of his present prosperity.

First, Prosperity hardens his heart; that's a spiritual judgment in temporal enjoyments.

Secondly, Prosperity is but fuel to his lusts, it draws out and multiplies the acts of sin. Now that which makes the heap of sin greater, makes the heap of wrath greater. Our suffering of evil is not only deserved, but proportioned by our doing of evil.

Thirdly, Present prosperity hath this evil consequent in it to him that is and continues evil, that, evil, when it comes it is the more grievous to him, by how much he hath been the more a stranger to and unacquainted with it. When God actually powers misery in kind upon a wicked man, who hath had a long time of worldly contentments, this makes him more miserable, because he was in a seeming state of happiness. It will increase his sorrow, when God comes to reckon with him (as possibly he will, in this life, and 'tis certain he will in the life to come) that he hath had a few years of joy. His short joyes will lengthen his sorrows, and he will be for ever the more sorrowful, because he hath had these tastes and glaunces of joy. For as the afflictions of a godly man are a blessing to him many wayes, and especially this way; because as the Apostle speaks, (2 Cor. 4. 17.) Our light afflictions that are but for a moment, work for us (not by way of merit, but of preparation) a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory: so we may say, the present prosperity of a wicked man is his curse, because it works for him, a far more exceeding and eternal weight of misery.

Lastly, (to shut up the point) As we may say of believers, that outward prosperity is their portion, and the heritage appointed to them by God, because they always stand under those promises of outward prosperity (Matth. 6. 33.) Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and the righteousness thereof, and all other things shall be ministred unto you: (1 Tim. 4. 8.) Godliness is profitable for all things, having the promises of this life, and of that which is to come. Upon these and the like Scripture-promises (I say) we may conclude that prosperity in this life is the portion of every godly man (because they are the heirs of those promises which concern the good things of this life, as well as of those which concern eternal life) though it please God in his wisdom to exercise them under outward wants, and to keep them in heaviness through manifold temptations all their dayes. So it is a truth, that in this life misery is the portion of wicked men, because they always stand under all the threatnings which are written in the book of God. Though it pleaseth God for the reasons before remembred, or for any other reason lockt up in his own bosom, to give them a rich portion in outward blessings, and to cause their cup to overflow with the fading dying comforts of this present life.

Thus far Zophar hath spoken, and he speaks no more. Job gives answer in the next Chapter, with which possibly he was satisfied, and so joyned in opinion with him; or gravell'd, and so had no more to say against him; or so deeply offended, that he either would not, or saw it bootless to say any more.

CHAP. XXI. Vers. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

But Job answered, and said,

Hear diligently my speech, and let this be your consolation.

Suffer me that I may speak; and after that I have spoken, mock on.

As for me, is my complaint to man? and if it were so, why should not my spirit be troubled?

Mark me, and be astonied, and lay your hand upon your mouth.

Even when I remember, I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my flesh.

JOB having received this second charge from his three friends; all three concluding, as in the first, that they are the worst of men, whose sufferings are worst. Having (I say) heard out his friends in their second charge, he now desires that they would hear him, vers. 1. But Job answered, and said, Vers. 2. Hear diligently my speech.

In which speech, Job answers their Arguments, and refutes them more clearly and convincingly, then he had done in his former answers; affirming contrary to what Zophar had last, and his other friends before him, asserted, That the best men are not priviledged from the soarest evils, and that the vilest are sometimes not visited with any evil.

The scope and sum of his whole discourse may be drawn out into these three propositions.

First, That all wicked men are not always afflicted with great evils in this life.

Secondly, That only wicked men are not afflicted with evils in this life.

Thirdly, That many wicked men enjoy much good in this life, and have all things to their hearts content, even unto their last breath; and not only so, but their children inherit and succeed them in the possession of those outward blessings which themselves enjoyed. Which three assertions being confirm'd, the whole building of Zophar, and of his two other friends, must needs shake and fall to the ground.

And as in theſe three aſſertions, we have the ſum of Job's argumentative part: ſo the whole Chapter may be conſidered in three parts.

Firſt, An Exordium, or Preface.

Secondly, A refutation of their arguments, or his anſwer to their propoſals.

Thirdly, The concluſion, or pre-oration of the whole.

The Exordium or Preface is contained in the ſix former verſes of the Chapter.

His anſwer to their arguments extends from verſ. 27. inclusively to the end of verſ. 33.

The concluſion is verſ. 34. How then comfort ye me, &c.

The context under preſent diſcuſſion, contains the Preface; Hear diligently my ſpeech, and let this be your conſolation. This Preface hath two things chiefly in it.

Firſt, It tends to the gaining of attention, to what Job had further to ſay.

Secondly, It carries in it a reprehenſion of what his friends had already done.

Firſt, It carries in it a deſire of attention to what he had to ſay; and that by a fourfold argument, or he moves for attention upon four grounds.

Firſt, Becauſe if they did hear him diligently, it would be matter of conſolation.

Secondly, He moves for it from the common duty of man, who ſhould not judge, much leſs condemn another, before he hath heard him; and this he layes down, verſ. 3. Suffer me that I may ſpeak, and after that I have ſpoken, mock on: As if he had ſaid, It is a duty which all men owe their brethren, to hear them ſpeak before they judge them, eſpecially before they mock them: therefore ſuffer me to ſpeak, and then mock on if you pleaſe.

The third argument, by which he craves attention, is from the principal object, whom his diſcourſe and complaint concerned, verſ. 4. As for me, is my complaint to man, &c. As if he had ſaid, I complain to more then man, I complain to God, and God hears me, therefore ſurely ye ought; if God be intereſſed in what I have to ſay, ye ought not to take your ſelves diſingaged.

The fourth argument is from the greatneſs of his preſent ſorrows; great enough they were to work aſtoniſhment, therefore ſurely great enough to deſerve attention (verſ. 5.) Mark me, and be aſtoniſhed, and lay your hands upon your mouth. And (verſ. 6.) he tells them, that the very remembrance of them did terrifie him, and that his fleſh did tremble, while he thought of the diſpenſations of God to him; therefore the matter was not light, or unworthy of a hearing.

Further, As in the Preface he challengeth attention to what he had to ſay, upon theſe four grounds, ſo likewiſe he cloſely reprehends what his friends had already done, and that in three things.

Firſt, He reprehends them for not having given him a due liberty of ſpeech (verſ. 3.) Suffer me that I may ſpeak; as if he had ſaid, Ye have cut me off heretofore, and interrupted me, now ſuffer me to ſpeak. While he begs this at their hands, he intimates, that as yet he had been denied it, or that it had not been granted him with ſuch freedom as his caſe and ſtate called for.

Secondly, He reprehends them as having mocked him when he ſpake, or as having ſlighted him when he anſwered; that is implied in the cloſe of verſ. 3. After that I have ſpoken, mock on. While he ſaith, mock on; he chargeth them that they had mocked already: no man can proceed or continue to do that he had not done before. To ſay, mock on, is to reprove them for mocking.

Thirdly, He reproves or reprehends them, as not having been duly affected, nor touched with what had touched him, with what he had both ſpoken, and felt: they were inſenſible of his condition, and regardleſs of his diſcourſe. He implieth that (verſ. 5.) when he ſaith, Mark me, and be aſtoniſhed; as if he had ſaid, Ye would have been grieved, yea, even aſtoniſhed with my condition, had ye markt me, but to this day ye are not; therefore mark me, and be aſtoniſhed. You ſhould have trembled in ſilence to hear how God hath dealt with me, whereas you have rather inſulted over me; Mark me, and be aſtoniſhed, lay your hand upon your mouth. Thus I have opened the ſcope, and parts of the whole Chapter; as alſo the tendency of theſe ſix verſes, which I have laid together as making up the Preface of his anſwer. Wherein we may note, Firſt, His expectation of attention upon four grounds, and their reprehenſion upon three.

Hear diligently my ſpeech, and let this be your conſolation.

Thus he begins, this is his firſt Argument to move attention, and it may be framed thus;

Ye ought to hear him, whom your very hearing will be a conſolation to:

But if ye give me a diligent hearing, it will be a conſolation to me.

Therefore ye ought to hear me diligently. There are two things upon which this Argument may be enforced.

Firſt, From the common duty of that relation in which they ſtood to him; they told him they were his friends; now the common duty of a friend, coming to his friend in trouble, is, to comfort and counſel him. Ye ſay ye are my friends: now if your diligent attention will be my conſolation, ye ought to hear me, conſidering your relation, and that ye bear your ſelves in profeſſion as my friends.

Secondly, There is another argument which lies cloſely preſt in this, from the deſign of their coming to him; your relation as friends obligeth you to comfort me. But do ye not remember your own errand to me? Do ye not know why ye came this long journey to viſit me? Did ye not ſet this down in your propoſals (Chap. 2. 11.) That ye would come to mourn with me, and to comfort me? Now for as much as your ſpecial aim was to comfort me, and ſeeing I ſhall take it as a ſpecial comfort to be heard, ye ought to give me the hearing, for that reacheth your own deſign, and anſwers your intendment in viſiting me.

Hear diligently my ſpeech.] The Original ſpeaks double, hearing hear, a frequent Hebraiſm. The Septuagint render it, Hear ye, hear ye; ſo that here is Job's O yes, O yes, as a Cryer ſpeaks when he calls for ſilence and attention in a Court; Hear ye, hear ye; hearken, hearken. And we render it well to the ſence of that Hebraiſm, hear diligently. To hear, and hear, or hearing to hear, is diligent hearing. The doubling of that word hath theſe two things in it.

Ακουστε ακουστε. Sept. Non leviter ſed ſolicitè audite & date operam ſedulam ut intelligiatis. Merc.

Firſt, It hath an excitation of them to attend his ſpeech.

Secondly, It ſhews the confidence of his own ſpirit about what he was to ſpeak. I ſpeak that which I care not if it be twice heard, yea, a hundred times heard. Some ſpeak ſo, that they are content if they have but half a hearing; they who ſpeak ſlightly, care not to be heard ſlightly; but they that ſpeak confidently and weightily, care not if they be heard over and over. Hearing hear, or diligently hear, carries as a motive to hear, ſo the boldneſs and aſſurance of his ſpirit about what he was to ſpeak, he cared not who heard him, or how oft it was heard.

Again, When Job ſaith, Hearing hear, or hear diligently, he ſeemeth to require another manner of hearing then he had before: When he openly calls upon them to hear diligently, he ſecretly taxeth them for their indiligence in hearing; as if he had ſaid, Ye heard me before, but it was as if ye did not hear; let me have a hearing indeed, now hear diligently. Which may more diſtinctly be conceived in theſe two things.

Firſt, Hear me with more calmneſs and quietneſs, then as yet ye have done. Meekneſs is more then one thing neceſſary, 'tis almoſt The one thing neceſſary toward diligent hearing. If the ſpirit be wild, if a mans mind be unfixed and uncompoſed, he will never hear diligently. Hear diligently, be not moved with paſſion or prejudice againſt the ſpeaker, be not moved with impertinent thoughts while I am ſpeaking: Make it your work, to hear what I have now to ſay.

Secondly, It hath this in it alſo, hear with a patient ſpirit. In ſome ſence a patient hearer is the ſame with a quiet hearer, but in a peculiar ſence, a patient hearer is he who not only hears himſelf reproved, or told of his faults, and takes it well; but a patient hearer is he that will hear all out, or continues hearing to the length or end of what is ſaid. A patient hearer is content the ſpeaker ſhould make out his matter, he doth not ſnap him off with replies, before he hath fully opened and unburdened his mind. Such patient hearing is diligent hearing. Job now calls his friends to the higheſt exerciſe of the duty of hearing; he would not have them hear him any more with troubled ſpirits, and impatient ears, but deſires they would ſet themſelves to it, and make a buſineſs of it. And there is ſomewhat of argument for this in the word ſpeech; Hear diligently my ſpeech. The Hebrew ſignifies, Firſt, A plain ſpeech; as if he had ſaid, I do not intend to flouriſh it over, and catch your ears with ſtudied oratory, or eloquence: I will ſpeak plainly, therefore hear me.

before

Secondly, It notes alſo conciſeneſs of ſpeech; as if he had ſaid, Do not think, becauſe I call you to hear me diligently, that I intend to ſpeak tediouſly: I have but a word or two to ſay, I purpoſe to contract my ſelf, and to ſpeak much in a little. Do not fear that I will burden and tire you out in hearing me, I intend brevity: Therefore hear diligently my ſpeech.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, It is no eaſie work to hear well.

'Tis no hard matter to hear, but 'tis hard to hear well: we may hear eaſily, but it put's a man to it to hear diligently. Hearing may be conſidered as a threefold work.

Verbum ait, quod brevitatem pro mittendo audientiam exambiret.

Firſt, As a natural work, and ſo it is an eaſie thing to hear; no man ſtudies, nor is any man taught to hear; we do it naturally and freely. Thus we uſe to deſcribe the ſpiritual actings of believers, when we ſay, they perform duties naturally; that is, they do them with a kind of eaſe, even as the ear hears, or the eye ſees; the natural work of the eye is an eaſie work, and ſo is the natural work of the ear, there's no labour in it.

Secondly, We may conſider hearing as it is a moral work, or as it tends to the receiving of inſtruction in any point of knowledge or learning; if a man do but receive inſtruction about a worldly buſineſs or truſt, it requires ſome pains, to take his errand right: and hence when we ſpeak to a ſervant to do ſuch a thing, and we perceive he hears but ſlightly, we uſe to ſay, You are gone without your errand; there's need of diligent hearing to receive any direction in civil matters, or inſtruction about morals.

Thirdly, Hearing may be conſidered as a ſpiritual work; and ſo it is hardeſt of all, and requires double diligence, hear diligently, hearing hear. Let every word that is ſpoken once, be twice heard. Spiritual hearing hath a fourfold work in it.

Firſt, A work of the ear to take in the impreſſion of words.

Secondly, It hath a work of the underſtanding, which (as it were) garbleth the words which are ſpoken, conſiders, and makes choice of them, trying their truth, their goodneſs, their fitneſs, and their profitableneſs.

Thirdly, There is a work of the affections in ſpiritual hearing; a work of love, a work of joy and delight; many receive the truth, who do not receive the love of it, nor rejoyce in it. Hearing is a work of the internal powers as well as of the external organs, and this requires diligence.

Fourthly, In ſpiritual hearing, there is a work of our graces: there may be a work of the underſtanding, and a work of the affections, without a work of grace. The ſtony ground underſtood the Word, and received it with joy: the underſtanding acted, and the affections acted, but the work went no further. In ſpiritual hearing, there is a work of our graces; Firſt, A work of faith to believe what is ſpoken. Secondly, A work of meekneſs to ſubmit to what is ſpoken. Thirdly, A work of new obedience to practice and follow what is ſpoken. The work of all theſe graces, attendeth ſpiritual hearing. Here is diligence, and we have not heard double, or hearing heard, till we have had this fourfold work in hearing the Word of God, though ſpoken by man. Hear diligently my ſpeech.

Secondly obſerve, Double, or diligent hearing is our duty in all weighty matters.

That which is ſinful and vain, ſhould not be heard at all; 'tis our duty to ſtop the ear from hearing vanity; ordinary matters, the affairs of the world, the buſineſſes, and concernments of our callings, call only for ſingle hearing; ordinary attention will ſerve the turn for ordinary things. But we cannot be too diligent (we are ſeldom, if at all, diligent enough) in hearing the Word of eternal life. Some words are loaded with the concernments of eternity; there is a ſound, yea a ſavour in them of life, or death, of heaven, or hell, of ſalvation or damnation for ever. Words of this worth, of theſe concernments, call for double hearing: Diligent hearing is more then due in matters thus weighty; we have reaſon to hear that Word judiciouſly, by which we muſt be judged; to hear as for our lives, when we are hearing the Word of life. The ſpeaker hath then reaſon to cry aloud, hear diligently my ſpeech; and the hearer hath reaſon to anſwer, I will attend with diligence.

Thirdly, Job had before (and he doth it here again) called his friends to diligent hearing. I do not find in all his diſcourſe that he called upon them to anſwer, or provoked them to ſpeak, but ſtill to hear, he is frequent upon that; he thought them forward enough with their tongues, but too ſlow with their ears.

Hence note, Man is more ready to ſpeak, yea to judge and cenſure others, then he is to hear.

Job's friends came quick upon him with their cenſures and replies, they were ready with their tongues to cenſure, and reprove him; but he ſuppoſed them dull of hearing, or ſlight in weighing what they heard. The Apoſtles exhortation intimates that moſt men are readier to ſpeak then to hear; or that they who are readieſt to ſpeak, are often indiligent in hearing (Jam. 1. 19.) My beloved brethren, let every man be ſwift to hear, ſlow to ſpeak, ſlow to wrath; he puts a bridle upon the tongue, but (as it were) ſpurs the ear, Be ſwift to hear.

I have from other paſſages (Chap. 11. 2. & 18. 2.) noted this before, and therefore I only touch it: Hear diligently my ſpeech,

And let this be your conſolation:

Let this, what's that? Your attention to me; let that be your Conſolation. The word which we render Conſolation, ſignifies three things in the Verb. נחם:

1 Doluit ſibi vel alteri rebus. 2 Pœnituit vel ſententiam mutavit. 3 Per antiphraſin doluit d. ſtit conſolationē invenit.

Firſt, To grieve, or to be ſorrowful, whether upon our own account, or upon the account of others: to be ſorrowful becauſe of our own ſins or ſufferings, which is the ſorrow of paſſion; or to be ſorrowful, becauſe of the ſins and ſufferings of others, which is the ſorrow of compaſſion; both are comprehended in this word.

Secondly, It ſignifies to Repent, ſo it is applied to God himſelf (Gen. 6. 6.) It repented the Lord that he had made man upon the earth. As alſo (1 Sam. 15. 11.) The Lord repented that he had made Saul King. Some take this ſignification of the word here, and render the Text thus, Hear diligently my words, and repent, or it will be repentance to you; that is, you who have ſtood ſo ſtifly all this while in your own opinion, and have maintained thoſe poſitions which are ſo unſutable to the common diſpenſations of God; if you would but hear me out, and hear me diligently, you would repent of this your opinion, and change your minds. That rendering is uſeful, there is only this againſt it, that howſoever the Verb ſignifieth to repent, yet Grammarians tell us that the Noun is never found to ſignifie repentance; and therefore I paſs it.

Thirdly, By a contrary kind of ſpeaking (which is very frequent in the Hebrew) as it ſignifies to grieve and repent, ſo to take comfort. And the reaſon why the ſame word notes both repentance and comfort, is, becauſe true repentance, wrought by godly ſorrow, is the way to and concludes in the trueſt conſolation: the neareſt way to peace is by humble confeſſion of, and converſion from our ſins. The word is uſed in this ſence (Gen. 24. ult.) Iſaac was comforted concerning his Mother. So (2 Sam. 13. 39.) The ſoul of King David longed to go forth unto Abſalom; that is, he extreamly deſired to ſee him again, and rather then not, even to fetch him home himſelf, or at leaſt (could he do it with a ſaving to his Honour and Juſtice) to meet him (upon his return) half way; for he was comforted concerning Ammon, ſeeing he was dead. Mourning could not recover him from the grave, why then ſhould he continue mourning? The Prophet uſeth the word of the Text, while he deſcribes that woful time wherein many ſhould be mourners, but there ſhould be no comforters, (Jer. 16. 7.) Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning to comfort them for the dead; neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their father, or for their mother; that is, none shall be so courteous or sensible of the sorrows of others, as to use any means of comforting them, when they are in the saddest condition, even mourning for the death of father or mother. That expression (note it by the way) The cup of consolation, is an allusion to an ancient custom, when in great sorrows some cordial or comfortable drink was given to mourners. Solomon intimates that usage (Prov. 31. 6.) Give strong drink to him that is ready to perish, and wine to those that be of heavy hearts; that is, give them a cup of consolation, or a consolatory cup. Job being in heaviness and sorrow, doth but desire to be diligently heard, and this should be to him, as if his friends in tendrest compassion of his condition, had given him a cup of consolation. As I shall now (passing from the signification and use of the word) further shew in opening the matter.

For here 'tis questioned, whose consolation Job means it should be, when he saith, Hear me, and let this be your consolation.

First, Some understand it thus, It shall be your consolation; that is, it shall be a comfort to you: if ye will hear me speak, my speech shall be your consolation, I shall speak such things, and in such a manner, that ye shall have reason to say, it hath been good for ye to hear, or that ye have received benefit by what ye have heard. This is a fair sence, and carrieth a general truth in it: to hear another speak, may be our great consolation: And not only to hear a doctrine of consolation may be consolatory, but to hear a doctrine of reproof. Sowre and bitter words often prove sweet to the hearer. A doctrine steeped in vinegar, words of gall and wormwood, may be honey and sugar (in their effects) to the soul. Any word of truth and soberness diligently heard, may turn to consolation. As the sweet words of flattery and falshood being received are bitterness in the end, so the bittrest words of sobriety and truth being received, are sweetness in the end. Paul gives that charge to Titus concerning the Cretians (Tit. 1. 13.) Rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith. Cutting words have done great cures. Many a diseased festred soul hath been made sound, both in faith and manners, by severest reprehensions. Thus Job might say to his friends, Hear diligently my speech, and though I should speak nothing but rebukes, yet make use of it; Let that be your consolation.

Talia taliq; modo loquaturus sum ut maximã ex meis verbis relaturi estis consolationem. Bold.

But secondly, and more generally, 'tis conceived that Job intends here his own consolation, or consolation to himself, Hear diligently my speech, and let this be your consolation; that is, let this be instead of those consolations which you as friends, should administer to me, and which I have long waited to receive from you: As if he had said, You came purposely to comfort me, but I find very little comfort by your coming; all that you have said to me doth not comfort me, now therefore I desire you to hear what I have to say to you, and I will take that for the comfort which you intended me: hear me speak, and that shall go for the consolation which you promised, and I expected at your coming. Job puts the word in the plural number, he saith not, this shall be your consolation, or I will take this in part of payment for the consolation you promised me: but, as if this were the whole sum or the full payment, he expresses it in the plural number, This shall be your consolations. I will give you an acquittance and discharge for all the consolations you owe me, if I may now at last have a more respectful and friendly hearing. Hear diligently my speech, and this shall be your consolations.

Si me patienter audieritis, id mihi vestrarum consolationum loco erit. Merc.

> Hence note, First, 'Tis a comfort to any man, especially to a man in affliction, to be diligently and patiently heard.

The afflicted should hear words of comfort, and 'tis a comfort to the afflicted when their words are heard.

First, When their words of petition, or their prayer-speech is heard by God, that's consolation indeed. And 'tis no small comfort, when their prayer-speech or petitions are heard by man. If a poor distressed creature puts up his petition to a man in power, and can but get it received, and heard, he rejoyceth; my petition is heard (saith he) somewhat will be done upon it.

Secondly, The afflicted take comfort when their counsel and advice, when their opinion in any case, or their pleadings in their own, are heard. As it is a multitude of consolations to the afflicted when God hears them (all consolations are wrapped up in that one) so many and very great consolations, yea possibly all the consolations which a man desireth of man, may be found in this, if he will but hear what he hath to say for himself. When the afflicted speak, they give vent to their sorrows, and when they are heard, 'tis an income of joy: Though to be heard, be not comfort formally, or directly, yet effectively and virtually there is much comfort in it; yea, God speaks as if he were comforted when he is but heard, or as if we comforted him when we hear him. God beseecheth us, and speaks intreaties to us, that his counsels and commands may be heard (Psal. 81. 13.) O that my people had hearkned unto me. The Lord tells them indeed it would have proved their consolation (vers. 14.) I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries. Yet while he speaks so pathetically, he seems to include his own consolation in it as well as theirs. O that my people had hearkned unto me! It would have been good for them, and it would have given high content to my self. And on the contrary we find the Lord speaking of it as a trouble, and a burthen to him, yea as the breaking of his heart when his people stop their ears, and will not hear him. I am broken (saith the Lord) with their whorish heart which hath departed from me, and with their eyes which go a whoring after their Idols (Ezek. 6. 19.) Now, when or how doth the heart depart from God? Is it not by refusing to hear his voice, or the voice of those who speak in his Name. This is a grief to God whose the Word is, and a grief to those who are the Messengers of his Word. The faithful Ministers of Jesus Christ can say this from their souls to those that hear them, Hear our speech diligently, and this shall be your consolation. This shall comfort us more then all the good things you can bestow on us; do but receive this gift, the truth, the Word of truth spoken to you, and this shall comfort us more then all that you can give. As all the sorrows and miseries which the wicked feel, and shall be compassed about with for ever, arise from this, because they have not diligently heard that which hath been spoken; so, much sorrow ariseth to many who are godly, because what they speak is not diligently heard. How often do they say to stubborn children, to evil servants, to scandalous and loose-walking friends, What joy would it be to our souls, if you would but attend and follow the counsel which we give you? We should look upon this as a great mercy to us as well as to you. Why did Paul call the Philippians his joy and crown? (Phil. 4. 1.) Why saith he the same of the Thessalonians, and more, Yea are our glory and joy? (1 Epist. 2. 19.) Was it upon any other account then this, because they had received the Gospel at his mouth and diligently heard his speech? Paul received so much consolation and joy when his speech was heard, that he calls his hearers his joy, yea his joy and his crown; that is, his chief, his principal joy, or that which he rejoyced in more then he could in any earthly crown; it would not have pleased him so much to have been Emperor of the world, as to see souls brought off from the world, by his ministry, to the obedience of the Word. This made them his crown and joy, his glory and joy at present, and this gave him hope (in which sence he calls the Thessalonians his hope, vers. 19.) that he should rejoyce and glory on their behalf for ever, yea, that through Free Grace he should receive the crown of righteousness, as himself calls it (2 Tim. 4. 8.) or as the Apostle Peter speaking to the same point, calls it (1 Pet. 5. 4.) A crown of glory that fadeth not away. How can it be but a consolation to be heard, when such are the consequences of being heard in some things; and in what things soever we are heard, we judge it to be of some consequence to us, if we get nothing but a hearing. We sometimes hear a poor man thus bespeaking the rich; Sir, if you will but hear me open my case to you, though you do nothing for me, I will take it as a favour, and thank you for it: though you give me no relief, yet if you do but lend me your ear a little, that will be an Almes to me. Thus poor Job, Hear diligently my speech, and let this be your consolation.

Vers.

Verſ. 3. Suffer me that I may ſpeak, and after I have ſpoken, mock on.

We have here the ſecond argument whereby Job beſpeaks attention. Let me ſpeak, and after that mock on; do not judge before you hear. As approving, ſo mocking or diſapproving ſhould follow judgment, and judgment ſhould follow hearing; no man ſhould judge till he hath heard the matter, nor ſhould he either approve it till he hath judged it ſound and good; nor mock at it, till he hath judged it vain and worthleſs. Suffer me that I may ſpeak, and after I have ſpoken, mock on.

נשׂה Ad pondus referri ſolet. Indicat ſuã orationem onerosam & gravem viſam fuiſſe amicis.

Suffer me that I may ſpeak.] The word which we render to ſuffer, ſignifies to bear a thing as a burthen, and ſo ſome underſtand it here. Bear me though I am burdenſom to you, and though my ſpeech be as a preſſure upon you. Some words are preſſing burthens, and require ſtrong ſhoulders to bear them. Some men are never ſo burdenſom as when they are ſpeaking, it were eaſier to bear any part of them than their tongues; vain words burden the wiſe, and the words of the wiſe are alwayes burdenſom to fools. The Sermons of the Prophets are called burthens; The burthen of Babylon; The burthen of Moab; The burthen of Judah, was the word which the Prophet ſpake concerning Babylon, &c. Theſe Propheſies were called burdens, becauſe they foreſhewed the heavy judgments of God, which ſhould fall upon thoſe places. And not only is that word burdenſom, which carrieth wrath and judgment in it; but that alſo is burdenſom to many, which carrieth any thing of holineſs or truth in it. And becauſe no man is very willing to bear a burthen, therefore Job begs, Suffer me to ſpeak; that is, bear with me that I may ſpeak, or bear me while I am ſpeaking.

Further, the words imply that as it was a burden to Job's friends to hear him ſpeak, ſo likewiſe to Job, that he was not ſuffered to ſpeak, Suffer me to ſpeak; his ſpirit was troubled becauſe he had not freedom to ſpeak, Give me leave, let me have a fair hearing; ſuch ſpeeches proceed from a troubled ſpirit, from a ſpirit troubled with ſome ſtop, or meeting with ſome impediment in doing that which it hath a great mind to do.

Hence note, Firſt, Interruptions are troubleſom.

When a man cannot be permitted to ſpeak his mind, he is moved to ſpeak his paſſion. 'Tis as grievous to be hindred in doing ſome things, as to be enjoyned to do ſome others.

Secondly note, Words which do not pleaſe our ſpirits, nor hit our opinions, are very burthenſom.

Job ſpake the apprehenſion of his friends about himſelf. He ſuppoſed his ſpeech would be burdenſom to his friends, becauſe he knew it would croſs their judgment. Men hear that pleaſantly which ſuits their humour, and complies with their opinions or corruptions. They can hear ſuch diſcourſes all day long with delight; but if that be ſpoken which oppoſeth their judgment, or their intereſt, they are weary to bear it: A few ſuch words are as heavy as a mountain of lead. The falſe Prophet cenſured the words of Amos ſo heavy, that they were enough to ſink the earth out of its place; The land is not able to bear all his words (Amos 7. 10, 11.) for thus Amos ſaith, Jeroboam ſhall die by the ſword, and Iſrael ſhall ſurely be led away captive out of their own land. This was a burdenſom word indeed, and ſo is every unpleaſing word. The Apoſtle ſpeaks this ſence (2 Cor. 11. 1.) Would to God you could bear with me a little in my folly, and indeed bear with me. Folly is alwayes burdenſom, and a fool is uſually moſt burthenſom when he ſpeaks. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 27. 3.) that the wrath of a fool is heavier then a ſtone, or then the ſand. His wrath is extream heavy, and his breath is not much lighter; he is not to be born when he is angry, and 'tis hard enough to bear him if he do but utter a word; and if nothing elſe be burdenſom in his ſpeech, yet the lightneſs of it is. Therefore Paul, as Job in the Text, ſpeaks according to the opinion or ſence that ſome, at leaſt, among the Corinthians had of him, You judge me but a babler, or that I do but diſcover my own folly when I ſpeak; and I know that cannot but be burthenſom to wiſe men, yet I would to God you would bear with me in my folly; if you call it folly, bear it a while, though it be a troubleſom burden. For (as he grows further upon them in that Chapter verſ. 19.) Ye ſuffer fools gladly, ſeeing ye are wiſe; therefore for once ſuffer me too. 'Tis a ſuffering to hear fools ſpeak, yet you ſometimes ſuffer this, knowing that your ſelves are wiſe, and able to judge what is ſpoken, Ye ſuffer fools gladly; ſuffer me patiently while I do that which may incur a ſuſpition of folly, commend my ſelf. For a man to commend himſelf, though truly, hath in it a ſavour of vain-glory, and that is folly. Therefore Paul with a rhetorical inſinuation begs their pardon, and their patience, while he doth that for their benefit, and the vindication of his Apoſtleſhip, which had a ſhew of vanity in it. Now as all fooliſh ſpeaking is grievous to the wiſe, ſo alſo may that which is wiſely ſpoken, if it croſs the grain of their ſpirits, as was toucht before. Therefore ſaith Job, Suffer me that I may ſpeak.

Thirdly, Job might thus crave their patience, becauſe he had been taxed by his friends with too much ſpeaking; Should not the multitude of words be anſwered? (ſaid Zophar, Chap. 11. 1.) Should a wiſe man utter vain knowledge, and fill his belly with the Eaſt-wind? ſaid Eliphaz, Chap. 15. 2. As if they had both ſaid, This man will never have done, he talkes everlaſtingly. Now Job as to this alſo anſwers their ſence of him; for as they diſtaſted what he ſpake, ſo, as they thought, he ſpake too much; therefore he now adds, Be it that I have ſpoken too much, yet give me leave to ſpeak a little more, Suffer me to ſpeak, I have yet ſomewhat to ſay. From this ſuppoſition, Obſerve, That a man of many words is very burthenſom.

This hath been noted from other paſſages, whither I refer the Reader; talkativeneſs hath been diſtaſtful in all times: One of the Ancients in his Character of much ſpeaking, puts this Odium and ſcoff upon it; If a man (ſaith he) would avoid an Ague, or a fit of a Fever, let him keep out of the company of men given to talk. It is enough to make a man ſick, or to turn his ſtomach to hear ſome ſpeak; and 'tis not eaſie to hear any man ſpeak very much; ſome knowing this, run into a further error, burdening their hearers with many words to excuſe their many words; and (which makes the matter worſe) make long Apologies for their long and much ſpeaking. Job ſeems to make an Apology for his, but 'tis a very ſhort one; Suffer me that I may ſpeak.

Id genus hominis fugiat oportet quiſquis febre carere vult. Theoph. l. de Char. c. de Garrul.

And after I have ſpoken, mock on.] The Hebrew is in the ſingular, After I have ſpoken, mock thou on; and hence ſome conceive that Job applies himſelf, eſpecially to Zophar, having obſerved him, more then the reſt, contemptuous, and ſcornful, mock thou on Zophar; yet under the ſingular number, all may be comprehended, and what he ſpeaks to one he means of the whole three, mock on.

Rogat ut priuſquam habenas laxent ad videndum, audiant quæ ſit diſcrepantia; fore fortè quod conſilio mutent, vel ſi non ſe non curaturum. Merc.

In ſaying ſo, Job doth not encourage them to mock, or counſel them to ſcorn him or his words; he had checkt and reproved them for mocking more then once before. But we may underſtand him,

Firſt, That he ſpeaks permiſſively, or by way of grant; Do but hear me, and then I give you leave to mock. Or when I have ſpoken again, if I do not ſpeak to purpoſe, if I do not anſwer your arguments, and offer that which may ſatisfie any reaſonable man, I am content to be laught at, mock on. As if he had ſaid, Before you give your ſelves full ſcope in mocking me, before you let your ſelves looſe to contempt, and ſcorn, let me adviſe you to hear me once more, and I deſire it for your own ſakes as much as for mine own, that it be not ſaid that you condemn me, much leſs, ſlight and mock me unheard: therefore hear me firſt, and then mock on; you will have time enough, and more occaſion, if I ſpeak beſides the point, or not home to it, to mock when I have done ſpeaking. From this firſt interpretation we may obſerve,

That, He who hath ſpoken his conſcience, and hath ſpoken it conſcientiouſly, is at a point (ſo far as concerns himſelf) how his ſpeech is entertained.

Poſtquam quod ſui muneris eſt præſtant ſancti doctores ſi vedeantur ab auditoribus ſuis, ſuſtinent patienter. Greg.

Let me ſpeak my mind, and then come on't what will. The Prophet Ezekiel received his Commiſſion in this ſtile, Thou ſhalt ſpeak to them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear (Ezek. 2. 7.) Do you your duty; if they hear it, well and good, if they forbear, yet you are accepted. He that faithfully delivers the truth and mind of God (as Job was about to do) whether his ſpeech be received or rejected, he is satisfied. If it be received he rejoyceth, and he is not discouraged if it be rejected: whether they consent or dissent, whether they return approbation or scorn, whether they imbrace or mock, as to himself the care is taken, though (as Jeremy speaks, Chap. 13.) his eye shall weep in secret for the pride of those who reject and mock, as also for the misery that is coming upon them, except they repent. 'Tis sinful, and so, dangerous enough when the Word of God is not received, much more when it is scorned and mocked; yet the faithful Ministers and Servants of Jesus Christ may take comfort in that dispensation, which the hearers receive with scorn; they have done their Masters will, and are, as the Apostle speaks (2 Cor. 2. 15.) unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that perish; in them that entertain the Word, and in them that mock at it.

Secondly note, Some are readier to mock those who oppose them, then either to answer their arguments, or to recover them from their supposed errors.

Surely Job took notice of such a spirit moving in his friends, else he had not suggested this unto them. A man of judgment and understanding falls upon the Arguments of his opponent with reason, not upon his person with spleen. A tender heart pities those that are mislead, and mourns over them whom he conceiveth in an error, he doth not mock or triumph over them. Yet 'tis often seen that when men of contrary perswasions ingage upon a dispute, whether about matters of Providence (as Job and his friends did) or of Faith; they who judge themselves victors, deride the weakness and hiss at the mistakes of their brethren; and they who are overcome and have nothing more to say, will yet wrangle and revile, rather then say nothing.

And thus 'tis not only in speaking, but in writing; pens as well as tongues drop scorn, when they think they have their adversaries at an under, or are not indeed able to deal with their adversaries. We may say to such (though they are, not only in their own conceits, but in common esteem, as strong as Oaks in judgment, and as tall Cedars in knowledge) as the Lord doth in the Prophet to Jerusalem, because of her spiritual adulterers (Ezek. 16. 30.) How weak are your hearts, seeing ye do all these things, the work of an imperious whorish woman. To mock and scorn any man upon such terms as these, is below a man, yea below any humble-minded modest woman; How much then do they degrade themselves, below man, below reason, and good manners, who fall to mocking the person, instead of answering his arguments, or who mock those who may possibly fail either in arguing or answering? He is weak who indeed fails thus, but he is weaker who mocks thus.

Secondly, After I have spoken, mock on, carrieth in it the sence of an ironical concession; as if he had said, Let me speak out, and then mock if you can. I doubt not but I shall take you off from mocking, or I believe you will have little mind to mock by that time I have done with you. Hence the Septuagint render by a direct Negative, Let me speak; and when I have spoken, you will not mock me. One of the Greek interpreters gives it in this Affirmative, When I have done my speech you will be quiet; I shall make you as quiet as Lambs, you will give over mocking, by that time I give over speaking.

Deinde non irridebitis me. Sept. Post sermones meos quiescetis, i. e. cessabitis a ludibriis & irrisione. Sym.

Hence observe, When truth is put home, it will put the wittiest besides their jesting, and the proudest besides their scorning.

Truth is strong and will prevail. The wit of man is no match for the Word of God. Some have come purposely to mock at a Sermon, who before they have gone away have had little mind to mock; they who have come to laugh at the Preacher, or his Doctrine, have found it no laughing matter, they have been sent weeping and crying home; they who have come to catch at the Word, rather then to hear it, the Word heard hath caught them; the Word hath arrested and laid hold upon them with irresistible, unanswerable convictions, and so (which proves the noblest freedom) they and their wits have been led captive to the obedience of Christ. Austin, some where, confesseth of himself, that he came to hear Ambrose (a man of an excellent spirit) rather to pick quarrels, then to receive instruction; but before he went away his heart was toucht, and then he had little leisure and less desire to play the critick with what was spoken. The word of God subdues the soul, it makes a man stoop, and take in his flag, it makes the scorner serious, and the lofty lowly. They who were most quarrelsom, have not had a word more to say against the Word, much less to scorn it.

Lastly, These words, After I have spoken, mock on, may very well bear the sence of a dreadful threatning.

Hence observe, The greatest threatning of evil against sinners, is to bid them sin, or go on in doing evil.

There are many terrible threatnings in the Word of God against those who continue in sin; but to be bid continue in sin, is the most terrible threatning in all the Word of God. That seemingly favourable permission or dispensation granted to wicked men, is a most fearful commination or threat against them (Rev. 22. 11.) He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still; you that are mockers, mock on still; and you that are despisers, despise still; to be given up to vile affections, and to be given up to wicked actions, is an argument of wrath given out to the utmost. And as it is unspeakably sad to be given up to do evil, so it is unspeakably worse to be given up to mock at that which is good. Let mockers fear and tremble, least God give them up to a spirit of mocking. How shall they escape or be delivered from evil, who mock at that which is for their good? Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong (Isa. 28. 22.) 'Tis sinful enough not to obey the Word, but it is the height of sin to mock at it: They shall have strong bands that obey not the Word, how strong then shall theirs be that mock at it? The bands that are upon the most sober sinners (so we may call some sinners comparatively to others) are stronger then they shall ever be able to break, but God will make bands for mockers sevenfold stronger. Their danger is great, who walk in the counsel of the ungodly, theirs is greater who stand in the way of sinners; but their case seems desperate, past help or hope, past cure or recovery, who sit down in the seat of the scornful.

VERS. 4, 5, 6.

As for me, is my complaint to man? and if it were so, why should not my spirit be troubled?
Mark me, and be astonied, and lay your hand upon your mouth.
Even when I remember, I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my flesh.

THe first six Verses of this Chapter (as hath been shewed already) are a preface to the whole. In which, upon many pressing considerations, Job bespake his friends attention. Two of them were discovered in vers. 2, 3. He comes now to a third in vers. 4.

Vers. 4. As for me, is my complaint to man? and if it were so, why should not my spirit be troubled?

The word which we render Complaint, signifies either a complaint formed out in words, or a complaint onely wrought and retained in the heart; here we may understand it both wayes; Job was much in meditation, and he was much also in discourse; he was answering his friends, and he enquired of them, Is my complaint, my open complaint, the bill of complaint which I bring in, is it to man? Job was both Plaintiff and Defendant; while he defended himself against man, he was forced to complain of men to God. But to whom was Job speaking? Was he not before his friends? Had Job a Congregation of Angels to speak to, or was he admitted immediate access to God? Or why, saith he, Is my complaint to man? Some render the word, Le Adam, against man, or, of man; Is my complaint against man? As if he had said, Had I no greater trouble to complain of then man is able to give me; though I might have, and upon that ground have just cause of complaining; yet I should have less cause to complain: but the truth is, I have greater cause of grief then that, for the hand of God hath touched me, and the terrors of the Almighty encamp against me.

שיח Meditatio conquestio.

לאדם Contra hominem vel ad hominem? Numquid contra hominem disputatio mea? Vulg.

me. But rather as we, Is my complaint to man? Is he the object of my complaint? Or do I make my moan to him? Others interpret, to man, by, about, or concerning the things or dealings of men; as if he had said, Do I complain of the wrongs received from men, or do I complain because I receive no help from man, my wound is from the hand of God, and from him my help must also come. Is my complaint to man?

Ad hominē, i. e. super ulla re humana, de qua apud hominem conqueri possim, nihil malorū meorum illatū est humana industria sed divina providentia res omnes moderante.

And if it were so, why should not my spirit be troubled?

And if (it were) we supply those words: The Original is only, And if; If it were so, why should not my spirit, (my breath say some) be troubled? The words which we render to trouble, signifies to abbreviate or shorten. Why should not my breath be shortned; and then the sence is made up in this manner; Did I speak to men only, why should I not quickly make an end, and shorten my speech, why should I spend so much breath upon them? Others by the word ruarkh, understand the mind, or, the whole inward man; Why should not my mind be troubled, or shortned? Shortning of the mind, or shortness of mind is applied in divers Scriptures to men under grief and trouble of mind, (Exod. 6. 9.) Moses spake to the Children of Israel, but they hearkened not to Moses, for the anguish of their spirit, or, for shortness of spirit. Again (Numb. 21. 4.) And they journeyed from mount Hor by the way of the Red Sea to compass the Land of Edom, and the soul or spirit of the people was much discouraged (we put in the margine, shortned) because of the way: Either because of the troublesomness and danger of the way, or because of the length of the way, their spirit was discouraged; there was a Lion (danger) in the way: or, the way was long, and this shortned their spirits, that is, they thought they should never get thorough that vast wilderness. The soul of the people was discouraged or shortned, because of the way.

קצר

Abbreviatus, decurtatus, denotat contristationem animi, quod afflictis spiratio sit brevior ob angustiā spiritus.

We find this Negatively expressed concerning the spirit of God (Mic. 2. 6, 7.) while some were about (as it were) to silence and suspend the spirit it self; Prophesie not, say they, to them that prophesie. They shall not prophesie to them, that they shall not take shame. O thou that art named of the house of Jacob, Is the spirit of the Lord straitned? so we render, and put shortned in the margine: As if the Prophet had said, You may shorten or straiten the spirit of man, but you cannot straiten the spirit of God, you cannot shorten his spirit. Is the spirit of God shortned? Cannot he inlarge himself, and speak out by the meanest of his messengers, notwithstanding all your oppositions and contradictions? Or, Is the spirit of the Lord straitned? that is, Is the spirit of the Lord so weakened that he cannot make his word effectual? so it follows in the close of the same verse; Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? As if he had said, Is the spirit of the Lord straitned from doing good to those that receive the word? And if the word threaten you with evil, you may thank your selves for it: you should not hear of evil from my word were it not for sin, nor should you feel it, did you not continue and persist impenitently in your sins; therefore know that the Spirit of the Lord is not straitned, either in doing good to those who accept and obey the Word, nor in bringing evil upon those who reject and disobey it.

In Job's Text the word is applied to grief or sorrow, this shortneth the spirit every way. Sorrow shortneth the spirit of man, as spirit is taken for life: sorrow cuts asunder or breaks the thread of life. The sorrow of the world causeth death, (saith the Apostle 2 Cor. 7. 10.) 'Tis a killing sorrow. 'Tis a shortner of the Spirit also, because we cannot do that good we might; sorrow over-acted, weakens the whole man, and leaves him unable to put himself forth in action. Joy is the dilatation or widening of the heart; a heart full of joy, is enlarged, much joy makes the spirit free to act. Therefore the Sun is said to rejoyce as a strong man to run a race (Psal. 19. 5.) A strong man rejoyceth, and joy makes him run strongly, and put himself forth mightily. Now as joy enlargeth and openeth the heart, so sorrow is a straitner of it, it makes a man narrow-hearted, and narrow-handed, it stops him in his actings, or stayes him from acting. Therefore when the Jews were overpressed with sorrow, away with it saith Nehemiah (Neh. 8. 10.) The joy of the Lord is your strength; and I may say, the sorrow of man is his weakness, and the shortness of his spirit.

Why should not my spirit be troubled, and shortned?

Job speaks passionately and appeals to their judgment. Can ye shew me any reason why I should not be troubled under my afflictions, yea though they were but such as men usually inflict, whereas mine speak the arm of God. Being thus pressed you will confess, that it is as hard for me not to complain, as it is to keep due bounds in complaining.

Having given these touches from the single tearms, I shall offer three or four interpretations upon the whole.

As for me, is my complaint to man?

The question denies, my complaint is not to man. Though Job spake to man, yet man did not determine, or bound his speech, he spake beyond man. Taking the question in this negative sence, the latter branch of the verse may be understood as a proof that he did not speak to, or that his speech was not bounded in man. As if he had said, If I were to deal, or had to do with men alone in proving this point, or in approving my person; if I had not an outlet to God, if my thoughts did not work towards him, my spirit must needs be troubled: it could not be otherwise, but my spirit must be shortned, or straitned, I must fail and sink under the burthen you have laid upon me; but I subsist, and my spirit bears up, I maintain and stand my ground still, yea my heart is enlarged, therefore this is an argument I have not to deal with man only but with God, who supplies me with fresh spirits, and renews my strength.

Secondly, These words (as hath been toucht before) are an argument to move attention; As for me, is my complaint to man? As if he had said, My work is not with you, not with you alone; my soul ascends to heavin, and there I have liberty of speech, God admits me, and I have access to him: therefore why should I not have audience and acceptance with you also?

Others upon that account interpret thus, Let me have your attention, for I speak not of earthly mundane matters, but of the weightiest heavenly truths; I stand up to maintain the honour and justice of God in his dispensations to the children of men, therefore hear me; these things require much seriousness from me in speaking, and no less diligence from you in hearing.

Hac attentum auditorem & serium postulant oratorem.

Thirdly, The words may be expounded disjunctively, and so like a bell that rings out, they strike on both sides; As for me, is my complaint to man? And if it were so, &c. As if he had said, Which soever of these you take, whether you say my speech and complaint is to man; or whether you say it is not to man but to God; which of these soever you take, why should not my spirit be troubled? If you say my complaint is to man, have I not reason to be troubled at his hard dealings, and unkind censures? When my words find such ill construction, and my person such ill entertainment, have I not reason to be troubled? Or be it that my complaint is to God, have I not reason to be troubled? For doth he not deny me present deliverance, doth he not hold me yet in darkness? Is he not pleased to hide himself and all those comforts from me, which I am waiting for? So, that whether my complaint be to man, or to God, why should not my spirit be troubled, considering the present posture of my condition; seeing things go thus with me. As for me, is my complaint to man?

First observe, Great and painful sufferings put the best to complaints.

Job denied not that he complained, he only denied that man was the sole object of his complaint. What man in pain, especially in such pain as Job's was, can forbear complaining? An eminent Martyr in the Marian persecution, said thus to the Smith that was fastning the chain with which he was to be bound to the stake; Be sure you make it fast, for the flesh will have its course: Though the inordinate courses of sinful flesh are stopt and mortified, yet sensitive flesh, being pinched and pained will have its course, even in those that are spiritual. The title of Psal. 102. is A prayer of the afflicted when he is overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint. And again (Psal. 55. 2.) I mourn in my complaint, and make a noise. Such confusion was upon his spirit, that he rather made a noise then spake; to utter a voice is an act of reason; inanimate and irrational creatures tures make a ſound, or a noiſe. David was ſo diſturbed in his complaint, that he rather made a noiſe, like the winds, or like a beaſt, then formed an articulate voice like a man, I make a noiſe in my complaint. So when he made his prayer in the cave (Pſal. 142. 2.) I poured out my complaint before him. David was ſhut up in the cave, and though it were a willing impriſonment (for he went thither to ſecure himſelf, he was glad to go to the cave for ſhelter) yet he complained and begged of God that he might not have occaſion of going to the cave for ſhelter. We find Aſaph in ſuch complaints (Pſal. 77.) and Heman (Pſal. 88.) and Hezekiah (Iſa. 38. 14.) He complained and chattered like a Crane or a ſwallow. Indeed that queſtion put by the Prophet hath a negative ſence in it, (Lam. 3. 39.) Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the puniſhment of his ſins? As if he had ſaid, What reaſon hath a man to vex himſelf or murmur againſt God, as if he dealt rigorouſly and roughly with him, when all his ſufferings are procured by his own ſins? And hence an ancient Verſion renders the Text thus, Why doth the living man complain? Let each man complain for his own ſin.

There is a twofold complaint.

The firſt ariſeth meerly from the ſence of affliction, or the feeling of what we ſuffer; this is natural, this even Chriſt himſelf was under, while he was on earth in a ſuffering condition.

Secondly, There is a complaint which ariſeth from diſcontent and murmuring at our afflictions, vexing our ſelves at the things we ſuffer. This is ſinful, ſuch complaining becomes not the people of God; though they complain under the feeling of affliction, yet they muſt not murmur at affliction, but bewail their own tranſgreſſion; the beſt of Saints under affliction have cauſe to complain of their own ſin, and the ſin of many is the cauſe of all their afflictions. Every complaint which hath murmuring in it, is evil, and all the complaints of evil men are murmurings. The Apoſtle puts ſuch murmurers and complainers together (Jude 16.) Theſe are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own luſts. Complaining, which comes from, or is accompanied with murmuring, hath its original in luſt, and is their work who walk after their own luſts. We may complain, but we muſt not murmur; God doth not deny us to bemoan our ſelves, when he is pleaſed to lay his hand upon us, but he will not bear it if we murmur at his hand.

Secondly, From the object of Job's complaint, As for me, is my complaint to man?

Obſerve, A good man eyes God chiefly even while he is complaining to man.

Job was before men, but his complaint was to God. There is little gotten by complaining barely to man; and as there are but few who can give any eaſe to our complaint, ſo there are not a few, who encreaſe and add to it. To tell them that it is ill with us, makes our caſe worſe. For,

Firſt, Many are inſenſible of the ſufferings of others, they lay them not to heart, they are to the complaints which come before them about matters of affliction, as Gallio was to thoſe who complained about matters of religion; he cared for none of thoſe things, he regarded them not; you were as good ſpeak to a wall, or a rock, as to ſome men, they are inſenſible of what others feel, therefore why ſhould they be complained to?

A ſecond ſort are over-ſenſible, and account it a great burthen to receive complaints from the poor and diſtreſſed; 'tis indeed a burthen, yet ſuch a burthen as we ought to bear; and we may number it among thoſe which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of (Gal. 6. 2.) Bear ye one anothers burthens, ſo fulfilling the law of Chriſt. That we have our ears open, to receive the complaints, and our hearts ready to grieve for the miſeries of our brethren, is a burthen which the law of Chriſt hath laid upon us; and the bearing of that burthen is therefore called the fulfilling of the law of Chriſt, becauſe much love (which is the fulfilling of the law) goes out and is acted in bearing it.

Thirdly, There are others, who though they give the hearing contentedly, and will haply tell you they are ſorry to ſee your afflictions, yet they ſay little and do leſs to eaſe your ſorrow: at moſt they give you but a mouth-full of good words, a breath of charity, or charity only upon the breath. Of ſuch the Apoſtle James ſpeaks (Chap. 2. 15, 16.) If a brother or ſiſter be naked and deſtitute of daily food, and one of you ſay to them, depart in peace, be ye warmed, and filled; notwithſtanding you give them not thoſe things that are needful for the body, what doth it profit? Such kind of cheap relief, a wiſh it were otherwiſe with you, be you warmed, and filled, and cloathed, is all that many give; they give nothing that is real ſuccour, either for ſoul or body; and who would complain to ſuch a generation as this?

Fourthly, There are a ſort who anſwer complainings with deſpiſings, who mock at miſery, and take advantage to inſult over others in their neceſſities; they will not give ſo much as a parcel of goods words, nor be at the charge of a good wiſh to thoſe who are compaſſed about with evil. Such entertainment David's complaint had when he ſent to Nabal (1 Sam. 25. 10.) And Nabal anſwered and ſaid, who is David, and who is the ſon of Jeſſe? There be many ſervants now adayes that break every man from his Maſter: as if he had ſaid, what is he but a fugitive? Thus he reviled him, Shall I take my bread, and my water, and my fleſh that I have killed for my ſhearers, and give it unto men whom I know not whence they be? A company of runagates and wanderers, do you think I will have to do with ſuch as he and his, or give them relief? How common is it to ſnap up complainers, with, What are you? whence come you? what's that to me? what can I do for you? or why ſhould I though I can? upon what acquaintance, pray? An ingenuous ſpirit can eaſier die under his burthen, then ask help at the hands of ſuch.

Fifthly, Complain to ſome, and they will tell you, they have it not for you, they cannot relieve you, when yet it is in the power of their hand to do it. Some who never want money for a good bargain, or a profitable purchaſe, will alwayes be in want when they ſhould do a good work, or give to thoſe who have nothing. They who have enough to buy out two or three rich men, have not enough to relieve one poor man; they will rather make themſelves poor then help the poor, and be accounted weak rather then ſupport thoſe who are ready to ſink under their burdens; who would complain to men of ſuch a temper as this?

Sixthly, There want not ſome to whom if you complain, they will tell you plainly they will not relieve your wants, they make no excuſes, but refuſe down-right.

In the ſeventh and laſt place, very many are indeed unable to help thoſe who complain to them; though they are free enough, and have cordial deſires to do what is deſired, yet they cannot. They cannot reach ſuch relief as the complainers caſe calls for; they are not able to do it though they would. The line of the creature when it is longeſt and ſtretched to the utmoſt, may yet be too ſhort for our help. A great King had not wherewith to ſtop the cry of a poor woman (2 King. 6. 26.) And as the King of Iſrael was paſſing by upon the wall, there cryed a woman unto him, ſaying, help my Lord O King. And he ſaid if the Lord do not help thee, whence ſhall I help thee? out of the barn-floor, or out of the wine-preſs? There was nothing in the barn-floor, nothing in the wine-preſs; therefore he turns her over to God: the Lord muſt help thee, I cannot. As in that caſe ſo in many the creature is ſhort-handed, it hath no help. The Prophet gives an elegant deſcription of this, (Iſa. 3. 6, 7.) When a man ſhall take hold of his brother of the houſe of his father, ſaying, thou haſt cloathing, be thou our ruler, and let this ruine be under thy hand. In proſperous times men are ambitious of preferment, they bribe and beg for places of truſt and power, but in calamitous and confuſed times preferments and great places go a begging, and are refuſed. In that day ſhall he ſwear, ſaying, I will not be a healer: for in my houſe is neither bread, nor cloathing, make me not a ruler of the people; as if he had ſaid, What do you mean to make me a ruler? I have nothing ſuitable to ſuch a ſtate; your ruine cannot be under mine hand; your ruine is too ruinous, and your trouble is too troubleſom for me to engage in. As 'tis ſaid of ſome diſeaſes, they are the Phyſitians reproach, they cannot cure them; ſo the wounds and breaches of a State may be ſuch as no man dares undertake their cure and healing. And as publick, ſo private and perſonal evils are ſometimes ſo deſperate, that every man ſtands off, and ſaith, I will not, I cannot be a healer, I have have neither bread nor cloathing enough for it; this ruine cannot be under my hand.

All these considerations tell us aloud, that as 'tis sometimes in vain to complain to man, so 'tis alwayes best complaining to God, either immediatly, or whensoever we complain to man, to have God in our eye.

For the contrary of those seven discouragements, in reference to our complaint to man, may be affirmed of God;

First, He is sensible of our sorrows.

Secondly, To hear our complaint is no burthen to him.

Thirdly, He doth not use to send any away with good words only.

Fourthly, He doth not despise those who complain to him.

Fifthly, He doth not deny himself able to help.

Sixthly, 'Tis rare that he gives any a flat denial.

Seventhly, He never denies help to any because their condition is past his help; he needs not to answer in my house is no bread nor cloathing, no help, nor healing, for with him is all power at all times: therefore let us complain to him. And besides all this, we have not only a command from God to complain to him, but his promise to hear and help when we complain; and which is yet more, we honour God in complaining to him. We do a great honour to man, when we complain to him, yea it puts a piece of divinity upon him; and upon this account Magistrates to whom complaints are both most commonly and most properly made, are called in Scripture language, Gods. This is originally the Honour of God; for this speaks our faith, that all power is in him, and that he is able to support and relieve us in all our complaints. A beggar doth not make his complaint to a beggar who hath not a penny in his purse, or is as poor as himself: but he complains to those of whom he hath an opinion that they are able to help him. This perswasion of faith, that God is able to help, is not only a motive, but the ground of our complaining to him. He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him, (Heb. 11.6.) As it is our duty to believe this when we come to God with our prayers and complaints, so unless we believe this, we have neither any true foundation nor hope when we come. He that considers the Allsufficiency of God, and Insufficiency of man, will see reason enough in all his troubles to say with Job, As for me, is my complaint to man? In this Job did well, and spake both wisely and holily; But,

When he saith in the latter part of the verse, And if it were so, why should not my spirit be troubled? Was this a becoming speech? Should not Job rather have laboured to stop the trouble of his spirit, then thus encourage it? Should he not rather have checkt then backt his own unquiet heart? We may learn this from it,

That Good men sometimes are ready to give too much way to their own grief and unquietness of spirit.

Why should not my spirit be troubled?] Is the language of many in their troubles. Many reasons may be given why we ought to sit down in the midst of our troubles with quiet spirits. 'Tis dangerous to perswade our selves that we have reason to be troubled at any thing but sin. Our spirits are rarely troubled enough with the evil of sin, and usually too much with outward evils. Rachel weeps, and refuseth to be comforted; some fasten upon sorrow, and are greedy of grief; that which we translate (Job 10. 20.) Let me alone that I may take comfort a little, is by some rendred, Let me alone that I may mourn a little; let me have my scope in mourning. In Psal. 77. Asaph speaks out the trouble of his spirit, My sore ran in the night, and ceased not; my soul refused to be comforted. They give too much way to their troubles, who argue against their comforts, and put by the offer of them. When the Lord reproved Jonah for his passion (Chap. 4. 9. Doest thou well to be angry? He replied, I do well to be angry to the death. What he said of his passion of anger, others say of their passion of sorrow; We do well to be sorrowful; why should not our spirit be troubled? They think they have reason for it, though their reasons have no more reason in them, then that of Micah had (Judg. 18. 23.) who when the children of Dan asked him, What ayleth thee? Answered, Ye have taken away my gods which I made, and the Priest, and what is this that ye say, What ayleth thee? Have I not reason to complain, and be troubled when you have robbed me of my gods? Thus when they have lost but an Idol (as he had) somewhat that they over-prized and put in the place of God, yet being questioned, why are ye thus troubled? They answer, why should we not be troubled?

Christians should rather remember David's question, then imitate Job's (Psal. 42. 5.) Why art thou disquieted O my soul? why art thou cast down? He put his soul to answer for it, why art thou disquieted? He saith not with Job, Why should not my spirit be disquieted? But, Why art thou? Give an account of it. When we find such guests blustering upon our spirits, we may do much towards the quieting of them, by asking why they are so disquieted? And 'tis both our wisdom and our duty, if that will not do, to use all holy means to quiet them. When Christ (John 14. 1.) foresaw a storm, a black day, a day of trouble coming upon his Disciple, he prevents and way-layes the trouble of their hearts, by forbidding it, Let not your hearts be troubled; be not disturbed in your minds with cares and sorrows concerning the issue of my absence from you; say not, Our Lord and Master is gone, O what will become of us? For I go to prepare a place for you, and I will come again and receive you to my self, that where I am there ye may be also. Christ tells them he went to prepare a place for them, that he might thereby prepare their hearts patiently to bear his going away? Christ knew well, that if once trouble of heart did gather and grow upon them, it would work strange effects, and either carry them beyond or leave them short of the bounds of duty. Our danger is great when sorrow is in power. I will shew you a twofold danger of it.

First, Satan makes great use of any over-powerful passion. As he tempts some with joy, so others with sorrow: some are drowned while they intend only to swim, and bath themselves in pleasures: Others are drowned while they swim and bath in sorrows. Satan takes advantage of all extreams. Hence the Apostle adviseth about the incestuous person, who was much grieved and afflicted, that the Corinthians should comfort him (2 Cor. 2. 7.) He would not have him lye too long under those troubles of spirit, Lest he should have been swallowed up of too much sorrow. And (vers. 11.) Lest Satan shall get advantage of us; for we are not ignorant of his devices. Now as Satan would get an advantage against the whole Church by blemishing their discipline (which should alwayes be tempered with love, and tend only to the salvation of the offender) as rigorous and immoderate; so he would be busie to work his advantage upon the poor man himself, and swallow him up with too much sorrow. We know what black work some have made by the over-workings of sorrow. Satan doth his work in us, or tempts us to do his work in darkness; and that in a twofold darkness; First, in the darkness of Ignorance; Secondly, in the darkness of Sorrow, or of a troubled mind. And as he who lets the Sun go down upon his wrath (that is, who continues long in, and cherisheth his wrath) gives place to the Devil (Eph. 4.26, 27.) so also do they who let the Sun go down upon such sorrow.

Secondly, Such sorrow or trouble of spirit, unfits the soul for duty, such can neither pray nor hear as they ought. As some trouble of spirit is an occasion of quickning us to duty, so there is a trouble which dulls and deadens us. And as it unfits for spiritual, so for civil duties and employments: it makes a man careless, and ready to throw up all: take heed of such sorrows; say not, Why should not my spirit be troubled?

Job having by this third Argument provoked his friends to attention, brings forth a fourth.

Vers. 5. Mark me, and be astonied, and lay your hand upon your mouth.

Mark me.] The word signifies properly to turn the eye or face upon some remarkable object. And as it signifies an attentive view of the eye, so likewise the serious attention of the mind. When Job saith, Mark ye me, he doth not so much call for their eyes, as for their understandings. Nor was it his person which he would draw them to look at, but his cause. He was in no such comly case to invite bebeholders, his sores and sickness rendred him little pleasing to the eye.

Mark me, that is, First, Mark what I speak, or attend my speech.

Secondly, Mark what I suffer, mark what is fallen on me. As if he had said, Surely my friends, though ye have been a great while with me, yet ye have not heeded me. 'Tis possible to be long in the presence of a man, and not see him; that is, not consider his state and condition. Therefore after all this discourse Job admonisheth his friends to take better notice of him. Mark me;

And be astonied.] The word imports such astonishment as is caused by standing upon a high place, or beholding things from on high. He that stands upon a high cliff or tower, is astonished to look down. Look down upon me, saith Job, mark the huge deep of sorrow, which I am in, and be astonied. Astonishment is the conquest of sense, and and of reason too; we are never astonied while either sense or reason can act orderly, but when they are in a kind of huddle, this is our astonishment. Strange events, things seldom heard of, or rarely seen, breed astonishment. Astonishment is a degree beyond admiration; a man may wonder at that whereat he is not astonished. Thus the Prophet represents the posture of the neighbouring Nations at the fall of Tyrus (Ezek. 28. 19.) And all they that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee; thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt thou be any more. The fall of mighty Princes is matter of amazement and terror to all who hear of or behold it. Thus 'tis said of the Babylonian (Isa. 14. 16.) They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms? And (vers. 10.) Art thou also become weak as we, art thou become like us? Who could have believed this? Who ever expected to see such a change? And the Lord himself calls the heavens to astonishment at the strangeness of his peoples dealing with him, (Jer. 2. 12.) Be astonished O ye heavens at this, and be horribly afraid; be ye very desolate saith the Lord; for my people have committed two evils, &c. And those evils were such and so great, as few if any had ever committed before them; they had sinned without and beyond example, as is plain by the former verse, Hath a Nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? Where can you find a Nation changing their gods? The most barbarous Nations are tenacious of and zealous for their gods? They stick to their gods, though they be but Idols; Hath a Nation changed their god? Can you give me an instance of a people that have changed their gods, and turned them out of doors, though they are yet no gods: But my people have changed their glory, that is, their God (God is the glory of a people, his presence is at once our honour and our safety.) Now when such a thing as this was done, which was never done before, of which no example could be given for any records, then be astonished O heavens. Now, as the sin of Jerusalem was an unparalleld sin, so also was her punishment; and therefore she calls all to behold and be astonished, Lam. 1. 12. Is it nothing to you all ye that pass by? Behold and see, if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger. Thus Job seems to bespeak his friends, was there ever any mans sorrow like mine? Mine is a rare case, and may therefore justly breed astonishment. Mark me, and be astonished.

בהל Vehement significationis verbum, quod vix usurpatur nisi ob aliquod inopinatum eventum, aut ob aliquam rem ineffabilem & admiratione dignissimam. Bold.

Hence note, First, A man, especially a man in affliction, loves to have his case and discourse throughly weighed.

Unless you mark his affliction, you encrease it; and unless you mark his words, you diminish his person. Slight attention is displeasing to man, much more to God; yet how oft doth God speak, and we scarce mark? He hath reason to call upon us, mark me, both in what he saith, and in what he doth. We neither mark the words, nor the works of God as we ought. If men take it ill when they are not marked, how ill may the great God of heaven take it?

Secondly, Job's friends had censured and judged him, but they had not markt him.

Hence note, Some are more forward to censure then to consider.

They give judgment before they hear, and pass sentence before they mark; common reason bids us mark before we judge, and consider before we give our opinion either about the actions of others or their doctrines. The Apostles rule and counsel leads us to this (1 Thes. 5. 21.) Prove all things, hold fast that which is good. The rule holds also, Prove all things, and then reject that which is evil. 'Tis not praise-worthy to hold that which is good, till we have proved it so; nor can we be excused in rejecting that as evil which is evil, till we have proved it to be so.

Thirdly, While Job saith, Mark me, and be astonied, He seems to intimate thus much to his friends; hitherto ye have neglected me and my sufferings, but did ye mark me, ye would be astonied: He speaks not imparatively, as commanding their attention; but optatively, desiring them to mark him, and sheweth what would follow, Mark me, and (certainly) ye will be astonied.

Hence note, The reason why we are little affected with great things, is because we do not enough consider and mark them.

That which scarcely moveth us, would astonish us; that which is small in our eyes and estimations, would be great, if we did but weigh it. Did we throughly consider what sin is, many would tremble, who now make a sport of it. The mercy of God, the unspeakable love of Jesus Christ, are little valued and prized by many, because they enter not into a due consideration of them, they take no pains to know what Redemption, Justification, and Salvation mean, and therefore (as the Apostle speaks, Heb. 2. 3.) they neglect so great salvation. The Apostle Peter writing of the things of the Gospel (1 Pet. 1. 10.) shews how industrious some of old time were about them, Of which salvation the Prophets have enquired and searched diligently. And (ver. 12.) Which things the Angels desire to look into them. Angels pry into the secrets of the Gospel, they (as the word used by the Apostle implieth) do, as it were, stretch out their necks to see the glory of those mysteries. Were we but thus busie and intent upon them, how should we be swallowed up and transported with the riches of that Grace, with the freeness of that love which is manifested to the sons of men! The works of providence, whether works of mercy, or of judgment, are full of mystery, they are great, and sought out of all that have pleasure in them (Psal. 111. 2.) If we would seek them out, and scan their circumstances, we should stand amazed, both at the wisdom and power of God discovered in them. At this time it would be said, What hath God wrought? How unsearchable are thy judgments, and thy wayes past finding out; who is a God like unto thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?

Fourthly observe, That the dealings of God with some godly men are full of astonishment.

David himself said (Psal. 119. 120.) My flesh trembleth for fear of thee, and I am afraid of thy judgments. Those Judgments which cause trembling before they come, being come cause astonishment. As the mercy which God sometimes bestows upon his servants, is beyond their faith, so many of his chastnings are beyond their fear; and as themselves are astonished at what God hath laid upon them, so others also ought to be. The Judgments of God upon Jerusalem were so strange, that the Kings of the earth and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed them; where faith ends, wonder must needs begin. What God did to Jerusalem for the punishment of her sin, he did to Job for the tryal of his graces; even such things as no man who knew his integrity would have believed, though it had been told him before he saw it; and therefore he had reason to say, Mark me, and be astonied,

And lay your hand upon your mouth.] This action follows astonishment before spoken of (Mich. 6. 16.) The Nations shall see and be confounded at all their might (that is, to see their own might confounded and weakned) and shall lay their hand upon their mouth. The Image of Harpocrates (whom the antient Idolatrous Egyptians adored as the God

Harpocratem simulachrum qui Deus putabatur silentii sic exprimebatur ab Ægyptiis ut digitum apprimebat labris. Car. Steph. Lex. Cum veniet contra digito compesce labellum. Juv. Sat.

of

of silence) was formed and set up in the Temple of Isys, with his hand laid upon his mouth. And this hath long obtained the honour and authority of a proverbial speech, signifying thus much, that we will say no more, or that we have no more to say. This phrase is often used in Scripture; for, besides that it is used twice more in this book (Chap. 29. 9. & 40. 4.) we also read, how the Danites said to Michah's Priest, who began to make a bustle against them, and to demand, What do ye? (Judg. 18. 19.) hold thy peace, lay thy hand upon thy mouth. Solomon gives advice, (Prov. 30. 32.) If thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thy self, or if thou hast thought evil, lay thy hand upon thy mouth; that is, if thou hast done evil, do not defend it, but repent of it; or if thou hast framed evil thoughts in thy heart, yet let not thy mouth speak them out in evil words; smother those sinful conceptions, let them never see the Sun, for 'twil encrease thy sin, and procure thee shame. Among the several stations which the Israelites made through the wilderness, one was in Punon, or Phinon (Numb. 33. 42.) which as one of the Ancients observeth, signifieth, silence or sparingness of speech; upon which he maketh this useful application, Let us be careful to take up our station here sometimes, while we are travailing through the wilderness of this world. It may be our wisdom to pitch in silence. The hand is well imployed while we stop the mouth with it from broaching and maintaining that which is evil, or from opposing that which is good. As to open the mouth, importeth readiness to speak, and boldness of speech; so to lay the hand upon the mouth, notes silence, and properly silence upon conviction; that is, when a man hath heard such reasons as he cannot oppose or contradict. We use an expression near this, Lay your hand upon your heart; that is, take the thing deeply to heart, apply it home. As to lay the hand upon the heart, notes internal speech; so to lay the hand upon the mouth, notes the stopping of external speech. Lay your hand upon your mouth, is as if Job had said, Mark me, and you will have little reason and less forwardness to speak any more; or, My counsel to you my friends, is, That ye would hear more and speak less; yea, that in this case ye would now be silent and speak no more.

Ambros de 42. filiorum Israelis mansionibus.

There are two things which should stop the mouth, and impose silence.

First, The plainness and evidence either of reason or of proof (Rom. 3. 19.) What the law speaks, it is to those that are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may be guilty; that is, the law brings such plain evidence and conviction, that no man shall have a word to speak against it. If God should spread before men their lives, and his law in the purity and spiritualness of it, every man must sit down silent, and lay his hand upon his mouth.

Secondly, The mouth is stopped by the depth and darkness, by the inevidence and obscurity of that which is before us; when things are so vailed and clouded that we cannot see into them, what can we say to them? 'Tis then high time to lay our hand upon our mouthes, and instead of speaking to admire. We may conceive Job intending both these stop-mouthes to his friends. First, That the reason of Gods dealing with him was secret and dark. Secondly, That he intended to answer their objections with so much plainness of speech, and evidence of reason, that either they should not be able to resist him, or it would be very dangerous for them if they did; and therefore (saith he) lay your hand upon your mouth. Which he presseth upon them yet further in the words following.

Vers. 6. Even when I remember, I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my flesh.

This verse contains Job's last Argument, moving his friends to attention. The reason stands thus; the very remembrance of that which I am about to speak to you makes me afraid and tremble, therefore you have reason to attend and mark what I speak; surely I speak not of slight matters, nor do I tell you stories of I know not what, I am serious, be you so.

Doctis quibusdam placet hic sensus Jobum partim de-

When I remember, I am afraid.] When I remember, what? First, say some. The trouble and affliction, the pains and sorrows which I am in. Secondly, say others, When I remember what prosperity God gives the wicked; as in the next verse, Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea are mighty in power? When I remember these dispensations of God, it strikes me with terror.

loris sui recordatione, partim mira Dei administratione de qua mox dicturus est, sic conturbari ut totus horreat. Merl.

Trembling taketh hold of my flesh.] This clause highteus the former, I am altogether afraid, I do not only tremble, but trembling taketh hold of me. Moses speaks in this form (Exod. 15. 13.) Thou in thy mercy hast led forth the people which thou hast redeemed, &c. God had but just put them over the Sea, and yet, by the spirit, Moses saw them put into the possession of Canaan, and his faith prophesied what posture other Nations should be in when God should do these things, The people shall hear and be afraid, sorrow shall take hold of the inhabitants of Palestina. He saith not that they shall be full of sorrow, but sorrow shall take hold of them, as a Sergeant takes hold of a man to arrest and carry him away: So it follows, Sorrow shall take hold of the Dukes of Edom, the mighty men of Moab, trembling shall take hold of them. In this the Scripture sets forth the excessiveness of their troubles, that fear should not only fall upon them, but take hold of them. Thus saith Job, I am not only afraid, but trembling hath taken hold of my flesh. And if the remembrance of these things makes me afraid and tremble, how can you who are present but be troubled and deeply affected with the sight of them?

Si tantæ calamitatis sola recordatio me consternaret quanto magis vos præsentes si animum advertetis necessarium est obstupescere ob calamitatem meam. Jun.

I need not draw out particular Observations here, having shewed upon other places how dreadful the judgments of God are, and what effects they have produced upon the spirits of good men. Habakkuk who had only a prophetical vision of them, expresseth his sence in the highest language of amazement (Chap. 3. 16.) When I heard, my belly trembled, my lips quivered at the voice, rottenness entred into my bones, I trembled in my self, that I might rest in the day of trouble.

Only here observe a double difference.

First, Between the godly and the wicked at all times.

Secondly, Between the godly of those times under the law, and the godly who live in these Gospel times.

To the first, A godly man trembles at the judgments of God, a wicked man is little moved at them: The foresight or remembrance of Judgments makes a godly man fear, but a wicked man is hardned in the sight and under the feeling of them.

To the second, The people of God under the Law, being dealt with more by visible dispensations of mercy and judgment in the times of the Law (as is evident, especially throughout the twenty-sixth Chapter of Leviticus, and the twenty-eighth of Deuteronomy) they were more subject to fear and despondings of spirit, upon sad providences and appearances, then now believers are under the Gospel. The grace of God appearing more eminently in these Gospel times by Jesus Christ, and the love of God being more abundantly shed abroad in the hearts of believers by the Holy Ghost, they are delivered from that spirit of bondage, and the pressures of servile fear, under which formerly they were extreamly held in subjection; and have therefore clearer cause of rejoycing and glorying in tribulation then they had; and of saying with Paul, We are only as sorrowing, yet alwayes rejoycing, as having nothing, yet possessing all things: For as perfect love casteth fear (that fear which hath torment) quite out, (1 Joh. 4. 18.) so the more love is perfected, the more is fear cast out.

VERS. 7, 8, 9, 10.

Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power?
Their seed is established in their sight with them, and their off-spring before their eyes.
Their houses are safe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them.
Their bull gendreth and faileth not, their cow calveth, and casteth not her calf.

JOB having finished his Preface, proceeds to refutation, which he grounds not only upon reason, but (and that chiefly in this place) upon experience, teaching his friends by their sense, and bidding them ask their own eyes, whether he did not speak truth, and themselves an error?

Vers.

Verſ. 7. Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea are mighty in power?

As if he had ſaid, Do you ſee all or many wicked men in an afflicted eſtate? Why then have you thus concluded againſt me that I am wicked, becauſe afflicted? The whole context of the ſeven verſes next enſuing, are a continued deſcription of the wicked mans proſperity.

His proſperity is deſcribed;

First, What it is in life, or while he liveth.

Secondly, What it is when he is dying, or in the manner of his death.

The proſperity of his life may be conſidered, either, as to his perſon, or as to his relations. His perſonal proſperity is deſcribed (verſ. 7.) His proſperity in relations, is deſcribed, First, In his children (verſ. 8.) Secondly, In his whole family, or in all within doors (verſ. 9.) Thirdly, In his cattel or ſubſtance without doors (verſ. 10.) And all this outward proſperity is hightned by the joy, mirth, and gladneſs with which he and his abound, while he aboundeth in theſe outward enjoyments, They ſend forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance. They take the Timbrel and Harp, and rejoyce at the ſound of the Organ (verſ. 11, 12.) Thus we have the reſolution of this context in the deſcription of the wicked mans proſperity, while he lives. His proſperity in death is ſet down, verſ. 13.

Verſ. 7. Wherefore do the wicked live?

This verſe contains the perſonal proſperity of the wicked man, and therein we have a gradation of three ſteps; or his proſperity riſeth by three ſteps.

First, He lives.

Secondly, He becometh old.

Thirdly, He is mighty in power.

To all this Job prefixeth a wherefore, and why all this? Or how comes it to paſs, that the wicked man liveth, and not only liveth, but becometh old, and not only becometh old, but waxeth mighty in power; Wherefore is all this? He ſpeaks either admiringly, or chidingly; give me an account of it. If (as you my friends have often told me) wicked men are alwayes puniſhed in this life for their ſins, I wonder whence it comes to paſs, that ſo many wicked men live, and not only live, but proſper? And whence is it that I ſuffer all theſe miſeries (as you ſay) for my ſins, if the wicked, as your eyes may teach you, enjoy ſo much proſperity? Unriddle theſe queries, reſolve theſe doubts.

Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, and mighty in power?

This wherefore may have a double reference; First, To the opinion of his friends, who held that God diſtributeth evil to wicked men, and good to good men in this life. Now, ſaith he, for as much as this is your principle and your opinion, reconcile your principle, and this experience together, Wherefore do the wicked proſper? For as much as you have ſaid, God gives out allowances, and lots to men, as men are good or bad; to the good he gives good things (ſay you) and to the evil, evil. As the wherefore is thus applied, take this note from it.

No reaſon could be given why wicked men ſhould proſper in this life, if God dealt with all men in this life according to their deſervings.

If deſert were the rule, we were not able to give a reaſon why wicked men proſper, who indeed deſerve not to live in the world; nor why godly men, whom the world doth not deſerve, ſuffer ſo much while they live. As the world is not worthy that it ſhould have godly men to live in it, ſo ungodly men are not worthy to live in the world; how then ſhall we anſwer if ſelf-worthineſs carry it, when commonly 'tis worſt with the beſt, and beſt with the worſt?

Again, The word wherefore may have reference to Job's own doubt; wicked men proſper, why do they proſper? Wherefore do the wicked live? And this is a quere which hath all along troubled the ſpirits of the Saints, eſpecially in thoſe times, nor are they alwayes or eaſily ſatisfied in theſe about it; many were then puzzled, and ſo they are now when they ſee wicked men proſper, and godly men afflicted. That a wicked man is vexed or afflicted, no man wonders at it; every one can tell why, and give you a wherefore: but that he ſhould live, and proſper, this is hard to reſolve. Again, that a godly man is bleſt, and thrives, and lives comfortably, no man wonders at this; for he hath the promiſes of this life as well as of that which is to come. But to ſee godly men afflicted, trod under foot, and ſtript of all; theſe diſpenſations put many to a ſtand, Wherefore is it that the wicked proſper? And, Wherefore is it that the godly are afflicted? That God is juſt, a godly man knoweth, and ſaith as Abraham (Gen. 18. 25.) Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? God is juſt, and therefore doth juſtly. The people of God have it alwayes upon their ſpirits, to honour God thus. And they give him glory in that other principle which David aſſerts (Pſal. 5. 5.) That the fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in his ſight, and he hates all workers of iniquity. Theſe things are unqueſtionable with them, and therefore they are often ſcanning upon, queſtioning and enquiring about this point, Why do the wicked proſper?

Hence obſerve, It is ſome trouble to good men to ſee evil men flouriſh and live free from trouble.

It hath been ſo, and 'tis ſo to this day; many a good man hath had much ado to digeſt this morſel, and to get above this temptation. While David admoniſheth (Pſal. 37. 1.) Fret not thy ſelf becauſe of the wicked man, and be not envious at the evil doer; he more then intimates that the beſt of men are ready to envy and fret when they proſper. And either he or Aſaph tells us how he found it working upon his own heart (Pſal. 73. 3.) I was envious at the fooliſh, when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked. And he ſtaid not here, but was over-born by the ſtrength of this temptation, to make a very unbecoming and dangerous concluſion (verſ. 13.) Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency; for all the day long have I been plagued and chaſtned every morning. He indeed corrects himſelf, verſ. 14. If I ſay I will ſpeak thus, behold I ſhould offend againſt the generation of thy children; and when he thought to know this (that is, to ſee the reaſon of it) it was too painful for him, till he went into the ſanctuary of God, (that is, till he conſulted with God) then he underſtood the end of thoſe men. Till we look to that reckoning which lyeth beyond this life, we get no reſolution of this doubt.

We may anſwer this quere further (Why the wicked proſper in this life?) two wayes.

First, Negatively.

Secondly, Affirmatively.

If you ask, Wherefore do the wicked proſper?

I anſwer, First, Negatively; and I ſhall give you a five-fold negation.

First, It is not becauſe God loves their perſons, or bears them (as ſuch) any good will.

Secondly, It is not becauſe God approves their wayes, or likes their doings.

Thirdly, It is not becauſe God intends them good, or hath a purpoſe to beſtow further bleſſings upon them.

Fourthly, It is not becauſe God cannot pull them down, lay them low, and cut them off: he can weaken the ſtrongeſt, and cauſe the greateſt to fall before him; he can cruſh them as the moth.

Fifthly, It is not becauſe he dares not deal with them, or is affraid to provoke their power. Some Princes of the world have been forced to let ſome wicked men alone, to live long and grow mighty in power; they durſt not provoke them, they knew not what fires they might ſtir againſt themſelves. The ſons of Zerviah were too hard for David, but there are none too hard for God. For none of theſe reaſons doth the Lord ſuffer wicked men to live, become old, and mighty in power.

We may anſwer the queſtion Affirmatively three wayes.

First, In reference to God.

Secondly, In reference unto the godly, and

Thirdly, In reference to the wicked themſelves.

First, Wherefore do the wicked live, and proſper? They are ſuffered to do ſo in reference to God himſelf.

First, To glorifie his patience, and long-ſuffering. Theſe attributes would not ſhine forth with ſuch luſtre in the world, did not wicked men live and thrive in the world; if

If God ſhould immediately deſtroy every one that doth wickedly, he ſhould be very juſt, and his holineſs would appear in this; but thoſe Attributes of patience and long-ſuffering would not appear: but when God ſuffers the wicked to continue, and thoſe whom he is able every moment to deſtroy, to ſurvive many years, how doth this lift up his glory, and tell us, that he is ſlow to wrath, though he be great in power.

Secondly, In reference to God. The Apoſtle gives us an account why (Rom. 9. 22.) What if God willing to ſhew his wrath, and make his power known, endured with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction? What hath any man to ſay, if God reſpecting the further manifeſtation of his own wrath, ſeem to favour wicked men? If it be thus (ſaith the Apoſtle) what hath any man to ſay to it? If as God ſuffers them, to ſhew forth his own patience and long-ſuffering here, ſo to have the fuller blow at them hereafter, and to take (as it were) the more advantage in making his power known, even the power of his wrath: For this reaſon he endureth with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath, fitted to deſtruction; they are fitted to deſtruction already: and they are veſſels of wrath, ſuch as deſerve to be filled with wrath, brim-full with wrath every day; yet they are full of comforts, and continue ſafe a long time, that their periſhing at laſt may make God more known in the greatneſs and irreſiſtibility of his power. The power of God is the more known when once it acteth, by how much it ſtayeth the longer before it acteth upon wicked men.

Thirdly, It is, becauſe the Lord hath appointed a day wherein he will judge the world by Jeſus Chriſt in righteouſneſs. A day is coming which is the day of the revelation of his righteous judgment (Rom. 2. 5.) Therefore he lets things go thus at preſent. He will at laſt render to every man according to his work; but now he doth not: And becauſe he hath this in his heart, he ſpares wicked men a while, gives them a reprieve, and doth not ſeal the Writ for their execution.

Secondly, We may anſwer this Queſtion (Wherefore do the wicked live?) affirmatively, in reference to the godly.

Firſt, To teach them patience towards all men, to love their enemies, to do good to thoſe that hate them, as was further ſhewed, chap. 20. v. 29.

Secondly, God ſuffers the wicked to proſper in ſin for trial of the Graces of his ſervants. There are many Graces which would come to little trial, if wicked men ſhould not thrive in their ſins. The grace of Patience is tried by this means; becauſe wicked men proſpering, get power to vex and perſecute them; yea, their patience is alwayes tried by the proſperity of the wicked, though they hurt them not with their power; though they are not thorns and briars to tear and trouble them, yet to ſee them proſper, is an exerciſe of patience under, and ſubmiſſion to the will of God.

This alſo trieth the ſoundneſs and ſteddineſs of their judgment, whether they will alter their opinion, either concerning themſelves or wicked men, becauſe of outward diſpenſations. Then a godly man is eſtabliſhed indeed, when he neither thinks the worſe of himſelf becauſe he is afflicted, nor the better of wicked men, becauſe they thrive and proſper.

Laſtly, We may anſwer this Query (Why do the wicked proſper?) affirmatively alſo, in reference to the wicked themſelves, in two things.

Firſt, It renders them more inexcuſable in the day of wrath.

Secondly, This gives them opportunity to ſhew what they are, both which points were inſiſted upon, chap. 20. v. 29. Whither I refer the Reader.

Thus we may anſwer Job's Queſtion, Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power?

I ſhall now ſpeak more diſtinctly to theſe words, as they lie in this gradation.

Wherefore do the wicked live?

Some read in the time paſt, Wherefore have the wicked lived? Others in the time to come, Wherefore ſhould the wicked live? We tranſlate in the preſent time, Wherefore do they live? To live, in Scripture is taken two wayes.

Firſt, For a bare ſubſiſtence in the world, or for the holding (as we ſay) of life and ſoul together, to be kept out of the grave, or to be above ground; this is to live: So ſome reſtrain it here; Wherefore do the wicked live? That is, wherefore have they ſo much as a breathing-time in the world? that's too much for them. Wherefore are not their filthy and unclean ſouls preſſed by death out of their bodies? why are they not tumbled into the grave? why are they not tumbled down into hell? why do they cumber, ſtill cumber the world? A wicked man is not worthy to live, much leſs is he worthy of the comforts of this life. If a wicked man had his deſert, he ſhould have nothing but wrath. The wrath of God is revealed againſt all unrighteouſneſs. The wages of ſin is death; that's all he earns, why then doth he live?

Secondly, To live, ſignifies not barely to live, but to live comfortably, to have content with our life; to live is to proſper. Thus the word is often uſed in Scripture (Pſal. 118. 17.) I ſhall not die, but live. David did not look upon himſelf as immortal, or that he ſhould never die; he knew he was ſubject to the ſtatute of death: but his meaning is, I ſhall not die now, I ſhall not die by the hands of theſe men, I ſhall not die the death which they have deſigned me to; or when he ſaith, I ſhall not die, but live; his meaning is, I ſhall live comfortably and proſperouſly, I ſhall live as a King. That which we tranſlate (1 Sam. 10. 24.) God ſave the King, is, Let the King live, that is, let him proſper and have good dayes; let him have peace with all, or victory over his enemies. 'Tis ſaid in that Propheſie of Jeſus Chriſt (Pſal. 72. 15.) He ſhall live. Chriſt hath not only a being, but a glorious being. Though Jeſus Chriſt had no outward pomp, while he was in the world, yet they who knew him, honoured him; and all power was committed to him. He ſhall live, and to him ſhall be brought of the Gold of Sheba; prayers ſhall dayly be made to him, and dayly ſhall he be praiſed. Chriſt lives and reigns, all his foes ſhall be made his footſtool. When Paul ſaith (1 Theſ. 3. 8.) Now I live, if ye ſtand faſt in the faith; he would have the Theſſalonians know, that his life would be a continual death, if he ſaw them go back in Grace, and decline in Faith; and that it would add joy, yea, a Crown to his life, if they ſtood faſt in the faith, and keep cloſe to the profeſſion of the Goſpel. The two witneſſes (Rev. 11. 8.) are ſaid to be ſlain; which is underſtood, not of a corporal, but of a civil death. While the witneſſes of Chriſt live in the body, they are ſaid to be ſlain and dead, becauſe they live in affliction and trouble; and as that Text ſpeaks, propheſie in ſackcloath, that is, are poor and low in the world. To be ſtript of the comforts and contentments of this life, is in Scripture-language, to be ſtript of life it ſelf. As there is a life of Grace, and a livelineſs of Grace; a living hope, and a lively hope (1 Pet. 1. 4.) ſo there is a life of Nature, and the livelineſs of Nature. We may underſtand this Text of both, ſpecially of the latter; 'tis more then a wicked man can expect, that he ſhould live; but that he ſhould be lively and ſtrong, that he ſhould live richly, comfortably, joyfully, this offends and ſtumbles many, and they cannot but put Job's Queſtion, Wherefore do the wicked live? yet that which follows, offends more; they do not only live, but become old.

Non eſt vivere ſed valere vita.

The ſecond ſtep of their proſperity is the length of life. Zophar (chap. 20.) grants that a wicked man may triumph, he may have his fill of joy; but (ſaith he) the triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment. Here Job oppoſeth Zophar, affirming not only that wicked men live, but live long; they do not only proſper, but proſper many years; they become old in proſperity. The word which we render to become old, ſignifies ſo to become old, as to continue ſtrong in old age, and to have, as a renewing of years, ſo, of abilities. The old age of ſome men is nothing but weakneſs, infirmities ann diſeaſes overtake them, and make their lives a burden, both to themſelves and their friends; but others are ſtrong and luſty, they have a good old age. The word is uſed to expreſs the antiquity of God himſelf (Dan. 7. 9.) Where he is called The ancient of dayes. Now though the Lord be the ancient of dayes, yet there is no decay upon the Lord; he is as ſtrong and powerful now, as he ever was, and ſo he ſhall be to everlaſting. As his years fail not, or have no end (Pſal. 102. 22.) So his strength faileth not, nor hath any end, his power is not abated, his hand is not shortned by time, no, nor by eternity. Thus (in proportion) we are to understand it here; Job saw wicked men, having an old age like youth, a winter with a spring in it, natural vigour flourishing, when (as Solomon describes old age, Eccles. 12. 5.) The Almond tree flourished. There is yet a third step; Job observed wicked men not only to live and grow old, but, חיל Pollent opibus. Nam in opibus potentia hominis consistit. Confortavi divitiis. Vulg. Etiam comparant divitias. Tharg.

עתק Veteraſcere, ſeneſcere.

עתיק יומין Durabilis cujus dies non deficiunt; qui ſemper idem eſt

To be Mighty in power.] In the two former words, to live and become old, we had their natural power; in this, their civil. They are mighty, or, strengthened in power. The word which we translate power, signifies also riches. Thus some render it here; They are mighty in riches, saith Mr. Broughton. Riches are so expresst, because there is a power in them; and most rich men are powerful men. The Chaldee Paraphrase gives this reading, yea, they gather riches. Some grow old and poor, they lose their wealth, while they heap up dayes; These grow old, and gather riches. So that now we are at the height of the wicked mans prosperity; he lives many dayes, and with many dayes, he hath abundance of riches; and with his riches, power and authority; for that is a second signification of the word, which our Translation rather enclines to. He is not only a rich, but a powerful man; he is cloathed with authority and command; he is advanced to Magistracy, and all submit to him: He is the Head, and doth what he pleaseth; he speaks, and all obey him; He is mighty in power. This is the highest step of the wicked mans prosperity. The Orator long ago spake with indignation concerning Cataline the Conspirator, The man lives; he adds, and comes into the Senate: As if he had said, It is too much for this man to live, yet behold he lives in power and authority. So, Job, to set forth the glory of wicked men, saith, They live, and become old, and are mighty in power. They are placed upon the very pinacle of honour, and are lifted up above their brethren. From the personal prosperity of wicked men, Job proceeds to that of their Relations.

Vivit, imo in Senatum venit. Cic. de Catal.

Verse 8. Their seed is established in their sight with them, and their off-spring before their eyes.

Not only are they, but their children also are established. This is a great addition to their worldly happiness. Abraham was a man possessed of great riches and power, and (which was more then all his possessions) God told him (Gen. 15. 1.) I am thy Shield and thy exceeding great reward; yet Abraham said, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless? vers. 2. This want sowred all his enjoyments; though he were the beloved of God, yet he was pinched with this, I go childless: A child was more to him then all other worldly gifts; yet, I grant, it was not a meer natural child which he waited for, but a child of promise. So that his fear was not (indeed) so much that he should have no children, but lest the promise of the blessed Seed should not be accomplished in him: Such a child was most in his eye, nevertheless, a child was much in his eye, as that blessing, without which all his outward blessings would come short of his desires, and be imperfect. Therefore Job describes the prosperity of wicked men, not only by their riches and abundance, but by their children. Their seed is established in their sight.

Their seed.] That is, by an ordinary Metonymie, their children are established.]

The word signifies to stablish, first, Firmly. Secondly, To establish orderly and rightly, or an exactness of establishment: David useth this word in his prayer to God about the settlement of his own house (2 Sam. 7. 26.) Let thy name be magnified for ever, saying the Lord of Hosts is the God over Israel, and let the house of thy servant David be established before thee, that is, let the posterity of David be orderly stablished. And it is applied to the settlement of all the Saints in their generations (Psal. 102. 28.) The Children of thy servants shall continue, their seed shall be stablished before thee. They shall continue, and not only continue, but be strong; they shall have an orderly and a firm establishment. Thus (saith Job) The seed of the wicked is established. And which is more, they are established in their sight. It is a blessing to have them established; but 'tis a greater blessing to have them established in their sight. It adds to the blessing, that their children should not only prosper, but that they should see it. The Hebrew is, before their face; it is a great aggravation of our sorrow when our children come to misery before our face. As it is said, Jer. 39. 6. The King of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes. He not only slew his sons, but made him witness of it; Zedekiah's own eyes were put out shortly after, (his sorrow had been less if they had been put out before he had beheld that doleful spectacle) the cruel death of his own children. The glory of the children of God shall afflict the wicked, because they shall see it. Christ puts that in expresly (Luke 13. 28.) When you shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob sit down in the Kingdom of heaven, and ye your selves shall be thrust out. They shall enter heaven before your eyes, or in your sight, you shall see them. If they should not see them there, it would not trouble them so much; but to see them happy, will be their misery. Now, as it is an affliction for any man to see his children slain before his eyes, or to see the prosperity of others before his eyes, in which he cannot partake; so to have our children prosper before our eyes, and our seed exalted in our sight, is a great advancement of our happiness. If a father hath only a promise that when he is dead, his children shall prosper, this comforts him; but when himself lives to see it, this is much more comfortable. This mercy Job took notice of as the portion of the wicked; Their seed is established in their sight.

Ad facies eorum. Heb.

Further, The word in the Original, which we translate in their sight, is used sometimes comparatively, or by way of similitude (chap. 4. 19.) They shall be crushed before, or as soon as the moth. The Hebrew is, They shall be crushed before the face of the moth, that is, as soon as you can crush a moth, so are the proudest crushed by the hand of God. Thus some expound here, Their seed is stablished in their sight, that is, as much as they; as they live long, so do their children, as they become old, so do their children. They and theirs prosper together, or theirs prosper as well as they.

Ad facies eorum, i. e. sicut vel quantum ipsi.

And their off-spring before their eyes.] This clause is of the same meaning with the former; the word off-spring, signifies the shoot of a tree, or a sprig that grows out of the earth; children are as plants and sprigs. In both parts he answers what Zophar spake (chap. 20. 10.) Where he told Job, That his children should seek to please the poor, that is, his children should be brought to such a low and mean condition, that they must submit to the lowest, and ambitiously pursue the favour of the meanest, even seek to please the poor. Now, saith Job, my observation (and so may yours) hath taught me otherwise; I have often seen the seed of wicked men established in their sight, and their off-spring before their eyes. He answers also that of Eliphaz (chap. 15. 33.) He shall shake off his unripe grapes as the Vine, and shall cast off his flower as the Olive; that is, his children shall come to an immature end, they shall die in their youth, yea, in their infancy. But (saith Job) I have seen the seed of the wicked established, they have lived long, and taken root, and come to maturity; they have not been shaken off as unripe grapes, and as the flower of the Olive.

צאצאים Germina, appellantur ab exeundo, quasi ἐκπεφυκότα dicas. Drus.

The Prophet Isaiah seems to oppose Job's experience, and to subscribe to the opinion of his friends (Isa. 14. 20, 21.) The seed of evil doers shall never be renowned: Prepare slaughter for his children, for the iniquity of their fathers.

I answer, The original Text may be thus rendred in the Letter; The seed of evil doers shall not be called (or renowned) for ever; as if he had said, suppose they have a name for a while, or be established in the sight of their fathers, that is, while they live; yet this shall not last always, ere long they shall be cut off: we translate, not for ever, by never, or, not at all; which must be understood of the continuance of their seed in renown. Nor doth that which Job asserts, the prosperity of some one or more of the seed of a wicked man, stand in the light of the Prophets position; That the seed of evil doers are not renowned for ever; or, that they shall never be renowned. For the Prophet speaks according to the general rule and law of Gods proceedings with wicked men, by which, as themselves are usually cut off, so also are their seed and posterity too; yet as most other general rules have their exceptions, so also hath this. Grammarians give general rules about the government of words, yet they have Heteroclites and Anamolies, which vary from the ordinary construction struction; so the Wisdom and Justice of God propose general rules of administration towards men, and this amongst the rest, is a sure and noble one, that The seed of evil doers shall never be renowned; yet the Lord hath some except cases, wherein he sheweth his own liberty and soveraignty in permitting the seed of evil doers to prosper for a time; but he will make it good in the close, that the seed of evil doers shall never be renowned.

Verse 9. Their houses are safe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them.

This temporal flourishing estate of a wicked man is here further described: We heard before, First, Of his personal prosperity. Secondly, Of the prosperity of his Children. This verse extends it to his whole Family.

First, Affirmatively.

Secondly, Negatively.

We have the affirmative part in the beginning of the verse, Their houses are safe from fear; that is, they have peace in their houses. Understand by their houses, not only the dwelling place it self, their seat, but all they have in and about their houses, all are safe from fear. The Hebrew is, Their houses are peace from fear, that is, their houses are so far from fear, that there is nothing in their houses but peace; a house full of peace, is a house full of good things. This may be expounded two wayes; Their houses are full of peace, that is,

שלם
Domus eorum pax à timore, i. e. summa quædam tranquilitas omnis timoris expers.

First, Their houshold, their servants, their children, all that belong to them are at peace one with another, there is no contention, no bitterness of spirit, no breach among them. The consent of domesticks is a great mercy. Dissentions endanger Families as well as Nations, and hinder the prosperity of them; where some go one way, and some another; usually (as to common good) they all go wrong. A house (saith Christ) divided against it self, cannot stand.
Benevola consensio domesticorum.

Secondly, As it notes harmony and good agreement among the persons, so the quiet possession of the goods of the house: All that he hath laid up in his house is at peace from fear; thieves do not break through and steal, nor any of the sons of violence come openly upon him to make him afraid. And as they are free from present danger, so from the very fear of it; Their houses are safe or peace from fear. This word was used ordinarily by the Jews in their salutations, as containing the wish of all welfare to a person or family (1 Sam 25. 5.) Thus shall you say to him that lives in prosperity (that is, to Nabal) Peace be to thee, and to thy house, and to all that thou hast. Here is a threefold distribution of peace; first, Peace to him. Secondly, To his Family. And thirdly, To all that he had. Thus here, they have peace from fear, or are safe from fear; they, their families and their goods, they have no breach, no dissention among themselves, no invasion, no violence from abroad. What can be desired more to the compleating of outward prosperity?
Secura possessio bonorum.

Neither is the rod of God upon them.

These words contain the negative part of their prosperity. The rod of God may be opposed unto the rod of men. Their houses are safe from fear, that is, from any violence used by men; Neither is the rod of God upon them. There are some houses that are not visited with any evil from the creature; the thief doth not break through nor steal their treasures, yet their treasure is destroyed by the rod of God. There are some whose cattel are safe from the violence of men, Sabeans and Chaldeans do not invade them, yet the rod of God dissipates their flocks, and his curse eats them up; therefore Job to set out the perfect happiness of a wicked man in temporals, tells us, that as he hath no trouble either from neighbours or strangers, so neither is the rod of God upon him. Immediate evils are properly called the rod of God; when we see no hand that smites us, then (in strict sence) the rod of God smites us.
Μάστιξ δὲ πατρὸς κύριος ἐν ὅσῳ ἐστὶν αὐτοῖς. Sept.
Plaga divinitus inflicta est virga Dei. Drus.

Secondly, By the rod of God we may also understand those afflictions which we receive mediately by the hand of man. Cruel men are expresly (in Scripture) called the rod of God (Isa. 10. 5.) O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation. God made that Prince his rod, to scourge and vex his own people. And some of the great troublers of the world, and spoilers of the Nations with fire and sword, have with a kind of ambition, taken that stile upon them, and would be known by this name, The Scourge of God.
Flagellum Dei se vocavit Attilas.

Further, The Rod of God may be considered in opposition to the rod of man, not only as to the differeuce of the hand that smites, but also as to the difference of the degree or measure in which we are smitten. So some expound this Text, The rod of God is not upon them; that is, there is no heavy, no sore rod upon them. Thus, as by a known Scripture-Hebraism, The river of God notes any very pleasant and commodious river; and the mountain or hill of God, a very high and strong hill or mountain; so the rod of God (by the same Hebraism) is a heavy rod, or any extreamly pressing or painful affliction. We have this opposition intimated (2 Sam. 7. 14.) I will be his father, and he shall be my son; if he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men. As if he had said (in compliance with this exposition) If thy son sin, he shall not escape the rod, only I will correct him gently; I will chastise him with the rod of men, that is, with such a rod as men chastise with, or are chastised with. I will chastise him with such rods as the weak arm of man useth; I will not bring heavy and breaking judgments upon him, I will not put out my power to crush him, I will not chasten him with the rod of God; but I will chastise him with such a rod as a man may wield. What are the stripes and stroaks which men give, in comparison of those which God can give?

Again, Take the rod of men for such rods as men use to be corrected and chastised with; so we may take notice of two words used in that Text of Samuel; first, The rod of men (Anaschim) that is, say some, such a rod as is laid on the children of honourable men, who are not corrected as slaves and inferior persons usually are. The children of great men are chastened with a lesser rod, or they are not so severely dealt with as others. Secondly, The stripes of the children of men, or of Adam, that is, of weak and frail ones; whose original is from the dust: As if the Lord had said, If thy son sin, and so provoke me to punish him, yet I will remember that he is but earth and clay, and shall accordingly moderate my hand; his shall be but such stripes as one of the children of men, dust and ashes may well bear. Besides the Hebrew word which we translate stripes, signifies rather touches; I will chasten him with the touches of the children of men, he shall have but a touch. Now as that affirmative promise in Samuel, I will chasten him with the rod of men; so this negative experience of Job, The rod of God is not upon them, may import only some easier and more gentle affliction. As if Job had said, I see the houses of the wicked safe from fear, and if trouble come upon them, 'tis not alwayes to ruine and present destruction. The rod of God is not upon them, as you my friends, affirm.
1. Virga Anaschim ferte, Nobilium qui mitius aliis castigari solent. 2. Virga filiorum Adam, i. e. fragilium utpote ex terra constantium. Bold.

Job having thus discovered the happiness of wicked men in the settlement of their seed, and in the safety of their family; shews it also in the increase of their flocks and cattel. Job's prosperity was described by Oxen and Sheep, by Asses and Camels (chap. 1.) And he also had observed the worst of men abounding in this peice of prosperity.

Verse 10. Their Bull gendereth, and faileth not; their Cow calveth, and casteth not her Calf.

Of these words I shall only say, that they are an expression of the fruitful breeding of Cattel, and that a very full one. Job speaks of the fruitfulness both of the male and female Cattel, of the Bull and of the Cow distinctly; and of both (to assure the truth more) he speaks two wayes. First, Affirmatively. And secondly, Negatively. Their Bull gendreth, their Cow calveth; there's the affirmative part. Their Bull faileth not, their Cow casteth not her Calf. There's the negative part of this outward blessing. When cattel have constant conception, and no abortion, they must multiply exceedingly. Jacob useth this argument to convince his ungrateful uncle Laban, of the great blessing which his stock had under his care (Gen. 31. 38.) These twenty years have I been with thee, thy Ewes and thy Shee-goats have not cast their young. The Lord puts this into the form of a promise to the Nation of the Jews (Exod. 23. 26.) There shall nothing caſt their young, or be barren in the Land. And again (Deut. 7. 14.) Thou ſhalt be bleſſed above all people, there ſhall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattel. The Pſalmiſt numbers this among the bleſſings which render a people happy; Happy (ſaith he, Pſal. 144. 13, 14, 15.) is that people that is in ſuch a caſe, having their oxen ſtrong to labour, and their ſheep bringing forth thouſands and ten thouſands in their ſtreets: But moſt happy (as he there concludes) is that people whoſe God is the Lord. The men of this world receive thoſe bleſſings from the general providence of God, which his own people receive by ſpecial providence. And though many wicked men have Corn and Cattel from the Lord, yet none of them have the Lord for their God. Thus far Job hath ſhewed us the wicked full of dayes, and full of riches: In the next place, he ſhews them and their children rejoycing in this fulneſs, and ſaying to their ſouls, Let us eat, drink and be merry till we die. How many are there who have goods laid up for many years, who yet never had one ſerious thought of laying up any thing for eternity?

VERS. 11, 12, 13.

They ſend forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance.
They take the Timbrel and Harp, and rejoyce at the ſound of the Organ.
They ſpend their dayes in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave.

JOB hath already deſcribed the outward felicity of many wicked men; Firſt, By long life. Secondly, By their riches. Thirdly, By their power. Fourthly, By the flouriſhing of their children. Fifthly, By the ſecurity of their eſtate; they are ſafe from the violence of men, and free from the rod of God. Sixthly, By the abundance of their Cattel. He proceeds in theſe three verſes to deſcribe their felicity, by the pleaſure and worldly pomp in which they live, and by the eaſineſs of their death. Some men live and encreaſe in riches, they have much Corn, many Children, a full and ſecure eſtate, no conſiderable croſs upon them, yet they take no pleaſure, no contentment in all this. Solomon deſcribes ſuch a man (Eccleſ. 6. 2.) to whom God hath given riches, wealth and honour, ſo that he wanteth nothing for his ſoul of all that he deſireth; yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a ſtranger eateth it; this is vanity, and it is an evil diſeaſe. Therefore to compleat the outward felicity of wicked men, Job adds, Verſe 11. They ſend forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance. Thus they live in pleaſure.

To which he ſuperadds the ſweetneſs, peaceableneſs and quietneſs of their death, verſ. 13. They ſpend their dayes in wealth, and go down to their grave in a moment.

They ſend forth their little ones like a flock.

עוללים forte à עלר ut ſit ea ætas quæ homo agendi ſimilitudinẽ exhibet; vel potius à עול quia in pueris nihil niſi injuſtitia eſt, & quia dum agunt pravè agũt omnia. Coc. Puer ſic dictus, quaſi purus. Becm. de orig. Ling. Lat.

They ſend them forth under Guardians and Guides, ſo a flock is ſent forth; Children are not ſcattered, but ſent in an orderly way. The Original which we tranſlate little ones, ſignifies any ſort of children, who are yet under government and tuition. The word hath a double derivation; Firſt, From a root which ſignifies a yoke or labour, importing ſuch young ones as are fit to be ſent forth to ſeek employment, or to labour in the world. Secondly, From a root which ſignifies evil or wickedneſs, unrighteouſneſs, naughtineſs; intimating what our little ones are, both by nature and in their lives, till converted, even corrupt and depraved; for though children are ſo called from their purity (ſay ſome) in the Latine, yet it is only comparatively, not abſolutely. Children may be called white paper, compared with thoſe who have lived long, and blotted their lives with many abominations; yet children have impurity in them, our little ones are conceived in ſin, and brought forth in iniquity. The Spirit of God uſually gives names or denominations proper to the ſtate of things and perſons. Children are polluted in nature, polluted alſo in life and converſation; they are ſinful, and what they do, they do ſinfully: If children did not carry corruption in their natures, they ſhould not bear it in their names. And if little ones are corrupt, how corrupt are they who have perfected their corruption, having heightened and improved the ſtock of ſin which they brought into the world?

Theſe little ones they ſend forth like a flock, that is, like a flock of ſheep; which implieth three things.

First, That they had many children, a flock of them; flocks conſiſt of many; to ſend forth a flock is a proverbial ſpeech, noting a multitude ſent forth: So the word is uſed (Pſal. 107. 41.) Yet ſetteth he the poor on high from affliction, and maketh him families like a flock, that is, he maketh him to have a numerous family, a great houſe: Abraham, who had an army in his family (he armed two hundred men, all of his own houſe) he had his family like a flock, that is, many in his family; ſo, Ezek. 36. 38. When the Lord would ſhew what a multitude his people ſhould encreaſe to, he ſaith, As the flocks of Jeruſalem in her ſolemn feaſts; ſo ſhall the waſte Cities be filled with flocks of men. Jeruſalem was filled with flocks of Cattel three times in the year, or at their three ſolemn feaſts; the Lord promiſed that the waſte Cities which had no Inhabitants, ſhould be filled with flocks of men, that is, they ſhould have abundance of Inhabitants, or be very populous.

Secondly, As the ſending forth of little ones like a flock, imports their number great, ſo, that they are under an order, that they are governed; for a flock is ever under inſpection: Savage and wild beaſts have none to take care of them, or to overſee them; but flocks of ſheep have their overſeers.

Thirdly, Some interpret theſe words, They ſend forth their Children as a flock, to note the union and love which was amongſt them, they lived together like a flock. The union of the Church of Chriſt is ſignified under that notion, the Church is called a flock; Fear not little flock (ſaith Chriſt, Luke 12. 32.) The Church is a little flock, in oppoſition to the huge herds and droves of the men of the world; Saints are but few. Firſt, It is called a flock, becauſe of the care and government of Jeſus Chriſt over it. Secondly, It is called a flock, becauſe it is at unity within it ſelf. Though the Church be ſcattered over the world, yet it hath a holy combination of the members; every breach there is a departure from their Duty and Order.

They ſend forth their little ones as a flock.] Thus he deſcribes their felicity in the education and diſcipline of their little ones.

And their children dance.] He ſtill proſecutes the alluſion of a flock; for the word which we render to dance, is applied to Calves (Pſal. 29. 6.) Where the Prophet thus deſcribes the glorious power of God, He maketh them alſo to skip like a Calf; Lebanon and Syria like a young Unicorn. The word is applied alſo to Rams and Lambs, Pſal. 114. 4. The mountains skipped like Rams, and the little hills like Lambs. Thus they ſend forth their little children like flocks; they dance and skip; which argues the proſperity of their family.

Dancing may be taken two wayes; either, firſt, Strictly, for the exact motion of the body in meaſure, which is artificial dancing; or ſecondly, Dancing is taken more largely, for any kind of joyful moving of the body, for any bodily exerciſe in ſport or play; this in a common ſence is called dancing. We may take it here four wayes; their children dance, that is, they are inſtructed and taught the art of Muſick and dancing; or, there is rejoycing among them; this is proper to the age and ſtate of children. Some derive the Greek word for children, from a root which ſignifies to play or ſport, as if playing were the work of children, and ſporting all their labour. Chriſt himſelf ſpeaks as if this were the trade of children (Matth. 11. 16.) Whereunto ſhall I liken this generation? They are like children ſitting in the market-place (what do they there? are they buying or ſelling? are they bargaining or trading? No, that's the buſineſs of men; what do the children there?) They call to their fellows, and ſay, we have piped to you, and you have not danced; we have mourned to you, and you have not lamented. Piping and dancing is the delight and buſineſs of children. We find it given as a promiſe of bleſſing upon the Church of God, that their children ſhould be ſo employed (Zech. 8. 4, 5.) Thus ſaith the Lord

Luſus ita naturalis eſt puero, ut à ludo puer Græcè vocetur.

Lord of Hosts, there shall yet old men and old women dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, and every man with his staff in his hand for very age, and the streets of the City shall be full of boyes and girles (what shall they do?) playing in the streets thereof. To shew the felicity of the people of God in Jerusalem after their return from Babylon, 'tis promised, that as they should have old men leaning upon staves, so boyes and girles playing in the streets. And thus Job expresseth the external felicity of wicked men in family-blessings; Their children dance. And they have musick to their dance, as it followeth.

Vers. 12. They take the Timbrel and the Harp, and rejoyce at the sound of the Organ.

They take the Timbrel.] They, who? Who is the antecedent to they? doth he mean the parents or their children, or both? I conceive we may best expound it collectively, they, that is, they and their children, old and young, they take the Timbrel and the Harp, yea they are taken with the Timbrel and the Harp; thus they delight and sport themselves in the abundance of all things. They take the Timbrel, &c. We have here a specification of those musical Instruments which were then chiefly used. There is a threefold reading of these words; They take the Timbrel and the Harp.

Attollunt, sc. vocem sicut tympanum, personant velut tympano. Merc.

First, They lift up their voyces with the Timbrel and Harp, that is, they play and sing, which sheweth the compleatness of their musick, it was both by Voyces and Instruments; or they lift up their voyces like musical Instruments. 'Tis said of Balaam (Num. 23. 7.) He took up a Parable, that is, he spake, or he pronounced a parable.

In Hebræo est נשׂא cū ב quod aliàs significat ferre partem rei, ferre cum alio. &c. Coc.

Secondly, They take or lift up their bodies in dancing with the Timbrel and the Harp. When the Musick sounded, they followed or answered it with the motion of their bodies.

Thirdly, They take the Timbrel, may be rendred, They play upon the Timbrel and the Harp, they touch them artificially. 'Tis said, Gen. 4. 21. (where the original of musical Instruments is reported) His brothers name was Jubal, he was the father of all such as handled (or touched) the Harp and the Organ. Thus we have their mirth and musick: They take (or touch) the Timbrel and the Harp, they live in pleasure. Hence observe, Worldly men breed their children vainly.

Here is a description of their education; they are sent forth as a flock in a Dance, playing upon the Timbrel, &c. Here's all the knowledg and literature they are brought up to; here is all their Religion, all the Catechism that they are taught. The Lord giveth this report of Abraham, who had a numerous Family; I know him that he will command his children, and his houshold after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord (Gen. 18. 19.) (Abraham did not teach his to dance, but to keep the way of the Lord) to do justice and judgment; that the Lord might bring upon Abraham what he had spoken. Here was education in the fear of the Lord. Abraham gave his children such breeding as became the father of the faithful. This doth not condemn the instruction and teaching of children in Musick, that skill is commendable, and the gift of God: To learn a due poise and composure of the body, is not unlawful; only we forbid the excess, when it takes up the whole time, and is made a business; or when 'tis used as a provocation to lust, or a nurse of pride and vanity. When much time is spent in this, time is mispent; when this which should be as Sauce, is made the whole Dish; when this which is but an unnecessary circumstance, is insisted upon, as if it were all man, then it is sinful.

Musicam & honestam voluptatem non damnat Scriptura, sed eorum damnat securitatem, qui his velut inebrietati Deum contemnunt & ejus opera negligunt, Merc.

Again, Consider the trade of carnal men and their children; They dance and sing, they and their Families.

Hence observe, Sensitive joyes and contentments are all that carnal men are taken up with.

They rejoyce at the sound of the Organ.] Here's not a word of rejoycing in the goodness of God; here's not a word of thankfulness and praise to God, who gave them good things, and enricht them with those outward blessings; they only seek to make themselves merry, they never sought to make the Name of God glorious. The holy Patriarchs had riches and children, cattel and great substance, so we read of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; yet how different a character doth the Holy Ghost give of them (Heb. 11. 13.) They accounted themselves pilgrims, they had no mind to their countrey; but they sought a City whose builder and maker was God. This was their frame in their greatest worldly enjoyments; they had riches, but they did not rejoyce in them; they had them, but they did not give up themselves unto them. Worldlings cry (Psal. 4. 6.) Who will shew us any good? What saith David? Lord, lift up the light of thy countenance upon me; that will cause joy in my heart, more then when corn and wine encrease; as if he had said, worldly men take the Timbrel when corn and wine and oil encrease; but if the Lord lifteth up the light of his countenance upon me, this shall be my musick and my song. And though in the good providences of God to him, he called for the Timbrel, and awakened his musical Instruments, yet he adds, I my self will awake right early; his was not bare rejoycing in the creature, but in God. A godly man can rejoyce when he hath none of these creature-comforts, he can then rejoyce in the Lord; then the Lord is to him more then an Organ, Tabret or Harp, infinitely more then in all these; he can rejoyce in the Lord more then in all manner of musick, even then when he wants not only musick, but meat (Hab. 3. 17.) Though the labour of the Olive shall fail, &c. yet will I joy in the Lord, and rejoyce in the God of my salvation; and the Lord is my strength, and he is my song. Thus he rejoyceth when stript of all those things which alone occasion the worldly mans joy. God is a feast to him in famine; and when there is not any thing of the world to be had, he hath all in God; and how much soever a godly man hath of the world, he rejoyceth not in that, but in God, the creator, disposer and giver of it. He rejoyceth when he hath the creature, but he rejoyceth not in the creature; his joy is in the Lord. He rejoyceth to see the good hand of God with him, but he rejoyceth not because his hand hath gotten good. We find this holy man Job professing, that he had not, and using a strong imprecation upon himself if he had done so (chap. 31. 24, 25.) If I have made Gold my hope, if I have rejoyced because my wealth was great, and because mine hand had gotten much, then, &c. Job was not a man of a dark spirit, he knew how to rejoyce when the Candle of God shone upon him; but, saith he, whatsoever my worldly estate was, my rejoycing was in God, it was not in my worldly estate: But the carnal man rejoyceth in the world it self, and indeed he hath nothing more to rejoyce in; he hath not a God or a Christ to rejoyce in, he hath not pardon of sin, or the Grace of God to rejoyce in.

Before I pass this point, I shall add somewhat more distinctly, concerning our rejoycing in and about the things of this life. We do not censure all joy, or think that they must needs be wicked who rejoyce and live comfortably in a prosperous outward condition. There is a threefold joy spoken of in Scripture; First, A spiritual: Secondly, A sensitive or natural: Thirdly, A sensual joy.

Spiritual joy is either purely in spiritual things, when we rejoyce in God, in the grace and favour of God, in the light of his countenance, and in the pardon of our sins. Or when we rejoyce spiritually about worldly things, and the good providences of God to us, either publick or private. There may be spiritual joy about that which is not spiritual; we may reioyce spiritually, though the things be temporal in which we rejoyce; and it is one of the highest actings of Grace, to rejoyce spiritually about temporal things.

Secondly, There is a natural sensitive rejoycing, which in it self, is neither good nor evil; it belongs to man as man; and Job speaks of this at the twenty fifth verse of this Chapter; Another dieth in the bitterness of his soul, and never eateth with pleasure; he meaneth not sinful pleasure; but thus, he hath no natural contentment, no relish of, or joy with his meat; we say, a mans meat rejoyceth him, when it suits with his stomack, and pleaseth his palat. As there is natural sorrow and fear, which are specificated good or evil, as we act and put them forth; so there is also natural joy or pleasure. In this sence the word Pleasure is used (Eccles. 12. 1.) Where Solomon gives advice to the young man to remember his Creator in the dayes of his youth, before the evil dayes come, and the time wherein he shall say, I have

I have no pleasure in them; he meaneth not sinful pleasure, but natural pleasure, such as a man takes in what he eats and drinks. When David called Barzillai to Court, What shall I do there? (saith he) Can I taste what I eat? &c. As if he had said, those dayes are come upon me in which I have no pleasure.

Thirdly, There is sensual pleasure, when the heart is as it were steeped, drenched and drunken with delights (Jam. 5.5.) Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton, ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter. Which some render, unto a day of slaughter, as beasts are fatted to be killed; or as in a time of feasting, which is a day of slaughter to beasts and fowls, for the feeding of man. Therefore he threatens them (vers. 1.) Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl; pleasure hath been your element, ye have lived in that: now sorrow shall be your element, and your employment weeping (1 Tim. 5. 6.) She that liveth in pleasure, that is, who giveth her self up to delicacy, wantonness, lasciviousness; he doth not say, she that takes pleasure in her life; there is no hurt in that: but, She that lives in pleasure, is dead while she liveth: And if she be dead while she liveth, how dead will she be when she dieth?

Further, We may consider these sensual pleasures or joyes in their sinfulness, two wayes.

First, There are some joyes sinful in their very nature, others in reference to circumstance, in both sences we are to understand this Text, They rejoyce, that is, they rejoyce with such a kind of joy as is sinful in it self; and though there be no sin in the Harp, Timbrel and Organ, yet there may be a sinful way of rejoycing in these (Heb. 11.21.) Moses chose afflictions with the people of God, rather then to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season: Whether those pleasures were sinful in their nature, or sinful in their circumstances, Moses refused them. He did not refuse pleasure and comfort in his life, but the pleasures of sin; any evil that was in the pleasure of this life, he refused, that pleasure was a pain to him, and he chose affliction rather.

But when are our rejoycings sinful in their circumstances? or what makes them sinful to us when they are lawful in themselves.

I answer, Joy may be lawful in it self, yet sinful; first, In the measure of it, if excessive. Which the Prophet gives us (Isa. 41. 8.) Therefore hear now this thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelesly. When a man is given to pleasure, he will soon be excessive in it; for this shews that pleasure overswayes his spirit, and hath gotten his heart. The Apostle would have Believers given to hospitality, that is, he would have them given to hospitality, but not given to pleasure. Some are given to hospitality meerly because they are given to pleasure; they love not so much to feed others, as to glut themselves.

Secondly, There is a sinfulness in rejoycing, when unseasonable; There is a time to rejoyce, and a time to mourn. To rejoyce in some times is matter of great mourning; yet some will rejoyce let the time be what it will, the seasons and dayes what they will; such rejoycing is not good. Our rejoycing may be sinful upon this account of unseasonableness, three wayes.

First, When much of any time is spent in it. The time we spend in rejoycing, should be but so much as may fit us for our serious and working times. When the Apostle exhorts Saints to rejoyce evermore (1 Thes. 5. 16.) he means it of spiritual, not of worldly rejoycing.

Secondly, It is sinful in regard of the season, to be taken up with worldly rejoycings in any time set apart for the holy duties of fasting and humbling the soul before the Lord. The Prophet complains of this (Isa. 58. 3.) They find their own pleasure upon a day of fast. To give the least portion of time to worldly pleasure upon a solemn day of Fast or holy rest, is sinful.

Thirdly, Joy may be sinful, as specially in a day of fast, so when sad, troublous, calamitous seasons continue many dayes (Isa. 22. 13.) In that day the Lord called for weeping, &c. but behold mirth and rejoycing, slaying oxen and killing sheep. So, Amos 6.4, 5, 6. They sit upon beds of Ivory, and stretch themselves upon their couches, and eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall; they chaunt to the sound of the Viol, and invent to themselves instruments of Musick like David; but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph. They had musick like David, but they were far from such a heart as David had. Many pattern themselves by holy men in the things they do, who will not imitate their pattern in doing them. 'Tis our duty to sympathize with the seasons, and to forbear our personal comforts, when the publick sits in sorrow. They who rejoyce when the people of God mourn, shall mourn in their rejoycings. They shall not rejoyce in the joy of Gods people, nor be glad with his inheritance, who have been at all glad at their mournings, or have not refrained gladness in the dayes of their mourning.

They rejoyce at the sound of the organ.] And, which is a further description both of their worldly prosperity, and of their sin.

Verse 13. They spend their dayes in wealth.

They spend.] There is a double reading of the word, but the sence of both is the same. Some thus; They grow old, or they consume all their dayes; the indefinite is universal; They spend their dayes, that is, their whole life, in wealth; so we render. The Hebrew is, in good: What good? There are three sorts of good. First, Spiritual. Secondly, Civil. Thirdly, Corporal good; when he saith, they spend their dayes in good, he means not the first; they are far enough from spending their dayes in what is spiritually good; they deal but little in that which is morally or civilly good; their time and strength are laid out chiefly in those things which are but corporally good, or good only for the body; and, as they use them, scarce good for, yea, mostly hurtful unto that; therefore we translate well, they spend their dayes in wealth; wealth is but our bodily good. In common speech a mans possessions and riches are called his goods, because these are a good to the outward man; so the Vulgar translates the Text, They spend out their dayes in good, or in good things, in the good things of this life. The word is used (Luke 16.25.) Abraham in the Parable speaking to the rich man, tells him, Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus his evil things, that is, sores and sorrows, his pain and poverty. When David (1 Sam.25.8.) sent his messenger to Nabal, desiring some recruits of victual for his Army, which had been a good neighbour to him; Send thy blessing to thy son, for we are come to thee in a good day; what day was that? a day of feasting; when there was a plentiful provision made of good things. It was sheep-shearing day, and then they had store. The things of the world are expressed under this title, good, (and they are all the good which some look after) in a threefold consideration.

In Scriptura est יבלו vetustate consumant in Lectione יכלו Consumunt simpliciter scriptum Beth, lectio Caph, sensus in idem recidit. Dr. Ducunt in bonis dies suos. Vulg.

First, In reference to the judgment of the world, or the vulgar opinion. They are good things, and many account them very good, yea some account them the chief good, placing felicity in them. The Holy Ghost speaks the hearts of worldly men, They spend their dayes in good.

Secondly, Riches and the things of the world, are good as they are the creatures of God; these he made, and he made all things good.

Thirdly, They have not only a goodness of entity, but a goodness of use in them; the Lord hath made them very suitable to the needs and necessities, to the relations, affairs and businesses of this life. And in these good things, worldly men spend all the dayes of their lives. They spend their dayes in spending it, or in bestowing it upon their lusts. The Text intends the latter; having gotten enough to spend, they give themselves to the spending of it all their dayes.

They spend their dayes in wealth.

Hence observe; That, The chief business of a worldly man is about his wealth.

He mindeth little or nothing but his wealth; he spends his dayes in a threefold care about it.

First, In getting.

Secondly, In keeping.

Thirdly, In taking out those pleasures which wealth brings in.

Some get wealth, but have no heart to use it; others get wealth, and over-use or abuse it; they spend their dayes in spending it, in feeding their lusts, in pleasing their appetite petite with it. The rich Glutton would have his share of what he had; he would not leave all to his Children, or to Executors. How poor an account is this of the expence of a mans dayes, that he hath spent them in wealth? Yet 'tis hard for those who have much wealth, not to do it. A godly man who hath much wealth, is hard put to it, to keep himself from spending his dayes in it. Riches have more of the snare in them, then of comfort in them. Some have perished with want, but more have perished with abundance. Hypocrites make a gain of godliness; and when they have gained their ends, they lay by their godliness, and spend those dayes in wealth, which they once professed they would spend in walking with God. Many really godly, lose much in spirituals, having gained much in temporals; they have been impoverished by their riches; their best part hath decreased, while their worser hath encreased. Now if it be so hard for those who have a good stock of Grace, and a seed of eternal life in them, to mind heaven, while they have a great stock on the earth; how is it possible but that a hypocrite should quite lose those spirituals which he seemed to have, when he hath gotten much in temporals? and that prophane men should not be quite drowned and swallowed up in temporals, who did never so much as seem to have any thing in spirituals. Therefore (saith Christ, Mat. 19. 24.) It is easier for a Camel to go through the eye of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of God. Mammon calls for the whole man, and stands in the way both of Grace and Glory. The poor have the Gospel preached to them (Matth. 11. 5.) But is not the Gospel preached also to the rich? Yes, the rich hear the Gospel, but the poor receive it, or, as the word imports, are Gospelized; they receive the love of it, and impressions from it; they receive the stamp of the Gospel, and feel the power of it: Whereas usually the rich hear only a sound of words, and have only a form of knowledge, but have no knowledge of the power. Riches fill with cares; a multitude of riches with a multitude of cares: And they who have many cares about those things which are but accessories, take little care about that one thing necessary, the due hearing of, and believing application of the Gospel. They who are very diligent either about assuring or employing worldly wealth, about laying up or laying out the treasures of the earth, seldom give any diligence about making their calling and election sure, or about laying up treasure in heaven. They are indeed rich in grace, whose graces are not hindred by riches, whose souls prosper when their bodies prosper; as the Apostle John speaks in his third Epistle. Or, who (as 'tis prophesied, Psal. 45. 12.) being full of worldly blessings, are yet hungry and eager in their pursuit after Christ. The daughter of Tyre shall be there with a gift (saith the Psalmist) the rich among the people shall intreat thy favour; that is, either the favour of Christ himself, or the favour of the Church, by reason of that spiritual excellency and inward glory which she hath received from Christ. Now to see the rich bring their gifts, and which is the thing chiefly aimed at there, giving up themselves to Christ, this is a rare sight, and a remarkable work of Grace.

And because there is so much danger that they who have wealth, should spend their dayes in it, or give themselves up to it, and not to Christ, take two or three Rules of caution or admonition about this thing.

First, When God puts wealth into your hand, suspect your own hearts, and pray that ye may put it under your feet. The woman (Rev. 12. 1.) cloathed with the Sun, had the Moon (that is, all earthly things) under her feet; she kept them under, and had them only for her use, her heart was above them.

Secondly, Labour to get a right value of wealth, if you would not spend your dayes in it. We seldom err in our affections, till we err in our judgment; if we did not over-value wealth, we should not bestow our all upon it; no man will lay out his time and strength about that which he thinks meanly of. Know then, First, That though riches are good things, yet they are an inferior good. Secondly, Though they are good, yet but a mutable good. Thirdly, They are to us as we use them; some things are so good, that he who hath them, cannot but be good. The Grace of God to us, and the Graces of his Spirit in us, find us evil, but make us good. But no man was ever made good by riches and worldly wealth; these have found some really good, and made them less good then they were; and they have found many seemingly good, whom they have made stark naught.

Thirdly, Use the Creature, but do not enjoy it; what we use, is used for some other end; what we enjoy, is enjoyed for it self. The creature must only be used, because it should alwayes be directed to some further end; God ought to be loved for himself, and therefore he only is to be enjoyed. They who understand this distinction, will not spend their dayes in satisfying their lusts with wealth, but in serving the living God. Job's character of these men, may serve all men, who having wealth, have no faith in God; They spend their dayes in wealth.

And in a moment go down to the grave.

There is a double interpretation of this last clause; some expound it of the miserable end of wicked men; others of their comfortable end.

First, The words may hold out the miserable end of a wicked man, who, though he hath all outward good things, though he be mighty in power, and his house be established, yet in a moment he goeth down to the grave; he suddenly vanisheth out of this world; and whither then? We read, he goeth down to the grave: others read, He goeth down to hell. The Hebrew word signifies both, and the doctrine of the Text is true both wayes; his body goeth down presently to the grave, and his soul to hell; that's his place, and thither is his downfal, there's the end of his wealth and voluptuous life. Thus he is concluded in the Parable (Luke 16. 22, 23.) The rich man died and was buried, and in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torment, &c. This rich man was cloathed in purple and fine linnen, and fared deliciously every day (vers. 19.) He is described fully, spending his dayes in wealth, and ending his dayes in wo; he in a moment went down to hell. But,

Et in punctō ad infera descendunt Vulg.

Secondly, I rather interpret this clause in a suitableness to what went before, as a description of the comfortable death of a wicked man; who, as he flourished all the dayes of his life, so (to compleat his bodily comforts) he hath a very kind and peaceable death. The word which we render moment (implying the suddenness of his change) signifying also quietness or peaceableness, and to be quiet and rest (Isa. 51. 4.) Hearken unto me, my people, and give ear unto me, O my Nation; for a Law shall proceed from me, and I will make my judgment (that is, the doctrine of holiness) to rest (that is, I will quietly settle it) for a light to the people, that is, to enlighten their minds with the clear and saving knowledg of the truth. In this sence (for rest) the word is again used (Jer. 50. 34.) It may bear both sences in this place; They spend their dayes in wealth, and go to the grave in a moment and suddenly, or in quiet and in peace, they have no trouble in death. This their rest or quietness in death, may be understood two wayes.

Significat punctum, momentum & placidā quietem, vel quievit, per antiphrasin

In quiete descendunt in inferno.

First, They have no inward trouble of Conscience, no gnawing of the worm though the worm of Conscience be hungry, and hath matter enough in them to feed upon, yet it is not permitted to feed upon them, that is, to vex and torment them. A wicked man may die quietly, without any the least question upon his spirit about his spiritual condition, as if all were well, and would be well with him for ever: Whereas indeed, the quietness that he hath, is not from any knowledge of his good estate, but from ignorance of his ill estate; he knoweth not that the wrath of God hangs over him, and that the justice of God is bent against him, and therefore he goeth quietly to the grave. A godly man dieth in peace, because he knoweth his estate is good; but if a wicked man die in peace, it is because he knoweth not his estate is evil.

Multi cum hac spe ad æternos cruciatus descendunt.

Secondly, They have no outward trouble, no pain in the body, or disturbance in their outward affairs; thus wicked men may die a peaceable, yea, a pleasant death; they are not tired with long sicknesses, they are not put upon the rack of tormenting diseases before they die; they are not afflicted with nauseous medicines and tedious courses of physick, which to many are more grievous then sickness or death it self. Many who have escaped the sorrows of eternal death, meet with much sorrow in their temporal death. They whose peace is made by the death of Christ, find much pain and trouble when they come to die; whereas many wicked men die (as it were) in health, and go not only quickly, but quietly to the grave, having rest, such as it is, both in body and mind, when their bodies are laid down to rest, even their dying may look like sleeping.

Morte placidissima & quæ disturbare non affligit de medio tollitur, quasi ponte naturæ concedēs Plin.

And as this word shews the easiness of their death, so the speed and suddenness of it. Thus we translate expressly; In a moment they go down to the grave. He dieth without stop or stay, his is not a lingring death; if a man have not much pain in sickness, yet if he lie long sick, his living is a kind of dying. David or Asaph (Psal. 73. 4.) describes the prosperity of wicked men both in life and death; I was envious when I saw the prosperity of the wicked, &c. There are no bands in their death, their strength is firm, that is, when they die they are not bound by diseases, nor held down by chronical or lasting and grinding pains; they die, and it can hardly be discerned that they were ever sick; they fall off as fruit from the tree fully ripe, with the least touch, and this is their prosperity in death. The Prophet Jeremy aggravates the misery of the Jews in their captivity upon this consideration (Lam. 4. 6.) The punishment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater then the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment, and no hands stayed on her. Sodom was destroyed in a moment, but Jerusalems destruction was long a working, she maintained a war, which procured many miseries, especially that of Famine; which as it is the most painful, so the most dilatory or lingring way of dying. Job to shew the happiness of wicked men in death, tells us, they die in a moment, they slip out of the world they know not how, or before they are aware of it.

Mors est crudelior quo segnior.

Sudden death is alwayes evil, but speedy death is good. The slowest death is the most cruel. Tyrants kill men by piece-meal, they will have them take notice that they are dying, they will not dispatch them at a blow, but let them die limb by limb. Dyonisius the Tyrant is said to have envied a Beast whose throat he saw cut, because he died so soon. Cæsar reading in Zenophon, what care Cyrus took in his life for his Funeral, scorned him for it, wishing he might die speedily. That's a good death to Nature, which is neither feared nor expected; yet that is the best death which hath been longest expected and prepared for. And hence,

Mors jucunda cujus nulla præcessit expectatio aut metus.

Some may say, It were better wicked men should have some delayes in death, for then possibly they might repent.

Answer; First, Job speaks not to the spiritual or eternal state of wicked men; and as to their temporal state, a speedy death is better then a lingring death. I may answer,

Secondly, Sick-bed repentance is usually a very sick repentance. We set no limits to the mercy and grace of God, but we speak what is usual among men.

Thirdly, They that neglect repentance in health, seldom mind it in sickness; some have made sad complaints of the misery of their friends, because so suddenly taken away by one stroak without any time to repent. But they might remember that many have been shut up close prisoners in their chambers, and chained down to their beds, for divers moneths, who never thought of repenting and turning to God. Death is never sudden to them who live well; and they who live ill, seldom mend when they die, though they are long a dying. Thus Job hath opposed the experience of many to the opinion of his friends, about the present state of wicked men, and Gods dealing with them both in life and death. In the following words he shews us how their prosperity wrought with them, how they took occasion from these outward blessings in which they abounded, to arm and encourage themselves in their rebellion against the Lord, who poured out those benefits and earthly blessings upon them in abundance, and exercised long-sufferance and patience towards them, till they had spent their dayes in pleasing themselves and provoking him.

VERS. 14, 15.

Therefore they say unto God, depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of thy wayes.
What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have if we pray unto him?

IN these two verses we have the picture of a wicked man drawn to the life (or rather to the death) of his state and disposition. For lest it should be thought that while Job spake of the prosperity of the wicked, he meant it of such only as used a kind of moderation in sinning, or had some mixture and appearances, at least, of some eminent virtues among their enormous vices, he therefore by a Rhetorical imitation of their blasphemous speeches and opinions concerning the most holy God and his wayes, assured his friends that his experiences had taught him, that even they who have not in them the least imaginable spark or ray of goodness, are yet filled with abundance, and yet enjoy an affluence of worldly goods: As if he had said, My friend Zophar, according to the tenour of thy Doctrine, they must be reckoned for very holy and good men, as the Darlings, special Favourites and bosom-friends of God, who enjoy such earthly prosperity as I have spoken of; but behold these men, and tell me what goodness thou findest in them, Who say unto God, depart from us, &c.

These men are personated by Job, as offering a fourfold indignity unto God.

First, They tell God (as we do those whom we hate, or at least, deeply disrespect) that they had rather have his room then his company; They say unto God, depart from us.

Secondly, They slight his doctrine and his institutions; We desire not the knowledge of his wayes.

Thirdly, They esteem him unworthy of any attendance or worship; What is the Almighty, that we should serve him?

Fourthly, They conclude his worship and service as vain and fruitless; What profit should we have if we pray unto him?

Verse 14. Therefore they say unto God depart from us.

The Hebrew is, and they say: It is usual in Scripture to give that conjunctive particle the efficacy of a causal. So we render it here; Therefore, or for this reason, namely, because they flourish and are full, therefore they grow weary of, and are burdened with the thought of God; They say unto God, &c. How do they say it? They say thus three wayes.

First, Some are so bold and impudent, as to say it with their mouths, they say it explicitly and in plain terms; they speak it out to God, Depart from us.

Secondly, All wicked men say this in their hearts and minds; they speak it internally, this is the daily language of their spirits to God, Depart from us. They who love not God with their hearts, would be rid of God with all their hearts. So the Apostle describeth the Gentiles (Rom. 1. 28.) They did not like to retain God in their knowledge, or (as we put in the Margin) to acknowledge God. They cast the notions of God out of their minds or understandings, as a worthless piece of knowledge.

Thirdly, Wicked men (the fairer sort of hypocrites only excepted) say this with their works (Tit. 1. 11.) They profess that they know God, but in works they deny him; being abominable, disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate. Prophane persons are ashamed to profess the knowledge of God; gross hypocrites boast in a profession of God, but their practice is a denial of God. The transgression of the wicked (saith holy David, Psal. 36. 1, 2.) saith within my heart, there is no fear of God before his eyes. The profession of some wicked men saith they fear God; but their transgression or trade of sin saith, there's no such matter. We may interpret this Text of the wicked man saying thus, all these three wayes. Some say it with their their mouths; all, even the most modest of them, say it in their hearts; very many say it in their lives, their doings being a daily defiance against God, and a kind of command upon him to depart.

Again, To say, hath in it more then a bare word, or say-so, it implyeth a decree or statute, a full purpose or resolution about the thing. When David (Psal. 32. 5.) expresseth himself thus, I said I will confess my sin, &c. And Psal. 39. 1. I said, I will take heed to my wayes, he intends a fixed and immoveable resolve upon godly repentance in the one, and of Godly watchfulness in the other. And though this this Text is not so full for it in the letter, as the two alledged, yet without breach of charity, or wresting Scripture, we may expound this as high. They say (as resolved and set upon the thing) to God, depart.

Nomen El fortitudinē denotat.

The word El, by which God is here set forth, speaks his strength and power, The strong God; which we may note to argue both the folly and the impudence of the creature in speaking thus: The weakness of God is stronger then man, and yet weak man lifts up himself against the strong God; and while he thus tells him, that he cares not for his presence, doth indeed dare him in the utmost of his power.

There are four words by which God is expressed in Scripture, upon a distinct consideration of four eminent excellencies in him.

First, When the self-being and unchangeable nature of God are chiefly intended, He is called by his Name Jehovah.

Secondly, When the efficiency and governing power of God in the administration of all things both in heaven and earth are signified, he is called by the Name Elohim.

Thirdly, When his goodness, bounty and munificence are exalted, he is called Shaddai.

Fourthly, When the irresistible strength and force of God to accomplish his own decrees and counsels, both of mercy and justice, are described, he is called by the Name in the Text, El.

Nor will it be unuseful here to add, that in Scripture, man is expressed by four different Names, to hold out a fourfold condition or state of man.

First, When the virtues and best perfections of man are spoken of, he is properly represented under this title of Job.

Secondly, When his strength, honour and greatness are aimed at, he is called Geber.

Thirdly, To note his original of earth, and his natural weakness, he is termed Adam.

Fourthly, His accidental misery, poverty, sorrows and infirmities, denominate him Enos.

Now take man, not only as his name Adam imports, which is common to all; or as his name Enos speaks him, which is the lot of most; but also as he is Ish or Geber, which names are competible but to very few; yet for man at the highest pitch attainable of his strength or perfections, to speak proudly to God, to say unto El, the strong, mighty, the almighty God, depart from me, how abominable! Yet thus the wicked say to God.

Depart from us.] The word signifies properly to divert or recede from a place, or to give and make room, that the way may be clear and un-obstructed for the passage of another. As if wicked men should say to God, Room for us; as if one house, one place, yea one world could not hold God and them. Indeed God filleth heaven and earth, yea the heaven of heavens cannot contain him, yet God straightens no man by his presence, though wicked men think they can never have room enough where God is present. Hence it is that wicked men are called, Men far from God, Psal. 73. 27. Lo, they that be far from thee shall perish. And who these are, David telleth us in the latter part of the verse; Thou hast destroyed all them that go a whoring from thee: As a man who cares not for his wife, would willingly put her away from him, and goeth himself to an adulterous bed; so the wicked man, having no love in his heart to God, bids him be gone, and goeth himself a whoring from him, that is, he embraceth the creatures, and giveth his heart up into the hands of the world; therefore he is called, A man far off. In opposition to which, the people of God are called, his Nigh Ones, or those who draw nigh unto him (Lev. 10. 3.) And David in the next verse of the Psalm last cited, concludeth, But it is good for me to draw nigh unto God.

רחוקי אל Longinqui Dei.

קרובי אל Propinqui Dei.

Further, This phrase, depart from us, may imply the rejection and distaste of those tenders and offers of good things, which God makes to wicked men, inviting them home to himself. As we use to say to those, who over-officiously proffer us their wares or commodities as we pass in the streets of some City, why do you thus press upon us, and trouble us? be gone, we have no mind or no leisure to buy. Thus they say to God, depart from us. Hence observe;

First, Riches and worldly prosperity provoke or occasion wicked men to have contemptuous thoughts of God.

The causal particle leads us to this Observation; Therefore they say, &c. David having confessed his own sin (Psal. 73. 3.) I was envious at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked; sheweth (vers. 6.) what sin prosperity bred up in them. Therefore pride compasseth them about as a chain, violence covereth them as a garment. (vers. 8.) They are corrupt and speak wickedly. (ver. 9.) They set their mouth against the heavens, that is, they spake blasphemously against the God of heaven. They charged their mouths with insolent words, and then (their tongues being set on fire by hell) they discharged them like a thundering Canon against heaven. Moses warns the Israelites (Deut. 8. 10, 11, 12.) When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God for the good Land which he hath given thee; then beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, lest when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God. How jealous was Moses, or rather the Spirit of God by Moses, over that ancient people, lest they should forget God when he had remembred them? lest they should then make void the Commandments of God, when he had made good his Covenant? lest their hearts should be lifted up against God, after his hand had been so often lifted up for them? And what Moses here by way of prophesie (foreseeing the naughtiness of their hearts, cautions them not to do) the same Moses, in the same Book (chap. 32. 15.) by way of history, reproves them that they had done. But Jesurun waxed fat and kicked, thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatness, then he forsook God that made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation. Even Israel being grown fat as a beast in the green pastures of a worldly prosperity, played the beast and kicked with the heel; but against whom did he kick? he kicked against God, and against him in a twofold relation: First, As his Creator; He forsook the God that made him. Secondly, As a Preserver or Saviour; He lightly esteemed the rock of his salvation: No wonder if their rock sold them (as it followeth, ver. 30.) when they valued their rock at so low a price. God made his people of great value (yea, he called them his peculiar treasure) and then they grew to such high thoughts of themselves, and were so great in their own eyes, that presently God was undervalued and little in their eyes. Thus the Lord complained of them long after by his Prophet (Hos. 13. 6.) According to their pasture, so were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted (not in thankfulness and in praise, but in pride) therefore they have forgotten me. As to remember God (in Scripture-language) is to obey, serve and honour him; so to forget God, is to rebel and rise up against him. This moved the Apostle Paul to give Timothy his lesson for rich men (1 Tim. 6. 17.) Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us all things to enjoy. They who are rich in this world, are usually most poor for the world to come; and while their estates are high, their minds are higher. Low things make the mind high, but with such a highness, as is indeed not only the lowness, but the baseness of the mind. While the mind is heightned by the use and possession of low things (such comparatively are the highest of earthly things) it is it self made lower then the lowest, and less (not in humility, but in vanity) then the least of things. Then both mind and man are lowest of all, when they neglect or lightly esteem the high God. To this departure from God, the presence and abundance of the world endangers every man, and wicked men are ever ensnared with the danger; Therefore they say to God, depart from us.

Secondly observe, Wicked men have no mind to God, they cannot abide his presence.

There is in them an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God (Heb. 3. 12.) and in saying to God, depart from us. God saith to his people Hos. 9. 12. Wo unto you when I depart; they think it best for them when God departeth. Saints know not how to live a comfortable day, much less to be happy without him; wicked men know not how to live a comfortable hour, much less to be ever happy with him. The Church saith to God, Leave us not (Jer. 14.)

The

The world saith, O that God would leave us. When shall we be eased and unburdened of his presence? There is nothing so joyous to the righteous, nor so grievous to the wicked, as to have God near them.

But it may be said, Is God near the wicked? or have they any need to desire the Lord to depart from them? Is he not already departed and gone far from them?

I answer; Wicked men are far from the favour and love of God, but they are not far from his eye and knowledge. God is already departed from wicked men, or rather was never near them, in regard of his special presence; but he is near even to them in regard of his general and common presence. Yea, wicked men find and feel God often in their Consciences, though they never found him in their Affections. God makes offers to wicked men, and though God be not actively in all their thoughts (as the Scripture speaks, Psal. 10. 4.) that is, they do not willingly meditate or think of God, they maintain no correspondence or communion with him in their inner man; yet God doth (like an unbidden and unwelcome Guest) put himself into their thoughts, and moves in their minds; this proves their trouble, and becomes a pain unto them. As God is not far from every one of us (good and bad) because (as the Apostle argueth with those at Athens, Acts 17. 27, 28.) In him we live, and move, and have our being; so we may say, that he is not far from many wicked men, because he moveth and stirs in them, he presents to their minds some manifestations of himself in his Justice and Holiness; yea, of his Truth, Long-suffering and Goodness, in none of which they either desire or accept acquaintance with him; and therefore say to God, depart from us, trouble us not; and when once they can banish these thoughts, and live thus without God in the world, then they think they live indeed; and till then, they reckon their lives a kind of death: And hence it is, that (as we have seen by sad examples) some have thrust themselves out of the world with their own hands, because they could not thrust these thoughts of God out of their hearts and consciences. Their souls have sometimes proved a burden to their bodies, to whose souls the thought of God was a burden. And they, who upon these terms, part soul and body, have indeed said to God, Depart from us. Hence note, Thirdly, To be weary of the presence of God, is the strongest argument that a man is wicked.

Purely to love and pray for the presence of God, is the surest sign of a gracious heart; therefore purely to desire and wish the absence or departure of God, must needs conclude that heart ungracious. One thing (saith David, Psal. 27. 4.) have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after, that is, I will earnestly pursue, and unweariedly prosecute the grant of this desire) that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the dayes of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his Temple. And again he breathes the same spirit of holy impatience, till he might enjoy that favour (Psal. 42. 1, 2.) As the Hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God; my soul thirsteth for God, for the living God, when shall I come and appear before God? In these strains of divinest Rhetorick was the soul of David carried out after God. He was the One thing, He was the Only thing he longed for; without God all was nothing with him; in Him he had all: His presence was enough for him. All company, multitudes and throngs of men, yea, of Saints, or good men, was but solitariness and widowhood to him, without the presence of God. This was the highest ascent of his holiness. Is it not then the lowest descent of unholiness, to be troubled at the presence of God? Is it not a full conviction of a carnal man, and of a wicked man, to think it long till God be gone, or to deprecate his presence, and urge his departure? This frame of heart is the very blackness of hellish darkness, and the express the Image of the Devils person. Such are (though not possessed with, yet) under the possession of the evil Spirit: The Gospel (Matth. 8. 28, 29.) makes report of two men possessed with Devils, coming out of the Tombes, exceeding fierce, so that no man could pass by that way; and behold they cried out, saying, what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus the son of the living God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time? It is the Devils torment to be near Christ, or to have any appearance of God; are not they then nearest the Devil to whom God is a torment? Or who (like these in Job) do as those Gadarens to Christ in the last verse of that Chapter, come and beseech him, that he will depart out of their Coasts, that so if it were possible, they might never more hear of him, nor from him. Which is plainly imported in the next clause of the Verse.

For we desire not the knowledge of thy wayes.

Though God, in himself considered, be the first and chiefest object of a wicked mans enmity, yet this quarrel usually breaks out at the discoveries of his will and wayes. Thus in the Text, they reject God because of his wayes. The wayes of a wicked man (as the Psalmist hath it) are always grievous to God as well as man; and so are the wayes of God grievous to wicked men, and therefore they desire no acquaintance with, no knowledge of them. As if Job had thus spoken in their person. If the case stand thus, O God, that we cannot have thee and the good things which thou hast promised, unless we also learn and submit to thy wayes, then be gone; for thy wayes are a loathing to our souls, thy wayes are rough, sharp, sad and unsuitable to our spirits and genius. If we should fashion our selves, and shape our course according to the rules which thou prescribest, should we not be exposed to the laughter, if not to the danger of all the world? Should we not bury our selves alive, and be deprived of all the comforts of our lives? must we not spend our time in sorrow or silence, and never see good day more? As for us, we know so much of thy wayes already, that we have no desire to the knowledge of them; we are provided of better wayes, of wayes more easie, smooth, plain and pleasant; and therefore what desire can we have to thine?

For we desire not.] The word signifieth to take pleasure or delight in, as well as to desire; because those things which we delight in, are most desired by us; so we read it, Psal. 1. 2. But his delight is in the Law of the Lord. And (Psal. 4.) Thou art not a God that takest pleasure in (or, a desire unto) wickedness. So here, We desire not (or we have no pleasure in) the knowledge of thy wayes. And when they say, we desire not, &c. more is intended then the bare Negative of their desire; we may resolve this Negative into an Affirmative, we dislike, yea, we hate the knowledge of thy wayes. He that is not with me (saith Christ) is against me: We also may say, He that is not a well-wisher to, and desirous of the wayes of God, opposeth and rejects them. So that in this we have a description of affected ignorance. He that doth not know the wayes of God, is ignorant; for it is every mans duty to know them: but he that hath no desire to that knowledge, is in love with his own ignorance, and is pleased with it.

חפץ Non tam velle significat quam delectari re aliqua.

But what are these wayes of God, which find so little acceptance with wicked men?

I answer first in general, that by the wayes of God, he doth not here intend those wayes in which God walketh, but those which God hath made for man to walk in. More distinctly, the wayes of God are threefold.

First, The wayes of his counsel and decrees: To endeavour or desire the knowledge of these wayes, is not our duty, but our curiosity; as these ought not to be searched, so they are past finding out, Rom. 11. 33.

Secondly, The wayes of his providence and outward administration, of which the Psalmist speaketh (Psal. 145. 17.) The Lord is righteous in all his wayes, and holy in all his works. And though some of these wayes are not knowable, for (Psal. 77. 19.) His way is in the Sea, and his paths in the great waters, and his footsteps are not known, that is, his footsteps many times in his wayes upon the Land, are no more seen then a way is to be seen in the Sea, or a path in the great waters. Frequent passage makes a track or beaten path upon the Land; but how frequently soever passages are made upon the face of the Sea, no print nor path remains. Thus it is with many of the wayes of God, we cannot see where he hath gone, yet it is our duty to see his goings, and to desire the knowledge of these wayes.

Thirdly, The wayes of God are his Commandments, or those Rules of life, in and by which we ought to walk, and regulate our whole course: and these are of two sorts.

First,

Firſt, The wayes of worſhip. Secondly, the wayes of practice, or of manners. Theſe are called the wayes of God, becauſe they lead unto God, and land us (through Chriſt) ſafe in heaven. Here in the Text, the wayes of God, the knowledge whereof wicked men do not deſire, are the ſecond and third; as for the firſt, it is a part of ſome mens wickedneſs over-boldly to preſs and pry into them. And while they neglect the revealed will of God, which they ought both to know and do, they are very buſie about his ſecret will, which they cannot know, but may be (though intentionally on their part it never be) done by them, and ſhall (judicially on Gods part) be done upon them. Hence obſerve, Firſt, Wicked men bear no love to, nor have any delight in the knowledge of the Commandments and Ordinances of God.

Thus Solomon reproves them (Prov. 1. 22, 25, 29, 30.) How long ye ſimple ones, will ye love ſimplicity? (He means it not of that ſimplicity which is oppoſed to craftineſs and double-mindedneſs, but of that which is oppoſed to wiſdom and ſpiritual-mindedneſs, as the next words expound it) and the ſcorners delight in their ſcorning? (ſc. at the wayes of God) and fools hate knowledge? He means not the ſimple fool (for though ſuch have no knowledge, yet they cannot be ſaid to hate it) but the filthy fool, or the wicked man in the Text, theſe hate knowledge; and to theſe he ſpeaks (verſe 25.) Ye have ſet at naught all my counſel, and would none of my reproof. And again of theſe (verſ. 29, 30.) They hated knowledge, and did not chuſe the fear of the Lord; they would none of my counſel; they deſpiſed all my reproof. We are not to underſtand Solomon in theſe paſſages, as giving the character of ſome ſpecial wicked men; for though ſome are more exceſſive then others in their love to the wayes of ſin, yet they all (even the moſt temperate) meet in this, that they deſire not the knowledge of the wayes of Holineſs.

Here it may be queſtioned, Why doth the knowledge of the wayes of God trouble them ſo much? Indeed the practice of and obedience to them, may be burdenſome to natural men, but what can their knowledge hurt or grieve them?

I anſwer, Firſt, It is not eaſie to fleſh and blood to ſtudy for, or make application to the means of any knowledge, much leſs of the wayes of God; Knowledge will coſt ſome pains; knowledge, eſpecially divine knowledge, is the gift of God; yet it calls for our induſtry, not only to do what we know, but alſo to know what to do (Prov. 2. 1, 2, 3, 4.) My ſon, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my Commandments with thee, ſo that thou encline thine thine ear unto wiſdom, and apply thy heart to underſtanding. To the receiving of the Word and Commandment of God, which hold forth the knowledge of his wayes, there muſt be an inclining of the ear, that is, frequent hearing; and applying of the heart, that is, frequent meditation. The two next verſes import yet a ſtronger diligence, even a crying after knowledge, and a lifting up the voyce for underſtanding; a ſeeking her as ſilver, and a ſearching for her as for hid treaſure. Hence the concluſion of the Preacher (Eccl. 1. 18.) is in ſome ſence extendible to all ſorts of knowledge; He that increaſeth knowledge, increaſeth ſorrow: for though to know be a delight, yet the means of increaſing knowledge, hath ſomewhat of pains and trouble in it.

Secondly, The knowledge ſpoken of in this Scripture, is not a meer aery, notional, ſpeculative knowledge, but an experimental and a practical knowledge; if it were only a knowledge of the wayes of God, that we might be able to talk and diſcourſe of them, that would ſuffice, many wicked men might be deſirous of that knowledge; but becauſe this knowledge obligeth to obedience, and they are called upon to know the Commandments of God, to do them, and to know the wayes of God, to walk in them, therefore they deſire not that knowledge.

Thirdly, They deſire not to know the wayes of God, leſt they ſhould be troubled for not walking in them. Their ignorance of them, they conceive to be ſome excuſe or extenuation of their ſin in not doing them (though indeed their ignorance being affected, is one of the higheſt aggravations of their ſin) for it is far eaſier to ſin without light, then againſt it; and to err by not receiving the truth, then by holding it in unrighteouſneſs (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 1. 18.) Light and knowledge where they are, will be urging duty upon the Conſcience. It is no little trouble to put by theſe motions, and keep down this light, and it is far more troubleſome to go contrary to them.

Knowledge hath three things attending upon it.

Firſt, An obligation to duty: A man is not free from his own bands (though he be from others) to forbear the doing of what he knoweth.

Secondly, As knowledge is an obligation, ſo it is a provocation to duty; it will put a man on, and urge him, it will be as a ſpur in his ſide to make him go, yea, run the wayes of God.

Thirdly, Knowledge hath a ſting, a vexation in it when we neglect duty. The Conſcience of a wicked man doth often break in upon him, and ſmite him, when he knowingly breaks out of the wayes of God. Now leſt the knowledge of the wayes of God ſhould be troubleſome to wicked men in any of theſe three things, therefore to way-lay and prevent their own trouble, they have no deſire to the knowledge of thoſe wayes. Beſides, their deſires after the knowledge of thoſe wayes is ſtopt and quencht by a multitude of prejudices and hard thoughts which they have of thoſe wayes; as firſt, That they are unequal and rigorous; therefore the Lord taxeth his ancient people for that apprehenſion (Mal. 1. 13.) Ye ſaid alſo, behold what a wearineſs is it? And he calls them by the Prophet Micah, to give an account in what (Micah 6. 3.) O my people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee, teſtifie againſt me. Secondly, As diſhonourable and contumelious; they think the wayes of God too low and ſimple for their ſpirits, and are aſhamed to be found in the practice of them. The word of God is in that ſence, a reproach to them. Thirdly, As fruitleſs and unprofitable; they ſee not what they can get by them, and then why ſhould they go in them? Which prejudice is expreſly held out in the latter clauſe of the following verſe.

Secondly obſerve, Not to deſire to know the wayes of God, is more ſinful and dangerous then the ignorance of them.

There are three ſorts of ignorance. Firſt, A groſs or invincible ignorance, which proceeds either from the total abſence of all means of knowledge, or from a total inability to manage and improve thoſe means. Secondly, There is an unwilling ignorance in the midſt of means and abilities to know; a man may be ignorant of ſome things which he is willing enough to know, and this ignorance may run him upon that evil which he had not (premeditately and purpoſely) a will to do. Thirdly, There is a willing ignorance; when a man hath no will to know, yea, reſiſts all the means of knowledge. When he not only doth not know the evil which he doth, but therefore refuſeth knowledge, that he may more freely do evil, and may have this to ſay for himſelf when he doth evil, that he knew not how to refuſe the evil, and chuſe the good. As that is a high wickedneſs ſpoken of by the Prophet (Iſa. 5. 20.) knowingly to call evil good, and good evil, to put light for darkneſs, and darkneſs for light; ſo it is not a wickedneſs of a lower ſtature, willingly to refuſe knowledge, that ſo we may not be able in our actings to diſtinguiſh light from darkneſs, good from evil, but may run blind-fold upon any thing which our own luſts and advantages prompt us to do. The Prophet (Iſa. 58. 2.) ſpeaketh of ſome, who delighted to know the wayes of God, as a Nation that did righteouſneſs, and forſook not the Ordinance of their God. Such are hypocrites. But there are a ſort who delight not to know the wayes of God, that ſo they may do unrighteouſneſs, and never be engaged to live up to the Ordinances of God; ſuch are prophane. Both fall into the ſame condemnation; the one for not doing what they pretend they have a delight to know, the other for not delighting in the knowledge of that which they ought to do. The prophaneneſs of this latter ſort is perſonated in this verſe, and is yet ſet in a more open light in the verſe which followeth.

Verſe

Verse 15. What is the Almighty that we should serve him? and what profit shall we have if we pray unto him?

This verse assignes the reason (such as it is) which lieth in the bottom of the hearts of wicked men alwayes, and sometimes appeareth at their lips, as the reason why they say to God, depart from us, &c. They who bid God be gone from them, have said in their hearts, and are ready enough to say it with their mouths,

What is the Almighty? &c.] Some read it in the Masculine Gender, Who is the Almighty? We in the Neuter; the sence of both is one, and that as bad a one as is imaginable or utterable: As if they had said, What is there in God more then in another? we see nothing in him extraordinary, why he should expect, or why we should give him any extraordinary service. Such queryings, whether concerning things or persons, God or man, signifie the highest contempt and disesteem of either. When Moses said to God concerning himself (Exod. 3. 11.) Who am I that I should go to Pharaoh? He laid himself quite below that important service. When David said to God concerning himself (2 Sam. 7. 18.) Who am I, O Lord God, and what is my house, that thou hast brought me hitherto? He laid himself quite below that eminent mercy. When Nabal said to David's Messengers requesting a supply of victual for his Army (1 Sam. 25. 16.) Who is David? and who is the Son of Jesse? He laid him quite below that desired courtesie. When David saith, Psal. 8. 4. What is man that thou art mindful of him? He layeth him quite below the least mindings or thought of God. So when Pharaoh said to Moses concerning God (with these in the Text) (Exod. 5. 2.) Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? He laid the Lord (as they did here) quite below that required duty. Such Questions as these, do not so much imply a doubt, who or what God is, whom they are commanded to obey and serve, as a resolvedness that he is unworthy their service and obedience; or that they judge him such a one as they have no cause either to fear or love. Which we may further evidence from the peculiarity of that Name with which God is cloathed in the Text; Almighty: What is the Almighty? The word Shaddai here and elsewhere rendred The Almighty, hath a double derivation: First, From a root (Sadad) which signifieth to waste or to destroy, implying the almighty power of God to subdue and subjugate the greatest powers to himself. According to this meaning of the word, the question of these wicked men intimates thus much, that they fear no hurt from God; though he be reported for Almighty, yet they look upon him as weak and impotent, and therefore as slighting his strength, and daring him to do his worst, they say, What is the Almighty that we should serve him?

Secondly, The word may be deduced from a root (Dai, to which the Letter Sin is added as subservient) which signifieth sufficiency, plenty, and abundance. According to this interpretation of the word, their Question holds out thus much, That they being in so flourishing and full a condition themselves, neither needed nor hoped for any thing from his fulness; they could subsist well enough without him, or any supply from him; why should they serve or wait upon him in hope of more, when they had enough in their own hand and possession already? Nor had they faith to believe it would be better with them, or that they should receive any good from him, how much, how long, or how well soever they should serve him. What is the Almighty, or what hath he in store for us, that we should serve him? If we knit and conjoin both these considerations of the word together, we may parallel or exemplifie the whole compass of their question with that lewd and Atheistical speech recorded from the mouths of some sons of Belial in his time, by the Prophet Zephany (chap. 1. 12.) It shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with candles, and I will punish the men that are setled on their lees, that say in their heart, the Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil. Whereas the Lord by his holy Prophet Isaiah (chap. 41. 23.) challengeth the false gods or Idols, to give testimony and proof of their divine power, or that they are gods, by shewing things to come, and by doing good or evil, these conclude that God cannot give proof of his divine power, by doing either good or evil; which is as much as to say, that he can do nothing at all; for seeing all things that are done, are either good or evil, he that can do neither, cannot do any thing. Thus they wickedly imagined the Lord to be what Idols indeed are, who have eyes, and see not; ears, and hear not; feet, but walk not; and hands, but cannot act or execute. And that's the sum of this blasphemy, which Job ascribeth here to the wicked, What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? We neither regard the benefit nor the dammage that he can do us; we are neither troubled at his omnipotency, as if he could destroy us in his wrath when he is displeased at us; nor are we hungry after his All-sufficiency, as if he could sustain us in his love, were he every way pleased by us. What is the Almighty?

That we should serve him.] Why should we take upon us his Livery, and become his servants? What wages shall we have, or what preferment can he give us? as it followeth by and by. To serve God, or to be a servant to God, is a comprehensive term, taking in all the duties of man in holiness. I and my house (saith Joshua, chap. 24. 15.) will serve the Lord: And such is the resolution of every godly man; but against this the wicked are resolved, while we hear them putting the Question, What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? As if they had said, he is such a Master (or let him be what he will) that we will not serve him. To serve God is to give him all the duties both of natural and of instituted worship: We serve God while we love him, while we fear him, while we believe in him, while we trust upon him; yet all these have distinct and proper respects to God. We trust God as he is faithful, we believe on him as he is true, we fear him as he is great, we love him as he is good, we serve him as he is Soveraign and Lord of all. Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve (Deut. 6. 13.) There is a service due from man to man; but comparatively to our service of God, we must not be the servants of men (1 Cor. 7. 23.) We ought to serve men heartily; but we must serve none but God with all our hearts. And if God be not served with all, he counts himself not at all served. A wicked man may possibly serve God with his tongue and hands, with words and outward works, but he never serveth him with his heart; and most usually they cast off the service of hand and tongue, using both to his disservice. In this largest sence of observing, we may expound this Text, and apply it to the greatest number of wicked men, and in that stricter sence 'tis true of them all; They say, What is the Almighty, that we should serve him?

Hence observe, First, Wicked men have low and slight thoughts of God:

Their wisdom (the best that is in them) is but the wisdom of the flesh; and that, at the best, is enmity against God (Rom. 8. 7.) And can they do otherwise then lightly esteem him with whom they are at enmity? They who know not the worth and excellency of a person, cannot have high thoughts of him. Wicked men, one and other, know not God (that's the definition which Bildad giveth of them, chap. 18. 21.) How then can they duly prize him whom they do not know? As we do not desire, so we cannot honour that which is unknown. All the services, such as they are, which a wicked man tenders to God, may bear the same inscription which the Altar observed by Paul among the Athenians did (Acts 17. 23.) To the unknown God. If thou hadst known the gift of God (saith Christ to the woman, John 4. 10.) and who it is that saith unto thee, give me to drink, thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water. Did wicked men know the living God, they would ask after him, and reckon their lives, with all that they have, nothing worth without him. Believers having attained some good knowledge of God (though it be little to what they might attain in Grace, and less, yea, as nothing to what they shall receive in Glory) are lifted up with holy glorying in and of God. Thus Moses in his triumphant Song after the overthrow of Pharaoh and his Egyptian Host in the Red Sea (Exod. 15. 11.) Who is like unto thee, O Lord, amongst the gods? Who is like unto thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders? Thus the Psalmist crieth him up in

in his excellencies, This God is our God for ever and ever (Psal. 48. 14.) So the Church is brought in by the Prophet admiring God (Isa. 25. 9.) Lo this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us: This is the Lord, we have waited for him, &c. The words have a sound of victory and triumph in them, intimating that some had in scorn (as they did David) asked, Where is now your God? Or as in the Text, What is the Almighty? Therefore his people, upon some gracious and strange appearance of God for them, do, as it were, hold him up at once to the view and astonishment of all the World, especially of their enemies; Lo this is our God, this is the Lord. Behold and consider, who is a God like unto him? Your rock is not as our rock, even your selves being Judges. Who have I in Heaven but thee? (saith David, Psal. 73. 25.) and there is none upon earth I desire besides thee. We see how the opinion and estimation which the Saints have of God, is as different from that of wicked men, as their state is different. They make their boast of God all the day long; these are ashamed of him, and say, What is the Almighty that we should serve him? The Daughters of Jerusalem enquire of the Church (Cant. 5. 9.) What is thy Beloved more then anothers beloved, O thou fairest among women? What is thy Beloved more then anothers beloved, that thou doest thus charge us? They demand what, and what is thy Beloved, out of an earnest desire of further information. But wicked men ask, What is the Almighty? Not out of a desire to know what he is, but in scorn and derision of what they vainly and ignorantly conceive him to be, even too mean to be served by them.

Secondly, Observe, A wicked man thinks scorn to serve God.

No man can serve two Masters (saith our Great Master, Matth. 6. 24.) That is, two Masters of contrary interests, and who issue out contrary commands. Every wicked man serveth more Masters then two; but he serveth not that one who is infinitely better, and more deserving our service then all. He is a servant to lust, yea, He serves divers lusts and pleasures (Tit. 3. 3.) He serves at the pleasure of every lust, and therefore he can have no pleasure in serving the Lord: And unless we make it our pleasure as well as our work to serve the Lord, he hath no pleasure neither in us nor in our services. We cannot serve God unless we deny our selves, and resolve our will into his. But every wicked man is a self-seeker, therefore he cannot serve God. And as in that state he cannot, so he hath no will, no mind to serve the Lord. He looks upon his service as slavery, and calls the Commandments of God cords and bonds, and submission to them bondage; therefore he saith, I will break those bonds asunder, and cast away those cords from me (Psal. 2. 3.) Till we are made free from sin, we are never free to serve the Lord. The Apostle joyns those two in consequence, Rom. 6. 20, 21. When ye were the servants of sin, ye were free from righteousness (not free by any liberty given, but by a liberty taken, which is licentiousness) but now being made free from sin (Christ manumitteth all whom he redeemeth) and become servants to God: There is a blessed transition from that freedom which is indeed slavery, into a service which is indeed freedom. He is incomparably more free that serveth the Lord, then he who, not serving him, ruleth the World. I serve (God being my Master) may be the Motto, and is the Honour of all the Saints. The Yoak of Christ, yea, the Cross of Christ, are sweet, easie, and honourable to the Saints. They who have tasted how gracious the Lord is in his Promises, will rejoyce in his Commandments. And it is as much their desire to serve him, as it is their happiness to be saved by him. The wicked are strangers from the Covenant of his Promise, and therefore they are estranged from his Precepts, and in stead of receiving his Law into their hearts, cast it behind their backs. What is the Almighty (say they) that we should serve him?

And what profit should we have if we pray unto him?

We use to look to the end of our actions before we begin; and we may justly think it is not good for us to do that which will do us no good when we have done it. Did a godly man see no benefit, no good coming in by prayer, he would not pray. And because a wicked man seeth no benefit in prayer, therefore he doth not pray. His reason were good if it were true. We cannot profit God by prayer; but we may profit our selves. We may turn the Argument and say, What profit shall we have if we do not pray? Though God giveth sometime before we ask, yet we have no ground to expect till we have asked. Wicked men receive many good things from God, for which they never prayed; but because they do not own him as the Author and Fountain of their good, therefore they will not pray. They ascribe their profits to themselves; What profit then can they conceive in prayer? What profit shall we have

If we pray unto him?] The Hebrew is, If we meet him. 'Tis a Metaphor taken from those, who rise up when grave and great men come towards them, and in honour to their persons go forth and meet them. This elegancy of the word heightens the impiety of wicked men, who are so far from following God with their prayers and supplications, when he departeth far from them, that they will not so much as stir a foot to go out and meet God when he cometh towards them, either in judgment, to divert and turn him back, or in mercy, to invite him forwards, and give him thanks; as if they did not at all, either fear his anger, or regard his love. Prayer is our meeting with God; and this word is specially applyed to our meeting God in prayer, when he appeareth angry and displeased. Thus the word is used (Jer. 7. 16.) Therefore pray not thou for this people, do not thou (saith the Lord to his Prophet) meet me when I come out against them, do not thou strike in between me and them (as Moses sometimes did) to intercede and mediate for them, for I am resolved to destroy them. That Scripture (Isa. 47. 3.) which we render, I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man (that is, weak in power, or with compassion, such as men sometimes shew; but in full power, and with unmoveable purposes, as God; that Scripture, I say) is thus rendred by others, Man shall not resist me; that is, he shall not hinder me of my purpose by prayer; or as some of the Rabbins translate, or rather paraphrase that Text, I will not admit of any intercession for thee. Whereas in another place of the same Prophet (Chap. 59. 16.) The Lord wondred that there was no Intercessor; none to meet him with a good word for that people. In which sence we find the word, Jer. 27. 18. & 36. 25. Abigail went out to meet David, and by her mediation to stop him from shedding blood (2 Sam. 25. 23.) The Lord calls his people to meet him (Amos 4. 12.) Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Israel; and because I will do this, therefore prepare to meet thy God, O Israel. How to meet him? What with Armes or Armies, with the preparation of outward force? No: What can the strongest Hosts of men do against or with the Lord of Hosts? This meeting then must be by repentance and humiliation, by weeping and invocation. God meeteth him (with blessings) in his way, that rejoyceth and worketh righteousness: And he loves, yea, expects that we should meet him in his way, mourning and praying, when he is about the works of his Judgment. Many godly men have met God with these weapons, and have prevailed, But the wicked man, either hath no hopes, or thinks he hath no need either to prevent evil or obtain good by such a meeting. And therefore he saith, What profit shall I have if I pray unto (or meet) him?

פָּגַע Significat occurrere, obviare, sæpe autem deprecari vel instanter orare.

Hence Observe, First, Wicked men are led by their worldly profit in all they do.

They are ready to do any evil which they suppose may profit them; and they will not do (which is all they can do) so much as the outside of any good, by which they can get no visible profit. The Apostle Paul speaks of such who supposed that gain was Godliness; but they were far from supposing that Godliness (as indeed it is, even bare Godliness) is great gain (1 Tim. 6. 5, 6.) While wicked men have a hope to gain by a profession of Godliness (because gain is savory to them, though it proceed from that which to them is most unsavory) they will be pro-feſſors, and condeſcend to that which they eſteem no more in it ſelf, then the dirt under their feet, the thing called Godlineſs. But when once they ſee they cannot gain by it, or think they have gained enough by it, then they meddle with it no more; off goes their viſor, and they ſhew you (having made a ſhew of what they were not) what they are. Many now receive the Goſpel upon the ſame Argument, by which the Sichemites were perſwaded to receive Circumciſion (Gen. 34. 23.) Shall not their cattel, and their ſubſtance, and every beaſt of theirs be ours? They are zealous for Chriſt, upon the ſame terms that Demetrius was zealous for the worſhip of Diana among the Epheſians (Acts 19. 24.) they make or gain Silver ſhrines, and by this they get their living. As Judas betrayed Chriſt, ſo they will pretend to adore him, if their queſtion be well anſwered, What will you give us? Or what ſhall we get by it? The Needle of the Compaſs never reſts nor is quiet, till it pointeth to the North, nor are they till they point at profit, and have carnal advantages in their eye. What profit ſhall we have if we hear him, or pray unto him?

Secondly, Obſerve, Wicked men have an opinion that prayer and attendance upon God in holy duties are unprofitable.

While they ask, What profit ſhall we have if we pray? Their meaning is, that prayer yields no profit, and that ſerving God is a very poor trade. Such the Prophet Malachy at once diſcovers and reproves (Chap. 3. 14.) Ye have ſaid, It is in vain to ſerve God; And what profit is it that we have kept his Ordinances, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of Hoſts. And now ye call the proud happy, yea, they that work wickedneſs are ſet up, yea, they that tempt God are even delivered. As if they had ſaid, We get nothing by the ſervice of God; and not only ſo, but they who rebel againſt him, the proud, they who make wickedneſs their work, their buſineſs, they who do not only neglect God, but tempt him, ſinning preſumptuouſly, daringly, theſe get all, theſe are happy, theſe are built up high in good things, honour and riches, and theſe are delivered and protected from evil, dangers, and diſtreſſes. A prophane Souldier at the ſiege of a Town paſſing a place of danger was heard ſwearing, and when one that ſtood by warned him, ſaying, Fellow-ſouldier, do not ſwear, the bullets fly; he anſwered, They that ſwear come off as well as they who pray; ſoon after a ſhot hit him, and down he fell. This is the judgment both of poor, ignorant, and knowingly wicked men, What profit is there if we pray? Whereas indeed they ſhould rather ſay, What profit is there in any thing without prayer? Or what profit is there not in prayer? Godlineſs is profitable for all things, having the promiſe of this life, as well as of that which is to come (1 Tim. 4. 8.)

Thirdly, Obſerve, Wicked men throw up or give over the duties of holineſs, when they find no preſent profit or outward advancement coming in by them.

They ſerve God no longer then he ſerveth their turns. They who follow Chriſt for the loaves, leave him when the loaves are done. Surely many old Formaliſts were wont to pray meerly for filthy lucre, which gave occaſion for that common Proverb, No penny, no pater-noſter; which we may tranſlate into the ſtile of the Text, No profit, no prayer. Saints find reward in their work; but Hypocrites muſt be rewarded and paid in hand for their work, elſe they will work no more. A godly man will pray and perſevere in prayer, becauſe God commandeth him to pray alwayes; not becauſe he alwayes finds the grant of the thing prayed for. He knows his prayers can never turn to loſs, though he pray long and feels no profit, not only not in temporals, but not in ſpirituals, and inward comforts. He conſiders, what God requires of him, not what he receiveth from God, is the ground of every duty. And whereas that wicked King ſaid (2 Kings 6. 33.) This evil is from the Lord, why then ſhould I wait upon the Lord any longer? He ſaith, I will yet, yea, for ever wait upon the Lord, though he defer to do me good.

VERS. 16, 17, 18.

Lo, their good is not in their hand, the counſel of the wicked is far from me.

How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? And how oft cometh their deſtruction upon them? God diſtributeth ſorrows in his anger.

They are as ſtubble before the wind, and as chaff that the ſtorm carrieth away.

IN the former words, Job having deſcribed both the proſperity and the blaſphemy of wicked men, whom he repreſents thruſting the Lord from them, and diſcharging him their company, Depart from us, we deſire not the knowledge of thy wayes, &c. (Having thus, I ſay, deſcribed their proſperity, and their blaſphemy; leſt he ſhould ſeem to attribute more happineſs to them, then indeed they have, or at all to have approved of their courſe and counſel, which at all he had not) he ſubjoyns by way of prevention, his opinion of both in this ſixteenth Verſe.

Lo, their good is not in their hand, the counſel of the wicked is far from me.

As if he had ſaid, I have not aſſerted the great ſucceſs of wicked men, as if God neglected the affairs of the world, or cared not into what hands they were diſtributed; as if he had left wicked men in their own power, to be the founders and contrivers of their own greatneſs; or as if I my ſelf were taken with, or envied at any of their felicity: for I am well aſſured that God diſpoſeth of all theſe things in much wiſdom, but in no love at all, or good will to them: Lo, their good is not in their hand, the counſel of the wicked is far from me.

In theſe words Job gives his opinion about the ſtate of wicked men, in the midſt of all their outward pomp and worldly ſplendor; Lo, their good is not in their hand. The Septuagint read this firſt part of the Verſe without a negative particle; whereas we (from the Hebrew) read, Their good is not in their hand, they ſay, Their goods were in their hands. Which ſome explain, As if Job in theſe words aſſigned the reaſon whence it comes to paſs, that wicked men ſpake with ſo much boldneſs and impudency in the Verſe before, What is the Almighty? And what profit is it that we pray to him? Why are they thus bold with God? Why do they ſlight the Almighty? O (ſaith Job) their good is in their hand; that is, they have enough already, they are full of the world, and they care not how empty they are of God; they have as much as they deſire, they are ſatisfied with the creature, therefore they have no deſire to the Almighty, the Creator; they have their portion, and ſuch will not pray for more who think they have all in poſſeſſion. What need they beg any good thing at the hand of God, when they have all good in their own hand? Their good is in their hand, therefore they ſay, What profit is it that we pray to the Almighty? This is a truth, but I will not proſecute this reading, becauſe it is not clear from the original Text.

Ἐν χερσὶν γὰρ ἦν αὐτῶν τὰ ἀγαθά. Sept.

We render according to the letter of the Hebrew, Their good is not in their hand. That is, ſay ſome, They have many worldly good things, yet they uſe none of them. They have good in their houſes, good in their cheſts, but they have none in their hand. The righteous man hath outward good things in his hand, he is ready to uſe and imploy them, he is maſter of them, he makes them ſerve him; but meer carnal men ſerve their goods, or are ſlaves to them; their goods have them in their hand; their good is not in their hand, they are ruled by what they have; they do not rule what they have. Lo, their good is not in their hand. They are not maſter of their own. There is a truth in this expoſition; and therefore Solomon in Eccleſiaſtes diſtinguiſheth the poſſeſſion of the things of the world from the uſe of them. It is one gift of God to put the things of the world into our hand, and another to give us a heart to uſe them (Eccleſ. 5. 19.) Every man to whom God hath given riches and wealth (there is one gift) and given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and rejoyce in his labour, this is the gift of God, there is another gift. Many receive the firſt gift from the hand of of God, who are denyed the latter. But neither will I give this as the scope of Job's Text.

Again, Their good is not in their hand. By good here, we are to understand all that which is before set down, as the portion of wicked men: We had an Inventory of their goods, a very large and fair one. Lo, Their good. Why the things of the world are called good, see before (ver. 13.) They spend their dayes in wealth, or, in good. And though they did, yet here he saith, Their good is not in their hand. But how can a man spend his dayes in that which is not in his hand? Many have that in their hand or possession, in which they do not spend their dayes. But it sounds hard to say, A man spends his dayes in that which is not in his hand.

Lo, their good is not in their hand.

I answer; The being of a thing in our hand imports.

First, That it is attainable by our own industry, or that it is within our reach and power. So, when Job saith, Their good is not in their hand; his meaning is, their riches and worldly abundance was not attained by any self-sufficiency. Not only is it true in spirituals, but also in temporals (though in these we can do no more) that we can do nothing effectively of our selves, or by our own strength and wisdom, our sufficiency is of God. Whatsoever we have in this world comes from another hand, not from our own. Master Broughton renders fully up to this sence; Lo, their wealth cometh not by their own power.

Cum scripturæ dicit aliquid esse in manu; potius potestatem in conservando quam diligentiam in acquirendo significat. Bold.

Secondly, Their good is not in their hand; that is, they have not a power to hold the good which they have received; this I have seen (saith Job) in the state of wicked men, that neither the good they have was purely in their power to attain it, nor in their power to retain and hold it. This latter sence some conclude, as specially intended by this phrase all the Scripture over. As if to be in the hand, did rather imply an ability in keeping, then industry in acquiring the things of this life; yet I conceive the former sence as fair and pertinent as the latter, and therefore from thence note,

First, Men get not their greatness, whether in wealth or rule, by their own power.

What Job affirms of evil men, is true of good men too, it is a general truth, Their good is not in their hand to get it; every good gift comes from above. Even the things of the world (which are good gifts, though they be a lower sort of good gifts) are sent by a higher hand. Earth is dropt down to us out of Heaven. Outward comforts are not from the hand of man, either meritoriously, or efficiently. They are not from his hand meritoriously, he deserves not a bit of bread; he is so far from deserving Heaven, and Glory, and the Favour of God, that he deserves not a piece of this earth to stand or lye down upon. No nor efficiently: Proud man hath such an opinion of himself, he is full of these thoughts, that at least the things of the world are within his compass, that he can reach and attain them by his own power, activity, and policy. Isa. 10. 13. The Assyrian is brought in glorying thus; For he saith, by the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom, for I am prudent, and I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treasures, and I have put down the inhabitants of the earth like a valiant man. Here is the language of a proud mans heart, he saith, by the strength of my hand I have done it. And the Lord was very jealous of his own people, that they would be attributing their good to their own hand, and he could not bear it that they should. (Deut. 8. 16, 17.) Therefore he admonisheth them, that when they came to Canaan, and had got great estates, and had eaten, and were full, to take heed least their hearts should be lifted up (Vers. 17.) And thou say in thy heart (suppose it do not break forth into words) my might and my power hath gotten this wealth (take heed thou do not speak such language in thy heart) but thou shalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is he that gives thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his Covenant which he sware to thy fathers. See here, the things of the world are not in our hand, God gives us power to get our bread. And consider, if the Lord be so jealous in this point, that he will not indure men to ascribe to their own strength or hand, the getting of the treasures of the world: How will he take it at their hands, that say Heaven it self is in their hand, the good of eternal life is in their hand, or that they can fetch it in by their own earnings; that they are not beholden to Christ only, or alone for it, but they can merit for it? There is a touch of this in all our hearts, though we come not to the grosness of the Papists; we would have somewhat of our own gaining and fetching in, for life and glory. But if the things of the World be not in our hand, then much less are the things of Heaven: If not temporals, then surely not spirituals and eternals. (Psal. 76. 6, 7.) Promotion is not from the East, or West, or South, but it is of God, who pulleth down one, and setteth up another. It is a piece of our spiritualness to confess God the giver of our temporals. It is an act of grace to say, Lo, our good is not in our hand. That principle of policy, Every man is the contriver of his own condition, is false in Divinity. Man may be considered in a threefold capacity or state, and God the Author of them all. In his natural state, as a living man: In his spiritual state, as a holy man: In his civil state, as a rich or great man: All that he is in any of, or all these, is all from God.

Quisq; fortunæ suæ faber.

Secondly, Observe, It is not in the power of man to hold or perpetuate his own prosperity.

As our good is not got by our hand, so not held, it will run or slip out between our fingers, if we only hold it; we put our earnings into a purse with holes (Hag. 1. 6.) if God do but blow upon it. As the Lord gives, so he can take away, let us hold as fast as we will; unless the Lord hold what we have for us, we cannot hold it. The creature is a flitting thing; unless God establish it to us it may be gone every moment. Our spirituals are not in our own keeping; we cannot bring grace into our own hearts, and we cannot keep grace in our own hearts; our good of grace is in the hand of Jesus Christ, it is he that preserves his own graces bestowed upon us. Were it not for the hand of Christ holding our hearts, we should let out all the grace we have quickly; our faith and love, with all those spiritual treasures, would soon be scattered, were not we kept by the power of God; Lo, their good is not in their hand.

Thirdly, When Job saith, Their good is not in their hand, he seems to intend, that though these men had a great deal in their hands; yet their good, or that which indeed will do them good, was not in their hand. The men of the world have their portion in this life; and that is not a portion: They have goods in their hand; but that which is indeed their good is not in their hand.

Hence Note, That which is truly good, or will really do any man good, is not in the hand of a wicked man.

Let him have what he will in his hand, his good is not in his hand; yea, it had been better for him not to have had this good in his hand, unless he had somewhat that is better. (Psal. 4. 6.) The men of the World cry out, Who will shew us any good? What is their good? David tells us, Corn, and wine, and oyl, gold and silver, the riches and greatness of the World; these are a very low sort of good, and comparatively these are no good at all. Give me the light of thy countenance (saith he) this good they have not in their hand: They have not the grace or favour of God in their hands; they have not a portion of spirituals in their hands; their good is not in their hand, because that is not there which indeed would make them happy. Job did not look on wicked men as truly happy, though he spake so much of this outward happiness; Their good is not in their hand.

The counsel of the wicked is far from me.

In these words Job makes a modest comparison between his own and the condition of the wicked; The counsel of the wicked is far from me. Counsel is not to be taken here strictly for that which is the preparation to action, after inquisition and debate; for the issue of both is counsel. But here counsel is to be understood in a larger sence; The counsel of the wicked, is, their course, their opinion, their way, their purpose, whatsoever is decreed and resolved by them, that is their counsel. Now, saith he, This counsel (or course) of the wicked, is far from me.

Consilium ponitur pro tota agendi ratione.

But how was their counsel far from Job? Every good man cannot keep evil counsel far from him. Evil men may give good men bad counsel; yea, a good man cannot keep himself from the evil counsel of the Devil; Why then doth he say, The counsel of the wicked is far from me? Satan will be instilling hellish counsel into the hearts of the best; How then is he thus confident, The counsel of the wicked is far from me?

The meaning is, I am far from the counsel of the wicked: For though we cannot keep the counsel of wicked men, or the counsel of Satan, his suggestions, and motions, far from us (for these will be buzzing about us) yet we may keep our selves far from them; that is, we may keep our hearts at a distance from them. Now that is the meaning of Job, The counsel of the wicked is far from me: That is, I am of another opinion, and mind, I do not fall in with them, I do not say as they, I do not affirm what they affirm, or deny what they deny. The counsel of the wicked is far from me. It shews that he had a quite different judgment of things from the wicked; nor did he like their way, notwithstanding their prosperity and success. As if he had said, I am not in love with their good and greatness, much good do it them; it is far from me to wish it in their way, and upon their terms; for I never trod in their path, nor walked in their counsel.

Hence Observe, First, The counsel or course of a wicked man is foolish and preposterous in the opinion of the godly.

As himself is, so is his counsel, both nought, therefore a good man abhors them. What is the counsel of a wicked man? What is his course? His counsel is to follow the world, to heap up riches, to engross earth, neglecting Heaven, to be very eager after the things that are seen, not regarding the things that are not seen. This is foolish counsel: For (saith Paul, 2 Cor. 4. ult.) we look not at things that are seen. How can a man look at things that he doth not see? How can he aim at a mark that he doth not reach with his eye? Indeed Believers look at nothing but what they see, though they do not look at the things which are seen. Here is the excellency of Believers, they aim at things that are not seen by the corporal eye, but they have a sight of them by the eye of faith, they see them with a spiritual eye, or else they could not aim at them. Now, We look not (saith Paul) at things that are seen (which is the counsel of the wicked) but at things which are not seen; for the things that are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. The things which are most seen now, will not be seen long, no, nor be long. As it is said of Tyre (Ezek. 27. 36.) The Merchants among the people shall hiss at thee, thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt be any more, or shalt not be for ever.

Secondly, Observe, Godly men are not at all pleased with the way of the wicked, how much soever they thrive in it.

Job had said much of the greatness, riches, and glory of the wicked; but, saith he, however, The counsel of the wicked is far from me. The wayes of the godly and the wicked differ, as much as their ends; and their counsels are as distant as their conclusions will be. Every good man saith of the counsels and wayes of the wicked, how prosperous soever, as Jacob said of his sons, Simeon and Levi (Gen. 49. 6.) O my soul, come not thou into their secret, unto their assembly mine honour be not thou united. Let me be far from their secret; that is, from their secret counsel, from their cabinet counsel, and close committees: O my soul, come not thou into their secret. The further we keep from their counsel, the nearer we are to blessedness. (Psal. 1. 1.) Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly. And as the godly are far from the counsel of the wicked, so the wicked are as far from the counsels of the godly; they also say, The counsel of such is far from us, we cannot abide their counsel (Psal. 14. 6.) Ye have shamed the counsel of the poor; that is, ye are ashamed of his counsel. What poor doth he mean? He means it not of any poor; though it be a truth, that a poor mans counsel is seldom heard (great men are usually ashamed of poor mens counsel, as Solomon speaketh in his Ecclesiastes, (Chap. 9. 16.) The poor mans wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.) But here by poor, he means the godly poor, men fearing God, as it is plain in the latter end of the Verse: You are ashamed of the counsel of the poor, Why? Because the Lord is his refuge. His counsel doth depend on the Lord: Trust in the Lord, walk in his wayes, shelter your selves under his protection, this counsel the poor man gives; and he must needs be a godly man that gives this counsel. This counsel you have shamed; that is, despised. What have we to do with this counsel, to make the Lord our refuge? No, we will take our own course, and work it out by our own wit. Thus wicked men are far from the counsel of the godly; and godly men are as far from the counsel of the wicked.

Job proceeds.

Verse 17. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out?

Here begins the second part of the Chapter. As in the former he proved by clear experiences, the prosperity of the wicked, so now he proves that the wicked are not alwayes prosperous, but meet with checks and contrary blasts as well as others. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? There are two opinions concerning the general tendency of this latter part of the Chapter. Some think (as hath been toucht) that Job having before declared the outward happiness of wicked men, doth here, as it were, turn the Tables, and describe their misery by way of admiration. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? Or if they escape, their children pay for it, as it follows ver. 21. This may seem to contradict what he spake before of the flourishing state of wicked men, presently to add, How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? But indeed it only contradicts what his Friends spake before, whose opinion was, That God sorteth out the things of this life so distinctly, that to the wicked he gives nothing but misery and sorrow; and to the righteous nothing but mercy and comfort. Now Job takes this off; he affirms that wicked men are usually filled with worldly abundance, which is against their opinion; yet he affirms also, that wicked men are often plunged into outward misery, that they also are brought into straits and darkness. Thus he renders the opinion of his Friends altogether inconsistent with his experiences; they said, that evil men receive only evil; no, saith he, evil men receive abundance of good in this World; yet I do assert that evil men also receive evil too; so that there can be no distinguishing of mens spiritual estates by their temporal sufferings or enjoyments, seeing wicked men sometimes are not punished here, and sometimes are.

Concludit contra amicos suos bona & mala in hac vita aque a Deo bonis ac malis dari. Refutatur amicorum sententia impios semper hic puniri, quum utrumque aque accidat & eos punire & non punire. Merc.

Secondly, Others understand the whole context thus, as if Job were still describing the prosperous state of the wicked, and continued the same discourse to ver. 21. And then the questions here are to be expounded negatively; How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? Can you give many instances of it? Is this very oft? Are wicked men commonly found in darkness, or in trouble? So he meets with both the assertions of his Friends. Bildad said (Chap. 18. 5, 6.) The light of the wicked is put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine; the light shall be dark in his tabernacle, and his candle shall be put out with him. Well, saith Job, this is your opinion, I pray, tell me, How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? Have you seen this frequently, that you make such a direct conclusion of it? Again, Zophar in the close of the twentieth Chapter, when he had drawn out the judgments of God in many particulars, concludes (ver. 29.) This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed him by God. Now Job answers, whereas you, O Zophar, conclude your ennumeration of evils, with, This is the portion of a wicked man from God. I pray, how oft doth God distribute such evils to them in anger? Doth he it so often, as gives you a sufficient ground to make so peremptory a conclusion? This is the portion of a wicked man from God.

Take the words either of these wayes, there is a fair correspondency with the scope of the place, and with Job's purpose; nor do either of these interpretations give any strain or offer violence to the original Text. For

the

Quoties potest exponi in defectu, q.d. Etsi id fiat aliquando, raro tamen fit; ac sæpius florent impii contra quã vos dixistis. Merc.

the first word that we render how oft, is expounded sometimes by way of increase, sometimes by way of diminution. In the former sence, how oft, sounds a thing done very frequently: In the latter, how oft; sounds a thing seldom, or rarely done: How oft have you had such experiments? That is, You have rarely had them. How oft is such a thing done? That is, It is seldom done. Mr. Broughton translates clearly to this exposition, Not so often is the candle of the wicked put out, &c.

How oft is the Candle of the wicked put out?

By the candle of the wicked, some understand their lives, that is, How oft do wicked men come to a sudden and unexpected death? Job said before, They grow old: His Friends had said, They are cut off. Here, according to the latter exposition, he queries, Can you give many instances that the candle of the wicked hath been put out? That their lives have been extinguished? The life of man may well be called his candle; and the life of man goes out after the manner of a candle. A candle goes out three wayes, and so doth the life of man: First, For want of moisture to feed it: Thus the life of man goes out when the moisture of the body is spent, and consumed; when it is drunk and dryed up by old age, or hot distempers, then out goes the life of man like a candle. Secondly, A candle goes out, through the redundancy of moisture; the oyl sometimes drowns the lamp, as well as feeds it. Thus also moisture overflowing the body of man, puts out or quencheth life. Thirdly, A candle is extinguisht by a vehement wind that blows it out: And the lives of many men are put out by violence, their candle doth not burn out, but is blown out. And thus especially the lives of wicked men are put out: They are cut off by a hand of Justice before they have lived out half their dayes; or if they attain to fulness of dayes, their hoary head descends not to the grave in peace.

Secondly, Others understand by Candle, their Children: A mans children are as so many lights in his house; as they dye, his candles are put out; and if they all dye, his candle is quite put out.

Thirdly, and more generally, the word is used to signifie any, or all sorts of worldly prosperity. The light of the wicked can be nothing but outward prosperity, in all the sorts of it. So the word is frequently used (Prov. 13. 9.) The light of the righteous rejoyceth; but the lamp of the wicked shall be put out; that is, their prosperity shall cease; read 2 Sam. 27. 11. 2 Kings 8. 19. Psal. 132. 17. in all which places, light, lamp, and candle, express outward splendor and prosperity. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? Taking the words in the first sence, How oft? That is, very oft.

Observe, The worldly glory and outward pomp of wicked men is many times put out in darkness.

Taking the words in the second sence, How oft? That is, not often: You cannot give frequent experiments of this.

Note; Most wicked men continue their candle, and the light of their prosperity a long time.

As we have seen the one, so the other; there are experiments on both sides. Therefore we can make no distinction of men, either by the shining and burning, or by the putting out of their candle. The former point hath been given from other passages of the Book, and the latter being one general scope of the whole Book, it may suffice only to collect and specifie them.

And how oft cometh destruction upon them?

The sence is the same with the former, only the words are varied.

אֵיד Extremam denotat ruinam vel calamitatem nubis & pluviæ more supervenientem.

Their destruction.] The word which we render destruction, carrieth in it utter ruine, or an undoing calamity; properly it signifies a cloud; and because storms are wrapped up in clouds, and from them hail and snow, thunder and lightening, break forth, not only to the terror of hearers and beholders, but even to their destruction; therefore the same word signifies both a cloud, and also destruction. And hence the Vulgar reads, How oft is there an inundation upon the wicked? When clouds dissolve, an inundation, a deluge follows, which sweeps all away. In which sence the Prophet (Isa. 28. 15.) calls it an overflowing scourge, that is, a judgment which breaks all the banks and fences which the wit and power of man set up against it.

Note, Wicked men shall not only be afflicted, but destroyed.

Destruction is their portion. The hand of God upon a wicked man is for ruine; but upon his own people for correction. The Apostle speaks this sence clearly (2 Cor. 4. 8, 9.) where he tells us that himself and other holy men were in a very sad condition, but it came not to destruction; We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed. As for wicked men, How oft cometh destruction upon them? They are not only troubled, but distressed; not only perplexed, persecuted, and cast down, but in despair; forsaken and destroyed.

From the manner of their destruction; it comes like a tempest, or a shower.

Note, The destruction of wicked men is irresistible.

Who can avoid the shower, or the storm? Yes, you will say, we may run to covert; but there is no covert which the Lord cannot rain quite through; though sinners hide themselves under rocks and mountains, he can send a rain which shall soak unto them. There is no shelter against the wrath of God; he can pierce all the coverings of the creature; his wrath smites down to the very bottom of hell. When storms and tempests are up in the World, Saints have a covering; But what is it? Not any worldly covering, or creature refuge; these cannot protect them from the storm; but the Prophet tells us what or who will (Isa. 32. 2.) A King shall reign in righteousness, Princes shall rule in judgment. And a man (that is, Jesus Christ) shall be a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest, as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. Christ is a covert from the tempest, as a hiding place from the wind; but wicked men have no help by him, he is no covert, no hiding place to them; therefore their destruction comes unresistably, and unavoidably. Such was the shower of fire and brimstone upon Sodom; the Sodomites expected not an enemy that way, their destruction came as a shower from a cloud; The Lord rained fire and brimstone upon them from the Lord out of Heaven. The cloud which hangs over and lowres black upon wicked men, is not a little cloud that soon passeth away, but a cloud that shall make the wicked pass away; when that breaks, they shall be broken, and fall, and perish.

Nubecula est cito transibit.

God distributeth sorrows in his anger.

חלק Divisionem denotat inter plures. Trãslatio ab iis qui funiculis agros dimetiebantur, quos deinde dividunt inter se missis sortibus. Drus.

The word implyeth the dividing of a thing among many; to divide by lot; to apportion out an inheritance or share; a mans share is called his lot; this is my lot, and that is yours; every one hath his lot. Thus land in a common field is divided; and thus Joshua divided Canaan among the twelve Tribes, he divided it to them by lot; such a distribution the word signifies; God shall distribute sorrows to them by lot.

חבלים Dolores, funes, partiebatur, funiculis hæreditates dividebantur.

He distributeth sorrows.] That word signifieth a cord, or a line, that line with which an inheritance is divided, a measuring line, a line to measure land by. So (Psal. 16. 6.) The line is fallen to me in a fair place; that is, my inheritance is divided, or shared out to me in a fair place, I have a fair lot. The elegancy is remarkable. God distributeth sorrows by a line, as the portion and inheritance which wicked men shall receive (Luke 12. 46.) The Lord of that servant will come in a day when he looked not for him, &c. and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers. God distributeth sorrows. To say God distributeth a portion in anger were sad enough; for every portion that God distributeth in anger can be nothing but sorrow. But to distribute sorrows in anger, imports the most sorrowful distribution. And besides, the word signifies not only sorrows, but the greatest sorrows, those sorrows that straiten as a cord, which binds the part so hard, that it causeth pain, or such sorrows as a woman hath in travel. The Greek Translators express it by a word noting the pangs and throws of a travelling Woman. God distributes these sorrows

In his anger.] That is, God being angry, or when he is angry he distributes these sorrows. In what sence anger or any other passions are said to be in God, hath been shewed from other Texts of this Book. And when it is said, that God doth a thing in anger, the meaning is not, that he doth some things in a quiet temper, and other things in a distemper, as men often do; but that he doth some things for the good and benefit, other things for the hurt and vexation of man; yet as the one in mercy, and the other in judgment, so both according to the highest rules of reason and righteousness.

Thus the woful condition of a wicked man is described, under the displeasure and angry dispensations of God.

Hence Note, First, Sorrow is the portion, or inheritance of the wicked.

The lot of the wicked falls in the land of sorrow and darkness, of mourning and lamentation, this is their proper lot: Though at present they live in the light of outward joy, yet their portion is darkness and sorrow. What else can be their inheritance but sorrow, who abide under the anger of God? Believers are Heirs of the Promise, and therefore peace and joy are their portion. The wicked are Heirs of the Curse, they are as surely Heirs of the Curse, as the Saints are of the Promise, and therefore sorrow is their portion. The Anger and Curse of God have nothing but evil in them, as his Favour and the Promise have nothing but good in them.

Secondly, Observe, The sorrows of wicked men are divided to them by the hand of God.

His hand is in the work; God distributes to every man his portion. All our lots are set out by his hand. The word (God) is not expreſt in the Hebrew, but he is in it; Who is the distributer, but the Lord? He distributes evil as well as good. The Prophet challengeth all false Gods; Let them do good or evil, that we may know that they are Gods (Isa. 41. 23.) The distribution of evil speaks God as much as the distribution of good: It is the honour of God to be the distributer of both. And since it is in the hand of God to distribute, and apportion out to wicked men their due, they shall be sure to have it; for he is a just God, and he seeth all the wickedness of their hearts, and he will not be taken off by intreaties, or blinded by gifts; they can plead nothing to take him off from this distribution; 'tis their due, and they shall have it. God distributeth sorrows in his anger.

Thirdly, Observe, It is very dangerous to provoke God to anger.

To do so may quickly be to our sorrow, for he distributes sorrows in his anger. Therefore the Psalmist exhorts (Psal. 2. 12.) Kiss the Son (that is, with a kiss of homage and submission) least he be angry. Why, what's the danger of that? The next words shew it, And ye perish from the way (of your purposes, and never reach your ends) when his wrath is kindled but a little, blessed are all they that put their trust in him. The Psalmist leaves us to imagine how cursed and miserable their estate will be who provoke God, while he thus elegantly goes off from it (the file of his speech calling him rather to speak that) and concludes, Blessed are all they that trust in him.

Fourthly, Observe, The sorrows of wicked men flow from the wrath and anger of God.

God distributeth sorrows to many of his own people, he gives them sometimes a very uncomfortable portion; but he doth not distribute sorrows to them (purely) in anger. All the sorrows he distributes to his own people, have a mixture of love and mercy. To be under the anger of God is more grievous, then to be under sorrows from God. The anger of God is worse then sorrow. Therefore David deprecates it (Psal. 6. 1.) Lord, rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure. He doth not deprecate rebuking, or chastening, he doth not pray against these; but he prayes against rebuking in anger, and chastening in hot displeasure. Gods anger is more terrible then his rebuking; and his displeasure then his chastening. Therefore (saith he) Lord, whatsoever thou doest to me, do nothing in anger; yet so the Lord rebukes wicked men, he gives them sorrow and anger together (Psal. 11. 5.) The Lord trieth the righteous; but the wicked, and him that loves violence his soul hateth; (From this hatred what follows?) Upon the wicked God shall rain fire, and brimstone, and an horrible tempest; this shall be the portion of their cup. Their cup hath not only fire, and brimstone, and tempest in it, but hatred in it; this makes their cup so bitter; this is the very dregs of it. The enemies of the Kingdom of Christ are thus threatened (Psal. 2. 5.) He shall speak to them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure: He saith not with it, but in it. When he is in his highest displeasure, and wrath, then he shall speak. God speaks terrible words when he speaks in wrath; and he vexeth man to purpose when he vexeth him in his sore displeasure. Thus he speaks to the Kings of the earth, and the Princes, and to all the inraged multitude, who combine to break his bands, and to cast his cords from them, who would hinder the great design of the Father in advancing the Scepter of his Son over the World. And when God deals thus with any sort of sinners, he takes a kind of comfort in it (Ezek. 5. 13. Thus my anger shall be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them. If the fury of the Lord do but touch a man, wo unto him: But when a man is made as the resting place of the fury of the Lord, how can he abide it? How restless must he be? Yet thus saith the Lord, I will cause my fury to rest upon them) and I will be comforted, and they shall know that I the Lord have spoken in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them. As (in reference to his own people) when the Lord accomplisheth his love in them, and causeth his favour to rest upon them, then he is as it were comforted, it pleaseth him very much. So, when he pours out judgments and evils upon wicked men in fury and wrath, in the height and heat of wrath, this comforteth him, and pleaseth him. God sometimes distributeth sorrow with sorrow, and he speaks of himself as grieved when he puts men to grief; but when God doth not only distribute sorrow in anger, but in comfort; that is, when he doth not only expres himself as angry, but as comforted, while he dealeth out sorrows to the sons of men; as their course before was out of measure sinful, so their present case is out of measure sorrowful. Which Job shews more fully in the next Verse.

Verse 18. They are as stubble before the wind, and as chaff that the storm carries away.

Thus is it with wicked men, according to our reading; and according to the second interpretation of, How oft is their candle put out? We may add, How oft are they as stubble. 'Tis usual in Scripture to compare wicked men to stubble and chaff; we have them both here, stubble is the stalk, stubble is that which is left after the Corn is reaped, and the chaff is that in which the Corn is wrapped in the ear, till it be threshed and winnowed. The stubble is nothing to the ear, and the chaff in the floor is nothing to the Corn in the floor; the wicked are but these, stubble and chaff.

They are as stubble before the wind.

That is, They are as easily dissipated, and quickly carried away. Stubble makes little opposition against the wind; the war is not great between the wind and the straw, between the chaff and the storm: Stubble and chaff are as much a match for winds and storms, as the wicked are for the wrath of God. Holy David (Psal. 1.) having spoken of the stability of the godly, subjoyns, The ungodly are not so, but as the chaff which the wind driveth away. And when David saw his enemies deserted of God, notwithstanding their seeming devotions and earnestness in calling to him for help; he presently adds (Psal. 18. 42.) Then did I beat them small as the dust or chaffe before the wind. It is an easie matter to destroy those whom God refuseth to help, and to make them as chaff, whose rock the Lord refuseth to be. The holy Prophets are frequent in this similitudinary language, Isa. 17. 13. Hos. 13. 3, &c. Every man is but as dust and chaff (easily carried away) in regard of his natural constitution: Wicked men are so, much more, before the indignation of God, in regard both of their natural and actual corruption. Some by the wind in the Text, understand evil spirits, who are called also the fury of the Lord, and by whose ministry God sometimes executes his vengeance upon the wicked (Psal. 35. 5.) Let them be as chaff before the wind, and the Angel of the Lord scattering them. Angels are mighty in power: And not only good, but evil Angels receiving permission or commission from God, can scatter the wicked as stubble before the wind.

in

Or as the chaff that the storm carrieth away.

Here he sets the storm against the chaff, as before the wind against the stubble. The word signifies an extraordinary storm, a violent storm, a kind of hurricane, which is able to throw down trees and houses, yea, even to shake rocks and mountains; what work then will it make with chaff? Thus the Prophet speaks (Isa. 17. 13.) The Nations shall rush, like the rushing of many waters; but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing before the whirlwind. We put in the margin, As the thistle-down, or, the down of the thistle; when the thistle sheds its down, we see how it rolls before the wind. Now, saith he, as the chaff before the wind, or as a rolling thing before the whirlwind, so shall the Nations be. The day of vengeance that comes upon hardened and impenitent sinners shall make them like chaffe (Zeph. 2. 1, 2.) Gather your selves together, yea, gather together O Nation not desired, before the decree bring forth, before the day pass as the chaff. Gather your selves together. Some read, Fan your selves, in allusion to the chaff, fan or winnow your selves, get out all the chaff from your selves, by a work of serious repentance, then we winnow or fan our selves. Why doth the Prophet stir them up to this duty? Else (saith he) the decree will bring forth; that is, God having decreed judgment, the decree will bring forth judgment. The decree is big, it hath judgment in it, and it will bring forth shortly: There will come a storm, a tempest, a whirlwind, when the decree brings forth. I would have you get the chaff out of you, before the day pass as the chaff; that is, before that day come that shall make the chaff pass away. When he saith, Before the day pass, he doth not mean, as if the time should pass as the chaff; but the meaning is, before the time come that wicked men shall pass as the chaff before the wind. Therefore I advise you to fan, and winnow your selves, get out the chaff; for if you be chaff, the day will come, and make you pass as the chaff, and carry you away.

Further, As chaff which the wind carries away. The word signifies, to steal away as a thief, suddenly and secretly. The coming of Christ to Judgment is compared to the coming of a thief (1 Thes. 5. 2.) Wind and storms scatter the chaff no man knows where; nor doth any man know how to gather it up. Wicked men are compared to stubble, and chaff, in three things.

First, They are (if duly considered) but chaff in their understandings, they have no solidity there: for they follow things that are but vain, and cannot profit. Now that man, how high soever, is but chaff in his understanding, who pursues vain instead of solid things. Though such a man be reputed deep in policy, and well ballanced in judgment, yet indeed he is but light in the ballance, and is justly counted a chaffie man.

Secondly, They are as chaff; that is, little worth. The wicked man is of little value or worth in the eyes of God and good men. Every Believer is precious in the eyes of God. (Isa. 43. 4.) Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable. The godly are as wheat; the wicked are as chaff. (Jer. 32. 28.) What is the chaff to the wheat? If we set a bushel of chaff by a bushel of wheat, what is the chaff to the wheat? Of no value or price in comparison. Wicked men are of no more value in comparison of them that have true Grace, then the chaff is to the wheat, or the straw to the corn. Solomon saith (Prov. 10. 20.) The tongue of the just is as choice silver; but the heart of the wicked is little worth. Solomon makes not the comparison upon even terms, between the tongue of the just and the tongue of the wicked; but he preferrs the tongue of the just (an inferiour member) before the heart of the wicked; which (though in a moral consideration it be his worst part, yet) in a natural consideration is his best and noblest part. Now if the tongue of the just (that is, his ability and manner of speaking) be as choice silver, then surely his heart (that is, his ability and manner of thinking and reasoning) must needs be as the finest gold. And if the heart of the wicked be little worth, his tongue cannot be worth any thing at all. Who would give any thing for thoughts of dross, and words of chaff? Yet these are all that the heart and tongue of a wicked man can produce.

Thirdly, They are stubble and chaff, because though alone they are worthless, yet they have a kind of usefulness even to godly men in outward society. The straw or stubble hath usefulness to the ear, it bears up the ear; and the chaff hath usefulness to the wheat, it covers the wheat, it keeps and preserves the wheat. The Lord in this sence often makes wicked men stubble and chaff to his people; that is, they are useful to them. I need not strain the similitude, but take it up only in general. The providence of God hath so ordered it to view, that many wicked men are a protection to the peace, and very subservient to the comfort and present welfare of his people in this World; though they be chaff, yet they cover the wheat; though they be straw or stubble, yet they shall bear up the ear, and minister some way or other to their help. Though wicked men are in themselves as that chaff threshed out of the ear, which the storm carrieth away, yet they often are to the people of God, as the chaff in the ear, which binds and holds in the corn, so that the storm cannot carry it away.

From the proper scope of the similitude as here applyed,

First, Observe, It is an easie thing with God at any time to destroy wicked men.

Secondly, That, All the preparations and powers of wicked men to resist the wrath of God, or to save themselves from it, is to no purpose.

All their power is no more then the chaff to the storm, and the stubble to the wind. Though the wicked flatter themselves in their power and greatness, as if they were out of danger, yet they are but stubble and chaff, God can quickly blow them away. How many experiences have we seen of wicked men, who thought their mountain so strong that it should never be removed, which yet hath appeared but as chaff before the wind, and the storm hath carried them away. And if God joyn with the weakest, they are too strong for the mightiest (Isa. 41. 15.) Behold, I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth. Who was this? The former Verse answers, it was the worm Jacob: God did not make an instrument for the worm Jacob; but he made the worm Jacob his instrument; Behold I will make thee (not for thee) a new sharp threshing instrument. All men are worms compared with God; and no man is so fit an instrument, for God to do great things by, as he who looks upon himself (so Jesus Christ did, by whom God did the greatest work that ever was done) as a worm and no man. But what shall this worm Jacob do? The words following answer, He shall thresh the mountains, and break them small, and shall make the hills as chaff. The mountains and hills to be threshed and fann'd, are the mighty ones of the earth, even all earthly might rising up against the wayes and designs of the God of Heaven, these the worm Jacob shall thresh, and fan, and make as chaff, and the wind shall carry them away, and the whirlwind shall scatter them. Therefore let not the mighty man glory in his might. The Lords anger is as a storm, or a wind; and the meanest worm that he useth, as a new sharp threshing instrument, to break them into chaff. And this he doth, in his anger, not only to single persons in power, but to the most powerful States and Nations of the World, as is represented in that most illustrious Prophetical vision of the four Monarchies ruin'd by a fifth (Dan. 2. 35.) Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the Summer threshing-floor, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them, and the stone that smote the Image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. We see how it is not only with wicked persons, but wicked powers (this great Image, the iron, and clay, and and brass, and silver, and gold, typed all the Powers of the World opposing the Kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, openly, or secretly, directly, or indirectly) they are as stubble before the wind, and as chaff that the storm carrieth away.

VERS. 19, 20, 21.

God layeth up his iniquity for his children: he rewardeth him, and he shall know it.
His eyes shall see his destruction, and he shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.
For what pleasure hath he in his house after him, when the number of his months is cut off in the midst?

IN the former words Job spake in the plural number, They are as stubble, and as chaff before the wind. Here in the singular, God layeth up his iniquity for his Children. And yet he still speaks to the same point, and of the same persons. Such varyings of the number are not unusual in Scripture. Read Hosea 2. 17, 18, &c.

The words are a continuation of the former Argument, as was opened before.

Verse 19. God layeth up his iniquity for his Children.

The wicked mans iniquity is laid up by God as a treasure; for so the propriety of the word beareth. God layeth up his iniquity safe; for so we desire our treasure should be. When men lay up their treasures, they will have them (as we say) forth coming. The wicked scatter their iniquities, but God gathereth them together, and will have them forth coming in due time.

He layeth up his iniquity, or pain, or sorrow.

אוֹן Nunc dolorē nunc iniquitatem significat; quia siquis aliquid iniqui commisit dolor & perturbatio sequitur.

One word signifies iniquity, pain, and sorrow, because they who do iniquity, suffer pain and sorrow for it; iniquity is indeed such dross, that it is not worth the treasuring, Yet the Lord layeth it up: Or, He layeth up his iniquity; that is, the punishment of his iniquity. We lay up sin, and God layeth up judgment; he layeth up the rewards and recompences of iniquity.

Some render, He layeth up strength. And then it is expounded, not for the strength of the wicked man, but for the strength of God: As if he had said, Though God hath scattered the wicked man himself as with the wind, and as the chaff before the whirlwind; yet he layeth up his strength for his Children; that is, God hath yet greater judgments, sourer evils to bring upon his family, and posterity, then ever yet fell upon himself: He hath laid up strength for his Children. As if God did afflict him but with his weakness, with his little finger, and reserved his arm to strike his Children with; as if he would make his little finger heavier upon his Children, then his loins had been upon their Fathers; or as if having chastized the Fathers with Whips, he meant to chastize the Children with Scorpions. Either of these interpretations the single terms will bear; yet the difficulty remains in making out the scope and tendency of the whole Text. There is a fourfold explication given of it.

Deus reservabit filii ejus robur suum. Mon. q. d. adhuc majorem iræ suæ procellosæ vim ei reservabit in futurum, nempe cum filios suos penitus abolebit. Bold.

First thus, Some expound the whole by repeating the foregoing Interrogation negatively, as I shewed upon the former Verses; How oft (saith he) is the candle of the wicked put out? That is, Their candle is not often put out, or it is seldom put out. Thus here, How oft doth God lay up his iniquity for his Children? Not often: For as himself prospered in person, so many times his Family and Children prosper. 'Tis but rare that God layeth up iniquity for his Children. And so, according to this exposition he carrieth on the flourishing state of the wicked man, who as he lived himself in all prosperity, so do his Children after him. 'Tis an experienced truth, that God hath suffered both wicked men and their children to flourish, and grow great in the world; he doth not presently reckon with the children, as he did not with their fathers.

q. d. raro hoc fieri viden & frequentius tū ipsius impio, tum eorum liberos impunè abire & securè vivere calamitatum expertes. Merc.

Secondly, some of the Rabbins expound Job in these words, taking off the affliction from the children, and fastening it upon the father. As if he had said, What! Shall this wicked man live, and prosper all his dayes? Shall he who hath done so much evil feel none? Shall he carry it without any the least touch from the hand of God, and shall the load and burthen of the judgment light only upon his children? What? will God lay up all the punishment of his iniquity for his posterity? Is this justice? Doth this look like the doings of God, that the father thrive, and his children only be undone? Which sence they conceive continued in the latter part of the verse, which commendeth the justice of God, and exalteth his righteousness in this determination; God will repay him into his own bosom as he hath deserved. God will reward him, and he shall know it, his eyes shall see his destruction, and he shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty. God will not lay up iniquity for his Children, and let him escape. No, himself shall be punished, and smart for his folly; he shall taste how evil and how bitter a thing sin is. This also hath been verified by frequent examples. The judgment of many wicked men doth not sleep, nor their destruction slumber; God presently cuts off such parents in the light and heat of their iniquities.

An iste impius tota vita impunè feret & punitio in filios usque differetur? boccine patietur dominus. Rab. Sel.

Thirdly, (near this sence) The words are read, as an answer to an Objection. This having been affirmed by Job, that the Lord doth not often put out the lamp of the wicked, that he doth not make them as chaff and stubble, but that they prosper, and grow great in the world. Zophar (whose opinion is here opposed) is supposed to reply, What though God do not afflict the wicked man himself, and put out his lamp, yet he layeth up his iniquities for his children. Thus Mr. Beza seems to interpret this Text; But you will say to me, though the wicked man himself be not punished, yet God layeth up his iniquity for his children; the fathers sin, shall be the childrens portion. To which Objection Job is conceived making answer in the next words: No (if what you affirm were the law and constant rule of his proceeding) God would rather repay the wicked man himself, and make him know what it is to sin against him, his eyes should rather behold his destruction, and he himself deserves much more to drink of the wrath of the Almighty then his children. Besides, what cares he for his house, or what becomes of his family, when the number of his months is accomplished, and cut off in the midst? He being dead feels neither the smart nor the comfort of his children; whatever the Providence of God dispenceth or allotteth them, concerns him little, and will not then touch or trouble him at all. As if Job had said to Zophar, Though I deny not the thing, that God doth lay up the iniquity of the parents for the children, yet, according to your principle and position, it seems more consonant that the wicked man should be punished in his own person, then in his posterity.

Deus (inquietis) reponet filiis ejus violentiam ipsius. Redderet illi & (hoc) sciret, & viderent oculi ejus exitium suū, &c. Bez.

Fourthly, Most, both of the Latine and Greek Interpreters, agree in this exposition, that Job here describes the misery of a wicked man, and the judgment of God upon him, as in reference to his own personal sorrows, so in reference to those which afterwards befal his children and family; How oft is the candle of the wicked man put out? How oft doth God drive him as chaff before the wind? Yea, and not only so, but God layes up his iniquity for his children; that is (as elsewhere frequently in Scripture) the punishment of his iniquity. They shall smart as well as he himself did, and be wrapt up in those calamities which were bred in their fathers sins, and perfected in their own.

Cum describit extremū impii supplicium, affirmat etiā redundaturem ad filios.

Hence Observe, The sins of parents are justly punishable in their posterity.

As many parents, by wickedness, store up riches for their children; so, because of their wickedness, God stores up wrath for their children. Nor may it seem unreasonable, or unjust, that he doth so; for the son succeeds into all the rights of his deceased father, and this is one of them: He hath but his right in whatsoever he is punished. As God may justly punish the sin of a man in his cattel and estate, so also in his children; because they not only belong to him, but are a part of him. But it may be objected, How then doth the Prophet Ezekiel affirm from the Lords mouth, that The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father; and the soul that sinneth shall dye (Ezek. 18. 20.) And how shall we reconcile this of the Prophet with that which God himself spake in the Law, threatning the children of the wicked, and their childrens children, for their iniquity (Exod. 5. 20.) I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children, to the third and fourth fourth generation of them that hate me. One Scripture saith, The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father; and another saith, That the son shall bear the iniquity of the father; or, That God will visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation.

Naturalis consecutio est, ut hæres succedat in omne jus defuncti. Nihil incommodi est, si illorū cum sint habeant quæ illorum sunt. Coc.

I answer, for the clearing of those Scriptures, that when the Prophet saith, The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, it may be understood either of these two wayes. First thus, He shall not bear it, in reference to eternal punishment, God will not damn a son for the sin of his father; but he may bring many chastisements and sorrows upon a son, for the sins of the father. Secondly, We may understand the Prophet thus, The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father; that is, if the son depart from the iniquity of the father, if the son do not imitate the fathers iniquity, then the iniquity of the father shall not redound to the son; but if the son tread in his steps, and write by his copy, then the son shall not only bear his own iniquity, but the iniquity of his father shall redound to him, for he makes his fathers sin his own by imitation, as much as his own is his by commission. (Matth. 23. 32.) Christ saith to the Jews, Fill ye up the measure of your fathers. Their fathers had slain the Prophets. and though themselves adorned their Sepulchres, professing (ver. 30.) If we had lived in the dayes of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the Prophets; yet Christ tells them plainly (Luke 11. 48.) Ye bear witness that ye allow the deeds of your fathers, because he saw in them not only a spirit, but the practice of persecution against the living Saints, while they seemed thus compassionate toward the dead Saints ('tis common for the worst of men to pretend love and honour to good men when they are dead (the dead bite not) who cannot abide goodness, nor any good man while he liveth, but persecute him to the death; now, I say, Christ seeing this in the Pharisees) gave them up to the fulfilling of their lusts. And because they were resolved to do that which the righteousness of God had forbidden, he in wrath bids them do it, Fill up the measure of your fathers. As if he had said, Your fathers stored up much wrath by killing the Prophets, but the measure is not yet full; do ye fill it, for I perceive ye will, by killing him who is greater then the Prophets. They slew the servants, ye will slay the Heir. Children fill the measure of their fathers in sin; and then God fills the measure of the children in punishment. So Christ infers in that place of Luke (Ch. 11. 50.) That the blood of all the Prophets which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation, from the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which perished between the Altar and the Temple. Verily, I say unto you, it shall be required of this generation. The blood of former generations had not been required of that, if they had not been as bloody as the former generations: But where old sins are continued and approved by being newly acted, there the old sins as well as the new are justly punished.

Thus we may answer that Scripture, The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, unless he do it. 'Tis childrens imitation of their fathers iniquity, which brings the iniquity of their fathers upon them. We may say of some children, that they are of their fathers, not only naturally, but morally; they carry the moral likeness of their fathers more then the natural, and appear not only in their bodily image, but in their soul-image too, together with the image of their actions or course of life. Childrens imitation of their parents in life, is the image of their parents actions, as the corruption of their nature is the image of their natural condition. So that while they imitate their parents sin, they are their children formally as well as lineally. And thus one of the Ancients speaks excellently of that fatherhood, or paternity, which the Devil hath in relation to wicked men (John 8. 44.) Ye are of your father the Devil: The Devil bears the relation of a father to all wicked men, and this fatherhood doth not proceed from the act of the father, but of the children; for the Devil doth not make wicked men his children by begetting them; but wicked men make the Devil their father by imitating him; here is the way of that paternity. Now as all wicked men have the Devil for their father, not as being begotten of him, but as imitating him; so some children may call men their father, not only because they have begotten them, but also because they imitate him; and when they do so, they must look to suffer for the sins of their fathers as well as they take delight and pleasure in their sins. For as we may grant that some children suffer in outward things for their parents sins, who do not imitate them, so we must conclude, that they who do imitate their sins, shall surely suffer.

Hæc est quædam paternitatis ratio, quam non tam pater ipse constituit quam filii; Nos enim illum imitando patrem facimus, non ille nos creando filios. Auguſt. in Pſal. 64.

And therefore parents are hence admonished to take heed of sinning against God, lest they be found unmerciful, unnatural, and hard-hearted to their children. Wicked parents do what they can to make their children miserable, even while they are projecting to make them great and happy. They intend to raise them, yet the way they take to do it, proves their ruine and undoing. Tertullian (a learned Writer treating of this point, supposeth that God aimed at this in giving the Law, when he threatened to punish the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation: This (saith he) God spake in reference to the hardness of their hearts, that if no other argument would move them to keep close to the rule of the Law, to take heed of idolatry, and false worship; yet meer compassion to their own children might do it. All parents have a natural love to their children. So that they who have not a spiritual principle moving them to forbear those sins, because they love God, and delight in his Law, may yet be moved by a principle of natural love, to avoid those sins for which (by name) God tells them, he will surely afflict and punish their children. He layeth up his iniquity for his children.

Eſt patrum delicta ex filiis exigebat, durilia populi, talia remedia cõpulerat, ut vel poſteritatibus ſuis proſpicientes legi divinæ obedirent. Tertul. adverſus Mar. c. 14.

Lastly, Job is here describing the punishment of a wicked man; in confirmation whereof he subjoyns, that God layeth up his iniquity for his children.

Hence Note, That, The evils which fall upon children, are the punishments of their parents.

Yea, in this their parents punishment is compleated; for as the sin which began in the parents, is perfected by their children; so the punishment which began in the parents, is perfected in their children. There is not only a nearness and strictness of relation, between parents and children, but a kind of sameness: The child is not like an artificial piece of work made by the parent, but he is made out of his parent, and so is a part of him, or himself multiplyed into another individual: And this must needs make a community between them in their good and evil, in their joyes and sorrows, in their sufferings and enjoyments. This hath been further spoken to, Chap. 20. ver. 10. and therefore I desist.

Quod genitum eſt, non item ut opus artis, ſtatim atque effectum eſt à gignente diſcedit. Nam ex illo, non ab illo factum eſt. Quare habet & retinet aliquam illius in ſeſe partem quæ convenienter & honore & pœnâ afficitur. Plutarch.

He rewardeth him, and he shall know it.

The word signifies the paying of a debt, and properly to be at peace: The reason is, because when debts are paid, a man is at quiet, no more can be demanded. And there is a twofold paying; either in kind, or in that which is equivalent; that is, of the same worth, though of another matter; which difference is more plainly expressed by two different words in the Hebrew. The word here used doth not strictly imply a paying back in (specie, or) in the same thing; as put case a man borrow money, to pay money; but any return to the same worth and value. He rewardeth or payeth him. Now in what coyn or matter doth the Lord repay him? Or with what is he rewarded? The Text is silent about that; but we may easily conceive what it is. There are two sorts of rewards: First, Rewards of punishment: Secondly, Rewards of favour. The rewards of punishment are deserved; the rewards of favour are promised. When 'tis said, He shall reward him, we are not to understand it of the reward of favour, but of punishment; such a reward as a wicked man deserves, he shall have. And whereas the particular matter of the reward is not exprest, this imports the greatness of it; when the Lord doth not tell us what the punishment is, he intimates it such a punishment as can scarcely be told what it is. He rewardeth him. This concealment speaks much in the aggravation of it. Conceive the worst you can, that shall be the wicked mans reward.

שלם eſt reddere pretium aut æquivalens rei debitæ ad differentiam verbi השיב quod rem in natura (quod aiunt) reddere ſignificat.

Hence Observe, All the evils that fall upon a wicked man are deserved.

They are rewards; the rewards of punishments are deserved. The rewards of punishment may be considered, either either in reference to this life, or the life to come. The rewards of punishment in this life are all deserved; yet they are less then sin deserves. Take the greatest punishment that befals any wicked man on this side Hell, it is less then his sin deserves. Ezra concludes thus of all the calamities with which the Jewish Nation was rewarded (Chap. 9.13.) After all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great trespasses, seeing that thou our God hast punished us less then our iniquities deserve, &c. And yet theirs was no little punishment: For the Prophet Jeremy (Lam. 1.12.) personating Jerusalem, calleth all to behold and see, If there were any sorrow like unto her sorrow, which was done unto her, wherewith the Lord afflicted her in the day of his fierce anger. As if he had said, You cannot make a parallel of the sorrows and sufferings of this people, with the sufferings of any people that ever were in the world: So then, theirs was no small punishment; and yet he saith, Thou hast punished us less then our iniquities deserve. Let punishment go as high as it can in this life, it is less and lower then iniquity.

But in the life to come God hath a reward for iniquity sutable to it: Sinners shall then receive as much as they deserve; and because they cannot bear so much as they deserve at once, therefore they shall be for ever bearing it. Their reward shall be no more, nor at all less then sin deserves. God will not put so much as the least dram of sorrow into their ballance more then iniquity hath put into it, and of that he will abate them nothing. He rewardeth him.

Experientia Magistra docet malos divinitus puniri. Drus.

And he shall know it.] There is a twofold knowledge: First, By teaching and instruction: Secondly, By sence or experience. The latter is here meant, he shall have an experimental knowledge. But what shall he know? He shall know or be convinced of these two things, which he would not learn before. First, That there is a wise and a powerful providence of God, over-ruling, ordering, and disposing all the affairs and motions of this life. Secondly, That God hath decreed and appointed wrath, for the portion of all impenitent sinners; He shall know these things to his cost.

Hence Note, First, Wicked men will not know the evil of sin, till they feel it.

The wicked might know this by instruction, they have been told as much again and again, but they would not believe it. Paul saith (2 Cor. 5.11.) Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we perswade men. How did he know it? Paul knew that terror of the Lord, not by experience (for he spake of the terror of the great day, which day was not then come) but he had received instruction about it, and he believed it would be a black day to many. A godly man knows the terror of the Lord by the teachings of the Spirit in the Word. But a carnal man will not know the terror of the Lords Judgment, till he be summoned to Judgment. When the Prophets in the Name of the Lord threatened the Jews with a day of evil, 'tis usually added, then They shall know that I am the Lord. As if the Lord had said, They have been told this often and often; they have had line upon line, and threat upon threat, yet they would not know it, but they shall know it, I will teach it them another way: Seeing they will not believe the judgment which is both spoken and written in my Book, I will write my judgments upon their own backs, and with their own blood; I will write them in red letters, that he who runs may read: And then they shall know that I am the Lord. So (Psal. 83.18.) David calls down the wrath of God upon publick enemies; Let them be confounded, and troubled for ever, yea, put to shame, and perish (Why?) That men may know that thou whose name alone is Jehovah, art most high over all the earth. Carnal men will not know the Soveraignty of God, or they are ashamed to acknowledge it, till they see such as themselves utterly confounded and put to shame. They never exalt God, till they see men cast down. There is a translation of that Text (Isa. 28.19.) which adds much clearness to the Observation in hand; From the time that it goeth forth it shall take you: for morning by morning shall it pass over; by day, and by night, it shall be a vexation only to understand the report. Some evils are so great, that the hearing of them is vexation enough, it is a vexation only to understand the report. The blow, the wound, which they give the ear, goes to the heart, and is a pain to the spirit. Others render the Prophet thus, It shall go forth, it shall take you morning by morning, it shall pass over by day, and by night. That is, continually, it shall make haste; judgment being sent on this journey shall never bait or rest by the way, it shall travel night and day. But why is all this? The next words answer; And only vexation will cause you to understand, or, give you an understanding of these things, or doctrines (so we put in the margin, When he shall make you understand doctrine.) What shall make them understand doctrine? Only vexation; God will command an overflowing scourge to come, it shall come by night, and by day; for he sees that vexation will make you understand doctrine, and that you will know the Lord in his Judgments, who would not know him in his Commandments. This is a good sence of the Place, and comes clearly to the truth in hand. Vexation gives understanding of doctrine. Many must be taught as Gideon taught the men of Succoth, With bryars and thorns, (Judg. 8.16.) A word and a blow, teaching and striking must go together; and they who will not learn by words, shall be taught by blows. Let sinners consider which is the easiest way of attaining knowledge; or in which of these two wayes they may attain knowledge with greatest ease. The Lord would teach us by his Word, let us take heed we put him not to blows; he would do it by instruction, let us take heed we put him not to do it by correction, yea, by destruction. God will be known by all the World, the Heathens shall know at last that he is the most High over all the earth. He rewardeth them, and they shall know it.

Tantùmodo sola vexatio dabit intellectum auditui. Vulg.

Verse 20. His eyes shall see his destruction, and he shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

His eyes shall see his destruction.] Were it not enough to say he shall see his destruction, but His eyes shall see it? Or how can he see without his eyes? To say a man sees, implyeth that he sees with his eyes. This Hebraism is usual in Scripture language to make the sence more full; as to say, He hears with his ears, so, He sees with his eyes, is, he fully and plainly hears and sees. What shall he see? He shall see his destruction; His death, say some; His ruine, say others; we may say, His damage, his breaking. Destruction is, and hath all these evils in it. His eyes shall see his destruction.

Note this from it, That, The sight of evil is a grief to us, as well as the feeling of it is a pain.

Duplex tormentum est videre pœnas quas sustineas.

Job had spoken much before of the misery of the wicked man; now he adds, His eyes shall see his destruction. The sight of destruction doubles the torment of it. Sorrow comes in at every sense as well as joy; joy comes in at the ear, so doth sorrow; joy comes in at the eye, so doth sorrow. As the good which is unseen affects little, so the evil which is unseen afflicts little in comparison of that we see. And hence usually in great sufferings, especially the suffering of death, men cover their eyes, as being better able to endure death, then to behold the preparations to, or manner of it. The Apostle useth an expression, which (in the letter of it) carries this point clearly (Heb. 11.5.) By faith Henoch was translated that he should not see death: As if the greatness of the favour, lay not so much in his not dying, as in his not seeing of death, or as if that which troubles more then death is the sight of death. For though I conceive the seeing of death (in that place) is not strictly tyed up to that sence, but one sence is put for another, and so we may expound Enoch's not seeing of death, by not feeling it, or by not coming to any nearness, or at all under the power and into the possession of it; yet 'tis a truth, the terror of death is extreamly aggravated, when to our feeling of it, our sight of it is superadded: Whether it be our own destruction, or the destruction of those we love, our sorrow is much abated when our eye seeth it not. That's compleat destruction, which is not only felt but seen. Salvation and Glory believed, take much upon the heart; But what will the sight of these things be? Old Simeon desired no more, when he had attained but the sight of Christ, whom he had long believed and embraced by faith (Luke 2.29, 30.) Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy thy Salvation. And while the Apostle Peter affirms that the Saints then living did love and rejoyce in Christ unseen (1 Pet. 1.8. Whom having not seen ye love, in whom, though now ye see him not, ye rejoyce) he therein intimates that Saints shall love and rejoyce in him much more when once they see him. To see good hath so much of joy in it, that the joyes of Heaven are called, sight or vision. Now as the sight of good is to joy, so the sight of evil is to sorrow, the advance and heightning of it. His eye shall see his destruction, חמת Excandescentia à יחם incaluit, quando, scilicet, sanguis incalescit circa cor.

And he shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

To drink, notes the taking in of a quantity. He shall drink, is, he shall be filled with the wrath of the Almighty. The word signifieth heat of wrath, or such wrath as hath much heat in it. We commonly say when we see any one very angry, The man is in a heat. Wrath heats the heart; as the holy Ghost speaks of the Avenger (Deut. 19. 6.) Lest he pursue the slayer while his heart is hot; that is, in the height of his anger. God will pursue the wicked man while his heart is hot. He shall drink not only the wrath, but the heated scalding hot wrath.

Of the Almighty.] Shaddai, who is able to make good his word in the saddest effects of it. In the former Verse the sense of seeing was afflicted, His eyes shall see his destruction: Here the sense of tasting; drink affects the taste. And he that drinks wrath, hath not only store of it, but all that he hath, he hath it in him. Wrath is to some as the clothes upon their back, 'tis to others as meat or drink in their bowels. Again, this drinking wrath may be considered two wayes. Fitst, That pure wrath, or wrath alone, shall be put into the cup of a wicked man: Or secondly, That whatsoever he drinks, or how pleasant soever his cup is, yet wrath shall be mingled with it. He shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

Hence Observe, First, God hath abundance of wrath ready for wicked men.

He will make them drink it; he hath not only drops, but whole cups, flagons full, and whole vessels full of wrath, yea, he hath not only flaggons and vessels, but rivers full, even a sea full of wrath. As there is a sea of mercy, so there is a sea of wrath in God. The one as well as the other hath neither bank nor bottom. The wrath of God as well as the love of God is infinite. Wicked men shall drink, and have enough of it. What can be said more sadly of the state of a wicked man then this, that he shall drink wrath. As drinking the love and favour of God in Scripture, shews the happiness of the Saints in their fullest and freest enjoyments of him; so the drinking of wrath, shews the misery of the wicked under the highest and fullest tokens of his displeasure. He brought me (saith the Church) into the wine cellar, or, house of wine: stay me with flagons (Cant. 2. 4, 5.) with what flagons? What, with empty flagons? No, empty flagons will not stay the Church, though they be flagons of gold: They must be full flagons; but of what? Of the love, mercy, and kindness of Jesus Christ. These are the wine of his cellar. Stay me with flagons of love, saith the Church; you cannot stay and bear me up, unless you give me these flagons. Now as the Lord hath these cellars and flagons of wine, that is, of joy and favour for his people, so he hath flagons and cellars of wrath for sinners. This drinking of wrath is expressed in Scripture not only in reference to past and present, but future evils (Isa. 51. 17.) The past afflictions of Jerusalem are elegantly shadowed under this notion, Awake, awake, and stand up, O Jerusalem, which hath drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury; thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of fury, and wrung them out. There is none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth, neither is there any that taketh her by the hand. He speaks to Jerusalem as made drunk with the cup of trembling: A little draught, or the drinking of a little, doth not cause drunkenness; Jerusalem drunk wrath to drunkenness, she drank deep. Now when a man is drunk (though it be a shame to own such, yet) some friend or other will lead and guide him home, when he cannot guide himself. But Jerusalem was drunk with the cup of the Lords wrath, and there was not a man to guide her among all the sons whom she had brought forth, neither was there any to take her by the hand. Jerusalem could not stand alone, she was so drunk with the wrath of God, and there was none to take her by the hand to lead her; that is, she had neither King, Priest, nor Prophet, to comfort and support her in her affliction, or to counsel and direct her what course to take that she might be delivered out of it. And thus the Prophet Jeremy sets forth the future calamities of the Nations round about. (Jer. 25. 15.) Take the wine cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the Nations to whom I send thee to drink it; and they shall drink and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them. What was the wine cup, or the wine in the cup? It was a cup of blood; I will send a sword, and they shall drink. The wine which the sword makes is not the blood of grapes, but the blood of our veins. And though the sword draw not a drop of blood from us, yet it fills many cups of sorrow for us to drink. All who partake with Babylon in her sin, and receive her mark, Shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, that is poured out without mixture in the cup of his indignation (Rev. 14. 10.) And as the punishing of those who secretly or openly yield obedience to Babylon, is expressed by drinking the wine of Gods indignation, so their communion with Babylon is expressed by drinking the wine of her fornication. For as old literal Babylon (Jer. 5. 7.) was a golden cup in the Lords hand, which made all the earth drunken. The Nations have drunkem of her wine (saith the Prophet) therefore the Nations are mad. How did Babylon make the Nations drunken? Because the Babylonish Empire was an Instrument which God used to execute his judgments upon others, and to cause them to drink deep of the wine of his wrath. So mystical Babylon hath a golden cup in her hand, and she makes the Nations drunk with the wine of her spiritual fornication; that is, of her Idolatry, error, and superstition. Now the Nations having made themselves drunk with this sinful wine of Babylon, shall be made drunk with the wrathful wine of God. The sufferings of Jesus Christ, who tasted and took down all those evils which the sin of man deserved, are expresst by a cup (Matth. 26. 49.) Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass. He saw what was in the cup, and prayed thrice to be excused the drinking of it, or that it might pass away, yet with submission to his Fathers will: Not my will, but thy will be done. Christ took up and drunk the suffering cup, that we might take up and drink the cup of Salvation. Our sins and sorrows were the portion of Christs cup, that the favour and love of God might be the portion of our cup. The Lord (that is, the favour of the Lord, saith holy David, Psal. 16. 5.) is the portion of mine inheritance, and of my cup. My drink is the Lords love, his favour is mingled with my drink: Divine goodness sweeteneth and spiceth my cup; The Lord is the portion of my cup. And hence the same David crieth out (Psal. 36. 7, 8.) How excellent is thy loving kindness, O God, therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings. They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; thou shalt make them to drink of the rivers of thy pleasure. Saints drink at rivers, and not only at pleasant rivers, but at rivers of pleasure; they shall have that which is sweet, and enough of it. Thus as the Lord gives his own people cups and rivers, abundance of pleasures; so his enemies shall drink cups and rivers (that is abundance) of wrath.

Secondly, Observe, There is no avoiding of the wrath of God.

He shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty. How few, indeed none, would drink of this cup if they might be spared. Who thirsts for a cup of wrath? Who would so much as taste or touch it with his lips? But the wicked shall; though they have no mind to it, they must; though it be nauseous, and their stomack turn at the sight of it, yet they must drink it: They cannot be excused or dispenced with; this cup must go round them all. As drunkards say to their companions, you shall drink, you must pledge us, we will pour it down your throat else: So the Lord saith to his enemies, you shall drink, I will pour it down your throat else. If Jesus Christ, when he stood in the place of sinners, could not be spared, shall any, who stand in their own place as sinners, presume to be spared? What can they plead before God to excuse themselves, when Christ himself was not excused when he prayed so earnestly that he might. Every soul that hath not part in Christ, who drank the cup of his Fathers wrath, shall himself and for himself drink a cup of wrath.

can

Note again, All the evils that befal wicked men, proceed from, or are issues of the wrath of God.

This was noted before upon those words of the seventeenth Verse, He distributeth sorrows in his anger; therefore I only name it here.

Verse 21. For what pleasure hath he in his house after him, when the number of his months are cut off in the midst?

There is some difficulty in fitting these words to the former. There are three interpretations given.

First, The words are interpreted as a reason why God sends out judgment both against a wicked man and his family, why he and his shall drink the wrath of the Almighty; Why is all this? 'Tis because God hath no pleasure in his house after him: He, that is, God, cares not what becomes of this man, or of his children: What pleasure, what delight hath God in him or his? They are (as it were) out of the care of God, being out of his Covenant, and therefore let what will come of them, let him and his sink or swim, let all go at six and sevens, God regards it not. This carries a truth in it: As all they who are in a state of mercy and salvation take pleasure in God; so they and theirs shall surely perish, in whom God taketh no pleasure: Yet I conceive this exposition improper to this place; which rather describes the state and spirit of a wicked man when he dyeth towards his house, then the heart of God towards him and his house while they live.

Secondly, The words are expounded as holding out an Argument, that a wicked man (so living and dying) shall be punished everlastingly. What do you tell him that God will lay up iniquity for his children? If himself may escape the storm, and live all his dayes in pleasure, what cares he: For what pleasure or pain hath he in his house after him? (There is the same reason of both) If his house prosper, what pleasure hath he in it? Or if his house perish, what is that to him when he is not? Therefore unless there remain an estate of misery for himself in person after this life, the miseries threatened his posterity when he dyes, will work little on him.

Thirdly, And rather these words give an account why God not only layeth up iniquity for the children of the wicked man, but doth also personally afflict him in this life, causing his own eyes to see his destruction, and himself to drink the wrath of him the Almighty. And this account, or the reason of this may be twofold. First, Because (as was last said) his childrens afflictions cannot reach him when he is gone: For what pleasure hath he in his house after him? That is, no pleasure. And as his joy, so his sorrow; as his comforts, so his troubles end in reference to all worldly things, whether they concern his family or himself, at the grave. A dead man is not in a capacity to be affected or afflicted with what is done or suffered in the world, as was shewed, Chap. 14. 21. Secondly, Because wicked men do not usually trouble themselves about the next Age; if they can but rub out their own time, let them that come after shift for themselves. They do not study how to procure the good of posterity, nor do they lay to heart the evils which threaten them; as no evil threatened their own persons, so much less that which is threatened upon their children doth press their spirits. Many professed wicked men, yea, some who go under the name of Christians, and make some outward profession of the Gospel, are yet of the same temper with that Heathen Emperor, who having made havock of all, and stirred such trouble in his dayes, that it might be thought the World would end with him, yet pleased himself with this apprehension, that he then should be out of the danger, If I dye, let Heaven and Earth mingle: If the World hold my time, let it break when I am gone. Such baseness and narrowness is in the hearts of some men, that they care not what the next Age inherits. If God do not trouble them while they live, they will not trouble themselves with what shall befal their families when they are dead.

ἵνα θανόντος γαῖα συγχυθῇ πυρί. Suet. de Tiber.

Thus a learned Translator renders, What is his study or care about his house after him.

Quodnam est studium illius de familia sua post se. i. e. ut Deus ipsum viventem non excitat malis, sic non excitat ipsum animus ejus ut sit solicitus de rebus familiæ suæ eventuris post mortem. Jun.

When the number of his months shall be cut off in the midst.

That is, when he shall dye: The words are a periphasis of death; which we may significantly enough call, The cutting off the number of our months. And as in general 'tis a description of death, so we may take it more specially as a description of early death. An immature death is most properly, The cutting off the number of our months in the midst. Thus the Psalmist prayed, Take me not away in the midst of my dayes (Psal. 102. 24.) And another Psalm saith, The wicked shall not live out half their dayes; that is, the number of their months shall be cut off in the midst. Yet here I rather conceive it intended as a description of death in general, What pleasure hath he in his house, when the number of his months are cut off in the midst? That is, when he dyes.

Mortis periphrasis, dimidiari vitam annos dies, idem est quod rescindi, secari, dividi.

Hence Note, When a wicked man dyes he thinks all dyes with him, he hath no care beyond himself.

Nor is it any wonder that such take little care of others for hereafter, seeing indeed they take no care what shall be for themselves hereafter; if they may but have things present to serve their lusts, and satifie their desires in this World, they will (as the saying of some of them is, though they do nothing less) trust God for the next. In respect of temporals Christ gives this counsel (Matth. 6. 34.) Take no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of it self: That is, to morrow, or the time to come will bring thoughts enough upon you when it comes; ye need not foresta it, or take up the thoughts and cares of it beforehand. Or, to morrow will bring meat in its mouth; as it calls to new expence, so it will offer new provision, do not trouble your selves what shall be next; sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof; and sufficient unto the day will be the good thereof, you shall have daily bread. This counsel of Christ is far from the wicked; they take overmuch and over many thoughts for to morrow in respect of temporals; but they take no thought for to morrow in respect of eternals; or if they do 'tis about eternals of their own imagination, not of Gods institution. Some wicked men are much upon that thought, or, Their inward thoughts are that their houses shall continue for ever, and they call their lands after their own name (Psal. 49. 11.) they hope for a succession in their name for ever, this is their project, and the highest pitch of their expectation. They would seem to have much pleasure in their house after them, and to desire nothing more then the advancement of their children; yet their courses proclaim to all good men, that as when they are dead they can take no pleasure, nor feel any pain in reference to their house, or those that are left behind them (which I take to be the most proper scope of this Text) so, that, while they live, they have no due regard to their children, nor any pleasure in their house to provide for the real prosperity of it, when the number of their own months shall be cut off in the midst. Wicked men are either altogether careless of the good of their house after them, or all the care they take is an evil to their house.

Further, From this circumlocution of death,

Observe, First, Man hath his months appointed or numbred out to him.

Though the most that any man can have are scarce a number, yet whatsoever any man hath, or shall have, are exactly numbred. Our times are in Gods hand, as in regard of the issues and events of them; so also in regard of the length or continuance of them; God teacheth man the spiritual number of his dayes, or the art of numbring his dayes spiritually; but he himself hath numbred them (and that number he reserves to himself) Arithmetically.

Secondly, Observe, Death is the cutting off of our months.

The months actually past, are cut off from the months which possibly were to come. Take the meaning of it yet more fully in the next point.

Thirdly,

Thirdly obſerve, God often ſhortens the lives of wicked men, and cuts the number of their moneths off in the midſt.

Though every man, even the vileſt and moſt wicked man that ever lived in the world lives out the full number of thoſe moneths which the counſel of God hath appointed him perſonally; yet many wicked (and ſome good) men are cut off in the midſt of thoſe moneths which God hath appointed to mankind generally. The dayes of the years generally appointed to mankind, are threeſcore years and ten (Pſal. 90. 10.) yet half mankind doth not live out half the number of theſe years; ſome have the number of theſe years or moneths cut off in mercy, very many have them cut off in wrath and judgment; God takes ſome away from the evil which is to come, and God takes others away becauſe of the evil which they have already done, or leſt they ſhould do more evil. Theſe obſervations have occurred in other parts of this book, eſpecially in Chap. 14. and therefore I only mention them here, referring back the Reader to a larger diſcuſſion of them in thoſe places.

VERS. 22.

Shall any teach God knowledge, ſeeing he judgeth thoſe that are high.

JOB having given his experiences of the dealing of God with wicked men; now gives his approbation of it. He chalengeth all the wiſdom of the world to direct a more convenient courſe, or method, then the divine wiſdom proceeds in for the diſpoſal both of things and perſons here below. Shall any teach God knowledge? The queſtion is a negation; yea the queſtion is full of indignation, when he ſaith, Shall any teach God knowledge? He means that none can; and when he ſaith, Shall any teach God knowledge? His meaning is, that 'tis higheſt preſumption for any to think he can.

Shall any teach God knowledge?

Hæc ſententia in medio poſita ſuam vim ad utramq; partem exerit tam adea quæ dicta ſunt, quam ad ea quæ ſequuntur de divina providentia. Bold.

The words are either the concluſion of what was before diſputed, or they are as a Preface to that which follows; ſome take them reſpecting as well the diſcourſe that comes next, as that which went before.

לאל Pro Deo. Quis veſtrũ hujus rei rationem pro Deo reddere poteſt. Rab. Sel.

Jewiſh Writers read the words thus, Shall any teach knowledge for God? As if Job's meaning were this; Doth God need any to apologize for him, or to take his part? Needs he an advocate to plead his cauſe, and to aſſiſt him in the juſtification of his own way, in giving out either good or evil? Shall any teach knowledge for God? And ſet out more plainly and clearly then he hath done; why ſome good men mourn all their dayes, and in the end of their dayes dye mourning? Why ſome wicked men flouriſh all their dayes, and in the end of their dayes dye flouriſhing? Can any unriddle theſe diſpenſations, and render a more ſatisfying anſwer about them?

But I rather conceive the words according to our reading, not as a forbidding of that office, that any ſhould undertake to plead for, or vindicate the juſtice and righteouſneſs of God in what he hath done; but as a reproof of mans preſumption in directing God what to do. Shall any teach God knowledge? As if Job had ſaid, doth God need any tutor, or maſter, to teach him his leſſon? Needeth he any to point him how to order the affairs of the world, what to do to the wicked, and what to the godly? Surely he needs none to teach, nor to inſtruct him. So the words are a reproof, a vehement reproof upon Job's friends, whom he perſtringeth as over-daring about, and intruding into, thoſe things which were above them.

Theſe words, Shall any teach God knowledge? imply five things, which I ſhall draw forth into ſo many Obſervations, and proſecute them in order as they riſe.

Firſt, Take the queſtion, Shall any man teach God knowledge? As a down-right negation, and then it gives us this inſtruction.

God cannot be taught.

Some men are ſo fooliſh that they cannot be taught, they are not capable; ſuch a one (we ſay) is not capable to be a Scholler, he is of ſuch weak parts, of ſo ſhallow an underſtanding, that he cannot be taught. But God is ſo wiſe that he cannot be taught, he is infinitely beyond the School (Iſa. 40. 13, 14.) Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his Counſellor hath taught him? The wiſeſt Kings and States of the earth have their Counſel Tables, and 'tis but needful they ſhould. In the multitude of Counſellors there is ſafety (ſaid the wiſeſt of Kings) many eyes ſee more then one. But God who is only wiſe and all eyes, ſeeth more then many or then all the ſons of men. Who hath been his Counſellor? (bring forth the man, bring forth the Angel with whom God took counſel) who inſtructed him, and taught him in the paths of Judgment, and taught him knowledge, and ſhewed him the way of underſtanding? This Prophet ſpeaks fully to the ſence of Job; and his Text may be a Comment upon this before us, and tell us what Job means when he ſaith, Shall any teach God knowledge? He needs none to make him underſtand, none to direct him the courſe of Judgment; how to mannage his affairs with diſcretion, or duly to put his purpoſes and reſolves in execution. The Apoſtle Paul takes up the ſame language (Rom. 11. 34.) Who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his Counſellor? O the depth of the riches both of his wiſdom and knowledge! How unſearchable are his judgments, and his wayes paſt finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? Hath no man known the mind of the Lord? Yes, there is a mind of the Lord which is known to man; there is a revealed mind of the Lord, a mind of the Lord which he hath made known: but beſides that revealed mind of the Lord, the Lord hath a ſecret mind (as we may call it) or a ſecret will; he hath a cabinet, and cloſe counſel lockt up in his own breaſt, which was never opened to the creature: Of that the Apoſtle ſaith, Who hath known the mind of the Lord? We know his mind, what he would have us do; what to believe, what the way to life and ſalvation is we know. He hath told us how we ſhould honour him, and work out our own ſalvation with fear and trembling. The Prophet reports ſome making that queſtion, Wherewithall ſhall I come before the Lord, and bow my ſelf before the moſt high God? (Mich. 6. 6.) They enquired, as if God had left them in the dark about the way of his worſhip, and ſervice. No, ſaith the Prophet (verſ. 8.) He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord requireth of thee. Thus far we know the mind of the Lord, what he would have us do; but we do not know the mind of the Lord, what he himſelf will do, that's a ſecret; Who hath known this mind of the Lord, or who hath been his Councellor? Thus again (1 Cor. 2. 16.) Who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may inſtruct him? But we have the mind of Chriſt. We know the mind of the Lord for our own inſtruction; but we know not the mind of the Lord for his inſtruction, or that we might inſtruct him. When man inſtructs man, he doth but make his own mind known to him; but when God inſtructs man, he not only makes his own mind known to him, but knoweth his; and ſo alſo muſt that man who takes upon him to inſtruct God.

Secondly, When it is ſaid, Shall any teach God knowledge? it plainly teacheth us. That God knoweth all things, or, that he is infinitely and perfectly wiſe and knowing. He for whom no teacher can be found, or he to whoſe treaſure of knowledge no knowledge, not the leaſt mite of knowledge can be added, muſt needs be infinitely wiſe and knowing: for that is infinite to which nothing can be added, and from which nothing can be taken away. Now thus wiſe is God, thus knowing is God, he cannot admit more wiſdom, therefore he is infinitely wiſe. God is the firſt rule, the ſupream rule of knowledge, and wiſdom; yea his knowledge and wiſdom is himſelf. The wiſdom of God is the wiſe God, and the knowledge of God is the knowing God: ſo that, as nothing can be added to God himſelf, ſo, nothing can be added to the wiſdom of God: for the wiſdom of God is God, therefore he is perfect in wiſdom and in knowledge. Job's argument that God needeth no teaching, is a clear demonſtration of it. For among men, they that are paſt teaching how wiſe are they? How wiſe are they in their own thoughts (though indeed it be ignorance and fooliſhneſs enough that they think ſo) who think they are paſt teaching, or too wiſe to be taught. There are ſome men that think they need no teaching, and there are none who need more then they; uſually they are under a dearth and ſcarcity of knowledge, who ſuppoſe they have ſuch abundance, that they are beyond the school, beyond the Church, beyond teaching, and counsel, beyond helps and ordinances; such as have these apprehensions of themselves, do least apprehend themselves. For as they who think they need not be better, draw a just suspition that they were never good: so they who think they know enough, may be concluded to know nothing yet as they ought to know. When any say they are so rich in knowledge that they need know no more, I may say they need at least this piece of knowledge, To know how poor they are in knowledge. But if any one had so much knowledge indeed that no man could teach him further, he were abundantly knowing. Now thus it is with God, shall any man teach God knowledge? they cannot; therefore his knowledge is infinite, and perfect. And so it is, First, About things; he knows all things, what they are, and for what they serve, what their nature is, and what their usefulness is. Secondly, About persons, He knoweth all men, and needeth not that any should testifie of man, for he knoweth what is in man (Joh. 2. 24, 25.) He knows every man fully, he knows him within and without. He knows all our outward actions, yea the very internal motions of the heart; he knoweth not only what men do, but all their aims and secret intendments in doing it.

Thirdly, This question, Shall any teach God knowledge? intimates, That,

Some men, do even attempt, and take upon them the boldness to teach God.

What need this chiding question else? Why should Job speak thus to his friends, unless he had discovered, or at least suspected, such a spirit in them; that they had spoken or done such things as did amount to, or might be interpreted a teaching of God.

You will say, surely, no man ever attempted to teach God, we indeed are taught of God; and that we shall be so is the promise of the covenant of grace, Heb. 8. But did ever any man go about to teach God? He hath his chair in Heaven (as the ancient speaks) that teacheth the heart of man; but where have they their chair, and where is their School, who undertake to teach the God of Heaven?

I answer, the teaching of God, may be considered two wayes.

First, Directly, and formally.

Secondly, Implicitly, or by way of interpretation.

'Tis I grant exceeding rare that any rise to such a height of boldness, as avowedly, directly, explicitly, and formally, to say we can, or we will teach God: but there are many who say as much implicitly, and by way of interpretation, that is, they speak, hold or do that which plainly implies a teaching of the Almighty, or a taking upon them to direct his counsels. For the justifying of this charge, we may cast such into two sorts.

First, In reference to his Word, some would teach the Lord how to speak.

Secondly, In reference to his Works, others would teach the Lord what to do.

For the former, there are those who would teach God how to speak, by adding to, and diminishing from the Word which he hath spoken. That there is such a proud principle in the heart of man, is plainly proved by those cautions given both in the Law and in the Gospel (Deut. 4. 2.) Ye shall not add to the Word which I command you, neither shall you diminish ought from it, that you may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you: and (Prov. 30. 6.) Add thou not unto his Word, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar. Though we may add a Comment to explain the Word of God where it is hard, yet we must not add a supplement to the Word of God, as if it were defective. One of the first things to be believed unto salvation is, that the Word of God is sufficient, or contains all things needful to salvation. The whole book of God concludes thus (Rev. 22. 18.) If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add to him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man shall take away from the Words of the book of this Prophesie, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy City, and from the things which are written in this book. What fearful additions and substractions will God make concerning those who add to or substract from his Word. The Lord foresaw a spirit in man to be medling with his Word, else he had never made this Law against medlers with it. Now as he that reads any mans Work and takes upon him to add a line, or to dash a line out of it, he undertakes to teach the Author knowledge; much more do they who add or diminish a line or word of the Word of God. Yet many such there are who practise upon the Word of God both by way of addition and substraction. Some have done this openly, and others closely. Every carnal man doth this closely; for he that would set up his lusts for a Law, would surely blot out the Law of God; he would make the commandments of God void, and rescind the statutes of Heaven, who hath no mind to obey and submit unto them.

The Papists especially (besides some others) do this openly. For they say, first, The Scriptures are obscure; therefore they would teach God to speak more clearly. Secondly, They say, the Scriptures are insufficient without their patchments of Tradition; therefore they would teach God to speak more fully. Others have complained that the language of the Scripture is homely and bare, these would teach God to speak more eloquently. Nay, some have said, there are contradictions in Scripture, these would teach God to speak more truly; others complain, there are dangerous expressions in Scripture; and these would teach God to speak more warily. All these take upon them to teach God knowledge, about his Word.

Secondly, There is also a generation who would teach God knowledge about his Works. They forbear not that first eternal work of God, Election. We have their arguings set down (Rom. 9. 11, 12, 14, 15.) For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth; It was said unto her, The elder shall serve the younger; as it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated. The heart of man riseth here; is this work of God right? If God proceed thus in his election of men, Is there not unrighteousness with God? The wisdom and reason of man saith, Surely God should rather elect upon foreseen works, or faith, or perseverance in both. But God saith otherwise, What then? Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid: for he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. What do you tell me (saith God) of your will, my will shall be the rule of election; Yea, it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy. Thus the Apostle asserts the absolute election of God. But still the heart of man is unsatisfied, as the Apostle sheweth in the next words; Thou wilt say then unto me, why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will? If it be thus, may we not lay all the sin of man at Gods door, and cast dirt at Heaven: why doth God complain, if all be from his own will? Thus man would teach God knowledge; Nay but O man, who art thou that repliest against God? shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, why hast thou made me thus? Shall the clay teach the potter how to make it, or in what form to cast it?

Secondly, Others have found fault with God, and would teach him knowledge about the work of Creation. The Naturalist complained, that man was sent forth naked and helpless into the world, that other creatures had the advantage of man, having natural armor and defences which man wants. Such would teach God how to create.

Thirdly, How often do men take the chair, and like great Doctors offer God knowledge about his works of Providence. How many are there who think themselves wiser then God, or that they could direct him a better way for the Government of the world, then he is in. If they had the power, things should be in a fairer state then they are. They insinuate against the Government of God much like Absalom against his father David's Government, O that I were judge in the Land, you should see what I would do, what a world would I make? I would set all right. Such vain thoughts lodge in the spirits of vain men about the providences of God.

And not only they who in this open manner contest with God about his providence; but such also may be charged as taking upon them to teach God knowledge, who do

do but murmur through discontent, and are unsatisfied with his doings. When a man is displeased with what another doth, he thinks he could do it better. All they who are displeased with or murmur at what God doth, say plainly in their hearts they could do things better then God, they could teach him knowledge.

Fourthly, From Job's question, as it carrieth not only a Negation of the thing, but indignation at it.

Observe, It is most sinful to go about to teach God.

The height of pride, presumption is in it (presumption is the pinacle of pride) therefore the height of sin is in it. As it is a great condescention in God to teach man knowledge, and to turn tutor to the poor creature; so it is highest presumption in man to teach God knowledge, and to turn tutor to his Creator. And as an attempt to teach God in or about any thing is sinful and presumptuous, so especially (which the subject here handled by Job leads us to) to teach him about his distributions of rewards and punishments: and that in any of these five particulars.

First, To teach God whom he shall reward or punish.

Secondly, To teach God when he shall reward or punish.

Thirdly, To teach God how or in what manner he shall reward or punish.

Fourthly, To teach God the measure, or how much he shall reward or punish.

Fifthly, To teach God the time, how long he shall reward or punish.

There is an intruding upon the prerogative of God in all these. And the sinfulness of this intrusion may appear upon a fourfold consideration.

First, Because it is an abasing of God, and a heightning of man. This sets ignorance above knowledge, and folly above wisdom: This sets the Dial above the Sun, yea darkness above the light. Man is not only in the dark, in the darkness of ignorance, but he is darkness. God hath not only light in him, but he is light, and in him is no darkness at all. Now what an affront, what an indignity is it for darkness to go about to teach light? For ignorance to teach knowledge? For a fool to teach the oracle of wisdom? The greatest oracle, the wisest among men is a fool to God, whose very foolishness (as the Apostle speaketh) is wiser then men. And are not men now, the wisest of men, trim teachers of God?

Secondly, What knowledge or light soever any man hath, he receives it from God, and shall man teach God with his own knowledge? Man hath no knowledge of his own to teach God? What hast thou that thou hast not received? What gift, or grace, what skill, what endowment hast thou that thou hast not received; and thou hast received it from God; and shall he who receives all his knowledge from God, teach God knowledge? He is the father of lights, from whom is every good and perfect gift; and shall we be giving light to him from whom we receive it? David saith, In thy light we see light (Psal. 36. 9.) And shall we think that God needs our light to see by? The common light of the world is the Sun; will any man offer light, or hold up a candle to the Sun? Water comes from the fountain, and from that great feeder of all fountains, the Sea; will any man carry water to the fountain, or make a Conduit to supply the Sea?

Thirdly, When man hath conceived as much light of knowledge from God as he is capable of, so that his vessel is brim full; when like Paul (who by his abundance, or great measures of revelation was in danger to be exalted above measure) he hath as much as he can bear; what is all that abundance but scarcity, what is all that fullness but emptiness, compared with that aboundance and fullness which is in God? There is no shadow of a comparison between that light of knowledge which shines out from God unto the most comprehensive man or Angel, to that which is in God, or rather to that which God is, and shall any teach him knowledge? The Apostle said of all our knowledge on this side glory (1 Cor. 13.) We know but in part; and shall we who know but in part, teach him that knows all? What we know of God and his wayes, is far less then that which we know not. The most of God and of his wayes is (Terra incognita) not yet discovered to us, and shall they teach God knowledge, who know so little of God? Again, that part which we see, or know, we know and see darkly, and through a glass; that is, we see it only reflexively, or by some other medium; and shall we teach him that sees all things immediately, directly and intuitively in their own nature? When Job had spoken much of God, he concludes (Chap. 26. 12.) Lo these are part of his wayes, but how little a portion is heard of him? But the thunder of his power who can understand? So that, when we have received the utmost knowledge of God, it is but in part, and but a little part; How little a portion is heard of him? So little that it is scarce discernable; so little that the Apostle saith, Knowledge (that is this kind and degree of knowledge) shall vanish away (1 Cor. 13.) The knowledge we have here shall be swallowed up in the knowledge that we shall have in Heaven, like a drop of water in the Ocean; yet that knowledge which glorified Saints shall have in Heaven, will be but as a drop to the vast Ocean of the knowledge of God. The knowledge we have here is little to that we shall have above; what a nothing then is it to the knowledge of God who is above?

Fourthly, 'Tis sinful to teach God knowledge about his wayes, because his wayes cannot be known. Shall they direct God which way to go, who cannot find out the wayes which he hath gone (Rom. 11. 33.) How unsearchable are his judgments, and his wayes past finding out? If the wayes of the Lord be past finding out, then we must not find fault with his wayes. If we cannot find out their perfection, we must not say there is imperfection in them. O the depth and riches of the wisdom and knowledge of God? The well is deep, and we have nothing to draw; we have not line enough to let down our bucket into the deeps of divine wisdom and knowledge. The Judgments of God are a great deep (Psal. 36. 6.) and the Judgment of man is but a shallow. We may quickly loose our selves while we labour to find these wayes and Judgments of God. 'Tis safest in every point of wisdom (but chiefly in such as these) To be wise, as the Scripture saith, unto sobriety (Rom. 12. 3.) and wisdom to sobriety is this (1 Cor. 4. 6.) to be wise according to that which is written. If wisdom to sobriety, be wisdom according to what is written, how sinful is it to teach God knowledge, which is not only besides, but against that which is written. That wisdom comes not from above which provokes us to teach rather then to obey him that is above. Beware of this dry drunkenness. 'Tis an excellent vertue to eat and drink to sobriety, yet that excels it, To be wise unto sobriety. Festus said to Paul, Thou art besides thy self, much learning hath made thee mad. They who are wise so much beyond sobriety, as any way to offer at the teaching of God, are indeed besides themselves, and much ignorance of their duty hath made them thus mad.

The fifth and last proposition which riseth from this question (Shall any teach God knowledge?) is this,

It is impossible that any better way should be directed then that which the Lord useth in governing the affairs of mankind, or in the disposing of all things here below.

For, First, All the works of God are done in truth (Psal. 111. 8.) As the Word of God is a word of truth, so all his works are works of truth: for his works are nothing else but the making good of his Word, or his works are the image of his Word. The truth of works is their answerableness to words. The works of God are answerable to a threefold word.

First, To his Word of Propheſie. Whatsoever changes God makes in the world, they hit some Word of Propheſie; all is done that what he hath spoken or written may be fulfilled.

Secondly, The works of God are answerable to his word of threatning. God threatens before he smites, and he never smote any man with rod or sword, with judgments or corrections, but according to his threatning.

Thirdly, The works of God are answerable to his Word of promise. All mercies are promised, and every work of mercy is the fulfilling of some promise. Now seeing all the works of God are reduceable either to propheſies, threatnings, or promises, they are done in truth, and what can be better done then that which is done in truth?

Secondly, All the works of God are done in Justice as well as in truth (Psal. 145.17.) The Lord is righteous in all his wayes, and holy in all his works. The rebellious Jews charged God with injustice, as if because the fathers had eaten sowre grapes, therefore the childrens teeth were set on edge. And hence they inferred that blasphemous conclusion (Ezek. 18.25.) The way of the Lord is not equal. But saith the Lord, Hear O house of Israel, Is not my way equal? Are not your wayes unequal? Though they complained, yet upon a due search they must needs acquit the Lord and condemn themselves. And though now many quarrel with the wayes of God as unequal, unjust, and unrighteous, yet the conscience of every man shall give testimony to God in the day of the revelation of his righteous Judgment, that all his wayes are righteous; and what can be better done then that which is done in righteousnes?

But it may be said, Is it just and righteous that unrighteous and unjust men should prosper and be exalted in the world, and that the righteous and godly should suffer and be afflicted?

Were it not better that the wicked should be alwayes suppressed, and the godly alwayes flourish?

I answer, The prosperity of the wicked, and the afflictions of the righteous, are no arguments of unrighteousnes in God, but only of his soveraignty and wisdom. For,

First, If God should arrest and punish all wicked men presently with visible judgments, mankind would be confounded, and the ligaments of humane society dissolved; for the greatest part of the world are wicked; therefore the wisdom of God doth so attemper and moderate his Justice, that he punisheth the parts in such a method as may consist with the preservation of the whole.

Secondly, If present vengeance were taken upon all wicked men, we should walk by sight rather then by faith, and be terrified rather then perswaded to obedience.

Thirdly, If the Lord should be quick in his judgments upon all wicked men, it would not appear how wicked some men are. These considerations with many more which have been already offered and enlarged upon, Chap. 20. vers. 29. of this book, besides what hath occurred in other places about the same argument, may satisfie any man who is but rational, that the Lord doth only act up to his soveraignty, and according to the dictates of his infinite wisdom, not at all contrary to the rules of Justice, while he lets wicked men thrive, grow great and high in the world.

Again, As to the manifold troubles and afflictions of many righteous, neither do these charge unrighteousnes upon God. For,

First, Themselves acknowledge that it is good for them that they are afflicted; why then should standers by say it is evil. They find the mercy of God in their affliction, why then should any think God is unjust in afflicting them?

Secondly, Their afflictions disingage them from the world, and cause them to live nearer to God, there is no hurt in this; trouble on earth occasions them to have their conversation more in heaven. What dammage is there in that?

Thirdly, The troubles which they meet with in this life, cause them to groan earnestly for the next life; present wants stir them up to look at future enjoyment; a sight of which by faith, and the expectation of which by faith, is better then the possession of any outward present enjoyment. This can be no wrong to them.

Fourthly, Though they be straitned with outward afflictions, yet God makes it up to them in spiritual consolations, there is no loss in that. So then, none have reason to murmur or complain either about the prosperity of wicked men, or the pressures of the godly. All is done in wisdom to the one, in mercy to the other, and according to the unquestionable prerogative of God in both.

Take this Corollary from the whole,

Shall any teach God knowledge?

Then submit quietly to the will of God, let us imprison our own reason, that the will and power of God may have their liberty: while we give reason too much liberty, we (upon the matter) imprison the will and power of God. Meer humane reason is no competent Surveyor of the wayes of God. Not that any of the wayes of God are against reason, but many of them are above our reason. The wayes of God are ordered by the quintessence of reason, and that is not to be found under every mans (I may say not naturally under any mans) cap: and when we measure the wayes of God by the standard and scantlings of our common reason, what a disguise do we put upon them? Yea, how do we disguise God himself? God is our maker, yet such make and form a justice for him like their own, a holiness like their own, a mercy like their own; and then what a God will he be? My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are my wayes your wayes said the Lord (Isa. 55. 8.) And shall any reduce and shrink up the thoughts and wayes of God to their narrow and straitned model? The Lord said of Adam in scorn when he attempted a likeness to God; Behold the man is become as one of us (Gen. 3.22.) How doth God scorn them who would make his wayes and thoughts as their own. Therefore let man dispute the wayes of God no more, but submit quietly to his will.

First, In what he hath said, or to the rule of his Word.

Secondly, In what he hath done, or to the righteousness of his Works. Aaron held his peace, he submitted when God had slain his two sons (Lev. 10.3.) And when that sad message was brought to old Eli, that God would do such things to his house as should make the ears of them that heard the report to tingle, he only said, Good is the Word of the Lord (1 Sam. 3.18.) So, when the Prophet told Hezekiah from the Lord, Behold the dayes come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store until this day shall be carried to Babylon, nothing shall be left, and of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, they shall take away, &c. When (I say) he heard all this, what said he? Even this, Good is the Word of the Lord (Isa. 39.8.) He doth not repine, nor dispute the case with God; What! give up Jerusalem the holy City into the hand of Babylon? Shall my sons descended from David, and of the seed of Abraham, fall into the hands of the uncircumcised? We hear of no word from him, but that which breaths humble submission, Good is the Word of the Lord. David was dumb with silence, when God spake rebukes to him (Psal. 39.9.) There is no contesting with God; 'tis fit our wills should be swallowed into the will of God, and 'tis our duty to say (as Christ did) Not our will be done, but thine. The Psalmist invites all to a very sad spectacle (Psal. 46.8, 10.) Come, behold, What is the sight? What's to be seen? Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth. How are we to behold these desolations? We may and ought with sorrowful hearts, but we must not with discontented hearts (vers. 10.) Be still, and know that I am God? As if he had said, I know you will be ready to query, why are the Nations shaken, and people made desolate? Why are these changes in the earth? The Lord in stead of answering their questions, commands their silence; Be still, and know that I am God? That's enough to quiet the thoughts of man. Some parasites have sacrilegiously flattred the Pope into this divine priviledge; No man must question him, do what he will, if he carry thousands to hell, who shall say, why do you so? 'Tis as dangerous to ascribe this to man, as it is to deny it unto God. If he shake the frame of heaven and earth, we must be still. For he doth in heaven and in earth whatsoever pleaseth him, and no man must say (displeasedly) What dost thou? Or why dost thou so? He that upon those terms would know what God doth, or why he doth so, goes about to teach God knowledge. But Shall any teach God knowledge,

Seeing he judgeth those that are high?

Some read thus, Shall any man teach God knowledge, wherewith to judge those that are high? As if he had said, Shall they teach God how to dispose of, or deal with those that are high? So Mr. Broughton, Can a man teach the Omnipotent knowledge, how he shall judge those that are high? As if this were the special case in which no man must meddle to direct God

Quâ ipse excelsos Judicet. Jun.

God, how to handle, and take a course with the great ones of the world. Indeed, God knows well enough how to deal with the great ones, the high ones of the world, he knows how to pull down the mighty from their seats and to break their power, he knows how to scatter their forces and infatuate their counsels without receiving counsel from us. Shall any teach God knowledge, how to judge those that are high? He hath wayes and means at command (when he purposeth it) to effect that purpose. That is a good interpretation.

Yet we render it (and I conceive more clearly to the mind of the Text) as a reason of the former question, why no man should presume, or why it is high presumption in any to teach God knowledge? The reason is grounded upon his prerogative and supremacy. He is the most high, and therefore must not be taught: he is the judge of those that are high, and therefore he is most high, and therefore he must not be taught by any that are here below. He that knows how to judge them that are high, is himself too high to be taught knowledge. Again these words, He that judgeth those that are high, are a periphrasis, or a descriptive circumlocution of God. To judge those that are high, is to be God.

He judgeth.] What is here meant by Judging?

First, To judge, is to discern, to look to, yea to look through the state and condition of a person or a thing. Thus the Lord judgeth those that are high, he discerns, he knows them and their wayes perfectly.

Secondly, To judge, is to give sentence or judgment upon trial or due process of Law: when matters are alledged and proved, the Judge gives sentence.

Thirdly, To judge, is to punish. So the word is used, (1 Cor. 31.) If we would judge our selves. There judgment may be taken for the judgment of discerning, trying, and examining (as well as of sentencing) as the Apostle said before, Let a man examine himself. If we would judge, that is, try and examin our selves, we should not be judged, that is, not afflicted, not punished, as it is said there; For this cause some are sick and weak among you, and some are fallen asleep. Which sence the Apostle explains further, (vers. 32.) But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord. To judge, is to chasten, or to punish. So here, seeing he judgeth, that is, punisheth, and layes his revenging hand upon those that are high.

But who are the high ones, that come under the judgment of God?

First, Some by the high ones understand the Angels, who are the highest or first classis of creatures. God did judge the Angels, he discerned, and passed sentence upon them, and, They are held in chains of darkness to the judgment of the great day (Jude 5.) Hence some conceive that Job gathers his argument, Shall any teach God knowledge, how to judge poor creatures on earth, how to throw down, or exalt man, since he judgeth the Angels? The Apostle useth an argument near this in reference unto the people of God, to shew that the Saints are fit to judge things of their own concernment and interest: Do you not know that the Saints shall judge the world? And if the world be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? (1 Cor. 2. 3.) And he carrieth the argument yet closer to the point in the next verse; Know ye not that we shall judge Angels, how much more things that pertain to this life? Job might say also, Know ye not that God hath judged Angels, those that are high, the highest part of the whole creation? And shall any teach him knowledge, how to judge the inhabitants of this inferior, this lower world?

Secondly, Others understand it of those who are high in wisdom; the highest Graduates in Schools, and Universities; the most learned Rabbies, and Doctors, the Sophies, the Philosophers of the world; so the sence runs thus, Shall any man teach God knowledge, by whom the wisest, the most knowing are taught, who espieth faults in the wisdom of the wisest? God is able to instruct all the masters of knowledge, therefore he is not a learner. Shall any teach God knowledge, seeing he judgeth or correcteth those who are high, the highest in knowledge?

Per excelsos intellige potentissimos atq; opulentissimos mines, quorum dicio a supplicio fere unius hoc put est. Pined.

Thirdly, Rather by the high are meant such as are in high place and power, the Judges and Princes of the earth, who are so high, that God gives them his own stile, I have said ye are gods. Though they be thus high, the Lord judgeth them: therefore seeing it is the right of his soveraignty to judge the highest, even the Kings and Rulers of the world, Shall any teach him knowledge?

Hence note, First, God judgeth the high ones.

The highest on earth are below God. Let all High ones remember, that, There is one higher then the highest (Eccl. 5. 8.) One higher then the Kings of the earth (Psal. 89. 16.) King of Kings, and Lord of Lords.

Secondly, God discerns and throughly looks into the estates and actions of the highest in the world.

The high ones of the world, may put a skreen of secrecy between them and inferiors, they may draw a curtain between themselves and mean men, but they cannot put a skreen or draw a curtain between themselves and God; he judgeth those that are high, therefore he knoweth them. No man can give a righteous judgment either of things or persons till he knows them. And though he that judgeth before he knoweth, may possibly sometimes give a righteous judgment, yet he is alwayes an unrighteous Judge. Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right, and be righteous?

Thirdly, No man is so high but God can punish and chastise him, yea ruine and pull him down.

He can make his sword reach the highest, and his judgments take hold of those that are strongest (Isa. 2. 11, 12, 13.) The Cedars and Oaks, the high walls or mountains, are men on high; yet the day of the Lord, that is, the day of his vengeance is against them all, and, The loftiness of man shall be brought down, and they shall run into the holes and clifts of the rock, to hide them from the presence of the Lord when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. The Lord tells Job out of the Whirlwind, That the high arm (that is, the strongest arm, or the arm lifted up to strike) shall be broken. The Lord insults over Lucifer in his heights, How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, thou son of the morning, &c. (Isa. 14.) Thy terribleness hath deceived thee, and the pride of thine heart, O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, that holdest the height of the hill; though thou shouldest make thy nest as high as the Eagle, I will bring thee down from thence saith the Lord (Jer. 49. 16.) The highness of man is so far from securing wicked men, that it rather makes them the fairer mark for the wrath of God.

Yet let not the low ones think they shall escape, God judgeth the high ones (say some) surely then he will not trouble himself with those that are low, with poor and mean men; he will have nothing to do with them, they shall not be taken notice of in the croud. As if it were either unsutable or below the Majesty of God to punish mean ones, or as if their meanness might plead their impunity. It is indeed an humbling of God to behold the highest; He humbleth himself (saith the Scripture, Psal. 113. 6.) to behold the things that are in heaven; yet he is pleased to humble himself (saith the same Scripture) to behold the things in earth, even the lowest things which are done, and the lowest persons which are here below. And as it is the prerogative of God to judge those who are high, so it is both his purpose and his praise not to let the lowest pass unjudged. The poorest believing Saint shall be accepted and rewarded, as well and as much as any believing Prince, who is not more believing nor more a Saint then he; and so there is not the meanest unbelieving son or daughter of Adam, not the poorest man or woman continuing in sin, but shall be judged as well as the highest. We find bondmen as well as freemen, Kings and Captains trembling before and running from the Lamb sitting upon his throne (Rev. 6. 15, 16.) As it is the glory of God that he can make the mightiest Kings stoop, so it is the glory of God, that the eye and hand of his justice stoopeth to the poorest captive. God will not favour the wicked, because they are great, nor spare them because they are little either in this world, or in that to come. He that dwells in a corner or in a cottage, shall no more escape, then the greatest Prince that dwelleth in a Pallace Royal, and sitteth upon a Throne.

VERS. 23, 24, 25, 26.

One dieth in his full strength, being wholly at ease and quiet.
His breasts are full of milk, and his bones are moistned with marrow.
And another dieth in the bitterness of his soul, and never eateth with pleasure.
They shall lye down alike in the dust, and the worms shall cover them.

IN the former verse Job exalted the Lord above mans teaching and controling, Shall any teach God knowledge, seeing he judgeth those that are high? God is so wise that no man can teach him, so free and absolute in his power, that none may dare to controle him. And as this appeareth from what Job hath formerly asserted, so also by that which followeth; he spares whom he will, and smites whom he will, for what continuance of time he will, and in what measure he will; he summons one to the grave, even then, when he is most likely to live, and when he hath least fear of death, when there is not the least symptom or appearance of the approach of that King of terrors, not any decay in nature to proclaim the return of the flesh to dust, the man is in his spring and prime, yet then he is cut off and dies. Mean while another (no man knows why) pines and lingers out all his dayes in pain of body and trouble of mind, he lives and dyes under woful pressures of soul and body, of estate and relations, never injoying any good, nor seeing good day to the end of his dayes. Thus Job exemplifieth his general assertion concerning the soveraignty of God, and his various dispensations toward men.

There are three opinions as to the common scope of these words; I shall touch at them, and then come to a more particular explication.

Most of the Greek Writers understand these words as distinguishing the state of the wicked and the godly in this life. One dieth in his full strength, that is, wicked men have no trouble in their lives, no sicknesses when they dye, they go gently out of the world, or as it is said in vers. 13. of this Chapter, In a moment they go down to the grave. Whereas godly men usually live in trouble, and are tired out of the world with tedious and painful diseases when they dye. Thus the words describe the difference of the godly and wicked in regard of their natural death: Whereupon they infer, that they must necessarily have a different estate after death. Wicked men (say these Interpreters) have more happiness in their death then the godly, therefore the godly shall have a happiness which the wicked shall not have after death.

Secondly, Others take this to be Job's intendment, who having shewed before that poverty and riches are alike given to good and bad while they live: here asserts that death doth alike overtake weak and strong, sound and sick, young and old, such as are in a prosperous and such as are in a sad and in an afflicted estate; death catcheth away the one as well as the other: death carrieth an impartial hand, and hath a powerful hand, the strong can no more stand in the hands of death then the weak, nor can the young or rich make any better resistance when death assaults them, then the old and poor. One dieth in his full strength, &c. Another dieth in the bitterneß of his soul. Death pitties not the one, nor doth it flatter the other; there is a truth and an usefulness in this interpretation.

Thirdly, Rather understand the words, as teaching us, that God according to the freedom of his own will and pleasure, and the usual tenor of his providence in outward things, handles neither the godly nor the wicked alwayes in the same manner. One man, let him be good or bad, believer or unbeliever, dies in his full strength, and in the height of his prosperity; another, whether wicked or godly, dieth in the bitterness of his soul; some wicked men live and die in trouble, it is so also with some who are godly. This scope of the place makes good the assertion of the Preacher (Eccles. 9. 2.) All things come alike to all, that is, all worldly things. There is such a mixture of events, that no man can determine what any person is, either by what he injoyes, or by what he suffers. As the persons of good and evil men are mingled in the world, so also are their conditions. Good men suffer evil, and evil men injoy good: and again, good men receive good, and evil men endure evil. Thus Job holds forth the liberty which God useth as to the distribution of temporal good and evil, both to the evil and the good: So that he will not let us know love or hatred by any thing that is before us.

One dieth in his full strength.

He dieth not only strong, but in the strength of his perfection, so we read in the margin. The perfection of every thing is the strength of it; and he is strong indeed who is in the strength of his perfection. The glory of young men is their strength. One dieth at the height and top of this glory. The Septuagint render the Original word which signifieth perfection, by simplicity; that which is simple is perfect, God who is most simple is most perfect, the simplicity of God is the glory of his perfection. One dieth in the strength of his simplicity; that is, when the health of his body or his constitution is (as it were) unmixed, or not mixed with any disease, as also when his outward state is not mixed with any trouble; he dieth in the strength of this double simplicity, when as it were nothing unlike strength, nothing unlike prosperity hath so much as set its foot within his borders; when his light shines so clear, that there is no appearance of darkness in it; and when his comforts are so pure, that he hath no acquaintance with that thing called sorrow; when he hath not a cloud in his day, nor any taste of bitterness in his cup, then, even then in that strength of his simplicity he dieth. Some of the Greeks (I confess) take the word simplicity in the worst sence, rendring thus, He shall die in the strength of his folly; but I leave that under the censure of at least an unwary translation; and waving that also which I mentioned last before, shall insist only upon our own. One dieth in his full strength; which we may expound in the latitude of a threefold strength.

בעצם חמו
In robore perfectionis aut integritatis suæ. Moritur robustus. Vulg.
ἐν κράτει ἁπλοσύνης αὐτῦ. Sept.
ἐν κράτει ἀφροσύνης.

First, In the strength of his body, when he hath perfect health, and not only health, but much strength with it; some have health, who yet have but little strength.

Secondly, In the strength of his outward estate, of riches and relations; these are a mans strength, therefore the same word in the Hebrew signifies both riches and strength. Rich men are apt to idolize riches as their strength or strong tower, and so turn away from God, who is indeed our strength and our tower.

Thirdly, To compleat the fulness of his strength, we may add, In the strength of his spirit, when his mind is not troubled, when he hath no disquietments there: a man may have much strength of body, and a strength of estate, and yet be in perplexity of spirit; and then he is so far from being in his full strength, that he is in much weakness. The spirit of a man (saith Solomon, Prov. 18. 14.) (that is his mind and conscience being sound and whole) will sustain his infirmity; that is, it will cause him to bear up against all the sicknesses of his body, and afflictions in his state; but all the fulness of a mans estate and the exactest health of his body cannot bear up the infirmities of his spirit, or his wounded spirit. When Job saith, One dieth in the fulness of his strength, we may understand the concurrence or complication of all these strengths. That man who hath a strong body, a strong purse, with peace and tranquility of mind, is in full strength indeed; yet saith Job, twist all these strengths, this threefold strength together, and though (as Solomon speaks in his book of the Preacher) a threefold coard is not easily broken; yet death will as easily break this threefold coard of life, as a threed of tow is broken, when it toucheth (or smelleth) the fire.

One dieth in his full strength. This exposition is more fully given in the next words of the Text.

Being wholly at ease and quiet.

That is, at ease in body and quiet in mind; or at ease and quiet both in mind and body, yea in whatsoever else a man may be said to be at ease and quiet. He dieth rich and happy, saith the Vulgar Translation; Wholly well setled, say the Septuagint; Rejoycing and abounding, saith a third; the Hebrew

Totus ipse quietus & pacificus.

Hebrew is, whole, he being at ease and quiet, or as we render, being wholly at ease and quiet. All these readings center into one common sence, that he dieth when he is in as good a case to live as any outward advantage or interest can make him. Which is particularly exemplified in the words which follow.

Vers. 24. His breasts are full of milk, &c.

עטינים Ubera mămæ. Targ. Rab. Mard. Mulchratia. Rab. Dav.

The word which we render Breast, is used but this once in all the book of God. I find some variety among the Learned in expressing it.

First, Divers of the Rabbins, as also other Writers translate it, Milk pails, His milk pails are full, or, His pailes are full of milk. So the words are a description of his outward plenty. The Land of Canaan is called, A Land flowing with milk and honey; that is, a very fruitful Land. To say a mans milk pails are full, is to say that he hath abundance.

Apud Talmudicos denotat vasa in quibus congregabatur pinguedo olivis expressa. Ego vasa magna putarim, quibus ut nunc in Gallia Narbonensi oleum asservabatur. Merc. Viscera ejus plena sunt adipe. Vulg. Sept. Hæc verba jocosam & adagiosam continent loquendi formam, quæ de robustissimo fœcundissimoq; viro diceretur. Medulla humidis annumeranda est, propterea conceptaculis quibusdã tanquam vasculis continetur. Arist. l. 4. de Hist. Animal. c. 20. μυελὸς τροφὴ ὀστέων. Hip. lib. de Alim. Plato in Timæo.

Others conceive the word signifieth those vessels, wherein either wine, oyl, or any useful liquor was preserved. This rendring meets the former in setting forth an over-flowing prosperity in worldly things. That man who dieth with his vessels full of milk, wine, and oyl, hath enough of the creature about him to keep him alive.

A third sort translate thus, His bowels or entrails are full of fatnes. He is enclosed with his own fat (Psal. 17. 10.) and he hath much fat enclosed, his bowels are well lined, and his back is well larded. His stomach hath served him to eat his meat, and the meat which he hath eaten hath served his stomach. The man dieth when he is in this good case to live. As the two former rendrings appertain to the plenty of a mans estate, so this last, His bowels are full of fat, and ours, His breasts are full of milk, appertain to the strength, health, and constitution of the body. Which soever of these we take, it complies well enough with Job's scope, yet our translation complieth best with it, as also with the words which follow.

And his bones are moistened with marrow.

Which is only an amplification of what he said before, shewing a good habit and state of body. Marrow is moist and fluid; blood flows in the veins, and marrow is kept in the bones. Naturalists tell us, that, what blood is to the flesh, that marrow is to the bones; blood moistens the flesh, and marrow moistens the bones. The learned Physitian, calls marrow the meat or food of the bones: The bones live upon it. So that when Job saith, His bones are full of marrow, He speaks the exactest state of nature. 'Tis the opinion of a Prince in Philosophy, That the marrow is not only the sourse and seminary of generation, but the very seat of life. So that, the body is then in its full strength when it hath store of marrow to moisten, supple, and feed the bones. And thus the Scripture elsewhere expresseth a strong and healthy constitution of body (Prov. 3. 8.) Be not wise in thine own eyes, fear the Lord and depart from evil, it shall be marrow to thy bones; that is, it shall be that to thee which marrow is to thy bones. In opposition to which Solomon speaks of drying the bones (Prov. 17. 22.) A merry heart doth good like a medicine, but a broken spirit dryeth the bones. The mind hath a powerful influence upon the body. A chearful spirit is as good as meat or medicine. The body thrives and recovers by it, the body gathers strength and health by it: but a broken spirit (he means, not a spirit broken with godly sorrow, but broken with worldly sorrow and distracting care, a spirit thus broken) breaks the heart, and dries the bones. In a holy fast, the heart ought to be broken with godly sorrow; yet to those who keep such a fast, the Prophet makes this promise from the Lord; He shall guide thee continually, and satisfie thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones (Isa. 53. 11.) There is a breaking of the spirit which drieth the bones, and there is a breaking of the spirit that fattens and moistens the bones. We read of a sweet vision which the people of God shall have (Isa. 66. 14.) When ye see this, your hearts shall rejoyce. As the vision which Saints have in heaven makes their hearts rejoyce, so God will give such visions as shall make their hearts rejoyce on earth; and what follows, and your bones shall flourish like an herb; that is, you shall have comforts both inward and outward, both for soul and body; not only shall your hearts rejoyce, but your bones shall flourish like an herb. Herbs flourish when they have suitable moystnings, and so do bones. And as showers moysten the herbs, so marrow moystneth the bones. Thus Job tells whom he means, by the man who dieth in his full strength, even the man who is wholly at ease and quiet, with his breasts full of milk, and his bones moystned with marrow.

Hence observe, First, That bodily health and strength are no defence at all against death.

Do you think you must needs live long, because you are healthy and strong; let not death be a stranger to you, because you are not acquainted with sickness; for, One dieth in his full strength. The abundance of riches is no defence against poverty, as Zophar spake (Chap. 24. 22.) In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in streights. Now as a man who is very rich, hath no ground to say in his heart I shall never be poor, because in the fulness of sufficiency a man may be in streights; so a man who is very strong, hath no reason to flatter himself in the hopes of long life, or to say in his heart, I shall not dye till I am old and weak; for in the fulness of your strength you may be in death. One dieth in his full strength, and so may you; nothing is any stop to, or can lay a bar in the way of death, but only grace and holiness. For though they who are holy and gracious, dye as well as others, yea though many who have much grace dye before they have attained to many years, even in the fullness of their strength; yet the Lord hath made a promise of long life unto those who are gracious and holy, but he never made a promise of long life to the healthy or strong. The Lord hath not said any where in Scripture, that, The strong man shall live long; but he hath promised long life to those who are of a gracious spirit and holy life (Exod. 20. 12.) And the Apostle urging that duty upon children from the Commandment, calls it the First Commandment with promise (Ephes. 6. 2.) that is, with an explicite promise, for every Commandment hath both a threatning and a promise implied in it, and annexed to it; but this is the first Commandment with a promise expressed, and that is a promise of long life. Honour thy father and mother, that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth. So that if any thing be a bar in the way of death, 'tis holiness; and if man had continued in perfect holiness, that had been an everlasting preservative against death. Death had never broken in upon us, if we had not broken the Commandment of God. And now by how much any man doth more wickedly break the Commandments, by so much he is the more liable to the breaking in of death. As for the strength of any man, though a Sampson, this great Leviathan Death, counts it but as straw; and the soundest purest health, but as rotten wood. There are no sons of Zerviah too hard for death; nor doth death stay to take men at an advantage, when they are weakned with age and sickness, or (as Simeon and Levi did the Shechemites, Gen. 34. 25.) when they are sore. Death can do its work easily and as speedily in health, as it can in sickness; in strength, as well as in weakness; when we handle the sword, as well as when we lean upon a staff; in the prime and summer, as well as in the fall and winter of our lives. Nor can any man plead with God to forbid the approach and arrest of death, because he is healthy, young or strong; these pleas bear no weight with God, because God hath made no promise to them. We can plead nothing but our integrity, uprightness, and holy walking with God: So Hezekiah did, when he received a message with the sentence of death from the Lord (Isa. 38. 2, 3.) He turned his face toward the wall, and prayed unto the Lord, and said, Remember now, O Lord, I beseech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth, & with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. Upon this plea his dayes were lengthned, and a prohibition was issued out from the high Court of Heaven to stay the proceedings of death. Thus the promise of wisdom runs (Prov. 3. 2.) My son, forget not my Law, but let thy heart keep my Commandments; for length of dayes, and long life, and peace, shall they add to thee: The Hebrew is, years of life, which may be understood either as an addition, to note the certainty of the promise, or as an explication of the promise; Thou shalt have length of dayes, that is, many dayes, and years of life, that is, comfortable years; for some have long dayes, and yet but

but ſhort lives; a man liveth no more years indeed, then he liveth comfortably. So that when wiſdom ſaith, Long life, or years of life ſhall they add to thee; the meaning is, thou ſhalt have a life not only long but pleaſant, or a life as full of peace as of dayes and years. What the Moraliſt ſaid of an idle life, That it is the burial of a man alive, an idle man is a living man buried: that I may ſay of a troubleſom miſerable life, It is the burial of a man alive. A miſerable man is a living man buried. And how many are there who prefer death before a miſerable life. Therefore ſaith wiſdom, My ſon, forget not my law, but let thy heart keep my Commandments, and they ſhall add to thee (that is, thou ſo doing, God will add to thee) long life and peace. Only grace and holineſs have the promiſe of long life, they are a defence againſt death; but as for ſtrength and health, breaſts full of milk, and bones full of marrow, they have no promiſe of life, nor are they any ſtop to the power of death; but rather render a man the fairer mark, and the ſweeter morſel for that King of terrors to hit and feed upon. And from this general truth, we may draw down theſe two deductions.

First, Then prepare for death, though you have no appearance of death upon you.

When you ſurveigh your bodies from head to foot, and cannot ſee the leaſt ſhadow of death, nothing looking like death upon them; yet, I ſay, prepare for death; for, one dieth in his full ſtrength, when there is no ſymptom of death to be ſeen upon him. When we look upon ſome men we may ſee (as he ſaid of a ſad time) many images or repreſentations of death; we may ſee death in their dim eyes, in their palſied hands, in their trembling knees, and withered faces; we may ſee death looking in at their windows, and out at their windows. Look upon others, they have no ſign of death, nothing that looks like death; yet let ſuch prepare, for one dieth in his full ſtrength. The Preacher (Eccleſ. 12. 1.) exhorts young men to remember their creator in the dayes of their youth. And he giveth a forcible reaſon for it there; but I ſhall give another from this Text. The reaſon which he gives, why young men ſhould remember their Creator is, Becauſe their evil day is coming (he meaneth not dayes of ſinful evil, but of painful evil, as the next words expound him) the years draw nigh in which you ſhall ſay, we have no pleaſure in them; bethink your ſelves of a ſpiritually better eſtate now in your youth, for a naturally evil eſtate is coming; old age with its train and retinue of weakneſſes and infirmities is coming, yea it is haſtning upon you; therefore make haſte, up, and be doing in all holy duties. This is a good argument why we ſhould remember our Creator in the dayes of our youth, becauſe evil dayes are coming. Yet take here another, if not a more preſſing argument, Remember your Creator in the dayes of your youth, becauſe thoſe evil dayes may never come; you may be taken off in your good, yea in your beſt dayes: you may be taken off when neither the Sun, nor the Moon, nor the Stars are darkened; as he ſpeaks there, when the clouds do not return after rain, when the keepers of the houſe ſtand faſt, &c. So then as they that are young and ſtrong have reaſon to prepare for death, becauſe evil dayes are coming; ſo they are to prepare for death, becauſe it is very queſtionable whether ever thoſe evil dayes ſhall come, or whether they ſhall ever come to thoſe evil dayes; they may die in their good dayes, in their beſt dayes, in thoſe dayes wherein they ſay, we have pleaſure, all manner of pleaſures in them. For as Job here affirmeth, One dieth in his full ſtrength, being wholly at eaſe and quiet.

Plurima mortis imago.

A ſecond deduction is this,

Death doth not obſerve the laws of nature, but the appointments of God.

The law of nature ſaith not that a man is likely to die in his full ſtrength; the law of nature ſets death at the greateſt diſtance from thoſe men whoſe breaſts are full of milk, and their bones moiſtned with marrow; the law of nature ſaith to death, go to the wrinkled face, to the dry bones, to the dry breaſts, meddle not with this young man, touch not this beautiful woman, he or ſhe is now in the flower, in the prime and pride of nature; go to yonder old man, go to that withered woman, let theſe alone. Oh, but death will not receive theſe commands; death will not obſerve the laws of nature, but the appointments of God, who is the Lord of nature. It is appointed for all men once to dye; and as God hath appointed all to dye, ſo he appoints the ſeaſons of death; and the ſeaſons which he appoints, are as various as the kinds, occaſions, and wayes of death are. And therefore death knocks as often at the young mans door, as at the door of the old man; death attacheth and carrieth away the ſtrong, the healthy man, priſoner to the grave as often as the weak and ſickly. One dieth in his full ſtrength.

Secondly, As theſe two verſes are a deſcription of the outward proſperity of man, Obſerve, That, As bodily health and ſtrength are no defence againſt death, ſo riches are not.

Your pails full of milk, your veſſels full of wine and oyl, your ſhops full of wares and goods, your purſes full of gold and ſilver, your lands ſtockt with corn and cattel, and your ſelves wholly at eaſe and quiet in the poſſeſſion of them, cannot ſtave off death one minute, one moment. The rich mans barns were full, yet the Word came, Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee (Luke 12. 20.) and then whoſe ſhall all theſe things be, that thou haſt provided? they can be no longer thine, nor thou theirs. Whoſe ſhall they be? Though thou haſt not made thy Will, nor haſt any will to make it; yet they can be no longer thine; thou canſt not bribe death to depart; riches avail not in a day of wrath. One dieth in his full wealth, when his pails are full of milk, and his veſſels running over with wine and oyl.

Verſ. 25. And another dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul, and never eateth in pleaſure.

This verſe ſtands in oppoſition to the former; the Text in ſtrictneſs of Grammar may be read thus, Another dieth in a bitter mind, or in amind of bitterneſs. And this may be underſtood both of good and evil men; ſome godly men dye thus, many wicked men dye thus, both or either may dye in the bitterneſs of his ſoul. What's that? Or when is the ſoul in bitterneſs? The bitterneſs of the ſoul, is the carefulneſs, ſadneſs, and uncomfortableneſs of it. Soul-bitterneſs is ſoul-miſery and ſorrow. Afflictions are compared to wormwood and gall (Lam. 3. 15.) He hath filled me with bitterneſs, he hath made me drunken with wormwood. What he means by both is clear (verſ. 19.) Remembring mine affliction and my miſery; the wormwood and the gall. Godly ſorrow is alſo expreſſed by bitterneſs, (Zach. 12. 10.) In that day the Lord will cauſe them to mourn, and they ſhall be in bitterneſs as one that mourneth for his firſt born. To be in bitterneſs is to be in ſorrow; not only in worldly ſorrow, but in godly ſorrow, in that ſorrow which worketh repentance not to be repented of. Sorrow is a bitter cup; worldly ſorrow is a bitter and a deadly cup; godly ſorrow is a bitter, though a wholſom and a medicinable cup. Spiritual, natural, and worldly ſorrows are as bitterneſs to the ſoul. Death hath its peculiar ſorrows (The ſorrows of death hath compaſſed me about, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 116. 3.) and ſo hath life. Many dye not only in the ſorrows of death, but in the ſorrows of life; that's the intendment of Job in this place, while he ſaith, Another dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul,

בנפש מרה In animo amaro.

Morbi & dolores vitam efficiunt acerbam.

And never eateth in pleaſure.] Or nearer the letter, He eateth not in good. In eating there are two things conſiderable; firſt, the meat; and ſecondly, the ſauce. Some have meat to eat, but they have no ſauce with it. Good or pleaſure is the ſauce of our meat. A dinner of ſowre herbs is ſweet with this ſauce; and a ſtalled ox without it, is not. And this ſauce is in the eaters heart, not in his diſh. He that hath not ſauce there, though he have both meat and ſauce in his diſh, yea though he have a ſong and muſick at his Table, yet never eateth in pleaſure. There is a threefold pleaſure; firſt, ſenſual; ſecondly, ſpiritual; thirdly, ſenſitive. All ſenſual is ſinful pleaſure. Job ſpeaks not here of ſuch a man as dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul, and never eats as a glutton or an Epicure (whoſe buſineſs, yea whoſe religion it is to ſerve his belly and pleaſe his pallate, whoſe only care it is to keep his skin fair and body fat, I ſay he ſpeaks not of ſuch a one who never eats)

בטובה In bono, i.e. in jucunditate eſt lætitia.

in

in sinful sensual pleasure. Again, all spiritual pleasure is holy pleasure: As the former is too low, so this is too high for Job's scope in this assertion. He speaks not here of a man who dieth and never eats in the pleasure of divine love and heavenly enjoyments. To eat in this pleasure, is the peculiar portion of Saints: So then, the pleasure here meant is the third, meer sensitive pleasure. Some die, and never eat in this pleasure; that is, they eat but taste no sweetness in what they eat: Their palates are so distempered with sickness, or their spirits are so distempered with sorrow while they are in health, that they find no savour, no relish in what they eat. The best prepared meats are to them but as a dry stick, or the white of an egg; I cannot (saith one) taste my meat, I eat this, and I eat that, but I taste neither; or if I taste what I eat, and find it sweet to my palate, yet I have such sowre sauce with it, so many afflictions press my spirit, that pleasant bread is as gall and wormwood to me; I never eat in pleasure. We are (I conceive) to understand the Text of this natural sensitive pleasure which man takes by the ordinary blessing of God in the use of creatures. This is denied to many, they eat not in good, and it may therefore be said, as the Septuagint render here, They eat no good. How good soever the meat is, it is not good to them that have no content in eating it. Yet further, as they never eat in pleasure, though they sit every day at full and well furnished Tables, whose bodies are ill affected by sickness, or their minds with sorrow; so there are many of whom it may be said, that they never eat in pleasure, because they have but little of any thing, and nothing of that which is pleasant to eat. A rich mans bread may sometimes be called the bread of adversity, and his water the water of affliction, but an extream poor mans bread and water are alwayes so. What pleasure have they in their lives, who can hardly be said to live; or what pleasure have they in eating, who are only preserved from starving. Such pitiful poor ones are literally in Job's Text, They die in the bitterness of their soul, and never eat in pleasure.

Hence observe, The difference which God makes among men, even in outward things, is very great.

One lives and dies in his full strength, wholly at ease and quiet; another never eats in quiet, nor knoweth what it is to be at ease; one hath pleasant bread prepared for him every day, and he daily eats in pleasure; another doth not only eat the bread of sorrow (*Psal.*127.2.) that is, bread gotten with the sweat of his face, with hard labour and care, but he eateth his bread with sorrow. As the sleep of a labouring man (Eccles. 5. 12.) so the bread of a labouring man is usually sweet to him, whether he eat little or much, yet even to some labouring men their bread is not sweet.

We may draw up these four Conclusions, about the state of man in this life.

First, There is no man who hath all pleasure, or nothing but pleasure in his life.

For though it be said in the former verse of one man, he is wholly at ease and quiet, yet we must not understand that strictly and precisely, as if any man ever lived who met not with some trouble or pain, at one time or other before he died. No man ever arrived at such a degree of worldly happiness, as never to feel any cross in this world. The life of man here, is not perfect in any capacity. As the lives of good men are not perfect in spirituals, so neither is the life of any man, whether good or bad, absolutely perfect in temporals. In the next life, there will be no mixture in any mans condition; they who are miserable shall know nothing but sorrow, and they who are happy shall know nothing but pleasure; but in this each state hath a taste of both, though (as the elements in the mixture of bodies) some one be predominant.

Secondly, Most men have less pleasure then pain, more ill dayes then good dayes in this world.

The life of man here is at best but like checquer work, which hath a black and a white, or like a bitter-sweet, or like twilight when 'tis neither dark nor light; but usually our lives have more of the black then of the white in them, more of the bitter then of the sweet, of the dark then of the light. The part predominant is most commonly the worst. Hence the third conclusion.

Thirdly, Most have little pleasure, but trouble and sorrow very much.

Their evil dayes out-number their good, and their sorrows out-weigh their comforts. They have doubled sorrows, or sorrow upon sorrow; they have but single comforts, here a little, and there a little; now a little, and then a little.

Fourthly, We may conclude with the Text,

That some have no pleasure at all.

Yet this conclusion, as the Text whence it riseth, is not to be understood strictly. No man (I believe) was ever so miserable, whether in regard of his body or estate, as never to enjoy the least pleasure; for as there is no perfect happiness in this life, so there is no perfect misery in this life; the perfection of both is reserved for the next. Such a state of misery as hath not the least mixture of good in it, is the portion of wicked men in Hell: And such a state of pleasure as hath not the least mixture of evil in it, is the portion of the Saints in Heaven. Yet some there are who have so little pleasure and joy in their lives, that we may according to common understanding conclude of them, That they never eat in pleasure. That which is very rarely done or enjoyed, is said (in Scripture language) never to be done or enjoyed. Hence take this twofold Admonition.

First, Let such see the mercy, and the gracious dealing of God with them, who eat every day or very often in pleasure. How often do we sit down at our Tables, and our morsels are sweet to us? God fills our hearts not only with food but gladness. Whereas not a few of our brethren, of the same mould with our selves, and possibly of better desert then we, eat ashes for bread, and mingle their drink with weeping, or as Job speaketh, Never eat in pleasure.

Secondly, If this be the lot of some, that they never eat in pleasure; let them be admonisht who complain, if they eat not alwayes in pleasure; who if they have but now and then a hard day of it, a short meal of it; if their pallate be but sometimes out of taste, and their stomachs sick; if they are only now and then in pain, presently murmur and are discontent. Shall any repine at pains which come but seldom, when we hear of others that never eat in pleasure?

God doth us no wrong if he giveth us nothing but sorrow; he doth us no wrong, if he lets us linger, and pine, and die in the bitterness of our souls. Wicked men do nothing but sin, and then, what is their due but sorrow? And as the wicked do nothing but sin, so the godly sin in all they do, therefore God is not unjust if he mingle sorrow with all they have. While there is so much sin in the best, 'tis mercy that it is no worse with them; and while so much evil is done, what reason have we to complain that so much evil is felt. If there were no other account to be given of Gods severest dispensations, this is enough to acquit God and quiet our own spirits. 'Tis an evil and a bitter thing, in the nature of it, to sin against God; no wonder then if it be so in the effects of it. The bitterness of sin will cause bitterness of soul, and while we do so much of that wherein God taketh no pleasure, we have cause to expect but little, and to justifie him though we should never eat in pleasure.

Vers. 26. They shall lie down alike in the dust, and the worms shall cover them.

There is difference among men while they live, and in in the manner of their death; One dieth in his full strength; another dieth in the bitterness of his soul; but they shall lie down alike in the dust. When we are removed by death, these differences will be removed. To lie down in the dust, is to dye; and we read of the dust of death, Psal. 22.15.

They shall lie down alike. The Verb signifieth to unite or joyn together. The Adverb which is here used, hath four significations in Scripture. יחד Verbum univit, unum fecit, in adverbio, simul pariter.

First, 'Tis rendred alone, or without company (Job 34. 29.) When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? and when he hides his face, who then can behold him? whether it be done against a Nation, or a man only; a man alone, that is, a single person.

Secondly, Usually it is translated together, or with company: So (Ezra 4. 3.) The Jews refusing the help of

Tobiah

Tobias and Sanballat said, We will build together. Their meaning is not, we and you will build together; but we Jews will build together by our selves, we will not mingle and incorporate with you in this work.

Thirdly, The word is expressed, by wholly, or every whit (Job 10.8.) We translate, Thy hand hath made me, and fashioned me together round about; that is, thou hast made me wholly, or every whit, one part as well as another; my hand as well as my head, my little finger as well as my foot is of thy making.

Fourthly, It signifies alike, or one as well as another, (*Psal.*33.15.) The Lord from Heaven beholdeth all the children of men, he fashions their hearts alike; not that all mens hearts are alike, or of one form and fashion, for if they were, their way, their course, and their end would be alike; but the Lord fashioneth their hearts alike; that is, as he fashions the heart of one man, so the heart of another; 'tis as easie with God to fashion the heart of the greatest Prince, as of the meanest Plebeian. The Lord is the fashioner of all mens hearts, and he alone can fashion the heart.

We render the word here in the fourth or last sence, They shall lye down alike in the dust; that is, they shall all lye down in the dust, and in the dust they shall be as one. Yet some render it in the third sence, They shall lye down every whit, or wholly in the dust; that is, all their pride, and pomp, their beauty and strength shall lye down every whit and wholly in the dust, they shall not save nor deliver the least piece of themselves from the dust of death. Again, others read it in the second sence, They shall lye down together in the dust; that is, good and bad, high and low, rich and poor, weak and strong, beautiful and deformed, shall be tumbled and mixed together in the grave. Death and the dust make no distinctions of men; and they unmake (as to corporals and externals) those that were. Though every man should have (as many have) a distinct grave when they dye, as they had distinct houses and dwelling places while they lived, yet the grave quickly blots out all distinctions. So that they who were far enough asunder in state and manners and affections while they lived, may yet be said when they dye, to lye down alike or together in the dust.

And the worms shall cover them.] We have here only a further description of the dead. Thus the Prophet speaks of the proud Babylonian (Isa.14.11.) Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee. Those words are a holy scorn cast upon the funeral pomps, in which Kings, Emperors, and mighty men were wont to be buried. Their carkasses had curious Carpets and fine linnen spread under them, and laid upon them; they were embalmed, spiced and perfumed; yet saith the Prophet of a chief one, Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, the worms are a Carpet under thee, and the worms are a covering over thee. Thus here, The worms shall cover them: Dust shall be their down-bed, and worms shall be their bed-cloaths. The body alive is but living dust, and when a man dieth his body first returns to, and then turns, or is resolved into dust. Living man is but a worm, and when he dieth worms come about him, and come of him; The worms shall cover them.

From the whole verse observe,

Death makes no difference among men.

While men walk upon this dust their distances are many, but when they lye down in the dust they are all alike, or they lye down alike. Death is the great Leveller. And they who, indeed, are so, seem like death, to act more for the dissolution of the world, then the reformation of it. Men will not be fit to live in an equality, till they have been first made equal by death (*Eccles.*2.16.) How dieth the wise man, as the fool? Moral wise men dye as fools, yea spiritual wise men dye as fools, as to their state in death, though there be the greatest unlikeness between them as to their state beyond death. As godly wise men and fools, are not, as to spirituals, alike in their lives, so after death they are everlastingly divided as to eternals; yet the fool and the wise, good and bad are alike, as to their present entertainment in and under the Dominion of natural death. To clear this a little further, Man may be considered in a threefold state.

First, In the state of this life; here they are both alike, and unlike. We see some good men prosper, and so do many wicked; we see unjust men sometimes troubled, and so are the righteous often. Thus they are alike, and run parallel in their outward condition. Again, here we see a godly man afflicted, and the ungodly prosper. Your next prospect may be an ungodly man mourning, and the godly rejoycing. Thus they are unlike, and run cross in their outward condition, as to this life.

Secondly, Consider them in reference to the death of the body, of which this Text speaks; as to that, good and bad, one and other, are all as one; you cannot distinguish between the dust of holy, and unholy men; you cannot read the difference of sin and grace upon their graves. In this they are alike.

Thirdly, Men may be considered in reference to the state of the next life, there they are unlike, and there they shall be utterly unlike for ever; there they part, and shall never meet in any nearness or likeness of state any more. In what condition death finds men, Judgment shall deal with them. There is no work nor device in the grave for the bettering or altering of any mans condition. As men fall, so they shall rise, and then all men shall be dealt with by the open rule of Justice, even according to what they have done in the body, whether it be good or whether it be evil. The Lord hath sometimes made the difference between his people and the wicked very discernable in temporals; he hath distinguishing mercies for his even in this life (Mal. 3.18.) Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked. The Prophet (I conceive) doth not refer only (if at all) to the state of the wicked and righteous in the world to come; but to some eminent turn or change which the Lord would make in this world, by visible judgments upon the wicked, and salvations wrought for the righteous. Thus the Lord made a difference to the eye between his people and the Egyptians by the death of their first-born, and by drowning their huge Army in the Sea. As in that, so in all dispensations wrought with an high and open hand, 'tis easie to return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked. The difference between the righteous and wicked in their soul-state is alwayes great, but it is not alwayes plain, the natural eye cannot see it: the character is too spiritual for such a sight. Yet a time will come, when a carnal eye shall see the difference and and easily discern that there is a reward for the righteous, and that the wicked were but reserved to a day of wrath. And that, though all lye down in the dust alike, yet when men are raised up out of the dust, a vast unlikeness will appear among them. They will appear as unlike, as goats and sheep, chaff and wheat, as gold and dross, as light and darkness; nor shall any be like another in the face of his enjoyments, who is not like him in his heart and spirit.

VERS. 27, 28, 29.

Behold, I know your thoughts, and the devices which ye wrongfully imagine against me.
For ye say, where is the house of the Prince? and where are the dwelling places of the wicked?
Have ye not asked of them that go by the way? and do ye not know their tokens?

JOB now prepares and buckles himself to draw up his Conclusion, not only to what Zophar had lately spoken, but generally to all that had been spoken by any of his friends from the beginning of the disputation.

Behold, I know your thoughts.

Job seems to deal with their thoughts as well as with their words, with their intentions as well as with their arguments. Behold! He might well put a Behold before this; for 'tis a wonder. Come see a man (said that woman with admiration, *Joh.*4.29.) which told me all things that ever I did. And we may say with no less admiration, Come, Behold a man, that can tell us what we think; A man who not only heareth what men are speaking, but seeth what they are thinking.

Behold (saith Job) I know your thoughts.] The Hebrew word which we render Thoughts, is not meant of any ordinary מחשבות ordinary transient thoughts, which slip in and out unregarded; but of setled thoughts, well wrought thoughts, thoughts made up and curiously formed into conclusions or resolutions. It notes a kind of Art in thinking; though to think be a natural work, yet there is nothing wherein man acteth the Artist more then he doth in thinking; in this much of the hellish and black Art, and in this much of the heavenly and holy Art is exercised, though in neither of them it be shewed. Thoughts are close, secret work; and yet there is much art in hiding this art of thinking, or at least in hiding what we have thought, till the seasons of discovery. Job speaks as if he had prevented his friends discovery, and without their telling, could tell what they had been thinking.

Scio vos. Sept.

Behold, I know your thoughts.] The Seventy translate, Behold, I know you; as we use to say to a man whose intentions and designs we suppose are known to us, We know you well enough. And that's as much as to say, I know your thoughts.

But is it not the sole Priviledge of God to know the thoughts? Is not the heart his peculiar, a Cabinet which none can unlock or look into but the most High? Is not this his stile? I search the heart. And what is the heart which God searcheth? or what doth God search for in the heart? The heart is nothing else but the treasury of our thoughts; and God searches for nothing else there but our thoughts; either simple, as they are in our meditations, or compounded as they are in our affections. David ascribes this glory to the Lord (Psal. 139. 1, 2, 3.) O Lord, thou hast searcht me, and known me; Thou knowest my down sitting and mine up rising; that is, all my outward motions; but is that all? No (saith he) Thou understandest my thoughts afar off. Our thoughts are evident to God, even before they are; our thoughts are said to be afar off, when they are not thought; yet then they are as nigh to God as they are to us when we are thinking them, even actually present; our thoughts are as audible to God as our words are to men; he hears the language of our spirits, what our hearts say, when our tongues are silent. When our tongues speak plain English to men, yet, as to our thoughts, we may be Barbarians to them. As the Apostle saith of him that speaketh in an unknown language, he is a Barbarian to the most learned man in the world, in regard of his thoughts. Man knows not the meaning of mans thoughts while he is speaking, unless he speak (which some do not) his thoughts. But let the tongues of men be never so cross to their hearts, and what they speak, not a light to discover, but a shadow to darken their thoughts; yet God knoweth them, and by this we know that he is God. 'Tis said of Christ in the Gospel, That he knew their thoughts (Matth. 9. 4. & 12. 25. Luke 5. 22.) And this was an unanswerable argument of his divinity, or that he was God. Only God, or (as Christ was) God-man, can reach the thoughts of man. That's an eminent Text (Joh. 2. 24, 25.) Jesus came to Jerusalem, and many believed in his Name, when they saw the miracles which he did, but Jesus did not commit himself to them; that is, he did not trust himself with them, or (according to the letter) he could not believe himself into the hands of those believers. But why did not Christ commit himself to believers? Sure if Christ might be safe in the hands of any men, he might be so in the hand of believers. The Text gives the reason, Because he knew all men, and needed not that any should testifie of man, for he knew what was in man. Christ would not believe these believers, for though they had a fair outward appearance, and made profession, yet he knew what was within as well as what was without; and he knew that all was not right within: he knew that many of their hearts were nought and rotten, and therefore could not trust himself with them. And he needed none to witness this concerning them, for he knew what was in man; he saw the falsness of their hearts through the covers and visards of their fairest professions. And to do so is the priviledge of God alone.

Doth not Job then usurp and intrude upon it, while he saith, Behold, I know your thoughts!

I answer, Job doth not here take upon him, or assume to himself a power to unlock their hearts, and see immediately what thoughts lay there; he was more holy, and more humble, then to boast thus beyond his line. His meaning is only this, I know your thoughts; that is, I do easily collect what is in your hearts, what is in your breast: though you do not speak the thing directly, yet I perceive your meaning well enough; I know what you would have me understand and take to my self by your so often repeating and insisting upon the destruction of wicked men, and the overthrow of the ungodly; I know that in all this you mean me; you think that I have been overthrown as a wicked man, and that I have been destroyed as an ungodly one; your discourse hath so often fallen and insisted upon that point, that now 'tis easie to conjecture what you think of me and my condition; though you hover in generals, and speak in a third Person, though you do not bring it home to me and say, Thou art the man, yet I perceive clearly what and whom you drive at. And thus wise men can somewhat more then guess at random what the special thoughts of other men are, by those things which are spoken generally and afar off. So then while Job makes this peremptory conclusion, I know your thoughts; 'tis as if he had said, I clearly apprehend without any further explication or comment, whither all this tends which you have been speaking; what you aim at, what you drive at, what lyes at the bottom of all this, is plain to me; I have not been sleeping while you have been arguing; I have not onely consider'd the letter of your discourse, but the tendencies of it; and I understand the inside as well as the outside of all.

Cogitationes eorum se nosse dicit non quasi divinaret, aut sibi eorum animos scrutandi vim tribuerit, sed quia ipsi facile fuit videre quid illi sibi vellent illa toties repetita commemoratione exitii improborum. Merl.

Hence observe, That, 'tis possible for man to know the thoughts of man.

We are taught this by Solomon (Prov. 20. 5.) Counsel in the heart of man is like deep waters. The heart of man is deep, as deep and wide as the Ocean, wherein (to allude to the Psalmist, Psal. 104. 25.) There are things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts. There are light and easie imaginations, which float on the top, and there are weighty and sad meditations which keep at the bottom. Such are the counsels of mans heart; Counsels are thoughts contrived and wrought in the heart; Counsels are thoughts shaped and formed up between Imagination and Judgment; these Counsels in the heart are like deep waters; 'tis hard to draw or pump them up. Few can reach so deep as the Counsels which are in the heart of man; yet some men can: And Solomon tells us who can, A man of understanding will do it. But is not every man (except meer fools and mad-men) a man of understanding? Not so; for though every man hath an understanding, yet there are not many men of understanding; A man of understanding, is a man of great or much understanding. As by a like Hebraism, A man of desires, is a man much or greatly desired; and a man of bloods, is a very bloody and cruel man; so a man of understanding, is a very understanding man; or a man who seems nothing else but understanding. Such a man will draw the counsel of other men out of their hearts. A man of the greatest understanding, and most reaching head, cannot go down into these deep waters of the heart; all that he can do by all his wit and skill, by the strongest engines of his brain, is only this, to draw it out. This gives light to the Text of Job, and to the point in hand, shewing us how man may be said to know the thoughts of man; and that the difference is great between the manner of Gods knowing the thoughts of man, and mans knowing of them. Which I shall yet more distinctly open. We may conceive it thus; Man knows the thoughts of man by some argumentation or inference; so that his knowledge of the thoughts of man is but conjectural at the best. Man cannot determine unerringly what the thoughts of another are. And therefore it is not lawful to make the thoughts of any man the matter of his accusation; because we cannot infallibly know the thoughts of any man, unless himself will make them known to us. So that, to say such a man thought so, is not a legal testimony against any man. Conjectures amount not to proofs. And because God knows the thoughts of man intuitively, directly, and infallibly (he is as certain what our thoughts are, as what our actions are) therefore God may judge men for their thoughts as much as for their words, or works, and so he will.

Further, Man may attain this conjectural knowledge of thoughts divers wayes.

First,

First, By words, I mean not words which are the expreſs image of a mans thoughts, and were ſpoken purpoſely to diſcover them; as ſometimes we ſay to a friend, I will tell you my thoughts, or what I think; for any fool may know the thoughts of a man if he will tell them; but a wiſe man will collect what lodges in the thoughts unuttered, by that which is uttered in words darkly and indirectly; he will ſail in thoſe deep waters of the heart (as Solomon calls them) by a ſide-wind, by a half-wind, yea ſometimes by a contrary wind. He will collect meanings by remote intimations; as Benhadad's ſervants did when Ahab did but ſay, he is my Brother (1 Kings 20. 33, 34.) hence they inferred, that Ahab had thoughts of peace in his heart to Benhadad.

Secondly, A man may attain the thoughts of another by his ſilence. As he that ſaith nothing thinks the more; ſo much of a mans thoughts may be known, concerning a buſineſs by his ſaying nothing. Not to anſwer hath much of an anſwer in it, and to be ſpeechleſs is to ſpeak.

Thirdly, The thoughts of the heart are oftentimes known by the Countenance, and the heart is Printed upon the face (Iſa. 3. 9.) The ſhew of their Countenance doth witneſs againſt them. 'Tis likely enough that the people of whom the Prophet ſpake, ſhewed their ſin more wayes, then by the ſhew of their Countenance. They were ſo impudent that they declared ther ſin as Sodom, and did not hide it: yet the countenance will ſhew ſin, though it be otherwiſe hid. The face doth often betray the heart, and ſpeaks that which the tongue conceals. They who are critical and curious in ſtudying men whom they converſed with, obſerve the caſt of their eyes, and the changes of their countenance, as much as their diſcourſe; and in theſe they read a diſcovery of the thoughts and intents of the heart. The Italians have a Proverb, That a man with his words cloſe, and his countenance looſe, may travel undiſcovered, what he is, or goeth about, all the world over.

Fourthly, The thoughts of the heart may be known by the geſtures of the body. Some have no other way to make known their thoughts but by ſigns. They literally ſpeak with their feet, and teach with their fingers, as Solomon ſaith, many do in a figure (Prov. 6. 13.) Thus the dumb ſpeak; and thus the reſerv'd thoughts of thoſe who can ſpeak freely enough are ſometimes known. A nod with the head, a ſhrug with the ſhoulders, the folding or ſtretching out of the hands, the pointing of a finger, all or any of theſe tell the thoughts of the heart.

Fifthly, Thoughts are often known by events. A ſuddain accident opens the cloſet of the heart. So we may underſtand that ſpeech of old Simeon to the Bleſſed Virgin (Luke 2. 35.) Yea a ſword ſhall paſs through thine own ſoul alſo, that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed. That ſword was the heart-ſorrow which Mary conceived when her Son and Saviour ſuffered. This ſad event occaſion'd the revealing of many a mans heart, and the bringing forth of thoſe thoughts in the various tempers of men about it; which elſe, poſſibly, had never ſeen the Sun. The providences of God whether proſperous or afflictive, turn the inſide of many men outward, and make them appear as they are. And this two wayes, Firſt, The thoughts of a man are ſo revealed to himſelf; many would not believe that their own hearts had ſuch lodgers in them, ſuch proud, ſuch envious, ſuch timerous, ſuch revengeful, ſuch covetous, ſuch diſcontented thoughts, did not ſome providence draw them out. Secondly, Thus alſo the thoughts of other mens hears are revealed to us. 'Tis ſaid (Deut. 8. 2.) that the Lord led the children of Iſrael fourty years in the Wilderneſs, to prove them, and to know what was in their hearts; not that God needed to go ſo far about, or to fetch ſuch a compaſs to know what was in their hearts; but he ſpeaks there either after the manner of men, who by various turning and ſuddain events come to know the minds of others; or when 'tis ſaid, he did this to know what was in their hearts; the meaning is, he did it to make their hearts known (which elſe had been a ſecret) both to others and themſelves.

Sixthly, We may know the thoughts of another, by comparing his actions and the occaſions of them together; that which leads a man into any work, ſhews the bent of his heart. Pilate appear'd very unwilling to condemn and crucifie Chriſt, he ſtood long upon it, and contended with the Jews about it; but at the laſt, when the Jews cryed out (John 19. 12.) If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæſar's friend. When Pilate heard that ſaying, he brough Jeſus forth. His delivering up Chriſt, upon the occaſion of this ſpeech, plainly diſcovered the ſtrain of his thoughts, that they were covetous, ambitious, and cowardly thoughts; he was afraid to do juſtice, leſt he ſhould diſpleaſe Cæſar; he was afraid to deliver an innocent man, leaſt he himſelf ſhould be dealt with as a guilty man; he ſaw no rule why he ſhould condemn Chriſt, but when once they told him that he was not a friend to Cæſar if he did not, that word over-rul'd him. Thus his heart came out, and he appear'd thus thoughted, that rather then he would part with his Authority, he would part with a good Conſcience.

Yet be cautious in tampering about the thoughts of others; it is Gods Royalty to know thoughts, and therefore we ſhould not be over-buſie with them. It may quickly be our own ſin, and our brothers wrong, to be gueſſing at thoughts. And this hath cauſed many a breach, not only of the rules of love and charity, but of juſtice and righteouſneſs. 'Tis too bold an adventure to conclude peremptorily the meaning and thoughts of others, without clear conſequential proof, either in words or actions. If Job had not had more then bare preſumptions, his preſumption had been very blameable; while he ſaid, Behold, I know your thoughts,

And the devices which you wrongfully imagine againſt me.

This part of the verſe is of near affinity to the former. Mr. Broughton renders it, And your injurious imaginations againſt me. And another thus, I know your endeavours to affright me. The word which we tranſlate devices, is, as the learned in that Language tells us, of an ambiguous ſignification; ſometimes it is taken in a good, and often in an evil ſence. Which variety is uſually diſtinguiſhed and determined by ſome adjunct, antecedent or conſequent. The ſcope of this Text carrieth the worſer ſence, and the following adjunct (wrongfully) explains it ſo, The devices which you wrongfully imagine againſt me. This word is uſed (Gen. 11. 6.) when God complains of the builders of Babell, This people are one, and they have all one language, and this they begin to do, and now nothing will be reſtrained from them which they have imagined (or deviced) to do. Let the device be never ſo fooliſh and vain, never ſo proud and mad, while they are thus one, they will on, nothing ſhall reſtrain them. 'Twas an evil device which Job meant, when he ſaid, I know the devices which you

מומה Vocabulum medium eſt, in bonam partem ſumitur & in malam.

Wrongfully imagine againſt me.] The word which we render, wrongfully imagine, ſignifies to ſnatch a thing by force, or to offer violence. The Vulture, that bird of prey, is expreſſed in the Hebrew by this word, according to which propriety of the word, the Text may more ſtrictly be rendered thus, I know your thoughts, and the devices which you violently catch up againſt me; you act as if ye came rather to catch me, then to comfort me; ye hook in matters againſt me, and even ſtrain your ſelves to make me guilty. Job looks upon his friends, as if they had not conſidered his caſe in the ſimplicity of their ſpirits, or with ſincere intentions; but came as engaged men, to ſtudy arguments how they might oppoſe him, rather then reſolve and ſettle him: or as if they had ſet their wits awork, like them who contend for victory, rather then for truth, and deſire rather to pleaſe a party, then to maintain that which is right; I know the devices which you wrongfully imagine againſt me.

חמס Eſt rapere & injuſtè facere.

Note hence, Firſt, Wrong doing begins at wrong deviſing.

Thus wicked men combined againſt the Prophet (Jerem. 18. 18.) Come, let us deviſe devices againſt him. They did not find him guilty, but they reſolved to make him ſo; and becauſe they knew of no evil he had done, he muſt be as evil as they could deviſe or think him. Thoughts are the mould's of our actions, whether good or bad. And they who

who intend no good to a man, can easily think evil enough of him.

Note Secondly, Some rather then they will not wrong others, force a way to do it.

So much the word Imports, you force devices against me; you put your selves hard to it, that you may deal hardly with me. As Saul said to Samuel (1 *Sam.*13.2.) When I saw thou tarriest not within the dayes appointed, I forced my self therefore and offered a Burnt-offering. As if he had done a kind of violence to himself, before he could bring his heart to do that service. Thus many a man forces himself to vex another, not because he wants a mind to do it, but because he wants matter to do it, because nothing appears naturally, he forceth every thing. And if no fault can be forced and fastned upon him, his very innocency shall be his fault, and his not-guiltiness his accusation. The Apostle speaks of some (2 Pet. 3. 16.) who offer violence to the word of God; Unlearned and unstable men wrest the Scriptures; they put the Scriptures upon the rack and torture them, to make them confess that sence or meaning which they have not at all in them, they studiedly draw forth interpretations which the Spirit of God never put into them. And thus some who are uncharitable and censorious, wrest the speeches and actions of men, or the dealings of God with them, and draw unnatural conclusions from them. Job apprehended himself under such an unfriendly force, as gave him just occasion to say, I know the devices which ye wrongfully imagine against me.

The next verse holds out the intendment of this yet more clearly.

Vers. 28. For ye say, Where is the house of the Prince? and where are the dwelling places of the wicked?

As in the former words Job asserts that he knew the thoughts of his friends, so in these he seems to tell us their thoughts. 'Tis a speech of like form with that (*Luk.*4.22, 23.) Where Christ prevents the thoughts of the Nazarens; Ye will surely say unto me this Proverb, Physitian heal thy self; I know what you will be saying, or objecting; Physitian heal thy self; Whatever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy Countrey. Heal thy self, do miracles for thy self, that is, for thy own flesh and blood, for thy kindred and Country-men as well as for or among strangers. Thus here, I know your thoughts; for ye say, or this ye are about to say, Where is the house of the Prince? The Septuagint read, Ye will say this; as noting their perseverance, or persistance rather in that opinion, as if they had resolved to abide by it; I know, what ye have said, you will say; what ye have thought of me, ye will think of me still; ye will say, Where is the house of the Prince? and where are the dwelling places of the wicked? These words are uppermost in your thoughts now, and these thoughts ye are ready and resolved to form into these or the like words; Where is the house of the Prince? &c. These things had been said in effect before, while his friends so often minded him of the falls of Great Ones, and their dwellings. Eliphaz said it (*Chap.*15.34.) The Congregation of hypocrites shall be desolate, and fire shall consume the Tabernacles of bribery. Bildad said it (*Chap.*18.21.) Surely such are the dwellings of the wicked, and this is the place of him that knoweth not God. Zophar also said it (Chap. 20. 28, 29.) The encrease of his house shall depart, and his goods shall flow away in the day of wrath. This is the Portion of a wicked man from God; and the heritage appointed to him by God. These things ye have said, and I know your thoughts, ye will continue to say these things still,

Where is the house of the Prince? &c.

As if he had said, Ye have indeed laid down this only in a general Thesis, but I am the Hypothesis; I am understood, and the man aimed at in all your discourses concerning the overthrow of wicked men: ye might as well have spoken it out, Where is the house of the Prince? that is, of Job? And where are the dwelling places of the wicked? That is, of my children, for 'tis I and mine whom ye mean. Thus by a general discourse of the devastation of the dwellings of wicked men, they put Job into the same number; and concluded, because the same things, or the like, happened to him as to them, that therefore both they and he were alike.

Where is the house of the Prince?] First, Some interpret these words, as relating only to wicked men in general. As if Job had said, ye suppose that ye have sufficiently disproved my opinion, and proved me an hypocrite, by pointing me to the ruined houses of wicked Princes, and bidding me behold their desolations. As the Lord said to the hypocritical Jewes, (*Jer.*7.12.) Go ye now to my place which was in Shiloe, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel. So (according to this exposition) Job represents his friends, saying to him, Go to the house of the Prince, of this and that and t'other Prince, and see what work God hath made among them, and therein see what God hath already done to you, and what he will further do unto you, unless you humble your self and repent. As their houses are no where, so where is yours? But Secondly, We may also expound it particularly of Job's house, and of the houses of his children. Where is the house of the Prince? That is, where is the house in which thou as a Prince didst formerly live and flourish? doth it not lie wast? where formerly there was a great concourse of men, there now Owls and Bats inhabit, there nettles and brambles grow. The Prince of the Land of Uz lived in much splendor and magnificence, but where's his house now? As much as to say, his house is no where, 'tis gone. When the wicked said to David (*Psal.*42.) Where is now thy God? Their meaning was, Thy God is no where for thee; he is not to be found for thy help; So here, Where is the house of the Prince? That is, 'tis down, 'tis in the dust. Thus he conceives them reproaching him with his former Glory.

Again, (say others) this upbraiding question may have respect to the house wherein he then remained as a leperous and diseased person. This man lived in a Palace, where is his house now? He dwells among the Leapers, his house is but a Pest-house, or an Hospital, he dwells among the diseased. See what a goodly Palace the Prince hath, Where is the house of the Prince? But I shall not insist upon this; as conceiving the word house not to be restrained here to the place or Palace where he either formerly or then lived, but to be extended to his whole outward state and condition. As David saith (2 *Sam.*23.5.) Although my house (that is, state and family) be not so with God, &c. And the same David reporting the vain dreams of worldly men, saith (*Psal.*49. 11.) Their inward thoughts is that their houses (that is, their great port and splendour) shall continue for ever. So here, Where is the house (that is, the riches, the relations, the train and retinue) of the Prince?

The word rendred Prince, signifies one that is liberal or free, a person open-handed and open-hearted, a man of a royal and bountiful spirit; So all Princes are expressed, because they ought to be so, and 'tis their honour to be so. Close-handedness or close-heartedness is most uncomely for a Prince; the Spirit of God hath the addition of this word (Psal. 51. 12.) Uphold me with thy free (or Princely) spirit. The Spirit of God is infinitely free and liberal, ready to do good to all: As if David had said, O Lord, let me not have such a low spirit as formerly or lately I had when I yielded to the temptation of that base lust, to defile the wife, and murther the husband; O how narrow, how unprincely a spirit was this? Now Lord, uphold me with thy free Spirit, that I may never do any such unworthy act again. Let me always have a spirit touched with thy Spirit, the spirit of a Saint, that's a Princely spirit indeed. The name of Princes tells us that they are, and themselves, that they should be of a free and large, of a noble and liberal Spirit.

נדיב Liberalem, magnificum denotat; ubi est domus illius, qui in omnes munificus esse solebat? ivo icè dictum.

The word used in the Greek for Great Ones, comes up to this sence (Luke 22. 25.) The Kings of the Gentiles exercise Lordship over them; and they that exercise Authority upon them are called gracious Lords; or as we render Benefactors. As if all that Kings, as Kings, are to do, or their whole business, were to do good, or acts of Grace, they are called Benefactors, or, Gracious Lords. Where is the house of the Prince?

And where are the dwelling places of the wicked?

Here's a second Query, but 'tis of the same scope with the first. Mr. Broughton renders it, Where is the Tent and Pavilion of the wicked? Another, Where is the Tent of the dwellings of the wicked? A third, Where is the Tabernacle of the Tabernacles of the wicked? That is, their chiefest Tabernacle, or their most glorious dwelling place. As if they had said; We do not ask where are the Cottages of poor wicked men, but where are the stateliest Palaces of the wicked, their Tabernacle of Tabernacles. Thus it answers that Hebraism which we have often in Scripture, to note any Superlative excellency; as, A Song of Songs, that is, the chiefest Song; and, The holy of holies, that is, the most holy place. So here, Where are the Tabernacle of Tabernacles? That is, the choice, the chief, the most beautiful Buildings that ever the wicked had? What's become of them? And here, as was said before of the house of the Prince, we must not understand the bare dwellings of the wicked, but all the port and greatness belonging to them.

אהל משכנות Ubi tentoria habitationū impiorum. Jun. i.e. Magnificum ex multis habitationibus cōstans. Jun. Tabernaculū tabernaculorum, i. e. præcipuum habitaculū. Lavat. Quasi illarū ruinæ vestrā ad versum me sententiam confirment. Bez.

Further, Some distinguish this part of the Verse from the former, by conceiving the Tabernacle here spoken of to be a place for worship, not an ordinary dwelling place; As if he had said, Where are the stately Temples which hypocrites frequented? Job was accounted hypocritically wicked by his friends, not prophanely wicked. Now (say they) his house is down, and his Chappel is down; his state is gone, and his Religion is gone, all is gone.

And whereas the former part of the verse speaks of a Prince, and the latter of the wicked; Some understand them of a distinct, and others of the same person, implying that Princes are commonly wicked; and that they who carry Greatness in their titles, seldom carry goodness in their hearts. Princes have the same corruptions in them, and more temptations round about them then other men; and therefore 'tis harder for a Prince then for a poor man not to be wicked. But I pass these things, though truths in themselves, because I cannot offer them with any confidence as the intendment of the Holy Ghost in this Text.

And having spoken before, oftener then once, of these devastations and ruines which God brings upon wicked men and their houses, I shall not insist upon any such observation here,

> Only Note, First, That, the estates and houses of Princes, though strong and sumptuous, yet come to ruine and vanish as well as the meanest Cottages or the estates of meanest men.

Where is the house of the Prince?] He doth not say, where is the house of the poor man? we can scarce see their houses above ground at the best. As bodily death breaks open the door of the Prince, as soon as of the poor man; so civil death or destruction takes hold upon the estate and house of the Prince, as soon and sooner, then upon the house or estate of a poor plebeian. These dispensations have a voice, and their voice like that in the Prophet saith, cry; All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field. The grass withereth, and the flower fadeth, but the word of God endureth for ever. It will never be said, Where is the word of the Lord? What is become of the Promises? Some in the prophaneness of their hearts say, Where is the promise of his coming? Where is the word of the Lord? Yea some in the pride and blasphemy of their hearts say so of God himself, Where is he? But it can never be truly said, Where is the word of God? Where is his Promise? These shall abide, these have no seed of death or decay in them; Heaven and earth shall pass away, but one Iota, one title of the word of God shall in no wise pass away till all be fulfilled. But of all the things of the world, the goodliness of man, the Pallaces of Princes, the dwelling places of the wicked, it will shortly be said, and of many of them it hath been said already, Where are they? what's become of them? they are even like withering flowers; as the grass withers, and the flower fades, so have those dwellings and estates which seemed to challenge all changes, and bid time do its worst. Secondly, Note, > Wickedness is the ruine of the houses and estates of Princes.

'Tis sin that rots the timber; yea sin will rot the very stones, and cause the marble pillars to moulder away like dirt; sin hath brought a rot upon all worldly things, and blasted the beauty of the creature. The houses of Princes, with all their goodly array and furniture, will soon corrupt through the wickedness of Princes; Where are the dwelling places of the wicked? If any desire the resolution of this and the former query, or are yet doubtful and unsatisfied about them, The next verse puts them another question, which shews how and by whom they may be satisfied and receive a resolution of their doubts. Or taking the queries of the former verse, as put to Job by his friends, here Job puts queries to them. As if he had said, I know ye will enquire of me, Where is the house of the Prince? &c. But ye might spare my pains, for any one will answer your question if you will but ask him.

Vers. 29. Have ye not asked of them that go by the way? and do ye not know their tokens?

Ye ask, Where is the house of the Prince? Ask of them that go by the way? Mr. Broughton renders, Can't you ask them that go by the way? You say where's the house of the Prince? what need you ask me? Can't you ask them that go by the way? The Vulgar reads it thus, Ask any man that goes by the way, and you shall know that he understands these things; ask the next man you meet, and he will inform you, that the houses of many Princes prosper, and that the dwelling places of many wicked men flourish unto this day. Have ye not asked of them that go by the way?

Interrogate quemlibet de viatoribus, & hæc eadem illum intelligere cognoscetis. Vulg.

Two things are here to be enquir'd into, for the clearing of these words.

First, About what they should enquire, or what's the thing to be asked.

Secondly, Who are these travellers or goers by the way, to whom the question is to be put, or who are to be asked?

First, What's the matter to be asked? Some conceive that Job bids them enquire about his dealings, with men, whether just or unjust, whether he had been an oppressour, or covetous, or proud? ask of them that go by the way and see if they can joyn in the report that you give of me? Surely you have made no enquiry of me, otherwise you would not make this judgment of me. Thus Job seems to speak, in his integrity, as Samuel did (1 Sam. 12. 3.) Behold, here I am, witness against me before the Lord, whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed, or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith, and I will restore it to you. Can they who go by the way testifie any such thing of me; if they can, let them; if they cannot, why do you my friends judge thus of me?

Non interrogastis de me viatores & signa eorum quæ dixerūt vobis de justitia mea non potestis negare. Vatabl.

Secondly, Ask about the doctrine which I have held forth concerning the dealings of God with wicked men. You think I am departed from the truth because I maintain, that God useth much liberty in disposing the things of this life. But ask them that go by the way? hear their Judgment, they'le tell you, that wicked men sometimes prosper, and that Godly men are often afflicted in this world. Have ye asked this or that other question, or any question which tends to the clearing up of my innocency, or the resolving of this controversie between us? Have ye asked such questions of them that go by the way? But who are they? that's the second question.

First, Some understand the Text of those who are at the end of their way; who are no longer as passengers in this world, but are passed out of it. So the words are conditional, or spoken upon supposition; as if Job had said, O that you could but ask some of those that have travelled through this world, and have ended the journey of this life, concerning the state of wicked men: if you had their testimony the whole controversie were at an end. We should not need to stand troubling our selves about their prosperity in this life, seeing they are shut out of all the comforts of the next life. If we could lay our ears to the gates of hell, and hear what Cain saith, and what Judas saith, and what other damned wretches say, who have lived and died in sin and unbelief; they would satisfie us, that we need not fear wicked men shall not be punished enough, because they are not alwayes punished here.

Utinam liceret quemliber de viatoribus, qui confecto hujus vitæ itinere ex hac vita demigrarūt, convenire atq; testem proferre. Pined.

Secondly,

Secondly, Others understand the words Anologically; Ask those that go by the way; that is, ask the faithful? ask believers who are in the present state of travellers, pilgrims, and strangers in this world. As if Job had said, If ye would be resolved about this thing, do not enquire of men that are worldly and carnal, who have their portion in this life; who have no Country but this below, who make this their end and their all. But I would have you ask those who make this world but their way, and do not take up their felicity here. These are the only men that are likely to answer the scruple, and decide the question between us. But I wave this also, though it be a truth, that men who make this world their passage only, not their home, are best able to give an account about the dispensations of God in the world.

Qui nō constituunt fiē in bonis tēporalibus, sed per viam hujus vitæ transeunt ad terminū fœlicitatis futuræ, hi non habent mentē obscuratā pravis affectibus, & ideo rectè possunt judicare. Greg. Aquin.

Thirdly, By those that go by the way, say others, are meant the Jews; whose life was in a special manner a life of travel, from their going out of Egypt to their entrance into Canaan; As if he had said, Enquire of that people who have the Oracles of God, to whom God hath communicated himself more then to any people in the world; go, ask them, enquire of them; they will tell you, they will give you tokens, and resolve this doubt. We dwellers in the land of Uz, have the mind of God somewhat obscurely revealed to us, but ask the wise men among the Jews, to whom the Oracles of God are committed, and among whom his Name is especially known by signs and wonders and tokens wrought among them; They will resolve you about this truth. But I pass this also.

Viatores intelligit Israelitas qui exeuntes ab Egypto verā legē atq; revelationem mysteriorum susceperunt signis & prodigiis confirmatas, quos facilè audire & cōsulere potuissent amici Job. Burg.

Fourthly, Some of the Rabbins interpret yet higher of the old Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, ask their judgment in this thing; ask what Abraham, what Isaac, what Jacob, thought of these things; ask those ancient Hebrews. The word Hebrew, signifies A passenger, or a goer by the way; and they (as some tell us) were so called from their uncertain motions. They going out of their own Land, and being for many ages but strangers and pilgrims in every Land. Yet others rather conceive that the Hebrews had their name from Heber, *Gen.*10.11. I leave this also, and conclude.

Hebræus à עבר transire, quasi transiens, quod nomen impositum fuisse Abrahamo à Chananeis, contendit Rab. Sal. Ex quo dictus fuit Transitor, vel Trāseuphratæus sicut transelpinos vocamus. Pined.

Fifthly, That when he saith, Have ye not asked them that go by the way? The meaning is either this, Have ye consulted with men of experience, who by long travel in divers Countries have made observation of the various providences of God? Or the words are proverbial, Denoting men of ordinary capacity, men unlearned, or the vulgar; As if he had said, I need not refer this to some special men, to hear their award, I need not chuse the most wise, solid, grave, learned and judicious men to answer and resolve this doubt; but I dare refer my self, and my cause, to the next man I meet, to a meer stranger, be he what he will, learned or unlearned, if he be but a man that understands common sence, or is not a stranger to the reason of a man. Thus the Latines, when they would express a thing that is commonly known, say, Every blind man, every handy-crafts man knows this. Thus here, to say, Every man that goes by the high way knows this, is as much as to say, 'tis a thing easily and universally known. So that Job by referring the umpirage and determination of this business to men that go by the way, asserts it a plain case, and such as might be determined (if his friends had been peaceable) with little study or trouble. Job spake this more roundly (*Chap.*12.7.) where he upbraids his friends with the same thing, and doth (as it were) refer the business to the Beasts. Ask the Beasts and they shall teach thee, and the fowls of the air, and they shall tell thee, &c. This is so plain a case that the beasts of the Earth, and the fowls of the air may give a resolution in it, therefore, surely, they who go by the way may. Ask them that go by the way. I need not draw out a select Committee, the next traveller will serve the turn; Have ye not asked them that go by the way?

Quasi proverbiali loquutione, viatores dicuntur imperiti, ignari vel obvii quique. Quod Latinis Lippis & tonsoribus notum, id Idumæis forsan, viatoribus notum.

And do you not know their tokens?

The words may be read, Certainly you will be able to know their tokens. Some give the sence thus, If the men you meet with, prove unable to express their minds, they will make signs significant enough to speak this; if they cannot debate and argue the case, yet they will hold up their hands and give a token of their consent with me in this point of difference between you and me.

Secondly, These tokens or signs are rather Examples, of which travellers have store in their books or memories. As if he had said, There is no traveller of note, but hath examples in his note book, yea scarce a common goer by the high-way-side, but can produce some president out of History or Experience to confirm what I have all along affirmed; Have ye never heard travellers tell stories of the greatness, power, and magnificence of wicked men? And whereas we translate, Do you not know their tokens? the Hebrew may be thus rendred; And their tokens you shall not be estranged (or alienated) from. Though travellers and they that go by the way be strangers to you, yet they will give you plain tokens, such as you cannot be strangers to. Mr. Broughton's Translation consents to this. So ye would not make their signs strange. There will be so much clearness in what they say, that you will not be able to gainsay it.

Per signa intelliguntur exempla quæ veniunt alis sunt documento, hæ autem explicantur versibus sequentibus. Jun.

Signa eorum non alienabitis; vel, non aliena ducetis. Nunquamnō illos (scilicet viatores) magnificorū illorū potentiæ indicia commemorantes audivistis? Be:

Si... perfi... mi... quod viatores signa virarum observare solean memoriæ causa.

Lastly, When he saith, Do you not know their tokens? we may understand Job persisting in the metaphor of travellers, who to help their memory, have certain tokens to observe their way by, or what is remarkable in the way: If you enquire of them which is the way to such a place, they will give certain tokens: Such a tree, or such a house, such a Castle, or such a pillar. They will give you a token for every turning of the way, and do ye think they have made no observations about this thing? cannot they (think you) give such signs and tokens as may warrant your assent to what I have asserted. As if Job had thus more plainly formed his speech; You seem much offended with my tenets about the afflictions of good men, and the prosperity of the wicked. But why are you ignorant of that, which they that go by the way can inform you in, and give you many pregnant examples and tokens of, which the unlearned know, or which you may learn of every Passenger you meet, that God deals variously with men; that sometimes the wicked prosper, and that only sometimes they are destroyed; that judgment comes suddenly upon some of them, and that others are reserved to the day of Judgment; This is such a known truth, that every Passenger is able to resolve you in it, and therefore 'tis very dishonourable for you to be ignorant of it. Thus Job rebukes their negligence about, or their nescience of the point in question. Have ye not asked them that go by the way? and do ye not know their tokens?

Reprehendit Job tam supinam in amicis ignorantiam quæ vel à viatoribus ipsis discere poterant ultra ignorare nunt. Merl.

Hence Observe, First, Some doctrines and dealings of God are so plain, that any man may know them.

There are wayes of God past finding out; you cannot know them, not only of the next man you meet by the way, but not of the wisest in the world, no nor in the meetings of all the wise men in the world. These met together, cannot shew you the hidden wayes of God. And as some Providences and works of God are dark, so also are some doctrines of faith: some truths are so mysterious, that they amaze the understanding of the wisest, and the more they are lookt into, the less they are seen. But there are both words and works of God very plain, so plain, that he who goes by the way may know them, the meanest capacity may reach them; they are milk for babes. As there are several degrees and measures of spiritual understanding, so spiritual things of several degrees and measures are presented to the understanding. And though there are some spiritual things which the highest understanding cannot fully reach, yet there are spiritual things enow both for the attaining of salvation hereafter, and the due ordering of our conversation here, which the lowest spiritual understanding may savingly reach unto, and they that go by the way resolve you in.

Secondly, Note, What we know not our selves, we should be willing to learn of any, though (in many things) inferior to us.

It is a sin not to know what is our duty, but it is more sinful not to enquire after it, though it be of them that go by the way. We should be ashamed of our ignorance, but let no man be asham'd to have his ignorance cur'd by the meanest helps. The holy Ghost sends the sluggard to learn his duty of the Pismire, To consider her wayes, and be wise. The Lord by his Prophet (*Isa.*1.) sends the Jews to the Ox, and to the Ass; The Ox knows his owner, and the Ass his Masters Crib, but Israel hath not known;

my people doth not consider. Unreasonable creatures may in some things act nearer reason, then some men, and may therefore teach such men reason; how much more may the meanest of men, ordinary way-goers, or carriers do it, who being endued with reason, are also furnished and adorned with Grace.

Thirdly, Note, The Examples of former ages, are for our Instruction.

As what was written aforetime was written for our Instruction; So what was done aforetime was done for our Instruction. All the former Examples of Gods dealing with good and bad, with the godly and with the wicked, are significations of his mind to us. What God hath done, shews us not only what he hath alwayes power to do, and may justly do, but what ('tis probable) he will do.

Lastly, Whereas Job sends his friends who were learned and wise men to common passengers for resolution, or assures them that even such might resolve them.

Observe, The wise and prudent are sometimes ignorant of those truths which mean men have attained to.

Wise men are not alwayes wise, much less are they alwayes wise in all things. They who know most, know but in part; and many know much, who know little or nothing of the better part. The eyes of some are darkned, and shut up by God. (Mat. 11.25.) Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto Babes; that is, to mean men, to the poor and weak, to those that are but infants and children in knowledge. Not a few shut their own eyes, and their hearts are prepossessed with prejudices. They are hindred from receiving truth in the love of it, by the love of themselves and of the world. The Scribes and Pharisees were knowing and learned men; yet the men that went by the way, understood more of the Gospel then they: yea Publicans and harlots (who were the worst sort of people that went by the way) entred into the kingdom of God (that is, received the Gospel) before them (*Mat.*21.31.) The opinion which some have of their wisdom, keeps them on this side many points of wisdom. The Apostle saith, (1 *Cor.*1.21.) that, The world by wisdom knew not God; that is, not by their own wisdom. God is only known by wisdom (as it is our only wisdom to God) but he can be known by no wisdom but his own; that is, by no wisdom but that which himself gives. But it should seem by the Apostle, that a man cannot know God by that wisdom neither, for he saith in the same place, that the world by wisdom knew not God (no not) in the wisdom of God. And if God be not to be known in that wisdom, in what or by what can he be known? I answer, The wisdom of God there intended, is not the wisdom which God works in us by his Spirit; but the wisdom which man may see in the things which God hath wrought. So that when the Apostle saith, In the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, His meaning is, that the wisest of men did not arrive at a saving knowledge of God (though they did arrive at a knowledge of God which left them without excuse, Rom. 1.) by beholding the frame of the creature, upon which very much of the wisdom of God is engraven. Yea not only do they fall short of the saving knowledge of God in that wisdom of God which may be read in the book of the creature, but in that wisdom of God also which is revealed in the book of Scripture. One of the Ancients compares the School-men, who were men of the largest parts and subtlest wits, to such as having good bread before them, did yet alwayes grate their teeth upon stones; or to such as having excellent wine before them, yet continually suck'd in the wind. For though they had the best Gospel doctrines and truths of God before them, yet they spent their time and talents about unprofitable questions and airy notions, which puff up, but do neither edifie nor nourish. So that whilst many simple honest souls (having truth of grace) found bread and wine in the word of God for the strengthening and refreshing of their hearts: These learned Rabbins did but whet their teeth upon stones, and fill their stomachs with the wind. And this caused one, more Ancient by much then the whole race of School-men, to cry out, The unlearned and ignorant (the men that go by the way) rise up and take heaven, when many that grow old in the Schools and Chairs of the Learned, moulder away in Vanities and Niceties. 'Tis not natural wisdom, nor acquired knowledge, that can give us a pure discerning of the things of God; 'tis possible for men that go by the way, for common ordinary men to understand the matters of faith and worship, as also the works of God, more solidly and soundly then they who bear the name of learned and knowing men. I am far from numbring Job's friends among formalists in knowledge; yet (which may give ground enough for this observation) Job seems to reckon their knowledge (as to the point in Question) below what might be both expected and found among men in degree and profession far below them.

urgunt inepti & cæcum rapiunt.

VERS. 30, 31.

That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction; they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath.
Who shall declare his way to his face? and who shall repay him what he hath done?

THese two Verses make up the report, which they who go by the way, were supposed ready to make, had they been asked the Question; Where is the house of the Prince? or, Where are the dwelling places of the wicked? Their answer would have been to this effect.

Hoc est illud quod viatores vos docebunt, sæpe cum calamitates orbi à domino imituntur impios illas evadere. Merc.

Vers. 30. That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction; they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath.

That the wicked is reserved.] The word which we render reserved, signifies to stop, hinder, restrain, or keep back. David speaketh thus upon the news of Nabals death, (1 *Sam.*25.39.) Blessed be the Lord that hath pleaded the cause of my reproach, from the hand of Nabal, and hath kept his servant from avenging himself. As God kept or stopt David from acting revenge for himself unduly, so the wicked man is kept or stopped by God from falling under the vengeance which is every way due unto him. Yet this stop hath a revenge in it; for, he is reserved, not so much from (though it be from) as to a day of destruction; as appears more fully in the words which follow.

In die calamitatis subtrahitur malus. Jun.

They shall be brought forth to the day of wrath.] The former clause is in the singular number, this in the plural, 'tis usual in the sacred language, (as hath been toucht formerly) to change numbers, while the same persons and things are intended: yet the change of the number in this place, may have this special intimation; that though, now, here and there, a wicked man, this or that single person may escape present judgement, yet they shall all be, as it were, chained together at last, and brought forth to a day of wrath.

Dies furorũ i. e. vehementissimi furoris.

The Hebrew is, To the day of wraths; that is, to the day of extream fierce wrath, when many wraths shall be wrapt up in one. The root signifies to pass away, and in Hithpael to be angry and enraged; because such anger passeth the bounds of reason sometimes, and alwayes passeth the bounds of ordinary moderation. And though the wrath of the Lord doth never pass the bounds of his own justice and righteousness, yet many times it passeth the bounds of mercy, or is wrath without mercy. To a day of such wraths, the wicked is reserved.

עברות a עבר

In conjugatione Hithpael significat vehemẽtèr & cum excessu quodam irasci.

So then (according to this interpretation) the day of destruction spoken of in the first part of the verse, is to be understood of lesser judgments; and the day of wrath in the latter part of the verse, of the most terrible and dreadful judgments; implying, that howsoever the wicked man may escape many black dayes, yea though he should escape all black dayes in this world, and die (as we say) in a whole skin, yet there is a day of wraths to which he shall be brought forth, and destroyed for ever.

In die contritionis prohibebitur malus ne attingat eum, contritio in die irarum ad quem ducuntur alii ipse prohibetur. Pagn.

Further, Some render, or rather paraphrase the whole verse, thus; In the day of destruction the wicked shall be kept least evil touch him, and in a day of wrath to which others are brought forth he is spared and passed by. As if the whole verse were of one tenour, and did expres in both parts of it the frequent impunity of wicked men; but I rather adhere to and rest in the sence of our own translation. In pursuance whereof the whole verse is by others read Impius prohibetur ne parva afflictione attingatur, ideo in die iræ ſubiturus erit ingentes pœnas. Caje.

read thus; That in the day of calamity the wicked are kept back, and are carried out in the day of wrath. For that tranſlation in which both parts of the verſe ſpeak the ſparing of wicked men from puniſhment, is yet expounded only of a temporal ſparing. And the difference between our rendring and that, is only in the time, not in the thing. Or that ſpeaks only of their being ſpared, yet ſuppoſeth they ſhall be puniſhed at laſt; ours expreſſeth both their ſparing and their puniſhment. That is, they are ſpared or exempted from lighter afflictions or troubles; but a day of wrath is coming in which they ſhall be produced by the righteous judgment of God, and dearly pay for all. But whether we take the words according to this and our reading, or that other before remembred and inſtanced in, the ſcope and general tendency is one and the ſame, as will appear in theſe three following obſervations, grounded upon and riſing from them,

Pravis parcitur ad diē pernicieī & ad diem iraꝝ adducuntur. Tygur.

First, Some wicked men are reſerved from preſent judgments, are hid in the ſtorms of common calamity.

That's the point upon which Job inſiſts in anſwer to his friends, who not only took it for granted, that if ever any ſtorm aroſe it would certainly ſweep away the wicked, but that all ſtorms were prepared and ſent out on purpoſe for them alone. Job oppoſeth them in this, all the Chapter over, ſhewing that many wicked men flouriſh, they and their children, and that, though they are reſerved to a day of wrath, yet they are preſerved in many dayes of wrath; and that though they are under a ſentence of condemnation, yet they are reprieved from execution. The Lord to comfort his people in Babylon, tells them by the Prophet, (*Ezek.*11.16.) I will be a little Sanctuary to them in the Countries where they ſhall come; that is, I will protect them; God is ſomewhat like this to wicked men for a ſeaſon; though he be not a ſanctuary, yet he is a ſhelter to them, he hideth them for a time. But where doth he hide them? and what's their ſhelter? He hideth them in his patience, and long-ſufferance. When God hideth his own people from evil, they are hid not only in his patience, but in his love; God hides them in his heart, he layes them in his boſom, the love, the good will of God is their Sanctuary. But God never hides or ſhelters the wicked in his boſom, or in his love; they are not hidden in his heart. The ſouls of ſuch lodge not (as the margine of *Pſal.*25.13. tells us the ſouls of them who fear him do) in goodneſs. Their ſanctuary is only in the patience, and long-ſufferance of God. The patience and long-ſufferance of God, is the ſheath in which he hideth his ſword that it deſtroy not the wicked, as the Prophet ſpeaks (*Ezek.*21.3,4, 5.) Say to the land of Iſrael, thus ſaith the Lord, Behold, I am againſt you, and will draw forth my ſword out of his ſheath; Therefore ſhall my ſword go forth out of his ſheath againſt all fleſh, from the South, to the North, that all fleſh may know that I the Lord have drawn forth my ſword out of his ſheath, and it ſhall not return any more. As if he had ſaid, I will call in my ſword no more, it ſhall never find its way back again into my ſheath. One of the Ancients puts the Queſtion, What is this ſheath to which the Lord ſaith his ſword ſhould not return? He anſwers, The ſheath is the patience of God. Now as the patience of God is a ſheath which hideth the ſword till it be drawn and receiveth Commiſſion to deſtroy the wicked of the earth, ſo the patience of God is a ſhelter to ſome wicked men, and hides them from deſtruction when the ſword is drawn. Thus they are reſerved in a day of deſtruction. And though they continue long in their ſins, yet the long-ſufferance of God may be a ſhelter to them. While the Preacher ſaith (*Eccl.*8.11.) Becauſe ſentence is not ſpeedily executed againſt an evil work, &c. He doth more then intimate that ſentence againſt an evil work is not alwayes ſpeedily executed: he doth not ſay, that ſentence againſt an evil work is not ſpeedily given or pronounced, for indeed the Lord never forbears an hour to give ſentence againſt an evil work, yet ſentence againſt an evil work is not alwayes preſently executed. The execution may be ſtay'd, though the ſentence be given. For as there is not any prayer that comes up with acceptation before the Lord, but an anſwer is given to it preſently, yet the anſwer is not performed preſently; a believer may wait long for the fulfilling of his requeſt, though his requeſt be preſently granted; ſo againſt every evil work of a wicked man, the ſentence is given preſently, but every ſentence is not preſently executed. The ſame Solomon in the next verſe of the ſame Chapter makes another ſuppoſition, which alſo implies this poſition; Though a ſinner doth evil an hundred times, and his dayes be prolonged. Which ſuppoſition (though many ſuppoſitions in Scripture cannot) may be reſolved into this poſition, That a ſinner doing evil an hundred times, that is, very many times, (that great certain number is put for a great if not a greater uncertain number) may yet, through the patience of God, paſs unpuniſhed, his dayes may be prolonged, and he reſerved from the touch of any affliction.

Regis ergo quæ ſit vagina in qua reconditur gladius? Reſp. eſſe longanimitatem dei. Theodor.

Secondly, Obſerve, A day of wrath is coming in which wicked men ſhall be brought forth to puniſhment.

Though they eſcape many dayes of judgment, yet they ſhall not eſcape all dayes of judgment. The Prophet Iſaiah ſaith, (Chap. 57.1.) The righteous periſh, and no man layeth it to heart, merciful men are taken away, none conſidering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come. Now as the righteous periſh, that is, die, and merciful men are taken away by death, few or none conſidering the deſign of God in it; that they are only taken out of harms way, or from the evil to come. So unrighteous men are preſerved from preſent periſhing, and are not taken away by a ſudden deſtruction, few or none conſidering the deſign of God in it, that they are only reſerved to the evil which is to come, and that their puniſhment is deferred to a day of greater puniſhment. We have a very remarkable paſſage to that purpoſe (*Jer.*12.3.) Thou O Lord knoweſt me, thou haſt ſeen me, and tried my heart towards thee, (he ſaid before of the wicked, that God planted them, and they took root, they were vigorous and flouriſhing, in fruitfulneſs, yet preſently he adds) pull them out like ſheep for the ſlaughter, (when are ſheep pulled out for the ſlaughter, is it not after they have been fatted in the green fields and pleaſant paſtures? then prayeth he, pull them out for the ſlaughter) and prepare them for the day of ſlaughter. Which ſome render (according to the ſtrictneſs of the letter) Sanctifie them for the day of ſlaughter. The Original word ſignifies to ſanctifie. But what meaneth the Prophet when he prayeth to ſanctifie them for the ſlaughter? if they had been ſanctified, that might have kept them from the day of ſlaughter; how then doth he ſay, Sanctifie them for the ſlaughter? I anſwer, To ſanctifie them, doth not imply the making of them holy, or the infuſion of grace, but only the ſetting of them apart, as perſons deſtinated to deſtruction. 'Tis a borrowed ſpeech taken from thoſe ceremonial rites which were uſed either about the preparing of beaſts for ſacrifice, or of perſons to partake of a ſacrifice, the Law commanding both to be ſpecially prepared and ſet apart for that purpoſe, (Exod. 12.3,4. 1 Sam. 16.5.) So that, it is as if the Prophet had ſaid, Set them out, appoint them unto the day of deſtruction, let them be untouched of other evils, let no judgment meddle or have to do with them, as with ſacred things, till the great day of ſlaughter come upon them. The Vulgar gives that reading (Amos 6.3.) which I approve not as conſonant to the Original; we read it better actively deſcribing the evil frame of voluptuous and ſenſual men, whoſe belly is their God, and who are ſwallowed up in pleaſure, They ſing to the ſound of the Viol, they lie upon beds of Ivory, and put far from them the evil day. Their work all the day long is to do evil, and yet they put the evil day afar off from them. This is the ſence of our tranſlation. But the tranſlation lately mentioned renders the Text paſſively; not as if they had ſeparated or put far from them the evil day, but as being by the juſtice of God put upon, or ſeparated and ſet apart to the evil day. Ye are ſeparated unto, or for the evil day. As if it had been ſaid, Ye have all this while lived at the higheſt rate of voluptuouſneſs and ſenſuality, and ſeem removed at furtheſt diſtance from an evil day, yet ye are only marked out, and ſeparated for the evil day. All the evil dayes which ye have hitherto eſcaped do but lead you to an evil day, from which there will be no eſcaping. Solomon aſſerts as much (*Prov.*16.4.) The Lord hath made all things for himſelf, ('tis the priviledge and happineſs of God to be his own end in all that he doth; whereas nothing doth more aggravate the unholineſs of man in what he doth, then to make himſelf the end of doing it, but, The Lord hath made all things for himself) yea even the wicked for the day of evil; That is, he hath destinated them for that special day, in which he will call them to an account, and manifest the glory of his justice upon them. A Learned Hebrician gives his opinion, that this Text in the Proverbs, may be thus translated more suitably to the Original; God hath made every thing for that which shall be answerable to it, even the wicked for the day of evil. Now what is more answerable to a wicked or an evil man, then an evil day; sin and sorrow will meet at last, and do alwayes best match together. The wicked may often escape trouble, but they are never delivered from it: all their preservations from evil, are but reservations to further evil. The Lord (saith the Apostle Peter, 2 *Epist.*2.9.) Knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust to the day of judgment to be punished. The knowledge of the Lord extends to both, he knoweth wayes enow, he hath many wayes in store to deliver the Godly; but (considering the tenour of his revea'ed will) he knoweth no way to deliver the wicked, they having refused all wayes of his appointment for their own deliverance. Therefore as to them he knoweth only (and for that he knoweth many wayes) how to reserve them to the day of judgment to be punished.

Sanctificabo eos in die occiſionis ſervabo inte- ctos uſq; diem occi- nis cui de- ſtinati ſu-

Separati iſtis in di malum, i. longe ſemo à præſenti bus malis. Separati ſtis in die malū. Vul

Tremellius.

Thirdly, By way of deduction or corollary from the whole verse, take this Observation,

Wicked men are not spared in mercy, but in wrath.

Their sparing is to smiting, and the salvations which they have (if they may be called salvations) are to destruction. When ever they are reserved from judgment, 'tis only that they may (in fittest season) be brought to a greater judgment; there is no mercy in such sparing. The long-suffring of God hath a tender of and a tendency to mercy in it; but wicked men who go on in their sins get nothing but more blows, while the patience of God doth (as it were) hold his hand from smiting them. As the Apostle is express (Rom. 2.4,5.) But thou after thy hardness and impenitent heart, treasurest up to thy self wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance. A wicked man makes a very ill market of the long day of patience. The treasure that he gets is all black money, his earnings are wrath, and that against the day of wrath, and the revelation of the righteous judgment of God. And so, that patience, which, in it self, is an act of grace, proves, in the event, an aggravation of his sin. 'Tis better not to be spared, then not to be bettered by it. The stroak is the heavier, and wounds the deeper when it comes, by how much it is the longer before it cometh. Which some note from the Hebrew word here translated wrath, which in the Verb signifies both to be angry, and to defer, protract, or put off. From the Analogy of which two significations, we may infer, That when God doth only forbear to shew his anger he is indeed most angry, and that the slowness of punishment shall be recompenced in the weight of it. In the time that wicked men are spared they sow more seed of sin, and so they must reap the greater harvest of wrath. For, as a river which is stopped up by some Lock, when that is removed, poureth it self forth with greater violence; or as an arrow the further it is drawn back from the mark by a strong arm, flies the more swiftly to the mark when it is discharged, and makes the deeper impression in it; so all the stops, defers, and draw-backs of divine wrath, do but procure and draw out the fierceness and violence of it against all abusers of divine patience.

Job having thus declared the report of the travellers concerning wicked men (That they are reserved to or in a day of destruction, and brought forth to a day of wrath) gives us also a report of the frame of their spirits; and as he had intimated, that God spares them long, so he tells us plainly why men do.

Vers. 31. Who shall declare his way to his face? who shall repay him what he hath done?

o declei verba i mihi fa- e persua- q. cc.

Some interpret this verse in application to God; Who shall declare the way of God to his face? And so 'tis the answer of a secret objection, which he possibly might make to whom that report should be made. The wicked is reserved to the day of destruction, &c. Why should not a wicked man have present punishment? Why should he live in pleasure, who is unworthy to live? Why should God exercise so much patience, and not cut him off from cumbring the ground? To these bold interrogatories, the Text answers (according to this interpretation) by two more.

Quis stare audebit ante faciem dei, ad annunciandum ei quomodo in hoc procedere debeat. Bold.

Who shall declare his way to his face? Who shall repay him? &c.

That is, Who shall take upon him to argue this with God? or find fault with the way of his dealings with the most faulty men? Who shall do this? Let me see the man that dares. So it suits well with that (Chap. 9.12.) Behold, he taketh away, who can hinder him? Who shall say to him, what dost thou? And 'tis of the same sence with that of Job again (Chap. 23.13.) But he is in one mind, who can turn him? what his soul desireth, that he doth. We may parallel it also with the two and twentieth verse of this Chapter, Shall any teach God knowledge? seeing he judgeth those that are high. What if God reserve the wicked man to the day of destruction, who shall say, why doth he so? Who shall challenge him for so doing? The latter branch is likewise rendred in compliance with this interpretation; He hath done it (or disposed of it) who shall reply upon him for what he hath done? The word (as this Author tell us) signifies not only to repay or return by action, but by word. To reply or retort a thing upon another, is a kind of repayment of it. This is a fair sense, and a great truth. The Lords actions are unquestionable, both in smiting the Godly, and in sparing the wicked; as hath been shewed upon divers overtures given in this Book. Yet

Et hoc disposuit, quis replicabit ei? Bold.

Secondly, I rather conceive the wicked man to be the subject, and person intended in this verse.

Who shall declare his way to his face? As if he had said; This wicked man is so sturdy and sullen, so big and boisterous, that no man dares speak to him, or declare that to his face which he is ready enough to do in the face of every man. As if he had said; This man is not only not smitten with the sword of God, but not with the word of man; he goes on without check or controul; as God doth not, so man dares not meddle with him, either by way of punishment or reproof. Who shall declare his way to his face? The word (I grant) here used to declare, signifieth only a bare declaration, as to tell a story, or make a narrative, and so, to declare, put alone, is no more then to speak. But to declare to the face, implies both boldness and smartness in speaking. So the Vulgar renders it, Who shall rebuke his way to his face, or before him? who shall reprove the sinful way, the wicked course he liveth in. The constant and usual practice of a man, whether good or evil, is commonly called his way in Scripture.

Quamvis verbum originale simplex sit & lene, tamen ex eo quod sequitur (in facie ejus) videtur vim accipere & ad scelerata vita reprehensionem pertinere. Pined.

Quis arguet coram eo? &c. Vulg.

Who shall declare his way to his face?] Possibly some will speak afar off, or behind his back, but who will tell him his own plainly, and to his face? In which sense the word is used (*Gal.*2.11.) When Peter was come to Antioch, I (saith Paul) withstood him to his face; That is, I did not go to the Disciples and brethren, and tell them that Peter had done amiss, but I came to Peter himself, and dealt roundly with him. Many will speak truth enough of the wicked at a distance, and tell stories of their wayes in corners, but 'tis not every mans work to declare their way to their face, or to shew it as a glass shews a man the spots of his face; which is the emphasis of the word here used.

Hence Observe, First, Many wicked men are not convinced of their wickedness, nor is it an easie matter to convince them.

And as there is alwayes difficulty in it, so sometimes there is danger in it; to do so is like taking a Bear by the tooth, or a Lyon by the beard. They act blindly, and therefore boldly; and he had need be bold who declares against their actings. Some sin against light, many sin for want of light. Some do evil against their knowledge, many are not perswaded that they have done evil. Of such the Prophet speaks, (*Jer.*2.34,35.) Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the poor innocent; yet thou sayest because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me;

(they

(they were polluted with blood, and yet clean in their own opinion) Behold, I will plead with thee, because thou sayest I have not sinned. As if the Lord had said, I will declare thy sin to thy face, because thou sayest thou hast not sinned; Thou sayest who can charge me, who can say black is my eye; Behold, I will plead with thee, and shew thee how black thou art. 'Tis hard to declare sin to their faces, who say in their hearts they have not sinned. The Prophet is commanded (*Isa.*58.1.) Lift up thy voice like a Trumpet, cry aloud, spare not, shew my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins. They see not their sins, therefore shew them their sin, they call their evil wayes good, and their transgression obedience; such must have a voice lifted up like a Trumpet to make them hear. All who are dead corporally, shall at last hear the voice of the Angels Trumpet; but they who are dead spiritually, will not hear that voice which sounds like a Trumpet, unless the Spirit of God be in the voice of man.

Secondly, Note, It is a duty to declare the wayes of wicked men to their faces.

Though every man be not called to be a reprover, and though no man be called to be every mans reprover; yet every sin calls for reproof, and some or other are called to reprove it; some should speak plain English, and home to sinners, and rebuke them not only in a parable, or in the clouds, by remote intimations, but directly and to their faces. Them that sin (saith the Apostle, 1 *Tim.*5.20. that is, who sin openly and scandalously) rebuke before all, rebuke them to the faces of others. And how secretly or privately soever any man sins, he should be rebuked to his own face, freely, and clearly. Some commit their abominations as the Prophet Ezekiel shewed in vision (Chap. 8. vers. 8, 9.) behind a wall. And he said unto me, Son of man dig now in the wall: and when I had digged in the wall, behold a door, and he said unto me, go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here. Though men sin out of sight, and use a kind of modesty in committing their abominations, yet the wall must be digged, and the door must be opened, and they who possibly were ashamed to do evil, unless behind the backs of others, must be told of it to their faces.

Thirdly, Observe, That there are not many to be found who dare declare the wayes of wicked men to their faces.

When the Lord said (*Isa.*6.8.) Whom shall I send; or who will go for us? That inquiry intimated that there were not many to be had fit for such a service as was there charged upon the Prophet (*vers.*9,10.) So when Job saith here, Who shall declare their way to their face? It argues that there are not many fit, much less forward to do it. To reprove any for sin is a hard service, especially such as are rich and Great. The flattering Prophet Amaziah would not endure, that down right Amos should propheſie at Bethel, (Amos 7.12,13.) And Amaziah said unto Amos, O thou Seer, go flee to the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and propheſie there, but propheſie not again any more at Bethel, for it is the Kings Chappel, and it is the Kings Court. As if he had said, go into the Villages and reprove the Countrey people as much as thou wilt, but take heed of medling with Princes. It is no wonder, that Amaziah could not bear Amos preaching reproofs at Court, but it is a great wonder that Amos had the holy boldness to do so. 'Tis rare to have the wayes of wicked Princes pleaded to their faces; Kings have clouds in their brows, as well as Crowns upon their heads, and are terrible to their reprovers; They command silence with a look, and would be adored as Gods, not reproved as men. The Prophet Jeremiah being sent to reprove high and low to their faces, complaineth (*Chap.*15.10.) Wo is me, my mother, that thou hast born me a man of strife, and a man of contention to the whole earth. Why was Jeremy a man of strife and contention? What! because of his proneness to contention, or because he was of a quarrelsome spirit, and loved to fish in troubled waters? No, his contentiousness was not from his disposition, but from his Commission; not from the temper of his spirit, but from his calling. He was a quiet and peaceable Prophet, but he was commissiond to propheſie terrours and troubles; he was sent forth to declare the way of that people to their faces, and he was faithful in doing it, he spared none; and therefore though he medled not in buying, or selling, in giving upon usury, or taking upon usury, though he had no worldly negotiations among them, nor mingled himself with those affairs which usually cause strife and contention among men, yet he was a man of contention. The Egyptian Lawes made it a capital crime for any to call the Idol Serapis a man, or to number him among mortals, and therefore ('tis said) they placed the Emblem of silence in all those Temples where his image stood, and he was worshipped; implying that all must be husht, and not a word spoken in derogation of him. Thus wicked men would impose silence upon all (but such as flatter them) least their wayes should be discovered. Their wayes and their tongues are their own, who is Lord over them; yet they would Lord it over all mens tongues, that none may dare to declare their wayes. And as few dare, so there are not many fit to declare their ways to their faces. To do so, requires; First, a man of knowledg and understanding, and, which is more, Secondly, a man of prudence and discretion; and which is yet more, it requires, Thirdly, a man of uprightness and integrity; yea which is more rare, Fourthly, a man of self-denial and contempt of the world. A conjunction of all these qualifications in one man is not to be found under every hedge, no nor in many well built houses. Where shall we find a man of all these ingredients? A man of knowledg, prudence, integrity, self-denial, and contempt of the world, is a kind of wonder in the world, and therefore who shall declare the wicked mans way to his face? When the Lord sent forth his Prophets to declare the wayes of wicked men to their faces, how doth he prepare and arm them for the work, lest they should be discouraged and withdraw from it. The Prophet Jeremy is not only cheared up, but threatned to it (Chap. 1.17.) Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, speak to them all that I command thee, be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them. Least danger should deter him from speaking to their faces, God sets a greater danger before his face if he did not speak. So again (Ezek. 2. 3, 4.) And he said unto me, Son of man, I send thee to the children of Israel, to a rebellious Nation, &c. For they are impudent children (or hard of face) and stiff-hearted: I do send thee unto them, and thou shalt say unto them, thus saith the Lord God: and they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, for they are a rebellious house, yet shall know that there hath been a Prophet among them. Ezekiel being to do this Message, the Lord cautions him, (vers. 6.) And thou son of Man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briars and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among Scorpions, be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks. When they, their words, their looks were all dreadful, when in dealing with them the Prophet was to deal with briars, thorns, Scorpions, had he not need to be well backt and supported? When the Prophet Michah was to declare the wayes of wicked men to faces, see how he was empowered; Truly (saith he, Chap. 3.8.) I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin. Who but an Eliah could have declared the sin of Ahab to his face? and who but the Baptist, (who came in the power and spirit of Elias) could have declared the sin of Herod to his face, not only to the peril, but loss of his own head?

Fourthly, By way of Corollary, Observe, That some wicked men are usually flattered.

They are flattered to their faces, and reproached behind their backs; and they who will not be reproved to their faces, shall be sure to have store of reproaches behind their backs.

Lastly, Observe also by way of Corollary, It is a part of the misery of wicked men not to be reproved.

As it is their sin that they will not be reproved, so their misery that they are not; they indeed look upon it as their priviledge that they are above reproof, that they can sin and no man say, why do ye so? That though (as the Psalmist speaks, *Psal.*49.13.) their way be their folly, yet not only (as it follows there) their posterity, but their contemporaries, or they who are present with them, approve both their sayings and their doings, saying yea, to their yea, and nay to their constitutu est ut quis quis illum homirē in se dixiſſet capitale pe deret pœna & quoniā in omnibus templis ubi colebatur I & Serapis erat etiam ſi nudachrus quod digit labiis im preſſo adm nere videre tur ut ſilen tium fieret hoc ſignifi care Varro exiſtimabat ut homines eos fuiſſe fa cerctur. Auguſt. l. 18 de Civitat. dei. c. 5.

their nay, chiming in with all their opinions and actions. Thus they pleaſe themſelves in being alwayes pleaſed by others, which yet is at once their miſery and their curſe; for by this means they hear any thing rather then the truth of their own wayes and practices, and are deprived of the greateſt benefit of friendſhip and humane ſociety, faithful admonition. What ſhould a man deſire more of a friend then to be made better by him, or to be admoniſhed in what he doth amiſs. The Lord (Hoſ. 4.4.) threatens it as one of the ſoareſt judgments, Let no man ſtrive; He doth not mean it of corporal ſtrife, or of ſtriving with blowes and weapons, but of a ſtrife by convictions or arguments: ſo 'tis expounded in the next words; Let no man ſtrive or reprove another. To reprove another is to ſtrive with him for his good; And 'tis one of the ſaddeſt reproofs and greateſt evils that can fall upon man, when God ſaith, Let no man reprove another. When once God ſaith of a ſinner, he ſhall not be reproved, 'tis more then probable that he hath ſaid of his ſin, it ſhall not be pardoned. The Lord parallels their ſins, of whom he ſaid, Let no man reprove another, with the greateſt ſin; For thy people are as they who ſtrive with the Prieſt. They who then ſtrove with the Prieſt, ſtrove with God himſelf, in whoſe name the Prieſts adminiſtred holy things. When any ſo ſtrive with men that they ſtrive with God alſo, no marvel if God forbid men to ſtrive with them any longer. To be reproved hath ſo much good in it, that to be reproved is better then to be loved. Solomon aſſures us (Prov. 27. 5,6.) That open rebuke is better then ſecret love; faithful are the wounds of a friend, but the kiſſes of an enemy are deceitful. By the wounds of a friend, he means not ſword-wounds, but word-wounds, or thoſe blows which a friend gives by rebuking; Faithful are theſe wounds of a friend; That is, by theſe a friend gives teſtimony of his faithfulneſs. But the kiſſes of an enemy; That is, his flatteries and ſoothings are deceitful; that is, they teſtifie his deceitfulneſs. Many betray their friends with theſe metaphorical kiſſes, as Judas did Chriſt with a literal kiſs. Theſe are killing kiſſes, bloody kiſſes. David prayeth for ſmitings, in oppoſition to theſe kiſſings, (Pſal. 141. 5. Let the righteous ſmite me, how? with his hand or ſword? No, yet ſuch ſmiting is far more eligible then that kind of kiſſing, but let the righteous ſmite me with his word, with his tongue, as the next words explain his meaning) Let him reprove me, and it ſhall be as an excellent oyl that ſhall not break my head. This Law was given the Jewes, that they ſhould exerciſe their love in rebukes, (Lev. 19. 17.) Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thy heart, thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour, and not ſuffer ſin upon him. To hate a brother and not to rebuke him are equivalent expreſſions in that Law; and we may thence alſo infer, that as it is a ſin to hate our neighbour, and an affliction to be hated by our neighbour, ſo it is a ſin not to rebuke our neighbour, and an affliction (when there is cauſe) not to be rebuked by him. And he who wiſely declares a mans ſin to him, declares his love to him; and beſtowes as many kindneſſes upon him, as he doth deſerved reproofs. Who ſhall declare his ſin to his face?

Yet further, when Job ſaith, Who ſhall declare, &c. We may expound it not only of declaring by reproof, as one friend declares the ſin of another to him, or as the ſins of men are declared by the Miniſters of the Goſpel. But we may take it for a judiciary declaring, and that two wayes; Firſt, by way of evidence; Secondly, by way of ſentence. A witneſs declares the way of a wicked man to his face (for the witneſs and he that is witneſſed againſt, ought to come face to face) by giving evidence. A Judge declares the way of a wicked man to his face by giving ſentence. Thus 'tis as if Job had ſaid; Who dares either be a witneſs to accuſe, or a Judge to condemn this wicked man. Which ſence doth ariſe more fully from the laſt words of the Text,

And who ſhall repay him what he hath done?

That is, who ſhall puniſh him according, or up to the deſert of his deeds. This follows clearly from what was ſaid before; if no man can be found to declare his way to him, or to tell him what he hath done, then ſurely none will be found to repay him what he hath done. And therefore no marvel if the wicked man paſs untoucht through the world; God oftentimes ſpares him in wrath, and men ſpare him oftener for fear. Men dare not puniſh, and God will not puniſh him here, therefore this man muſt needs eſcape unpuniſhed.

Hence Note, Firſt, Puniſhment is payment, juſtice is the giving of every man his due.

The Original word here tranſlated repay, notes the ordinary paying of a debt, and in its firſt ſignification to make peace. And the reaſon is, becauſe both when any man payeth his private debt, he procures his own peace by it; as alſo when Magiſtrates pay wicked men their due judicially, the publick hath peace by it; and that not only from the promiſe of God, but alſo from the very nature of the thing. When juſtice payeth every man his due, both reward and puniſhment, who can complain? or be adhered to, if he do? When Juſtice runs down (as it ought) like a ſtream, (that is, freely and indifferently to all) Then peace ſhall be (as 'tis promiſed) like a river; that is, comfortable, and continued unto all. When the juſtice of man is like the juſtice of God (which now awards to every man according to his deeds, and will at laſt render to every man according to what he hath done, whether it be good or whether it be evil) when (I ſay) the juſtice of man is thus (in proportion) like the juſtice of God) then the peace of man ſhall be (in his proportion) like the peace of God, a great and a laſting peace. It breeds as much trouble to States and Nations, when offenders are not paid according to what they have committed; as it doth to private perſons when their creditors are not paid according to what they have borrowed. Again, when Job ſaith, Who ſhall repay him what he hath done?

He implies this ſecond Obſervation,

That, Some wicked men do even out-grow the reach of mans juſtice.

They are ſo fortified with power, with riches and relations, that there's no coming at them; Where ſhall we have a witneſs to declare the truth againſt them according to his knowledge of the fact? Where ſhall we have a Judge that will declare the truth againſt them according to his knowledge of the Law? or having given ſentence, will ſee it executed? no man ever out-grew the juſtice of God, but many have out-grown the juſtice of man; not that the greateſt of men are at any time priviledged from the juſtice of man, but becauſe many times juſtice is over-born by great men. For as ſome men are ſo low, weak, and miſerable, that only God hath power enough to raiſe and heal them, they are ſo far gone (as we ſay) that the creature cannot cure or recover them, and therefore we uſe to ſay of ſuch, that we leave them to the mercy and power of God, we can do no more, the Lord muſt help you, for we cannot; Now as ſome men are ſo weak and low, that we muſt leave them to the help of God, ſo there are others ſo high and great, ſo ſtrong and powerful, that we muſt leave them to the juſtice of God. And (to be ſure) as the day of divine juſtice hath been, ſo it will be upon thoſe that are lifted up, as well as upon thoſe that are low, upon the ſtrong Oaks and tall Cedars, as well as upon the muſhrooms and the ſhrubs. God will repay every man what he hath done, though man neither doth nor can.

VERS. 32, 33, 34.

Yet ſhall he be brought to the grave, and ſhall remain in the tomb.

The clods of the valley ſhall be ſweet unto him, and every man ſhall draw after him, as there are innumerable before him.

How then comfort ye me in vain, ſeeing in your anſwers there remaineth falſhood?

IN the former verſe the wicked man was repreſented ſo ſtout and daring, that no man durſt check him, or ſhew him the ugly viſage of his wayes in the glaſs of truth. But (as our tranſlation ſeems to carry it) this verſe checks him to purpoſe; and whereas none durſt declare his way to his face, this declares his end to his face. Though (as Nabals ſervant ſaid of him, 1 Sam. 25. 17.) he were ſuch a ſon of Belial, that a man could not ſpeak to him, yet death ſpeaks with him.

Verſ.

Vers. 32. He shall be brought to the grave, and remain in the tomb.

Let men be as stout as they will against God or man, yet to the grave they must. This may be a cooler to wicked men when they are in their greatest heats, and a block in their way, when they are most forward to pursue the way of their own hearts, that is, their lusts. Do or say what they can, they must return to the dust, their stiff-necks must stoop, and look into the grave, into the dark and silent grave. Solomon hath an excellent expression of this (Eccl. 8.8.) There is no man hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit; that is, as the word Spirit is often used (Gen. 6. 19. Job 7. 7. Isa. 42. 5.) no man hath power over his breath or life to retain it. The strength, authority, wisdom, and industry of man, cannot hold his life when once death, by commission from God, calls for it: And (as it follows in the same verse) there is no discharge in that war. The Original word translated discharge, signifies, mission or sending forth. When death assaults and makes war upon us, 'tis in vain either to send out forces to make resistance against it; or to send out Ambassadours to make peace with it. Some have made a covenant with death (Isa. 28. 15.) but none could ever make peace with it; as no force, so no treaty nor entreaty can stay it, when 'tis resolved to come. And as there is no mission, so (according to our reading) there is no discharge or dismission in that war. No man can have leave to depart the field and go home, when he is summon'd to depart the world, and go to his long home. And therefore the same Solomon while he seems to give the young man liberty, bidding him take his full swing, (Eccl. 11. 4.) Rejoyce O young man in thy youth, let thy heart chear thee in the dayes of thy youth, and walk in the wayes of thy heart, and in the sight of thy eyes, yet gives him a check at parting, But know thou that for all these things God will bring thee unto judgment. In this Text death is the stop, and in that judgment. Though a man wallow in pleasure, and live in sin all his dayes, yet God will bring him first to death, and after that to judgment; Yet he shall be brought to the grave, &c.

Occupatio objectionis. Jun.

Secondly, These words are conceived as the prevention of an objection against the whole matter before spoken. For Job having asserted the outward prosperity of wicked men, in opposition to his friends; some might say, what do you speak so much of, and cry up their prosperity, they die, they are brought to the grave, they rot and consume there as well as other men. To this Job is supposed answering three things.

First, That he had done enough, as to the establishment of his own tenet, when he proved that many wicked men live a peaceable and flourishing life; he never undertook to prove that they were exempted from death, or priviledged from the grave.

Secondly, Let it be, that they die, that's no argument against their prosperity; for their very death is a kind of prosperity; verse the thirty third, The clods of the valley shall be sweet to him.

Thirdly, That there is no reason why this should be objected to stain the present prosperity of the wicked man; for as much as this is the lot of every man; in the latter part of the thirty third verse; Every man shall draw after him, as there are innumerable before him.

Perstat adhuc Job in suo illo proposito confirmando sc. sæpe impios vivere fælices nec non supremum etiã funeris honorem conferri illis amplissimè. Pined.

Thirdly, For the understanding of these words, Yet he shall be brought to the grave, I conceive that Job here continues his own discourse, and confirms that opinion which he had before laid down, concerning the prosperity of wicked men, rather then answers objections against it. As if he had said, Such live happily, yea and they die happily too, or they have a kind of happiness in their death, as much happiness as the natural man is capable of in death. So that, whereas ye my friends have affirmed, that if God do at any time spare a wicked man while he lives, or suffers him to live comfortably, yet God will surely brand him with some remarkable judgment at his death. I affirm, That many wicked men live in plenty, die in peace, and are brought to their graves with honour.

Yet, or as some render, yea, he shall be brought to the grave; As if he had said, besides all that I have spoken of the outward felicity of the wicked man, I add this further, He shall be brought to the grave. But what is there of singularity or priviledge in this? a man that lives in misery and dies a beggar is yet usually brought to a grave when he is dead: And he that hath been a meer attendant or a slave all his dayes, shall yet have some to attend his body to the burial. I answer, The Hebrew word signifies not only the common action of bringing to the grave; in which sense 'tis used (Job 10. 9.) Remember I beseech thee, that thou hast made me as the clay, and wilt thou bring me into dust again? That is, shall I die presently and return to the dust out of which man was moulded at the first. But besides this ordinary sense of the word, there is a higher, which denotes a studied preparation, or a kind of pompous celebrity in bringing man to his grave. And the state and pomp of men while they live, is usually suited with a funeral pomp when they die. In strictness the word implies a bringing to the grave with sound of Trumpets, which instruments render a doleful tone as well as a pleasant, and can make sorrowful as well as joyful musick. Trumpets were so much used in the year of Jubilie, that the Jubilie is so called from a Trumpet. Death is to some in every respect a day of Jubilie, they attain freedom from all evils; and it is a day of Jubilie to all in some respects, every man receives freedom by death from many evils.

יובל Denotat pompã quãdam & apparatum deducendi cũ cantu & musicis instrumentis, hinc Jobel Buccina cujus in Jobeleo usus erat.

Thus the wicked man is brought to the grave; that is, he hath an honourable and a solemn burial; His dead carkass is not thrown into a ditch, he hath not (as Jehoiakim was threatned, Jer. 22. 19.) the burial of an Ass, to be drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of the City, (as the burial of an Ass is there described by the Prophet) but he hath even a whole City to accompany and carry forth his corps to the place of burial. He hath mourners at his funeral, and he hath his funeral musick, to heighten the affection of sorrow. Such usages are reported by Heathen Poets at the more pompous interments of their dead. And we find the footsteps of that custom in the Gospel, (Matth. 9. 23.) Christ being sent for to cure the daughter of the Ruler of the Synagogue, when he came into the house, He saw the Minstrils and the people making a noise. They knowing that she was dead, and supposing her past recovery, were addressing themselves for her burial; or as Job's Text speaks, to bring her to the grave.

Hinc tuba candelæ tãdemq; beatus alto cõpositus lecto crassisq; lutatus amomis. In portu rigidos calces extendit. Pers.

Further, The first particle of the verse is that common conjunction copulative and, we render it (as elsewhere often) yet, which carrieth in it a sound of admiration. Thus Amos 4. 6. I also have given you cleanness of teeth in all your Cities, and want of bread in all your places, yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord; As if he had said, What a wonderful thing is it that ye being thus afflicted should not return. Thus here, Though it may seem strange to you, Yet he shall be brought to the grave; though the man were so wicked that no man would adventure to tell him of his wickedness, yet he shall be brought to the grave; and when he saith, He shall be brought to the grave, it may have a twofold opposition.

First, To another kind of death, even a violent death. As if he had said, This man living so lewdly, deserved indeed to be brought either to the block, and have his head cut off, or to the Gibbet, and be hanged up before all the people; yet though he was so vile as to deserve a violent death from the stroke of justice, he shall die a natural death, and be brought to the grave with honour. It was anciently said, That few Tyrants died a dry death, they were usually drencht in their own blood when they died, either by some sudden assassination, or by some judiciary sentence. Yet some Tyrants who have thrust others violently and unjustly out of the world, go out themselves naturally, and are brought to the grave pompously. For Secondly, To be brought to the grave, according to the true sence of the word, and the interpretation given, stands in opposition to an obscure and vulgar way of burial. He lived in state, and he shall be brought in state to the grave.

Hence Observe, Men inglorious by their wicked lives, may have glorious funerals when they die.

And it hath been no small part of some such mens care to leave order for a funeral. They who never had a truly ſerious thought how to diſpoſe of their ſouls when they were to die, yet have taken care very ſeriouſly how to have their bodies diſpoſed of, and have ſet down in what place, in what tomb, and at what rate they would be buried. Some order a Sermon at their burials, who never regarded Sermons in their lives, though (like enough) they heard many. Their friends ſhall eat the ſweet, and drink wine in bowls at the bringing of their bodies to the grave, while their ſeparated ſouls, ſeparated for ever from God, as well as from their bodies for a ſeaſon, are feeding upon gall and wormwood, and drinking the wine of Gods fierce indignation, poured out without mixture. Such pomp (if that be poſſible) makes mirth in hell, and ſets the Devil a laughing. Such funerals have a number of viſible mourners, and they have innumerable inviſible rejoycers: The God of this world, and the powers of darkneſs, deride thoſe ſolemnities, which give ſo much honour to a body, whoſe ſoul is not only departed, but condemned to eternal anguiſh and infamy. A Heathen could ſay, The loſs of a funeral, or of a Sepulcher, is an eaſie loſs; but Chriſtians know, that the loſs of a ſoul, the loſs of heaven, the loſs of glory, are not only ſad but unvaluable; and not only unvaluable, but irreparable loſſes. A Believer careth not much, where his body finds a grave, ſo his ſoul find Chriſt. What Glory ſoever the bodies of wicked men have when they are buried, only the bodies of the Saints ſhall have glory, when they are raiſed again. He ſhall be brought to the grave,

Facilis jactura ſepulchri.

And ſhall remain in the tomb.] Theſe words are a continuation of what was ſaid laſt. There is ſome variety in the reading of them. The Hebrew is, He ſhall watch in the Heap; ſo we put in the margin of our Bibles; He ſhall be brought to the grave, and watch in the heap. The Original word ſignifies both to watch, and to remain; becauſe a watchman keepeth his place, and ſtayeth by it; he is not as we ſay, up and down, here and there, but fixed where he is appointed. And the word ſignifies not only a bare watching, (as when a man keeps his eyes open, and doth not ſleep) a watching meerly oppoſed to ſleeping; but it notes watching with an intentive ſpirit as well as with an open eye. The word is uſed fully to that ſence, (Prov. 8.34.) Bleſſed is the man that heareth me (ſaith wiſdom) watching daily at my gates. What do we, when we watch at wiſdoms gates, if we do as we ought? is it only the placing of our bodies there, and the keeping of our eyes open there? 'Tis much more then both theſe. Watching at wiſdom's gate is the work of our ſpirits, 'tis the ſetting of the heart to receive what wiſdom utters; This is watching indeed. But you will ſay, This ſence ſeems very incongruous to and remote from a dead mans caſe; how can he watch at all whoſe eyes are cloſed in darkneſs? I conceive, The dead mans watching in the heap or tomb (which tranſlation divers learned Interpreters adhere to) may have a double reference; either, firſt, to the cuſtome of preſerving the bodies of great men from putrefaction. To which end their bodies were ſo ſpiced and imbalmed, that they were kept, as it were, alive, and being ſet in vaults, they looked as if they were keeping continual watch.

ſuper acervo vigilat. Mont. Ne. aſſiduus vel vivuſq; exiſteret.

שקד ſignificat non ſolum vigilare ſed intentũ eſſe & aſſiduum in opere alio. Merc.

Secondly, I may refer, if not to the embalmed bodies of the dead, yet to their repreſentations or ſtatues, which (as we ſee) in our dayes are placed upon their tombs or ſet upright in preſſes. Theſe Statues were made as neer as art could reach to the life, and ſo might be ſaid to watch there as if they lived; yea, upon the ſame account they might be ſaid not only to watch, but to pray there; for ſuch Statues are uſually (among us) ſet up in praying poſtures, kneeling, and lifting up both hands and eyes (ſuch as they are) to heaven; you ſhall ſee the figure of a man, who hath (poſſibly) been a neglecter of prayer all his dayes, yet fixed to his tomb not only in a watching, but in a praying poſture; Many being dead ſeem to pray alwayes, who only ſeemed to pray when they were alive; They made dead prayers, or they prayed without watching while they lived, and being dead, they would be looked upon both watching and praying. To either of theſe cuſtoms the Text may allude fairly; and ſo carry on Job's diſcourſe concerning the wicked mans proſperity in death.

Forte alludit ad conſuetam mortuorum cadaveris, cum beneficio naturæ à putrefactione per multa ſecula atq; ſæcula ſervare, duxe & vide- Pined.

Again, Some read (not, he ſhall watch, but) he ſhall be watched, or others ſhall watch him in the heap. They ſhall watch there, either as conſtant mourners for his death, or they ſhall watch there as protector of his duſt; leſt any offer violence to his grave, or diſturb his bones. Both theſe may ſuite with the ſcope of the Text as ſignifications of honour and reſpect to the deceaſed. He ſhall be watched in the Tomb or heap.] That Original word is uſed but four times in the whole Scripture, and in this place only it is tranſlated a tomb; properly it ſignifies a heap of corn. (Job 5.26.) He ſhall be brought like a ſhock of corn in full age. A ſhock of corn, is a heap of corn, that is, many ſheaves laid or built up together by the art of the huſbandman. And hence ſome interpret this Text as if the wicked man ſhould be buried abroad in the fields among the heaps of corn; but there is no neceſſity to carry it ſo ſtrictly. A tomb or grave, any where made, is an heap or aggregation of earth, as a ſhock of corn is an heap or aggregation of ſheaves. And the tomb is ſo called in a double conſideration.

גדש Significat proprie acervum frugum qui in area in modum pyramidis in ſublime attollitur. Merc.

Firſt, Becauſe the dead bodies of men are brought and heaped together in the tomb. That periphraſis of death ſo often uſed in the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, He or they were gathered to their fathers, is by ſome expounded in compliance with the point in hand, as noting the gathering of the bodies of the dead into one common heap. And though I rather conceive it intending the gathering of their ſpirits unto the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect; yet the Text ſpeaks in the caſe of Joſiah (2 Chron. 34.28.) concerning his being gathered to the grave, as well as to his Fathers; which neceſſarily infers the gathering of his body to theirs, and of his duſt to theirs, all making but one heap of duſt. The grave or tomb are as a floor wherein corn is heaped up until the great threſhing and winnowing day cometh, when the bodies of men ſhall be raiſed and purged from the chaff of their natural condition; for then, this corruptible muſt put on incorruption, and this mortal muſt put on immortality (1 Cor. 15. 54.)

Secondly, As the tomb is called a heap, becauſe the bodies of men are heaped there together; ſo becauſe a tomb or a grave, though but one body be laid there, ſwells up like a heap. The body being put into the earth, riſeth by ſo much as the ſpace is which the body filleth. And hence Criticks tell us, that the Latine word for any tomb or grave, notes the ſwelling of the earth. But eſpecially the ſtately tombs of Princes and Great men, ſwell high, and are raiſed upon Arches and Pillars. Nor have men left in any thing plainer marks of the ſwelling of their minds with pride and vain-glory, then in appointing ſuch towring and ſwelling Monuments of their frailty. Yea ſome ſeem to have had an ambition to immortalize the memory of themſelves and of their greatneſs by theſe memorials of their mortality. They for whom ſuch vaſt and ſtupendious heaps have been raiſed, may well be ſaid in anſwer to this tranſlation of Job's Text, To watch in the heap.

Significanter latinè tumulũ vertas à tumendo.

Laſtly, We (as others alſo) render plainly, He ſhall remain in the tomb; His dead body being brought to the grave, remains in the tomb, and moves no more, till God calleth it forth, and by his Almighty power reſtoreth it to life again. The Grave is a priſon, and death is a ſure keeper. Death will hold its own, till the Lord of life gives command to let go. Living men are of ſo little permanency, that they can ſcarce be ſaid to remain any where. Only the dead know nothing of removing.

In tumulo manebit fugiter. Pagn.

Again, When Job ſaith, He ſhall remain in the tomb, he ſpeaks this (in purſuance of what he had ſaid before) as a priviledge which a wicked man may have; he ſhall not only be brought to the grave with honour, but ſhall remain there in ſafety.

Hence Note, It is a favour (yet ſuch a favour as wicked men are often partakers of) when our bones reſt and remain quietly in the grave.

Many have been brought to their graves with much ſolemnity, who have not remained there. The Aſſyrian is threatned (Iſa. 14.18,19.) that he ſhall not have the honour of burial in the Graves of his Predeceſſors, or in the Grave which he had appointed for himſelf, All the Kings of the Nations, even all of them lie in Glory, every one in his own houſe; that is, in his own grave, (the grave is called the houſe houſe of all living) or in the grave which each one prepared for himſelf near his own houſe. Thus all the Kings of the Nations lie in their ſtately tombs, but thou art caſt out of thy grave like an abominable branch, and as the raiment of thoſe that are ſlain thruſt thorough with the ſword, that go down to the ſtones of the pit, as a carkaſs trodden under feet, thou ſhalt not be joyned with them in burial; that is, thou ſhalt not have the honour of ſuch a burial as they. Thou art caſt out, (that is, kept out) of thy grave. Now if it be a ſore judgment, upon a wicked man eſpecially, all whoſe portion conſiſts in outward reſpects and priviledges, not to be admitted to a grave, but as the Pſalmiſt bewails the ſad affliction of the Saints and ſervants of God, (Pſal. 79. 2.) to have their dead bodies given to be meat to the fowls of the heaven, and their fleſh to the beaſts of the earth; Then how great an evil is it to have the dead body torn and pulled out of the grave, and thoſe bones diſquieted which were at reſt. Yet the Lord threatens Jeruſalem with an enemy, who provoked either with covetouſneſs, or with malice, ſhall riſle their very graves. The wrath of God doth not only purſue ſinners while they live, but in death, it purſueth them to the grave, and in the grave. (Jer. 8. 1.) At that time, ſaith the Lord, they (that is, the cruel enemy) ſhall bring out the bones of the Kings of Judah, and the bones of the Princes (in whoſe Sepulchers, they might hope to find rich ornaments, Jewels, and treaſure.) And the bones of the Prieſts, and the bones of the Prophets (that is, of the corrupt Prieſts and Prophets eſpecially, who had flattered the Princes, and perverted the people, this doom is paſſed upon them alſo who had been either perverted by the falſe Prophets, or had oppoſed the faithful Prophets) and the bones of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem out of their graves, and they ſhall ſpread them before the Sun, the Moon, and all the hoaſt of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have ſerved, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have ſought, and whom they have worſhipped. How exact is the Juſtice of God, and how terrible? Their bones muſt be ſpread before thoſe creatures of Gods making, whom they (by ſpreading their hands before them, and worſhipping them) had made their Gods: and as they were threatned to have their bones unburied, ſo that they ſhould not be reburied; for thus it follows, They ſhall not be gathered, nor buried, they ſhall be as dung upon the face of the earth; that is, they ſhould lie above-ground, as Monuments of their wickedneſs and of divine vengeance, till they be utterly conſumed, and mouldred into duſt. That God will raiſe our bodies out of the grave is a matter of faith, and of great conſolation to the Godly; but to have the body pulled out of the grave by men, is matter of fear and terrour to the wicked. Yet many of the wicked eſcape this Judgment, they are fairly brought to their graves, and abide unmoleſted there. Job is here expounded, as deſcribing this piece of proſperity incident to a wicked man, while he ſaith, He ſhall remain in the Tomb, which interpretation ſeems to have the free conſent of the next verſe, as continuing a deſcription of the ſame thing.

Verſ. 33. The clods of the Valley ſhall be ſweet unto him.

רגבים Glubæ lapides, glareæ.

The word which we render clods, undergoes variety of tranſlations; ſome ſay, the ſtones of the brook or valley; ſome, the gravel; others, the duſt or ſand of the vallies. But as here, ſo again in the thirty eighth Chapter of this book, and the thirty eighth verſe, we tranſlate it clods. When the duſt groweth into hardneſs, and the clods cleave faſt together.

Dulcis fuit glaruus Cocyti. Vul. Tanti ſc. erat lectionē poetarum oſtentare ut eorum mendacio, in verſione Authentica regio mortis deſcriberetur. Coc.

The clods of the valley are ſweet unto him.] As this word, ſo likewiſe the whole clauſe is diverſly rendred. The Vulgar alluding to an old Poetical fable, gives it thus; He ſhall be ſweet to the ſand of Cocytus, which was phancied by Heathens for one of the rivers of hell, or an infernal lake, ſo called from the lamentations there made; as if Job here intended a deſcription of the wicked mans puniſhment in hell. A late learned Expoſitor upon this Book juſtly perſtringeth that tranſlation as affecting the accommodation of the holy Scripture to ſuch a fiction, in deſcribing the region of death, or the ſtate of wicked men when they are dead. Yet 'tis (in it ſelf) a truth, that the wicked are a ſweet morſel to helliſh tormenters; And they who in their life time have ſwallowed down ſo many ſins, not only gnats but camels, being dead, are in a moment ſwallowed up in hell. We may ſay of ſuch men (as the Prophet doth of the Aſſyrian Prince, (Iſa. 14. 9.) Hell from beneath is moved for them to meet them at their coming. The more wicked a man is, the more is hell delighted to receive him; as the more holy a man is, the more is heaven delighted to embrace him. When he who was a hell upon earth, drops to hell, he is pleaſant fewel to thoſe devouring flames.

Secondly, This verſe is better expounded as a continued diſcourſe of the happineſs of the wicked man in regard of his natural ſtate in death. He ſhall not only continue in the tomb, but have (as it were) a contentful being there. Earth is (as to matter) the common parent of us all; from the earth we came, and thither we return; and when the wicked man returns, the earth will not hurt him. The grave will not entertain him with a frown, but he ſhall be as welcome and as kindly uſed there by the clods of the valley as any other man. The bodily being of the righteous and of the wicked in the bowels of the earth knows no difference. And as no man knoweth love or hatred by all that is before him (as to his body) on earth, ſo not as to the ſtate of the body while it remaineth under the earth. The ſuperſtitious Heathen (which may ſomewhat anſwer the phraſe of this Scripture, though far from the ſcope of it) were wont to pray for a dying friend in this form; Let the earth be favourable and caſie to thee, let it not preſs thee hard. They had a conceit that if the earth laid too great a load upon the dead, they could not get up to the higher regions, therefore they prayed, that the clods of the valley, or the earth where their friends were buried, might be ſweet and favourable to them. Tertullian mentions this Heatheniſh cuſtome, and Pliny a Philoſopher of their own laughs at them for it; Becauſe they prayed for the favour and good will of that to them, which could not be angry with them, nor do them any hurt. Such were the vain imaginations and fears of the dark-minded Heathens, dreading the unkindneſs or cruelty of the earth to dead bodies, but little dreading the miſery of their blinded ſouls. How vain is it to fear, that either a ſenſleſs body ſhould be pained, or that things without ſenſe ſhould be offended and put it to pain. The clods of the valley are alike ſweet to all.

Molliter ſuaviter tractatur à terra, quam felicitatem priſci precabuntur ſuis defunctis his verbis, Sit tibi terra levis. Terrā gravē ne imprecaris, &c. Tertul de Teſtim Animæ c. 4. Tanquam neſciamus hanc eſſe ſolam, quæ nunquam iraſcatur homini. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. lib. 11. cap. 63 de terra. Oſſa quieta precor, tuta requieſcite in urna. Ut ſit humus cineri non onerоſa tuo. Ovid. 3. Amor. Eleg. 8. Hyperbolæ per proſopopeiam ſenſus & humanas actiones mortuis tribuentes. Jun. Sepulchro ſuaviter hæret nec quæ hic aguntur curat. Mer.

Thirdly, Some give the ſenſe of theſe words, as deſcribing the ſad concluſion of the wicked man, who though he ſpend moſt of his dayes in pleaſure, yet a little before his death, he ſhall meet with ſuch ſorrows, that the clods of the valley will be ſweet unto him; that is, he will even deſire death, as the only means (which he knows of) to give him a releaſe from them. 'Tis truth, that though death be bitter to a carnal man who is at eaſe in his poſſeſſion, yet death is eaſie and ſweet to any man that is in bitterneſs; and 'tis poſſible for a man to taſt ſo much bitterneſs while he treads upon the clods of the earth, that the clods under the earth may be reckoned ſweet to him.

Laſtly, This is plain, that Job ſpeaks here in figures, and wrappeth up a proſopopeia and an hyperbole together, while he aſcribes ſenſe and the affections of a living man to a dead body. The ſumme of all may be this, The clods ſhall be ſweet to him; that is, he ſhall have the utmoſt conveniency and happineſs, that any man (as to his bodily capacity) can have in death. He ſhall feel no more trouble nor pain there, he ſhall be free from care and fear, when once he is gotten thither. The clods of the valley ſhall be ſweet to him.

Hence Note, The bodies of wicked men are as free from pain or evil in the grave, as the bodies of the Saints.

Death is the concluſion of and gives ſtop to all the worldly ſufferings of all men. (Revel. 14. 14) Bleſſed are the dead that die in the Lord, for from henceforth they reſt from their labours. And whether men die in the Lord, or out of the Lord, they reſt from their outward labours. This bodily reſt, or reſt from bodily labour and trouble is a favour to Saints, and 'tis much more then any wicked man hath right to, that his body ſhould reſt from trouble and labour all that time which runs out between death and judgment. We may call that reſt, the negative happineſs of wicked men. And as it is, in ſome ſence, a favour that they live ſo many years on earth, their ſouls being kept all that that while out of hell; so that they lie and continue for so long a time after death in the earth, or (as Job speakes) among the clods of the vallies, their bodies being kept all that while out of hell; For as the perfection of the glory and blessedness of Saints will be after the re-union and marriage of soul and body; so the perfection of the misery and torment of the wicked will be at the like re-union. Therefore it may well be said of a wicked man, not only in reference to the pains of this life, which he is quite freed from, but also in reference to the pains of the next life, from which for a while the grave detains him, that, The clods of the valley are sweet to him.

And every man shall draw after him.

Mr. Broughton reads, He draweth all earthly after him; as if the dead man were active in pulling the living after him into the grave; we render it as if living men were active in hastning after the dead unto their graves; Every man shall draw after him. Some taking the former translation, understand it of a moral drawing; his wickedness attracts many to the imitation of him. Multitudes follow his ill example. But though it be true that ill examples (as some diseases) are very catching, or, like a Load-stone, very drawing and leading, yet I conceive that is not the intendment here. The Latine Translator expresseth it so, but expounds it, in pursuance of the pomp of his burial, He shall draw all men after him; That is, when he dieth his funeral will draw the whole City and Country together to attend, or gaze upon it: some will come out of respect to honour him, and many in curiosity to please themselves in beholding the magnificence and stateliness of his interment. But I pass this also, as much below the Text.

Post se omnē hominē trahit. Vulg.

And conclude, that these words, All men shall draw after him; do only remove an objection, which some man might make against Job's position, about the prosperity of wicked men. What tell ye me (might such a man say) of a pompous funeral, which the wicked man shall have when he dieth, and that the clods of the valley shall be sweet to him; When the man is dead, what's all this to him? Job answers, What though the wicked man die? there is nothing of weight in that objection against the prosperity of the wicked; For death is common to all, both good and bad. Death is not peculiar to wicked men, for righteous men die too; All men shall draw after him, so that there is no difference in this between the godly and the ungodly, the holy, and prophane; for all die, or as the Scripture of the New Testament affirms, It is appointed unto all men once to die.

Si dicas illi esse pœnam quod moriatur; respondeo omnibus hoc accidere, Vatab.

That all men shall die, is a common theme; I shall only touch a little upon this way of phrasing or expressing it. All men shall draw after him. Every man is daily drawing to the grave; dying is (as it were) a continued act. What Paul spake in a sense proper to his own case, we may take in a common sence, I die daily; and 'tis appliable to all men, they die daily; while one man dieth, all men draw after him. When a man is very sick and dying, or sick to death, when he stands (as it were) upon the borders of death, or (though I know that Scripture-speech hath another meaning then here I use it for) between the living and the dead, as if it were hard to determine to which of them he doth belong, when his breath sits upon his lips ready to take its flight and be gone, then we say, the man is drawing on; but we may say it also of those who are not only alive, but lively; not only strong, but in their full strength (as Job spake before) their breasts full of milk, and their bones moistned with marrow, we may say it of those that are walking, riding, running, travelling in the hottest pursuit of their businesses, or pleasures, they are drawing on. Every living man is drawing on to death, and all men alive shall draw after him that is already dead. Nor should it seem strange, that all men who are, should be drawing after in that way, which all men that ever were (the excepted persons are not considerable for number) have gone before, which Job gives us more fully in the next words.

As there are innumerable before him.

ante ipsum nec numerus. Heb.

The Text word for word is thus rendred; Before his face no number; that is, as all men are following, or drawing after him that dieth, so those are innumerable that are already dead. This manner of speaking (no number) in the Hebrew, is sometimes the denial of any number, sometimes of all number or numerability. To say of such a thing, There is no number of it, is either to say there is no such thing, or but one of it, which indeed makes no number, or at most but very few, which in common account are no number. Some applying these words to the burial of the poor, give the meaning thus; rich men draw many after them, or have great numbers attending them to their graves, but the poor man hath no number, or but a very small number of followers to his grave. But I conceive, the plain scope of Job puts this exposition of no number quite out of the number of those expositions which are suitable to this place. And that therefore no number doth not signifie those who are so few, that they scarce make a number; but those who are so many that they can hardly be numbred. His business being to shew the innumerableness of those whether rich or poor who are already dead, not the fewness of those who follow the poor to the grave when they are dead. S. John (Rev. 3. 9.) having spoken Arithmetically of the sealed ones of the twelve Tribes, ascribing to each of them twelve thousand, (which though it sheweth that the number of the elect Jewes is certain, yet it doth not infer, that the number there specified is the certain number, but S. John having heard this number) shuts up with, After this I beheld and lo a great multitude which no man could number, &c. So here (when Job saith) Before him no number; his meaning is, A great multitude are gone before him, which no man can number. Or as we render it clearly; There are innumerable gone before him.

Ut, non numerus negaret numerū, nō numerabilitatem, intelligens hanc partem versus, de sepultura pauperum. Bold.

Hence take two Deductions, First, That the dead are more then the living.

This hath been a truth ever since the first Ages of the world. When the world was young, or in its non-age, the living were more then the dead; but the dead of many ages must needs be more then the living in any one. Hence the dead are called, The more, and to go the more, or to those who are most in number, sounds (among the learned) as much as to die. As among those who yet enjoy a natural life, there are more spiritually dead, then spiritually living; so they who are naturally dead, are more then they who live the life of nature. Every one that dieth encreaseth the number of the dead, yet there are innumerable before him.

Ut Anna numero caret, sic defuncti, Quocirca plures vocantur: unde ad plures migrare, nam plures sunt quam viventes. Drus.

Secondly, 'Tis no new thing to die.

Most are as unwilling to die, and as unwonted to death, as if none had gone before them, as if they were to break the Ice for all mankind. Where we see one going before, we usually take courage to follow after. There have innumerable gone before to the grave, yet few take courage in following after. And I confess, it is but a poor encouragement to die, because other men like us have died before us. That which makes a man die with true courage, and step with holy boldness into the grave, is believingly to remember that Jesus Christ died and lay in the grave not only before us, but for us; that he hath conquered and worsted that King of terrours upon his own ground, the grave; 'Tis enough not only to make us chearful, but alive in death, to know savingly that This One is gone before us; 'Tis at most but a moral argument to perswade men to be chearful in dying, because men innumerable are gone before them; but Christ's going thither before us is a spiritual and prevailing argument. They who lived before Christ died in the flesh, might comfort themselves against the fear of death, by believing the holy Prophecy that he should die for them, much more may we by believing the holy History of his death. That he hath gone before us in dying and died for us who is alive and liveth for us, is ten thousand times more consolation to us when we are going out of this world, then that innumerable (such as our selves) are gone before us, or though any one of us should have the priviledge to abide in the flesh, till all were gone before him.

Job having thus far sifted, weighed, and replied to the answers of his friends, gives his judgement upon them as unfit to administer any solid comfort him; and therefore concludes roundly with them in the last verse of this Chapter.

Vers.

Verse 34. How then comfort ye me in vain, seeing in your answers there remaineth falshood?

Mr. Broughton renders, And what do ye comfort me with vanity? We say, In vain, or with vain words. A thing is done in vain three wayes.

First, It is somewhat in vain when the end for which it is done is but imperfectly attained.

Secondly, It is much in vain when the end is not at all attained.

Thirdly, It is then done most in vain when the issue is quite contrary to the end for which it was done.

Job's Friends comforted him in vain all these wayes; for they did not only not attain their end perfectly, but not at all; yea, in stead of comforting they troubled him; so that as Balac said to Balaam (Numb. 23. 11.) What hast thou done unto me? I took thee to curse mine enemies, and behold, thou hast blessed them altogether. Thus Job seemeth to say to his Friends, What have ye done unto me? Ye came to comfort me, and ye have grieved me altogether, as hath been shewed from other passages of this Book, especially from those, where he titles his Friends not only Physicians of no value, but Miserable Comforters. And he gives a further and a full account, whence it came to pass that he got no comfort by all the discourse which they had with him, in the last clause of this Verse and close of his speech.

Seeing in your answers there remaineth falshood.

Master Broughton renders thus; Great offence remaineth in your disputation. The word rendred Answers, signifieth a debate between two or more, when Arguments being given are returned, which we commonly call answering.

In your answers there remaineth falshood.

מעל Est prævaricatio, transgressio cum contemptu, repugnando illi cui quis debet se submittere, tanquam inferior.

מעל Notat violationem officii dissimulatam, sub jactatione officii à מעיל tunica. Coc.

The word carries not only falshood upon mistake, ignorance, or misunderstanding, but falshood by art or prevarication, when like a Sophister a man would foyl his Adversary by fallacies. It imports also somewhat of contempt, when he that is inferiour doth not (as he ought) submit to the judgment and reason of his superiour. Thus some expound Job complaining, that he was not only unkindly, but fallaciously and unreverently dealt with by those who ought not only to be faithful to him, but to give him respect and honour. And (which is yet worse) that they did him (as the meaning of the word is further carried) a real unkindness under the cloak or colour of fair and friendly pretences. A Prevaricator dealeth falsly with his Client, while he professeth to plead his cause, or undertakes to support his person. The unfaithfulness and falshood of man to man, walks alwayes under the cloak of professed courtesie. But I would not suppose Job so much as suspecting his Friends of any such studied unkindness towards him; especially considering, that this word which some strain so hard, is also used by the holy Ghost in a more gentle signification (Levit. 5. 15.) where it is applyed to a sin of ignorance: And that notion of sinning under a cloak may hold in sins of ignorance, as well as in those which are committed against knowledge; only with this difference, malice and hypocrisie use a cloak to hide the evil from others; Ignorance is a cloak which hides the evil from our selves. Thus in the present case, the falshood which Job chargeth the answers of his Friends with, proceeded not, surely, from any cunning purpose in them to vex and trouble him, but from their unskilfulness in comforting him. How then comfort ye me in vain, seeing in your answers there remaineth falshood? He doth not say, that all their answers were false, or that they had knowingly falsifyed with him in their answers. All he chargeth them with, is, that there was falshood in their answers: That is, that their answers contained false or unsound assertions. Such as these,

First, That godly men are rarely afflicted in this life.

Secondly, That the godly shall in this life be speedily delivered when ever they are afflicted.

Thirdly, That wicked men seldom or never prosper in this life.

Fourthly, That if they do, yet their prosperity shall soon be blasted.

Thus while his Friends went about by these affirmations to vindicate the Justice and Holiness of God from any the least complyance with wicked men, they unawares set limits to his Soveraignty, and his Power. As if God were not at liberty to dispose of these outward things, when and to whom himself pleased. These Positions (saith Job) I have proved false; and ye have not yet taken off my Arguments by any of your answers; therefore in your Answers there still remaineth falshood, and your labour in comforting me, hath been but labour in vain.

Hence Observe, First, False and unsound principles, can never produce sound and true comforts.

Solid comfort cannot rise from any ground, nor rest upon any bottom but truth. As truth only works true grace in the heart, and sanctifieth (John 17. 17.) Sanctifie them through thy truth (was the prayer of Christ) thy word is truth; so truth only worketh true joy in the heart and comforteth: If you would comfort a poor dejected soul, you must comfort him with the truth, the word is truth. Error can neither kill our sins, nor remove our sorrows. And there is the same reason of both. For it is the office of the holy Spirit both to sanctifie and to comfort; now, the holy Spirit is the Spirit of truth, and therefore he will not work by a falshood, or cloath an error with his Divine power, either for sanctification or consolation. The Prophet Hosea (Chap. 7. 3.) reproves those who made the King glad with their wickedness, and the Princes with their lyes. 'Tis possible, that a doctrinal lye (or a false doctrine) as well as an historical lye, may make a man glad for a while; but it is impossible that it should administer lasting comfort, or comfort at last to any man. If they who are in darkness will as the Prophet speaketh (Isa. 50. 11.) Kindle such false fires, and compass themselves about with such sparks; let them (as the Prophet in holy scorn bids them) walk in the light of their fire, and in the sparks that they have kindled, yet, This they shall have of mine hand (saith he) they shall lye down in sorrow. When such lye down upon their beds to rest, they shall find little; and when they lye down in the grave (except a while for their bodies) they shall find less.

Secondly, Good men may be mistaken, and err in judgment.

As the wills and affections of the Saints on earth, have some corruption remaining in them, so also have their understandings. And therefore as their practice, so their opinion, may be soyled and faulty. 'Tis no wonder, if falshood be found in their answers, who are themselves so full of failings.

Thirdly, Note, Good men may continue long under some mistakes and errors of judgment.

Job found his Friends in these errors at their first dispute, and he found them so in the second; they did not mend their answers, though they multiplied them; In your answers there remaineth falshood. As 'tis hard to part with an evil in practice, so with an error in opinion. That man is come to a great pitch of humility that confesseth he is out. Most will answer, and answer, come thick and threefold, with replications and triplications, and yet still in their answers there remaineth falshood. When any man maintains an error, the more he answers, the more he errs.

Thus by the good hand of God with me, I have finished the Exposition of this Chapter, and of the whole second dispute, between Job and his three Friends. There yet remains a third dispute, but that's between Job and two. The third gives out, and quits the next field. What was done there by those who still held out, may, if God, in whose hand our breath is and all our wayes, continue help and life, be reported at another time.

CHAP. XXII. Vers. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Then Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said,

Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wise is profitable unto himself?

Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? Or is it gain to him that thou makest thy wayes perfect?

Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? Or will he enter with thee into judgment?

ELiphaz now enters his third and last contest with Job; in which some tell us, that he behaveth himself like a man who seeks Victory rather then Truth; who though he hath been sufficiently answered, yet will not seem to be overcome; yea, that he takes up the same weapons to maintain this third, with which he maintain'd his two former Encounters: The first in the fourth and fifth Chapters, and the second in the fifteenth, as if he were resolved to contradict though he could not confute the reasons wherewith Job had made his defence.

But as such a carriage as this in Disputation is altogether vain in it self, so it is most uncomely in a wise and godly man; who ought not to refuse truth and reason, though spoken by an Adversary, but rather modestly to sit down and confess his own error and mistaking: And therefore though Eliphaz in this answer or triplication doth but roll the same stone, and move upon the same hinge in general; still adjudging Job to suffer for his sin, and to be punisht as an evil doer; yet he puts all into a new method, and varies the scene or the manner of his argumentation, which may be reduced to this form: As if Eliphaz had said, O Job! if thou sufferest all these evils for some cause (as certainly thou dost, for these things could not come by chance, but by the wise disposure and providence of God) then that cause or reason for which thou sufferest, must either be found in God or in thy self: If thou sayest the reason is in God, and that he doth it by his prerogative, thou dost rashly intrude thy self into his secrets, and art over-bold or curious in searching into his hidden counsels; and when thou hast made out thy conjectures, we may as easily deny as thou dost affirm; but if thou hast recourse to, and reflectest upon thy own self for the cause of thy sorrows and sufferings, surely thou canst find out or pitch upon nothing else but thy sinfulness and abounding transgressions, which while thou refusest to acknowledge, thou dost but harden thy heart against God, and growest impatient under the rebukes of his afflicting hand. Therefore I admonish thee to repent, &c. This seems to be the sum of that whole discourse which Eliphaz gives in this Chapter, as will further appear in the explication of the parts.

Again, we may contract his scope and give it in this brief; Job having constantly affirmed against his Friends, that God equally afflicts the righteous and the wicked; and having said (which might have gained respect to what he was about to say) that he pleaded for God (Chap. 21. 4. As for me, is my complaint to man, or for man? No, it is to God, or in Gods behalf.) Hereupon Eliphaz taxes him with this presumption, as if he would needs undertake to be a Patron for God, and so to bring him in some advantage, or to stand him in stead, for the maintaining of his cause; therefore he begins his speech with this chiding expostulation, Can man be profitable unto God? Or (suppose thou wert (which I shall presently disprove) as thou hast often boasted, righteous, yet) is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous?

This seems to be the intent of the whole Chapter, in which we may further take notice of two distinct parts. The first is reprehensory, Eliphaz reproves and rebukes Job sorely, to the end of the twentieth Verse.

The second is hortatory, Eliphaz moveth Job earnestly to repentance, in which he coucheth many promises, and gives assurance that it shall not be in vain, from the twentieth verse to the end of the Chapter; Acquaint now thy self with him, and be at peace, thereby good shall come unto thee, &c.

The first part, his reprehension, begins at the second Verse.

Verse 2. Can a man be profitable unto God?

There are three readings of these words.

First thus, Can a man be compared to God? Some labour much in the defence of this reading, but I shall not stay upon it. For though it be a truth that man cannot be compared to God, how wise or how good soever he is. What's the wisdom or goodness of man to God? Yet the Original Text doth not freely yield it self up to that translation which bears this truth.

Numquid Deo comparari potest homo etiam cum perfectæ fuerit scientiæ. Vulg.

Secondly, Master Broughton renders thus, Can the humane wight teach the Omnipotent? That word which we render to be profitable, he, to Teach: The Chaldee Paraphrase favours this translation, and some render it so in both parts of the verse; Can a man teach God, as he that is wise may teach himself? If a man should be so bold to take upon him to teach God, would God regard his teachings? But I shall pass by this also, especially considering that Eliphaz had no reason to tax Job with such a presumption, as if he had taken upon him to direct God how to order his affairs; when as Job himself (Chap. 21. ver. 22.) had strongly repressed and condemned such a boldness. Shall any teach God knowledge? Job having so lately exalted God above mans teaching (as was shewed in opening that verse) it is not probable that Eliphaz should reprove him, as conceiting himself wise enough to teach God: Or that he thought Job either had done, or was about to do that which with his last breath almost, he confessed no man could do.

Quidam verbum יסבון pro docere exponunt in utroque hemistichio. Merc.

The third is our reading, Can a man be profitable unto God? Can a man? He doth not mean an ordinary, weak, sickly, frail man; but a man, yea, any man at his best: The word here used notes a man in his health, strength, and glory; a man in the flower and perfection not only of his natural abilities, but in the richest furniture and array of his acquired, yea, inspired abilities. Take this man, a man of these attainments, a man thus accomplisht, and Can he be profitable to God? For as when the Psalmist saith (Psal. 33. 17.) A Horse is a vain thing to save a man. By the Horse there, we are not to understand a lean, poor, weak, slow-pac'd Horse, or a strong, swift Horse unman'd; such a Horse is indeed a very vain thing to save a man by; such a Horse may do a man more hurt then help, when he comes into danger; but the Psalmist means a Horse of the greatest strength, courage, and swiftness: A Horse exactly man'd, and taught all his postures, even such a Horse is a vain thing to save a man. Again, when the Scripture saith, Christ came to save sinners, we must not understand it of lesser, lower, or of the ordinary sort of sinners only, but even of the highest and the greatest, for such Jesus Christ came to save as well as the least of sinners. So here when 'tis said, Can a man be profitable to God? We must expound it of the highest of the learnedst, of the holiest, of the best of men; Can a man be profitable unto God? The word is El, The strong God: Can the strongest man be profitable unto the strong, the Mighty, Omnipotent, the Almighty God? Can he be profitable? Can he bring any advantage, gain, or profit to God? Should he reason with unprofitable talk? (saith Eliphaz, Chap. 15. 3.) Or with words that that bring in no profit? A word of the same root, signifies a Treasurer, who is a keeper of publick profits (Isa. 22. 15.) Go, get thee unto this Treasurer, even unto Shebna. Can a man be profitable? Thus Eliphaz reproves Job for insisting so often upon his own innocency, as if that were an advantage to God. As if he had said, How holy or righteous soever any man is, the Lord receives no advantage by him. So that Eliphaz (it seems) apprehended Job trusting or boasting of somewhat in himself, as if he had thought God his debtor, or that he had done somewhat for which God was beholding to him. And upon this ground, that God is debtor, or beholding to no man, Eliphaz undertakes Job: And though his supposition was false, yet his position was true, and gives us this profitable Observation,

That the best of men cannot oblige God, or merit any thing at his hand.

That which is our duty to do, cannot merit when we have done it. We cannot oblige either God or man by performing our own obligation. Thus Christ argues, Luke 17. 7. Which of you having a servant ploughing or feeding Cattel, will say unto him by and by when he is come from the field, go and sit down to meat? And will not say unto him, make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thy self, and serve me, till I have eaten and drunken, and afterward thou shalt eat and drink? Doth he thank that servant because he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not. So likewise ye, when ye have done all these things which are commanded you, say, we are unprofitable servants, we have done that which was our duty to do. Where Christ proves, that because the servant had done no more then was his duty to do, therefore he did not merit in doing it. When you have done all that is commanded you, say, ye are unprofitable servants. He that doth all those things that are commanded him, is a man indeed, a man of worth, a man of men, yet (let that be granted that he reacheth to the utmost line of the Command) he is an unprofitable servant, he hath but done his duty.

There is another parable in this Gospel of Luke that seems to be somewhat opposite to this (Chap. 12. v. 36, 37.) And ye your selves be like unto men that wait for their Lord when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open to him immediately. Blessed are those servants, whom, when the Lord cometh, he shall find so watching; that is, at their work. Watching is not meant here of a bare waking, or not being asleep, for a man may watch, in that sence, and yet be as bad as a sleeper: To be found awake, and yet idle, to be found awake yet doing nothing, is as blameable as to be found asleep: So that to be found watching is to be found intent upon, and labouring in the work of the Lord. Blessed are those servants whom their Lord when he cometh shall find so watching: What will he do? Verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth to serve them. In the seventeenth Chapter Christ saith, if a servant have been hard at work in the service of his Lord, even as a man that is come from Plough, or from feeding his Cattel, yet his Master doth not say to him, sit down to meat, but first bids him gird himself and serve him, and afterward go to meat. But here 'tis said, the Lord presently girds himself, and makes his servants sit down to meat, and will come and serve them: So that here he speaks, as if the Lord were much beholden to these servants, whereas before he speaks of them as unprofitable servants, to whom he was not at all beholding.

For the clearing of these two Parables, we are to distinguish them by their scopes. The scope of the Parable in the twelfth Chapter is to shew, that the diligent servant shall receive much from the hands of the Lord, or that the labour of the diligent servant shall not be in vain, or unprofitable to him.

But the scope of the Parable in the seventeenth Chapter, is to shew, that the most diligent servant cannot do any thing that is profitable unto his Lord: He may do that which may be profitable to himself, but he can do nothing that can be profitable to his Lord; that's the scope of the seventeenth Chapter, which falls in fully with the Text, and Observations that I am now upon. There is a wide difference between these two Parables. To shew what a diligent servant may expect is one thing, and what the most diligent servant can challenge or require is another. For indeed those servants in the twelfth Chapter, to whom the Lord administers the Supper, or to whom he ministers at Supper, must say, that they are unprofitable servants to the Lord; though they are to acknowledge (to the praise of their Lord) that his service hath not been unprofitable unto them, and they must say so upon these considerations.

First, He is their Lord, they his servants, not their own (1 Cor. 6. 20.) Ye are bought with a price, ye are not your own, therefore glorifie God in your bodies, and in your spirits, which are Gods. God is the owner of our bodies and spirits, our selves are the Lords. Now if we our selves, our bodies, and our spirits are the Lords, then much more are our services his. If the person be anothers, all the work done by him must be his too.

Secondly, The house wherein these servants are feasted is the Lords. The whole fabrick of Heaven and Earth is his House; He hath set it up to entertain and feast his people in.

Thirdly, All the chear and good things with which the Lord feasteth his servants (all the comforts which Grace holds out in this life, or glory in the next life) are of his own provision; the whole furniture of the Table is of his cost and charge, therefore they are obliged to their Lord, not their Lord to them; he is indeed profitable unto them, but they are not profitable unto him: They by their sloath and idleness might deserve to be sent supperless and hungry to bed, but by all their pains and diligence they could not deserve their Supper; Can a man be profitable unto God?

Secondly, Observe, That God is absolutely Independent and perfect in himself.

If there be any impossibility that man should be profitable unto God, then he is Self-sufficient, and altogether Independent, in reference to man: He that cannot receive any addition is perfect in himself, and he that is self-sufficient needs not: to receive any addition from another, is an argument of imperfection. And seeing God neither receives, nor can receive any thing from another, he must needs be perfect in himself. David (Psal. 16. 2.) speaking of himself (as the type of Christ) saith, O my soul, thou hast said unto the Lord, thou art my Lord (that is, thou art my Portion and my All) but my goodness extendeth not to thee, I am not able to do any good which reacheth to thy benefit, or increaseth thy happiness, for thou art mine. In the fiftieth Psalm the Lord asserts this his own independency, If I were hungry, I would not tell thee, for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof. If I had any hunger (that is, any defect upon me) I need not go to the creature to ask a supply, I could supply my self if there were any need; but there's none: The Lord he is infinitely above all hunger, above all wants and defects whatsoever. He indeed threatens Idolaters, that he will famish all their gods (Zeph. 2. 11.) Idols shall be hungry, they shall be famisht, and have none to administer any thing to them. This the Lord doth, when he withdraws their respect and worship, that name and reputation which once they had in the world from them; worship is the food of Idols, that keeps liveless Idols (as it were) alive, and therefore false gods are famished, when their false worship is cast down: But who can famish the Lord? If I were hungry, &c. I would not tell you: Can man be profitable unto God?

But it may be objected, Cannot a man be profitable to God? Is man no advantage, no help to him? Why then (Judg. 5. 23.) sings Deborah, Curse ye Meroz, said the Angel of the Lord, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty? It should seem then that the Lord had need of the help of these Inhabitants of Meroz, and if they had come forth, it had been an advantage to him, why else were they cursed for not coming forth to the help of the Lord?

I answer, Man is said to help the Lord, when he helps in the Lords cause. Personally the Lord needeth not any help; but the Lord may be helped relatively, in his cause, and in his people. Thus we help the Lord, when we help man, when we help the Church, and people of God: It is our honour as well as our duty, to help his people, and give assistance in his Cause: This the Lord takes so well at our hands, that he reckons it as help given to himself.

Again, if we consider the help as given to the Lords people, we are not to conceive that the Lord needed the help of these men of Meroz, as if he could not help them himself without the assistance or aid of man. For when he seeth that there is no man, then his own arm brings salvation, Isa. 59. 16. 'Tis the duty of man to come forth and draw his Sword in the Lords quarrel against the mighty, but the Lord needeth not the sword of man to subdue the mightiest.

Secondly, It may be objected; Cannot man be profitable unto God? He speaks of the Church of the Jews, in such language as implyes them a profit to him. Exod. 19. 5. Now if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my Covenant, then shall you be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people. And is there no profit in a treasure? Again, Deut. 32. 9. The Lords portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. Hath a man no profit by his portion? No advantage by his Inheritance? Now if the Lords people be his Portion, his Inheritance, his Treasure, his peculiar special Treasure, how then can it be said, they are no profit, no advantage to him?

I answer, The Lords people are his treasure, not because they inrich him, but because he hath a high esteem of them. The Lords People are his treasure, not because they profit him, but because he protects them: If I say to a man, you shall be a treasure to me; I may do it, not because I expect any profit from him, but because I have a high esteem of him, and resolve to protect and defend him, as I do my own portion and treasure: In this sence doth the Lord say of his people, Ye are my treasure. We esteem treasure, and treasures are under protection, lest any take them from us. Thus the Lord speaks of his people, not that he hath any profit or gain by them, as men who ordinarily have Portions and Inheritances in Fields or Houses which are their stock and livelihood. Indeed there is a Revenue which the Lord hath by his people as they are his portion; that is, a Revenue of glory and honour, not a Revenue of profit. But if you say glory and honour is profit, and an advantage to man, is it not then an advantage to God to be glorified by man?

I answer, It is no advantage to God when he is glorified by man. Our glorifying of God doth not add any glory to him that he had not, but it is only the setting forth of that glory which he had: There is no encrease of his fulness by all the honour and glory that the creature gives him. We are commanded to glorifie God (Matth. 5. 16.) Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorifie your Father which is in Heaven. But God doth not receive any additional glory by us, how much or how clearly soever our light shineth before men. A candle adds more light to the Sun, then all the creatures in the world can add to the glory of God, when they have studied his glory, and laboured to glorifie him to the utmost all their dayes.

Thirdly, That of David may be yet objected, Psal. 4. 3. The Lord hath set apart for himself the man that is godly. And if so, then it seems he intends to make some profit of him. It is an allusion unto those that vend wares: A Merchant looks upon this and that commodity, and then saith, this is for my turn, this I like, set it apart for me. Seeing then the Lord sets the godly apart for himself, it sounds as if he meant to make some gain or advantage by him.

I answer, The meaning of that Scripture is not, that God sets a godly man apart as one that he gets profit by, but as one that he intends to bestow mercy upon; or he sets him apart for service, not for gain: The Lord serves his own ends by the service of man every day, and sets apart the godly man for his special service.

Yet a little further, I shall demonstrate that a man cannot be profitable to God.

First, God had all perfection before man was, therefore man cannot profit God. Psal. 90. 2. From Everlasting, and to everlasting thou art God, that is, thou art infinite in glory and excellency from everlasting. God was God as much before there was a creature, as he hath been ever since the creatures were; therefore creatures add nothing at all to him.

Secondly, All the goodness and profitableness of man comes from God, therefore no profit goes unto God from man; that's the Apostles Argument, Acts 17. 25. where he shews that man cannot advantage God, no not by worship. He is not worshipped with mens hands as though he needed any thing. What, do you think God calleth for your worship, because he needs your worship? or as if he could not tell how to be without your worship? Nothing less; Seeing he giveth to all life and breath and all things. He that gives all things to all men, needs nothing of any man; here's the Apostles Argument, the Lord giveth out all things, life, breath, and all comforts whatsoever to all men, therefore he needs nothing of any man, no not the worship of any man. 1 Cor. 4. 7. The Apostle assigns that reason against boasting, What hast thou that thou hast not received, wherefore then dost thou boast? When do men boast? Even when they think they have done God a good turn. What hast thou that thou hast not received? Therefore why dost thou boast as if thou hadst not received it? What can he receive of us from whom we receive our all? And though we must return all to him in a way of thankfulness and duty, yet God needs not that we should return any thing to him in a way of largeness or supply.

Thirdly, Take this demonstration of it; they who live much in God, even they (upon the matter) need little or nothing of the creature; they (upon the matter) are Independent as to the creature who depend fully upon the Creator. The good or evil of this world is not much to them, who are much with God. They have but little to do with the creature, and can do well enough without the creature. (Hab. 3. 17.) Although the Fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the Vines; the labour of the Olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the Flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no Herd in the stalls; yet I will rejoyce in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. As if he had said, What if all creature-comforts are taken away from me, I can live upon God alone. The life of a Believer is much above the creature; How much more is the life of the Creator? The Apostle (2 Cor. 6. 10.) speaking of himself, saith, As having nothing, and yet possessing all things. If Paul by the high actings of his faith and dependencies upon God could say he possessed all things, while he was as having nothing in the creature. Surely God hath all, when he hath nothing of or from the creature: He may say in the strictest sence, Having nothing (of these things) and yet possessing all things. Lay these two Observations together.

First, That the Creature cannot oblige God.
Secondly, That God is Independent, absolute, perfect without the creature.

The result of both will rise up in these eight Conclusions.

First, This will follow, That we should not murmur, nor be discontented with our Estate, whatsoever it is: Why? We are not profitable unto God, we have deserved nothing at his hand. Discontent ariseth from Pride, from an opinion that we are not answered according to our worth; we should never be discontented, were we convinced that we are altogether worthless. Do but sit down in this thought, that man cannot be profitable unto God in any state, and then be discontented with your state if you can.

Secondly, If the Creature cannot be profitable unto God. Then, All that God doth for man, yea, for Angels, proceedeth from his free grace. We give him nothing aforehand, nor any thing afterward, therefore it is grace before, and grace after grace in all. We receive grace when we have no grace, and we receive more grace when we have it; yet by the grace we have we do not deserve to receive more: As we received the first grace meerly of grace, so we do the second. No man is aforehand with God; if any think they are, let them shew their Bills, what they have brought in, and it shall be acknowledged. Rom. 11. 35, 36. Who hath first given, and it shall be recompenced to him again? For of him, and through him, and to him are all things, to whom be glory for ever, Amen.

Thirdly, If man cannot be profitable unto God, then as none should dare to come to God in their own worthiness; so none should fear to come to God because of their unworthiness. We should not be discouraged, though as yet dead and fruitless, though vain and unbelieving: The worst of men should not keep off from God, because they are unprofitable, seeing the best cannot profit him. If we have done much, it is nothing to the Lord; and if we have done nothing, it is no bar to the Lords doing much for us. God will not turn us back because we bring him nothing, nay, he invites us to come without any thing (Isa. 55. 1.) Ho every one that thirsteth, come to the Waters, buy, &c. Here is buying, but for what? for profit? No, but come buy Wine and Milk without money and without price. God doth not expect any profit; there is a kind of buying, but its not for money, nor for money-worth. As the Lord sometimes sells his people, so he alwayes sells his graces and comforts, for nought (Psal. 44. 12.) Thou sellest thy people for nought, and doest not increase thy wealth by their price: That is, Thou leavest thy people under miseries and afflictions, by which it doth not appear that thou gettest any honour. Now as the Lord doth sometimes sell his people, so he also sells his mercy and grace to his people (as to any desert of theirs) for nought; he sells without money and without price, therefore be not discourag'd if you have nothing of your own of any worth to present unto him. Say not, Wherewith shall we come before the Lord? The poorer you come in your own thoughts, the richer you shall return; For He filleth the hungry with good things, but the rich he sendeth empty away.

of

Fourthly, If man cannot be profitable unto God, then our gifts and parts, yea, our holiness and graces do not make us necessary unto God. God may say unto the great Ones of the Earth, I have no need of you; and to the rich, I have no need of you; and to the wise, I have no need of you; yea, he may say unto the godly, and to the holy, I have no need of you neither. There is no creature necessary to God, seeing he cannot only (as we say) live, but live in the heights of happiness without the creature.

Fifthly, If no man can be profitable unto God, then whatsoever God requires of us, he aims at our profit, and not at his own; all is for us, or for our good, which will appear more fully in the opening the next clause; He that is wise may be profitable to himself. The Lord hath designed all our wisdom and obedience to our own benefit: so Moses spake to the people of Israel (Deut. 6. 24.) The Lord commanded us to do all these Statutes, to fear the Lord our God for our good alwayes, that he might preserve us alive, as it is at this day. It is not for the Lords good, but it is for our good that he commands, and we obey. And as the Lord commanded all things in the Law for our good, not for his own; so he commands us to believe the Gospel not for his good, but for our own; he is not to be saved by it, it is we that are to be saved by it. He doth not call us to work as men do their servants, that he might play the good husband, and get some profit by keeping us hard at labour. Indeed the Lord keepeth his Servants hard at labour night and day, they must be continually upon duty: But he doth it not (as I may say) to play the good husband, to increase his stock by it, but it is for our profit. That which Christ speaks (Mark 2. 27.) about the Sabbath, is true of all other the Commands of God; we are apt to think, that God requires a seventh day, because it is for his profit and advantage; No, saith Christ, the Lord hath not an eye to himself, but to man; The Sabbath was made for man; that is, for mans advantage, that he might look Heaven-ward, that he might work in the things which concern his own blessedness, therefore hath the Lord appointed him a resting day. The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.

Sixthly, Then our disobedience cannot hurt God, our sins cannot disadvantage him, impair his blessedness, or diminish his glory. As mans obedience is no profit; so his disobedience is no disprofit to God. Sinners shall be punished, as they who have wronged and dishonoured God, they shall be dealt with as such: But really, all the sins of the world do not bring any dammage or disadvantage to God: Elihu is expres to this point, in the thirty-fifth Chapter of this Book, vers. 6, 7. If thou sinnest, what dost thou against him? (Every sin is against the mind of God; but no sin is against the happiness of God.) Or if thy transgressions be multiplied, what dost thou unto him? Is God impair'd by it? Surely no, God doth not lose a pin from his sleeve (as I may say) by all the sins committed in the world: He hath no dependance at all upon our obedience for his blessedness; our sins cannot hurt him, as our obedience cannot help him, which Elihu shews in the next verse; If thou be righteous, what givest thou him? Or what receiveth he of thine hand?

Seventhly, Hence see the honour of God, that hath made so many creatures, and man especially, of whom himself hath no need, that hath so many to serve him, and yet needs none of their services. Give God this glory: We think those men are very glorious and honourable who have but as much of the Creature as will serve their turn, all creatures are the Lords, yet he is not necessitated to serve his turn by any of them.

Eighthly, Then see what an obligation lyeth upon us continually to bless God, to be thankful to him, to walk humbly with him, who gives us so many profits, when as we do not profit him at all. God prizeth that highly by which himself hath no benefit; he prizes the actings of faith and holiness highly, but he hath no advantage by them: God gives us profit by these, though himself be not profited; though he is not the better by any thing we do, yet we are the better: The Lord binds himself by promise, that the least good we do in sincerity shall have a good reward; He that gives but a cup of cold water to a Disciple in the name of a Disciple, shall not lose his reward. But if we give thousands of Gold and Silver to poor Disciples, what profit hath God by it? And yet though none of the profit comes to his hand, yet he reckons it as if all were put into his hand. All the charity and compassion shewed to his people, Christ taketh to himself (Matth. 25.) In that ye have done it unto these, ye have done it unto me. Christ had no need of alms, of visiting, or cloathing, yet he counts it as done to himself, when we do it to any of his.

Can a man be profitable to God, as he that is wise may be profitable to himself?

Some give the meaning of the words thus: Doth it follow, that a man can be profitable unto God, because a wise man may be profitable to himself? Our reading reaches the same sence; Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wise may be profitable to himself? It doth not follow, because A man may profit another man, or profit himself, that therefore he may profit God. That's the sum of the Argument.

As he that is wise.] The word in the root of it signifies to understand, to be prudent; and by a Metonymie to be happy, or to prosper; because usually affairs succeed well and prosper in the hands of wise men, and happiness usually follows wisdom; therefore to be wise, and to be profitable, are signified by one and the same word in the Hebrew. So in this Text, He that is wise is profitable to himself; that is, his affairs shall prosper. We find this Title prefixt to divers Psalms, Maschil, which is as much as A teaching Psalm, a Psalm making wise, a Psalm for Instruction. This Title is given those Psalms, which as they have some extraordinary matter, so usually they are Psalms of complaint under affliction; and the reason of that is, because there is much instruction in correction; much light of holy knowledge is to be had in the School of the Cross; therefore usually those Psalms that describe the afflictions of the Church are called Maschil, Psalms of Instruction.

שבר Intellexit, prudens fuit, per Metonymiam fœlix, prosper fuit, quòd prudentibus omnia fœliciter cedant; prudentiam fœlicitas sequitur. Maschil, intelligens prudès, carmen eruditè ode didascalita. Ipsius titulis Psalmorum ter & decies legitur. Schola crucis, Schola lucis. Luth.

He that is wise, and instructs; or he that is wise as having received instruction may be profitable to himself. All wisdom is not profitable to man; for there is a wisdom of which the Scripture saith, that God will destroy it; a man cannot profit himself by that; and there is a wisdom which is earthly, sensual and deviliſh (James 3. 15.) A man (be he never so wise according to this wisdom) shall not profit himself by it. There are a sort of wise men whom the Lord will take in their craftiness (1 Cor. 3. 19.) And how can such profit themselves by their wisdom? There are wise men whose thoughts the Lord knoweth to be but vain; that is, unprofitable; therefore these cannot profit themselves: Then what is that wisdom which Eliphaz means when he saith, He that is wise may be profitable to himself?

I answer, The wise man here intended is not the man that is politickly wise, worldly wise, carnally or craftily wise; but the man spiritually wise, his wisdom will bring him in profit. He that is guided by holy and godly wisdom, shall reap the benefit and eat the fruit of it. We have such wisdom described (Psal. 111. 10) The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom; a good understanding have all they that keep his Commandments: He doth not say, a good understanding have all they that know his Commandments, for many may know the Commandments, and yet not have a good understanding; but they have a good understanding indeed that do his Commandments. And when the Psalmist saith, The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, the word Beginning signifies not only the first step or entrance into a thing, but the head or height of it; so that Beginning is as much as chief, or principal; the best wisdom, the chief, the top wisdom, the head-wisdom, or the head of wisdom, is the fear of the Lord. Job gives the same description of wisdom, in the last words of the twenty-eighth Chapter, Behold, the fear of the Lord that is wisdom, and to depart from evil, that is understanding. Would you know what is true wisdom? 'Tis the fear of the Lord. Would you know who is wise? The godly man is the truly wise man, yea, he is the only wise man.

But then it may be questioned, May a wise man be profitable to himself? Doth not the Apostle say (Rom. 14. 7.) None of us liveth to himself, &c. Then how can a man be wise to himself? And doth not the Apostle give the rule (2 Cor. 5. 15.) Christ dyed for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves? If we may not live to our selves, how then doth he say here, that the wise man is profitable to himself? He that is profitable to himself, lives to himself, doth he not?

I answer, First, The wise man must not make his own profit the end or the design of his wisdom, but he may look upon his own profit as that which will be the issue, fruit and consequent of his wisdom. A carnal man looks to and loves his work for the rewards sake: A godly man may look to and love his reward for the work sake. (Prov. 9. 12.) If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thy self; that is, the fruit or the good of thy wisdom will drop into thy own bosom. A wise man may look for his advantage in the end of his work, though he is not to make his own advantage the end of his work. We are not to make either temporal or eternal advantages the end of our wisdom; but we may look upon them as fruits and effects that God leads us to by the exercise of wisdom.

Secondly, I answer, A wise man cannot be profitable to himself, as the founder of his own happiness, or as having a sufficiency in himself to make himself happy; but a wise man may be a means or an instrument of his own happiness; and walking in the way of wisdom, he walks in the way to his own happiness. Thus he that is godly wise, or that feareth God, may be profitable to himself.

Hence Observe, He that is truly wise, godly and holy, shall find fruit and benefit by it.

The Apostle (1 Tim. 4. 8.) assureth us that Godliness is profitable for all things. The greatest gain in the world is Godliness; It hath the promises of this life and of that which is to come. Whatsoever drops out of any promise of the Gospel, falls into the lap of a godly man; the promises are his, and therefore the good of the promise is his. When the promises open at any time, and give forth their vertue, they must needs give it forth to him that is wise, to him that is godly, for godliness hath the promises. When the Apostle had rebuk'd a sort of men that made godliness only a stalking-horse to get gain, he presently adds, But godliness is great gain, if a man be content with what he hath. Godliness it self is great gain, if we have no more; but Godliness brings in gain, abundance of gain, besides it self. (Matth. 6. 35.) Seek first the Kingdom of God, and the righteousness thereof, and all these things shall be added (or cast in as an advantage) to you. The Apostle (Rom. 6. 21.) puts a kind of holy scorn upon sinners, come, tell me, What fruit had you of those things whereof you are now ashamed? What fruit have you by your folly, pride, worldliness, envy, what fruit have you found in these things? Bring me in an account of your gain by trading in any sin. The end of these things is death; there is no great profit in that. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. Here are fruits good store, and all good fruits both for here and hereafter. We can never want fruit our selves, while we are bringing forth fruit unto God: All obedience is attended with a blessing, and though, as was toucht before, we cannot be the founders of our own blessedness, nor must we meerly design our own happiness, or aim at our own profit (for that is mercinary service) yet we may look at our own happiness and profit, yea, and Lay up for our selves a good foundation, as Paul adviseth rich men (1 Tim. 6. 19.) We then make the best of our riches, when we lay up for our selves a good foundation. But can a man lay a foundation of his happiness in his riches? What a rotten foundation will that be? What Hay and Stubble (in this sence) will Gold and Silver be? What's the meaning of it then when the Apostle saith, Laying up for your selves a good foundation?

I answer, We do it by the right improvement of riches (for he speaks there to rich men) not that we can lay any foundation to build upon beside Jesus Christ; for other foundation can no man lay then that which is laid, even Jesus Christ; but when our hearts are not glued to the creature, but we use them in a holy manner, here's our laying up a good foundation. A godly wise man may look upon his right improvement of worldly riches, as an effect of the grace and love of Christ dwelling in his heart; and thus he may be said to lay up for himself a good foundation. And further, a Believer may look upon his worldly profits as a fruit of the same grace, the Lord having promised, that he will bless and provide for him; so that every way a wise man may be profitable to himself. Thus Eliphaz hath at once asserted a possibility for a man to be profitable to himself, and denyed any possibility that a man can be profitable unto God; which he further explains in the next words.

Verse 3. Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? Or is it any gain to him that thou makest thy way perfect?

In the former Verse Eliphaz denyed in general, that God receiveth any benefit from man: In this third Verse he speaks the same thing, but somewhat more distinctly, denying, first, that he receives any pleasure which might add to his blessedness; or secondly, any gain which might add to his abundance. Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? Is it any gain to him that thou makest thy way perfect? As if he had said, Is the blessedness of God increased by thy righteousness? Or doth the perfection of thy wayes augment his Treasure? Is he either the happier or the richer by any thing thou art or canst do? That's the scope and sence of the words in general.

Is it any pleasure? The word which we translate Pleasure, signifies the will, and because it is so great a pleasure unto man to have his will, therefore the same word signifieth both pleasure and the will. So the word is used (Psal. 1. 2.) Blessed is the man whose delight is in the Law of God; that is, whose will is there, or who takes pleasure in the Law of God, his will being resolved into the will of God. Then we take pleasure and delight in a thing when we conforme to it, or close with it. The Judgment of God is so expressed upon Coniah (Jer. 22. 28.) Is this man Coniah a despised broken Idol? Is he a vessel wherein there is no pleasure? A vessel for the lowest use, as 'tis interpreted, ver. 21. A vessel in which there is no complacency, it is only for necessity. So the word is taken also (Prov. 3. 15.) He is more precious then Rubies, all the things thou canst desire (or have pleasure in) are not to be compared to him. And again (Isa. 58. 13.) If thou forbear to do thy pleasure upon mine holy day. What is the pleasure of a carnal man upon the Sabbath, upon the holy day of God? It is to do his own will, and not the will of God. If thou forbear to do thine own pleasure; that is, thine own will upon my holy day. Thus here, Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? The Septuagint translate somewhat differently, What cares the Almighty if thou art unblameable in thy wayes? Thus a man usually speaks of that wherein he hath no pleasure, What care I for it? Is it any pleasure? &c.

חפץ Notat voluntatem cum complacentia, vel acquiescentia.

Vas in quo non est voluntas.

Τί χάρις μέλει τῷ κυρίῳ, &c. Sept.

That thou art righteous? Righteousness is two-fold: First, Of Justification (so some understand it here) Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art justified? Or secondly, There is a righteousness in Conversation, so most understand it here, Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou thou art holy? Which is the same with the latter clause of the Text, That thou makest thy way perfect?

Further, the word signifies to plead our own justice, as well as to have a justice or righteousness of our own: And thus it may be expounded in this place, Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? that is, that Thou dost justifie thy self? Or (as Mr. Broughton) Pleadest justice? Dost thou justifie thy self, or stand upon thine own integrity, and then think to please God, or to carry the day against man, upon those terms? Is it any pleasure to the Almighty? That word fully hits the design of Eliphaz, it signifies both Almighty and All-sufficient; one that hath all in his own compass, that needs not go out of himself to fetch in any supplies or aid from abroad. He is Self-sufficient, and he hath a sufficiency for all others. Is it any pleasure to this Almighty One, that thou dost justifie thy self?

An oblectationi est omnipotenti quod justificas te? Jun. Se justificare non tam est justum esse quam contendere & conari adversus calumnias & scelera sibi objecta & ex ratione coram judice respondere.

Or is it any gain to him that thou makest thy way perfect?

As it is no pleasure, so no gain. The second Verse before opened, clears the mind of this clause. What there he calleth profit, is here called gain, in different words: And the word here used is rendred indifferently both gain and profit. (Gen. 37. 26.) When Joseph was cast into the pit, Judah said, What profit is it to slay our Brother? Let us sell him; let us make gain of him that way; slaying him will be no profit to us. And as it signifies gain, so covetousness; and the reason is, because covetousness hath gain for its object; covetousness provokes men to seek gain. Jethro (Exod. 18. 21.) gives counsel that Magistrates should be Men fearing God, and hating Covetousness, or hating gain; that is, not only all covetous practices, but inordinate desires of gain, for these lead into unlawful wayes of gain, even to the perverting of Justice.

Is it any gain to him that thou makest [thy way] perfect? That is, Thy life, thy conversation, thy course. What though thou striveſt after the highest attainments of grace, the purest purity of life, is this any gain to the Lord? The Septuagint render, That thou makest thy way simple? The simple sincere, plain way is the perfect way. The perfection of our way is the simplicity, sincerity, and uprightness of it.

Another reads, Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thy way is undefiled, or clean? that thou dost sweep and wash thy way, so that there is no spot to be seen upon it? (Psal. 119. 1.) Blessed are the undefiled or perfect in the way. The several parts of this Psalm begin with a new Letter, according to the order of the Hebrew Alphabet, intimating that it ought to be learned even of Children, as one of the Ancients infers from it. The undefiled in the way are such (properly) as have been holy or pure from their youth, such as did never corrupt their wayes. Timothy is said from a Child to learn the Scriptures. Suppose thy way thus perfect, that none could tax thee with any gross sin even from thy Childhood, could this be any gain to the Almighty?

Alphabetarius est hic Psalmus, ostendens parvulos ab ipsis statim elementis & pueritia informandos esse ad pietatem. Hilar,

There is yet another Translation, which implyeth not only the study of holiness, but a boasting in holiness, Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou dost justifie thy self? Or is it any gain to him that thou dost affirm thy wayes are perfect? So it falls in with the third rendring of the former clause.

Aut an lucro quod integras asseris vias tuas. Jun.

For the understanding and further clearing of these words, I shall draw them forth into distinct propositions, which will be as so many Observations from the Text. It may seem a very Paradox to assert, that it is no pleasure to the Almighty that a man makes his way perfect, therefore take the sence first in three affirmative Propositions, and then in three that are Negative.

First, The Lord hath pleasure in us as we are righteous in Christ.

Yea, he loves to hear us boast of this righteousness, and glory in it; and the more we do so, the more pleasure he taketh in it (Isa. 45. 25.) Surely shall one say, in the Lord have I righteousness, even to him shall men come, &c. In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory. The seed of Israel are righteous in the Lord, and glory in that righteousness; yea, the Lord is pleased to hear them glorying in that righteousness, for that's the righteousness of his Son, In whom he is well pleased (Matth. 3. 17.) And because the Church is cloathed with this righteousness, therefore she is called, The Lords delight (Isa. 62. 4.) Thou shalt no more be called forsaken, neither shall thy Land any more be termed desolate, but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy Land Beulah, for the Lord delighteth in thee. Thou shalt be called my delight, or my pleasure is in her. The word of the Text, the Lords pleasure is in the Church, and therefore the Lords pleasure is in the Church, because the Church is adorned and beautified with the righteousness of Jesus Christ; this is it which causeth the Lord to call his Church Hephzibah, My pleasure is in her. When Eliphaz enquireth, Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? We may answer, The Lord hath pleasure in this righteousness, and as he tells the Church, so every particular Believer, his delight and pleasure is in him.

Secondly, God takes pleasure also in us as we are righteous in Conversation.

David (Psal. 147. 10, 11.) gives a clear proof of it both in the Negative and in the Affirmative. The Lord delighteth not in the strength of a horse, he taketh not pleasure in the legs of a man. The Lords delight is neither in horses, nor in men; neither in their strength, nor in their beauty: Wherein is the Lords pleasure then? The next words shew us where, He takes pleasure in them that fear him and hope in his mercy. This Scripture seems to speak directly contrary to Eliphaz in Job, he saith, Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? But David saith, The Lord takes pleasure in those that fear him: Therefore we must not understand Eliphaz in this sence, as if the Lord had no delight or contentment at all in the holiness of his people, as if it were all one to him whether they are holy or unholy: There is a Generation who say, That all actions are alike, and that it is all one before God, whether men be righteous or unrighteous, whether they do good or evil: Woe to them that understand this Scripture in such a corrupt sence, for the Lord doth not only hate iniquity, but he is of purer eyes then to behold any iniquity. He hath no pleasure either in unrighteousness, or in the unrighteous; but both righteousness and the righteous are his pleasure. There are three things which I shall touch for the confirmation of it.

First, The Lord cannot but take pleasure in his own Image: Now that righteousness which is implanted in us, and put forth by us, the righteousness of our natures and of our actions, as we are regenerate, is nothing else but the Image of God renewed upon us. Seeing then God cannot but take pleasure in his own Image, therefore it is a wickedness to think that God takes no pleasure in a righteous man, or in his righteousness.

Secondly, As this righteousness is the Image of God in us; so it is the very workmanship of God upon us (Ephes. 2. 10.) For we are his workmanship: We are so not only first in our natural capacity, as we are men; and secondly, in our civil capacity as such or such men, high or low, rich or poor; but also (which is the thing intended by the Apostle) in our spiritual capacity as Saints. Thus we are the workmanship of God, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them. The same Apostle saith again, He that hath wrought us for this self same thing is God (2 Cor. 5. 5.) Is it possible that God should have no pleasure in his own works? We read in the first of Genesis, that when he had made the world, the Lord saw all that he had made, and behold it was very good. God hath an All-seeing eye, he always beholdeth all things; but when 'tis said, he saw all that he had made, this imports a special act of God, after the manner of men, who strictly view and behold what they have done, delighting in it: Thus the Lord saw all that he had made; he (as it were) came to view his own work, he saw and behold it was very good, he took pleasure in it. Now if God took pleasure in that structure and fabrick of the world, the first creation, how much more pleasure doth he take in that holiness which he hath wrought in the hearts of his people, which is a second creation? And that's a more curious and noble structure then this visible world is. The new Creation is more excellent then the Old. Therefore the Lord cannot but delight in in a righteous person, for he is his workmanship. What Job (Chap. 14. 15.) assures himself of, is most true in this respect, Thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands. Job speaks there of his outward man: My body (he means) was made by thee, 'tis the work of thy hands, and thou wilt fetch it back again, thou wilt redeem it from the dust. Whatsoever hath the workmanship of God upon it, he hath pleasure in it as it is his work, and a special pleasure in that, which (as any work of Grace is) is his special work.

Thirdly, This Consideration shews that the Lord must take pleasure in a righteous person, because he bears the form of his will revealed in his word. Holiness is our conformity to the will of God: Now the Lord cannot but take pleasure in those who conform to his will. Samuel tells Saul (1 Sam. 15. 22. and there he useth this word in the Text) Hath the Lord as great delight in Burnt-offerings and Sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? God gave thee a Word, a Command, to which he expected thy conformity, but thou hast thought to please the Lord with Sacrifices, which he commanded thee not; this was thy mistake and thy folly. We honour God when we do his will; surely then we must needs take pleasure in those that do it. Man takes pleasure when he can have his will (though it be a corrupt and sinful will) fulfilled: It cannot but be a pleasure to God when his holy will is fulfilled, or done on earth as it is in Heaven. Thus we see the second Proposition cleared, for the understanding of these words, That as the Lord takes pleasure in those who are righteous by the imputed righteousness of his Son, so even in those also who are righteous by the implanted righteousness or holiness of his Spirit.

Thirdly, God takes pleasure to see a sincere and upright person justifie himself, or plead his own justice against all the false accusations and suspicions of men.

The Lord likes it well to hear a man who is falsly accused, to stand up and maintain his own innocency; yea, iti s our duty, and we are bound in conscience to maintain our own innocency. So David in the seventh Psalm, and in the eighteenth Psalm, justified himself against Saul. And thus Job all along in this Book justified himself against the opinion of his Friends; in this sence God takes pleasure, when we are so righteous in all our dealings, and perfect in all our wayes, that we dare encounter whosoever speaks the contrary, and can wash off all the aspersions which either misguided and mistaken friends, or professed enemies cast upon us. You have now had those three affirmative Propositions for the understanding of the Text. Take three more in the Negative.

First, God hath no pleasure to see us justifie our selves before him, or to plead our own righteousness with him, yea, he is extreamly displeased at it.

This some conceive the chief thing which Eliphaz aimed at. Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou dost justifie thy self? No, thou dost highly provoke him in doing so; to plead with or to justifie our selves before God that we are righteous, is worse then all our unrighteousness, for this overthrows the whole design of the Gospel, which is (1 Cor. 1. 29.) That no flesh should glory in his presence, but he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. And (Rom. 3. 19, 20.) The Law convinceth all, That all the world may become guilty before God, therefore by the deeds of the Law there shall be no flesh justified in his sight. God will have every mouth stopped, or cry guilty; and therefore for any one to open his mouth and justifie himself before God, is to overthrow the Gospel. They are ignorant of the righteousness of God, who go about to establish their own righteousness (Rom. 10. 3.) And as God hath no pleasure in them who boast of their righteousness to justifie themselves before him, so,

Secondly, God hath no pleasure in them who boast of their own righteousness, and contemn others.

Though a man may assert the righteousness of his Conversation against all them who question it; yet God resents it highly when any proclaim their own righteousness to the despising of others. Christ speaks a Parable against those (in Luke 18. v. 9, 10, 11.) who trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others. Two men went up into the Temple to pray, the one a Pharisee, the other a Publican: The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are, Extortioners, Adulterers, Unjust, or even as this Publican. Here was one that advanced his own active righteousness, and he did it with the contempt of another. I am not as this Publican. The Lord takes no pleasure in this; yea, the Lord is highly displeased with this. And (Isa. 65. 5.) the Prophet represents the Lords indignation against this Pharisaical spirit in dreadful eloquence, Stand by thy self, come not near to me, for I am holier then thou. Thus they pleaded their righteousness in contempt of others. These (saith the Lord) are a smoak in my nose (that is, grievous, and displeasing) a fire that burneth all the day.

Thirdly, God hath no pleasure at all in any of our righteousness, either in the righteousness of our justification, or the righteousness of our sanctification, as the least addition to his own happiness.

The reason of it is, because (as was shewed from the former Verse) God is Self-sufficient, and hath no dependance at all upon the Creature: So that what pleasure soever the Lord hath in the righteousness of our Justification, or of our Sanctification, we cannot put it to this account that we add any thing to his happiness.

All the pleasure which God taketh is in himself, or in the fulfilling of his own good pleasure in Christ.

Deus nullis rebus quæ extra ipsum sunt, tangitur aut mutatur.

And therefore the work which Jesus was to do on Earth, is called, The pleasure of God (Isa. 53. 10.) It pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief; when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his dayes, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. That pleasure of the Lord was the work which the Lord put into his hand, or which he gave him to do, even the bringing about his eternal purpose, for the recovery of lost man; that's a work in which the Lord takes pleasure, so much pleasure, that the Prophet calleth it His pleasure. And thus the Apostle speaks (Eph. 1. 5, 6.) Having predestinated us to the adoption of Children, by Jesus Christ, according to the good pleasure of his own will, &c. The good pleasure of God is only in his own will, that's his pleasure. The Lord delights to see his will accomplisht in the saving of sinners, as well as in the obedience of Saints; that's a part of the good will of God: Why doth he take pleasure in the obedience of Saints, even because his own will is done? It's not any thing in us that doth it. So when he saves us, the pleasure which he takes, is in the fulfilling of his own will, rather then in our salvation. Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous?

Verse 4. Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? Will he enter with thee into judgment?

The Question is to be resolved into this Negative, He will not reprove thee for fear of thee, &c.

Will he reprove thee? The word signifies first, to argue or dispute, and so to convince by the authority of reason.

יכח Arguit, redarguit, corripuit, judicavit,

Secondly, To plead so as to convince by evidence of the Law and fact (Mich. 6. 2.) Hear ye, O Mountains, the Lords controversie, and ye strong foundations of the Earth, for the Lord hath a controversie with his People, and he will plead with Israel. The Mountains and the strong foundations of the Earth, are the Great men of the Earth, or Magistratical powers, with these the Lord threatens a Controversie, and that he will plead or argue his cause with them.

Thirdly, It signifies to argue or plead not with words only, but with blows, to reprove with correction, Job 5. 17. Happy is the man whom thou correctest. The word which here we render reprove, is there rendred to correct, which is reproving by blows.

Fourthly, Some translate it to evidence, to evince, and determine: Thus it is said (Gen. 25. 16.) That Abimelech reproved Sarah; that is, gave evidence that she had a Husband: And Abraham's Servant said (Gen. 24. 44.) She that saith to me, Both drink thou, and I will also draw for thy Camels, let her be the Woman whom the Lord hath appointed for my Masters Son: That is, Let this token be an evidence evidence to me, that it is she whom thou hast appointed for his Wife. Some here take it so, Will God evidence, or determine, concerning thee, by thy fear, or the worship which thou givest him, That thou art righteous? We express it fully enough, Will he reprove thee for fear of thee?

Or will he enter with thee into judgment?

Both these expressions are of the same sence; and these words [For fear of thee] may be read in the close of the Verse, Will he reprove thee, or will he enter with thee into judgment for fear of thee?

Fear may be taken here two wayes: Either first Actively; or secondly, Passively.

Putasne te pleeti ob religionē tuā?

Take it Actively, and so it notes the fear of Job, Will he reprove thee because of thy fear? And then by his fear we are to understand his Religiousness or Holiness: So Master Broughton, Would he reprove thee for thy Religion?

An de religione tua arguevet te? Jun.

Take this Fear Passively, and then it implyeth a Fear which God himself might be thought to have of him: As if Eliphaz had said, God is not afraid of thee. The Prophet saith (Isa. 51. 12.) Who art thou that thou shouldst be afraid of a man? &c. Much more may we say, who or what is man that God should be afraid of him? One of the Ancients following this Interpretation, professeth, that no fit or comely sence can be given of these words, but concludes that Eliphaz spake very foolishly and grossly, or as a man forsaken and left of God: For (saith he) can any one imagine such a thing as this, that Job should have a thought that God was afraid of him? But we may very well accommodate the sence in either of these considerations of Fear, whether Actively, or Passively, and judicious Interpreters carry it both wayes. Let us weigh it a little in both.

Quis vel hoc despiens sentiat, quod Dominus ex timore nos arguat & ex metu judicium suū contra nos proponat. Greg.

First Actively, As fear is taken for the fear which Job feared; that is, for his religion and worship, or the exercise of it, then the meaning is this, Dost thou think that God doth punish thee for thy goodness, or because thou art righteous? No, it is because thou art irreligious: Is not thine iniquity great, and thy sin infinite? As he speaks out in the next words, Dost thou think that God punishes thee for thy holiness? No, he can find sins enough to do it for. And Eliphaz might speak to such a sence (I conceive) because Job pleaded his integrity so much, as if he should say, Never think that God afflicts thee for thy holiness; or righteousness, but rather acknowledge thy sins and thy wickedness to be the cause of thy afflictions: Are not thine iniquities manifest?

Putasne quod ille te affligat quia religiosus sis & Dei timens ac integer ut de te ipse predicas? minime vero, quin potius quod sis irreligiosus. Merc.

There is a truth in this, God doth correct many who fear him; but he doth not correct any one for fearing of him: Many holy persons are afflicted; but no man was ever afflicted for his holiness. God hath made many promises to the godly man, that he will reward him, and do him good; Say to the righteous, it shall be well with him. Godliness is profitable for all things, having the promises of this life, and of that which is to come. Therefore no man needs fear that God will hurt him for his holiness: Though a holy man may receive many rods and scourges from God, yet holiness never received the least scourge from God.

Numquid ex timore tuo judicabit te? Deus quando te judicabit, non respiciet ad timorē tuum tantam & connivebit ad mala quæ feceris. Hoc sine subjicit, nonne malum tuum amplum est? Ostendit autem nullam pietatem hominis esse perfectam, ut inde justus judicari deo possit. Coc.

Again, as Fear is taken Actively for Religion, or for Holiness, the sence may be given thus, in pursuance of the fourth signification of the word Reprove; before explained. When God comes to judge thee, or when he declares what thou art, he will not look to thy fear only, to thy profession of Religion and Holiness, and over-look or wink at thy sins; and therefore he presently subjoyns, Is not thy wickedness great? Hereby arguing, that no mans piety is so perfect, that thereby he can be accounted just or righteous in the sight of God, or that a mans profession, yea, and practice of Religion is of no value, either to escape the punishment of his sin, or to deserve a reward at the hands of God. Some expound that (Psal. 50. 8.) in a parallel sence to this, the word being the same. I will not reprove thee for thy Sacrifices (which is the same with Fear in the Text, according to this Interpretation, being put for all outward worship or religiousness) or for thy burnt-offerings continually before me. For those words, To have been, which our Translators supply, may be left out, and the sence remain perfect: Or if those words be continued, then the negative Particle not, is (as in many Scriptures it is) to be reassumed out of the first part of the verse, and the whole read thus, I will not reprove thee for thy Sacrifices, or for thy Burnt-offerings not to have been continually before me: That is, I will not charge thee with a neglect of outward duty or worship, the inward and spiritual (of which he speaks, ver. 14.) being that which is most pleasing unto me. Now as to the paralleling of this place in the Psalms, with the sence of Job's Text now under hand, we must read them thus, I will not judge thee for thy Sacrifices; that is, when I determine concerning thy righteousness, I will not do it by having an eye to, or respecting thy Sacrifices, thy religious course and exercise of holiness, though thou hast been much, yea, even continually conversant in them; I shall only argue and declare thee righteous as thou trustest in me, and by faith takest hold of my Covenant. Thus as the Lord is conceived saying in the Psalm, I will not judge or declare thee righteous for thy Sacrifices, so here Eliphaz, Will he (that is, certainly he will not) judge or declare thee righteous for thy fear? And so the latter part of the verse may receive the same Exposition, Will he enter with thee into judgment, namely, for thy fear? Will God deal with thee upon the account of thy piety? And when he comes to justifie thee, will he impute that to thee? Or when God enters into judgment with thee, will he suffer thee to present thy fear, thy piety, or goodness to him, and so thereby answer his plea, or take away the action which he brings against thee? When God enters with us into judgment, we may boldly plead our interest or Faith in the Mediator, but we must not plead our fear, the Grace or Holiness either of our persons, or of our services.

Eliphaz propositum est ostendere quod religio hominis non prosit ad demerendum deum, vel peccati pœnam evadendam. Coc.

Thus we see the Doctrine of the Text according to this Exposition, and the active signification of the word Fear, carrieth in it the very life and spirit of the Gospel. All the worth and merit of our works, as to Righteousness, is null'd and laid prostrate, and we taught to glory in nothing but the free gift and grace of God by our Lord Jesus Christ.

Secondly, As Fear is taken Passively, Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? That is, Is God afraid of thee? Doth he pick quarrels with thee for fear of thee? Or seek occasions against thee when there is none, only lest thou shouldst stand in his way, or be a detriment to him? This appears plainly to be the sence of our Translators.

Whence Observe, God is above the fear of the Creature.

As in the former verse God is above any advantages or hopes that the Creature can give him; so he is above the fear of any hurt that the Creature can do him. As the goodness or righteousness of man cannot benefit the Lord; so the wickedness and sinfulness of man cannot at all impair the eternal glory and happiness of the Lord. Though the wickedness of man be a darkening to the manifestations of his glory (and for that wicked men shall be judged) yet as to his essential glory all the wickedness in the world cannot darken that, nor be the least abatement to it. Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? No, man cannot hurt the Lord by all his wickedness, and therefore

The punishment which God layeth upon wicked men is not after the manner of men. God doth not punish as man punisheth.

Eliphaz here speaks of that which is often indeed a true ground among men why they reprove or punish other men. Some reprove others upon a vain fear of them, and some upon a just fear of them. Why did the Jews accuse and reprove Christ? Was it not for fear of him? At least they pretended a fear, why else were they so hasty to have Jesus Christ brought to judgment? (John 12. 47, 48.) Then gathered the Chief Priests and Pharisees a Council, and said, What do we? For this man doth many Miracles: if we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him, and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and Nation. They crucified Christ for fear (though it was but a vain fear) that he would be the ruine of their state; the Romans must needs come and destroy them, if they let him alone. Fear makes men cruel; and they are most ready to hurt others, who continually suspect hurt from others. It hath been an ancient Observation, That Cowards are murderous and revengeful:

vengeful: While a man fears that such a man will be his ruine, he ruines him if he can, and removes that out of his way which he supposeth standing in the way of his own safety. Why did Pharaoh give command to slay the Male-children of the Jews, and oppress that people? It was upon a vain or cowardly fear, Come let us deal wisely with them, least they multiply, and it come to pass that when there falleth out any war, they joyn also with our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the Land (Exod. 1. 10.) It is said at the seventeenth verse of that Chapter, that The Children of Israel were fruitful and (God fulfilling herein his Promise made to Abraham) increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty, and the Land was filled with them. When God thus cast a gracious eye upon them, Pharaoh and his Councellors cast a jealous eye upon them; began to suspect their multiplying might at last diminish him, that their rising might prove his ruine. Therefore upon reason of State he must find out a way to suppress and keep them under as slaves and bondmen, whom his Ancestors received as welcome guests, and had to that day enjoyed as faithful friends. Pharaoh being captivated with this fear, saw no way to free himself, but by taking away the freedom of that whole people. As some, through the prevalency of their own fears dare not do justice; so others through the prevalency of fear do that which is unjust. Take one Instance more, Why did Herod (Matth. 2.) send out to slay all the Children? It was for fear of the King of the Jews; he was afraid of Christ, and therefore that he might murder him, he gave that horrible sentence to slay all the Infants. Again, some reprove and judge upon a due fear; for as Tyrants and wicked men are full of fear because full of cruelty, and have suspitious thoughts that others will wrong them, because they have a mind to wrong every man; so just and righteous Magistrates when they see evil working, they must reprove and punish it, lest it spread to the endangering of the publick Peace. This is a just fear, and such as becomes a man, even a man of courage and integrity; such may fear, that if seditious spirits be let alone, they will undermine a whole Nation, and destroy thousands. A Magistrate reproves and judges Thieves and Murderers out of fear that if they increase no man shall live quietly. Such as either openly or secretly contrive evil against a Nation, the Magistrate from a just ground of fear deals with them and reproves, lest they should disturb or infect the whole.

But the Lord doth not reprove any man for fear of him, he is of such infinite strength and stability, so far out of the reach of all the plots and contrivances of the wicked, that he needs not call them to account, lest they should hurt his State, pull him out of his Throne, spoil his Kingdom, or get his Dominion from him; the Lord is not afraid of any of these things; but the true reason why the Lord reproves wicked men, is, because he hates their iniquities, and is a God of truth and judgment. Though Magistrates may punish not only out of the love of Righteousness and Judgmen, but because they fear a State may be ruin'd if they do it not; yet the Lord hath none of this fear, in regard of his State, but he doth it meerly out of love to Justice, and as a hater of wickedness.

He reproves man because he hath sinned against him, not because he is afraid of him, as Eliphaz shews in the words which follow.

erissimum illud, uod inter gumen-andum af-mit Eli-haz, ex ti-ore fre-uenter nas-aut ve-mentius ccendi so-re severi-tem in ir-gando pplicio. ned.

VERS. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

Is not thy wickedness great, and thine iniquity infinite?
For thou hast taken a pledge of thy Brother for nought, and stripped the naked of their cloathing.
Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withholden bread from the hungry.
But as for the mighty man he had the earth, and the honourable man dwelt in it.
Thou hast sent widdows away empty, and the arms of the fatherless have been broken.

IN this Context Eliphaz intends to shew the true reason why God reproved Job, and entred into judgment with him, it was not (as was said at the fourth Verse) either because God was afraid of him, or because he feared God, but it was for his wickedness, as Eliphaz (though mistaken) concluded against him: As if he had said, God doth not punish thee because he is afraid of thee, but because he loveth justice, and hateth iniquity: Is not thy wickedness great, and thine iniquity infinite? That's the scope of these words, which we may fitly call Job's Indictment, and this Indictment is laid down first in general words. Vers. 5. Is not thy wickedness great, and thine iniquity infinite? And here Job is not charged with wickedness and iniquity barely, but under a two-fold aggravation.

1. Great.
2. Infinite.

Secondly, We have his Indictment drawn out into particular Charges, or a specification of some notorious sins given against him the Verses following.

This particular Charge consists of two heads.

First, Sins against man: Secondly, Sins against God: His supposed sins against man, contained in the words now read, are of two sorts: First, Sins of commission, or of the evil which he had done: Secondly, Sins of omission, or of the good that he had not done. The evil which he chargeth him to have done, is two-fold: First, An act of injustice, Taking a pledge, in the sixth verse. Secondly, An act of uncharitableness, Stripping the naked, in the same verse.

Both which evils, or miscarriages towards the honest poor are aggravated (ver. 8.) by his undue connivence at the wicked rich; as he was too severe against the poor, so he was over-favourable towards the great and mighty; But as for the mighty man he had the earth, and the honourable man dwelt in it: As if he had said, Thou didst never set thy self to do justice upon the great ones, be they and do they what they will, they have the earth; thou didst never put forth or exercise thy power to suppress and oppose their insolencies; thy edge was turned only against inferiour ones: Thou tookest a pledge from the poor, and hast stripped the naked of their cloathing.

His sins of omission are expressed in the seventh verse; Thou hast not given water to the weary; thou hast withholden bread from the hungry: And in the ninth verse, Thou hast sent widows away empty, and the armes of the fatherless have been broken: Which may be either taken thus, Thou hast broken their armes, or thou hast not given thy help and assistance to restore and relieve them when broken. Thus we have a light into the meaning of these five Verses, as they are a Charge of sin upon Job.

Verse 5. Is not thy wickedness great?

The Question may be taken two wayes; either conjecturally and doubtingly, or assertively and affirmingly. Usually in Scripture such Questions are resolved into Assertions, and so divers interpreters resolve this here; Is not thy wickedness great? That is, I conclude against thee, That thy wickedness is great, and that thy iniquities are infinite: So Master Broughton renders, Doubless thy evil is great. Others conceive it more clear to the mind of the Text, that this Question should be interpreted conjecturally, Is not thy wickedness great? That is, May we not suppose, that thy wickedness is great? May we not from (at least) probable grounds think thus of thee? And that, first, from the general state of man by nature; mans heart being sinful, he may sin, and sin (as it were) without bounds, greatly. There is no man (saith Solomon, 1 Kings 8. 46.) that liveth and sinneth not: Solomon puts it as a parenthesis in his prayer, but it is such a parenthesis, as hooks in all mankind, it takes all in, Who is there that sinneth not? So (Prov. 20. 9.) Who can say I am clean from my sin? Now upon this general ground Eliphaz might suppose, Is not thy wickedness great? All men have this in their nature, and hast not thou made improvement of it in thy life? All men being sinful by nature, art not thou extreamly sinful in practice?

Non tam hæc ei ex professo objicit, quam cogitandum ei relinquit, num hæc fecerit. Merc.

Again, He might make the supposition upon this ground, his present condition, or his affliction: Thou art greatly afflicted, thy afflictions are not of an ordinary size, or measure, therefore is not thy wickedness great, and thine iniquity quity beyond the ordinary measure? Upon this common rule he might suppose his sin very great; for usually God doth proportion and measure out punishments by our sins. Thy sufferings are very great, therefore are not thy sins great too? Thus he might speak conjecturally upon both these considerations: And yet if we consider how positively he speaks of particulars at the sixth and seventh verses, &c. Thou hast taken a pledge of thy brother for nought, and stripped the naked of their cloathing, &c: He gives us but too much ground to think, that he did more then barely conjecture, while he said,

Is not thy wickedness great?

רעתך Malum tuũ vox Hebræa pertinet ad improbitatẽ quandã & impudentiã, contra jus & æquum omnia conculcantem.

The word which we render wickedness, is by some specially expounded of that wickedness which hath a kind of impudence in it, and which doth not only break, transgress, or step over the Law, but spurns against it; every man that sinneth steppeth over the Law, over the line, but there are some that kick at it, some who trample upon it, yea, they would destroy it; so some heighten the emphasis of the word.

Malitia in sacris interdum est afflictio, ærũna vexatio, pro malo pœnæ non culpæ accipit, Rab. Lev.

Again, the word is rendred by others as signifying the evil of punishment in this part of the verse, and not the evil of sin; Is not thy affliction great? Therefore thy iniquity is infinite. The Greek word (Matth. 6. 34.) answers this, Sufficient to the day is the evil thereof; that is, the trouble and the sorrow of it: (Amos 3. 6.) Is there any evil in the City which the Lord hath not done? So here, Is not thy evil great? Thy evil of punishment? Therefore thy iniquity is infinite. But I rather fix it upon the former; though the word sometimes signifies the evil of affliction, yet here I shall take it for the evil of sin, or as we translate, wickedness, which denotes not ordinary but great sin; for though every wicked man be a sinner, yet every sinner is not properly a wicked man.

Malitiam dicit plurimam, sed iniquitates infinitas, quia in pluribus peccat homo omittendo quam committendo. Aquin.

Further, wickedness in the former, and iniquity in the latter part of the verse, may be thus distinguished; wickedness specially respects those acts by which we hurt and wrong others; iniquity those in which we pass by or neglect the duty which we owe to others; and therefore Eliphaz calls his wickedness great, but his iniquities infinite; because sins of omission are more in number then sins of commission: Man fails oftner by not doing the good required, then by doing the evil forbidden. Nature can easier forbear that which it likes, or pleaseth it, then be conversant in that which it likes not, or with which it is displeased.

Is not thy wickedness great?

The word signifies both magnitude and multitude, and it may be taken both wayes here, for great in bulk, and great in number.

But it may be said, Whose wickedness is not great? Or is any sin little? Why then doth Eliphaz fasten this upon Job, Is not thy wickedness great?

I answer, First, That it is unbecoming any man, to say his sins are little; we should not little, or lessen our sins, or have low thoughts of them: As we ought not to have low thoughts of any of the mercies of God, but to think them all great to us, yea, too great for us; so we should not have light thoughts of any of our sins, but judge the least of them great, and the lightest of them heavy, yea, even too great and to heavy for us to bear. Nor doth any thing more greaten a mans sin, then his opinion that it is little.

Secondly, I answer, That indeed no sin is little: In the least sin that ever was committed, there is a greatness, as committed against the great God, as it is a breach of the Law, and an abuse of the love of the Great God. Nevertheless, though every sin, thus considered, is great, yet comparatively some sins are but little; and sins being weighed one with the other, we may give this distinction of them into little and great, light and heavy. And as some godly men are faithful, and fear God above many; so some wicked men are sinful and dishonour God above many. Is not thy wickedness great?

Hence Note, 'Tis our duty not only to take notice of our sins, but of the greatness and degree of our sins.

Eliphaz doth well to put Job upon that inquiry, Is not thy wickedness great? Though he did ill so groundlesly to suspect, much more to conclude that it was so. When Moses (Exod. 32. 31.) interceded for the people, after they had made the golden Calf, he makes report of their sin to God in the fullest aggravation of it: Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them Gods of Gold: He doth not only confess in their behalf, that they had sinned, but they had sinned greatly, They have (saith he) sinned a sin; that's more then to do a thing that is sinful, and which is yet more, They have sinned a great sin; and which is most of all, They (though they have been taught, and have professed that God made them) have made them Gods of Gold. David makes this the ground why he did beg pardon of his sin (Psal. 25. 11.) Pardon mine iniquity, for it is great. As we are to look upon the greatness of sin, to humble our souls with godly sorrow; so we are to look upon the greatness of sin when we sue to the Lord for pardon; pardon my sin for it is great: our very sensibleness that our sin is great, is a prevailing Argument with God to pardon it; and our insensibleness that our sins are great, gives the greatest stop to the pardon of them. And as every sin hath the more need of pardon, by how much the greater it is; so God will have the more glory in pardoning it, by how much the greater it is. The great wounds and sicknesses of the Patient have the more need of curing; and if a Physitian cure a great wound or sickness, he hath the more honour by the cure. Now that we may take the truest measure of our sins, we must look upon them, first in their nature and kind, of what sort they are, and to what they relate in their commission; secondly, in their circumstances, when, how, and in what manner they have been committed. That sin which is but little in the nature of it, may be a very great one in the circumstances of it. As there are some mercies which we receive from God, little in their kind, yet great in their circumstances, and very obliging; so are our sins. Some sins are very horrid in their own nature, they lay the Conscience waste, and eat out the very principles of Godliness, such are Atheism, Blasphemy, and Idolatry. The sin of the people of Israel in making Gods of Gold, how detestable was it? A golden God, what an ugly sight is that? And indeed there are many sins which by how much they have the more external beauty and glory upon them, the more ugly and filthy they are. Other sins are small in their kind, yet by additional considerations they swell into an immense vastness, and become out of measure sinful.

For instance, First, To sin against light, that is, not only to commit a known sin, but to commit it knowingly ('Tis possible, that while we know such a thing to be a sin, yet to do it unknowingly, or not to know that we have done it: He that knoweth it is a sin to tell any untruth, may yet tell one, and not know it: But) when we do that which is a known sin, and likewise know that we do it, then we have no cloak for our sin.

Secondly, To sin against many received mercies, greatens it exceedingly: Thus the Lord aggravates the sin of David, I have done thus and thus for thee, and if this had been too little, I would moreover have given thee such and such things; Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of the Lord to do evil in his sight, 2 Sam. 12. 8, 9.

Thirdly, It greatens sin when continued in after warnings, and renewed admonitions; He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy (Prov. 29. 1.) The greatness of his punishment (he shall be (not afflicted, but) destroyed) the quickness of it (he shall suddenly be destroyed) the irrecoverableness of it (and that without remedy) all these with one consent vote the greatness of that sin, whatsoever it be in its kind, which is persisted in after perswasion to desist and depart from it. The Church is commanded to pass her extreamest censure upon that offending brother, who having been told his fault; first, by that brother alone whom he hath offended; secondly, by him and two more associated as witnesses; thirdly, then, by the Church gathered in the Name of Christ (Matth. 18. 16, 17.) But if he will not hear thee, then take one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word may be established; and if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it the Church; but if he neglect to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a Publican. It is dangerous enough to sin against a rule; but 'tis more dangerous to sin ſin againſt a reproof, eſpecially againſt the reproof of a whole Church.

Fourthly, When we ſin in the ſight of judgments upon our ſelves, or others, whether for the ſame, or other ſins: This is as if a thief ſhould ſteal before the Judge, or under the gibbet, while he ſeeth others arraigned or executed for ſtealing. It is very evil to ſin againſt Judgments threatened; but it is far worſe to ſin againſt Judgments executed. That wrath which is revealed from Heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs to the ear in the Word of God, ſhould ſtop us from ſin; much more that which is revealed to the eye in the works of God.

Fifthly, When we ſin againſt our own promiſes not to ſin, when our own words condemn us, as well as the Word of God, this ſtains every ſin with a double guilt.

Sixthly, The greatning of a ſin is from the repeating of it after it hath been repented of. To fall into any ſin out of which we have riſen, makes our fall the more grievous; when a ſinner licks up his own vomit, when he builds again the things which he had deſtroyed, he makes himſelf a tranſgreſſor indeed. They who repent not cannot expect mercy; what remains then for them but a certain fearful expectation of Judgment, who repent of their repentings?

Seventhly, Sin is greatly increaſed when acted with deliberation; to be hurried into a ſin though great, is not ſo great as to do a leſs evil conſultively, or to adviſe upon it and do it; ſome ſin for want of advice, many ſin againſt advice, and not a few ſin with advice, that is adviſedly. 'Tis hard to find out a way to give them comfort, who ſin with counſel. They who are wiſe to do evil, or who do evil as a piece of their wiſdom (ſuch every deliberate action is eſteemed to be) will be found the greateſt fools. All ſin is folly, but thoſe ſins have moſt of the fool in them, which we think we do wiſely. In all theſe caſes we may well ſay to any man, as Eliphaz here to Job, Is not thy wickedneſs great?

And thine iniquity infinite?

עונתיך Perverſitas & non finis iniquitatibus tuis. Heb. ἀνακείφαλαιωσις. 70. Rebellio æterna. Vatabl.

The word which we tranſlate iniquity, implyeth perverſeneſs, or frowardneſs in ſinning; Is not thine iniquity infinite? The Hebrew is, There is no end to thy iniquity; or thou doſt commit iniquity without end. The Septuagint render it thus, Are not thy iniquities ſo many that they cannot be numbred? Are they not innumerable? Another thus, Is not thy rebellion eternal? And ſo the ſence reacheth either the multiplication of acts, or the continuation of time. Our reading is comprehenſive of both; Is not thine iniquity infinite?

But how could Eliphaz make ſuch a ſuppoſition as this? Seeing there is nothing infinite but God, and it is altogether impoſſible that there ſhould be two infinites. The Heavens cannot hold two Suns, much leſs can the world hold two Infinites. God is the only Infinite; therefore ſin is not infinite as God is infinite: Firſt, That is infinite which is without end: Secondly, That is infinite which is without bound; in both God is infinite: As he had no beginning, ſo he ſhall have no end or period of his being; He is infinite in reference to duration or time; and he is infinite in reference to place or extent: He fills Heaven and Earth, and the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain him. The Hebrew phraſe in the Text, without end, anſwers our tranſlation, infinite; for infinite is that which hath no bounds or end. So then in a ſtrict and proper ſence, there is nothing infinite but God. And infinity runneth through all the titles of God; he is infinite in power, infinite in wiſdom, juſtice, righteouſneſs, and mercy: It remains then to be further conſidered, how we may underſtand this queſtion, Is not thine iniquity infinite?

I anſwer, Sin is not infinite properly, yet in a vulgar ſence ſin may be called infinite; for according to common acception, we call that infinite which is very great, or which exceeds all ordinary bounds, though not all bounds; only that is properly infinite which exceeds all bounds; but we uſually ſay, that is infinite which exceeds ordinary bounds. Thus ſome mens ſins only are infinite. For though every ſin be a breaking of the bounds which God hath ſet us, either in exceſs or in defect; yet they who ſin after a common rate or proportion of ſinning, may be ſaid to keep their bounds in ſinning. For what the Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſome tryals and temptations (1 Cor. 10. 13.) the ſame may be ſaid of ſome ſins and tranſgreſſions, that they are common to man. But they who ſin (as the Prophet ſpeaks) with a high hand, or with both hands greedily, they who draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin as it were with cart-roaps, theſe do not only break the everlaſting bounds of the Law, but the ordinary bounds of ſin. Their ſins are not common (in the act, though the principle be) to man. They ſin as few men ever ſinned, they ſin like Devils rather then like men, and therefore (under this notion) their ſin is deſervedly called infinite.

Secondly, We may ſay, that ſin hath an infiniteneſs in it in reference to the object, God; and ſo not only a great ſin, and many ſins, but ſmall ſins, or any one ſin may be ſaid to have an infiniteneſs in it, becauſe it is committed againſt an infinite God. And hence it is that nothing can expiate ſin but what hath an infiniteneſs in it; the leaſt ſin calls for the blood of Chriſt to take it away, which blood hath a kind of infinity in it; for though the ſufferings and blood of Chriſt were not properly infinite, becauſe they were the ſufferings of the humane nature; yet the Divine nature ſhed forth an infinite worth and value upon his ſufferings; and therefore we are ſaid to be redeemed (or purchaſed) by the blood of God (Acts 20. 28.) That is, by the blood of that perſon who is God, though the humane nature only was capable of having blood ſhed. Thus we may ſay, that the leaſt ſin, with reſpect to the object, is infinite, God himſelf being offended and wronged by every ſin.

Thirdly, As this infiniteneſs may be conſidered in reference to the extent of any one ſin (that reaching as high as God) ſo to the number, or rather to the innumerableneſs of our ſins. There is an Arithmetical as well as a Geometrical infinity in ſin. Thus the Septuagint (as was ſaid before) render the Text, Are not thine iniquities innumerable? That hath a kind of infinity which cannot be numbred: But cannot our ſins be numbred? Are they infinite in number?

I anſwer, Sins may be conſidered two wayes: Firſt, In their ſpecies and kinds: Secondly, In their acts: If we conſider ſins in their ſpecies and kinds, ſo they are not innumerable, for it is poſſible to number up all the ſeveral heads, diviſions, and kinds of ſin; but if we conſider ſin in reference to acts, ſo every mans ſins are innumerable; yet this innumerableneſs of ſins, in reference to acts, may be conſidered either abſolutely, or as to us. The acts of ſin are not abſolutely, or in themſelves innumerable, but as to us they are innumerable; they are more then any man can number. John ſaith (Revel. 7. 9.) After this I beheld, and lo a great multitude, which no man could number (beſides thoſe that were ſealed of every Tribe) of all Nations, and Kindreds, &c. This great multitude was not in it ſelf without number, but as to mans Arithmetick it was, no man could number it. The hairs of our head, and the ſands of the Sea, are numerable to God, but to us innumerable. David (Pſal. 40. 12.) ſpeaks firſt of innumerable evils, and then of innumerable ſins; Innumerable evils compaſs me about, mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, ſo that I am not able to look up; they are more then the hairs of my head, therefore my heart faileth me: When he ſaith, They are more then the hairs of my head, his meaning is, they are innumerable; I can no more tell the ſum of my ſins, then the ſum of my hairs. Chriſt to aſſure his Diſciples in time of their afflictions and ſufferings, that he will take care of them, tells them, The very hairs of your head are all numbred (Matth. 10. 30.) As if he had ſaid, Seeing God taketh care of thoſe inconſiderable (not parts, but) excrements of the body, ſurely then he will take care of thoſe more noble parts of your body, and moſt of all of that moſt noble part of you (which is your all) your ſouls. The hairs of our heads are innumerable to us, but God numbers them. The ſins of our hearts and lives are all numbred by God. Thou telleſt my wandrings (ſaith holy David, Pſal. 56. 8.) He means it of his wandrings by perſecution, and 'tis as true of his wandrings by tranſgreſſion. But what man knows the errors or wandrings either of his heart or life? (Pſal. 19. 12.) He that hath feweſt ſins, hath more then he can number; and therefore every mans ſins are to him in number infinite.

Fourthly,

Fourthly, Iniquities may be called infinite in reference to the will, or the spirit of him that committeth those iniquities: Those sins are without bounds, to which man would never set a bound. The natural man would never end sinning, therefore his sins are without end, or infinite. The Prophet (Jer. 13. 27.) speaks reprovingly to that people in the name of the Lord; I have seen thy adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields; wo unto thee, O Jerusalem, wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be? As if he had said, O Jerusalem, thou hast no will to be made clean; or, thou wouldst never be clean, if thou mightest have thy will; When shall it once be? The time is yet to come when thou wouldest have it to be so; thou hast a mind to pollute thy self still, but no mind to wash thy self from thy pollution. The sins of a person or people are then infinite, or without end, when they discover that they have no mind to leave sinning. A godly mans desires to do good, are infinite, and so are the desires of a wicked man to do evil. This Prophet had spoken to Jerusalem in the same Language (chap. 4. 14.) How long shall vain thoughts in thee? When wilt thou be weary of these Lodgers? when wilt thou bid these Guests be gone, which thou hast thus long bid welcome? The Church of God doth sometimes suffer evil to lodge very long in her, even in the midst of her, as it were, at her very heart; but the world lodgeth or lieth (continually in evil (1 John 5. 19.) and there (as it is the world) it will lie for ever, soak'd and steep'd in evil. Some give this as one reason to justifie the infiniteness or everlastingness of the punishment that is laid upon impenitent sinners in hell. The damned are under endless sufferings, because they would have sinned without end: A wicked man would live long, yea, he would have no end of his life here, he would live ever, that he might sin for ever; therefore the Lord giveth him a life, not such a one as he would have, but such a one as he deserves to have; which is a death for ever. They die eternally for sin, who would have lived eternally in sin. Take a Scripture or two more to illustrate this way of the infinity of mans sin (Jer. 8. 5.) Why is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding? they hold fast deceit, they refuse to return: Here are three phrases noting this one thing. First, They hold fast deceit. Secondly, They refused to return. Thirdly, Theirs was a perpetual backsliding; or, as some read it, an eternal rebellion, an obstinate rebellion, a strong and mighty rebellion; the Seventy call it an impudent, shameless rebellion: All these are proper Epithetes of that obstinacy and setledness of resolution which is in the heart of man by nature to continue in sin; yet there is a further rendring of the words, which as the Original will bear, so it hath an elegancy in it: Why is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a conquering, or a prevailing backsliding? A perpetual Backsliding hath conquest or triumph attributed to it upon a twofold consideration; first, In reference to others sins. Final obstinacy or impenitency lifts up its head above all other sins, and sits as King among them; impenitency under any sin committed, is greater then the sin committed; not to repent of the evil we have done, is worse then the evil which we do. Impenitency seals the soul under condemnation. Repentance conquers sin, but impenitency is the conquering sin. Secondly, 'Tis called triumphing or conquering sin, because it seems (as it were) to carry the day against the mercy and goodness of God; that's a sad conquest indeed: not that any sin, no, nor impenitency for sin, exceeds the mercy and goodness of God; for his thoughts of mercy are as high above our acts of sin, as they are above our thoughts of his mercy, and that is as high as the heaven is in comparison of the earth (Isa. 55. 9.) But the mercy of the Lord is said to be overcome by perpetual backslidings, because the Lord will not be merciful to such; thus final impenitency may be called a triumphing or conquering sin, seeing the mercy of God seems to yield unto it. They will not humble themselves to seek mercy, yea, they slight and despise mercy, therefore they shall not find mercy. The Prophet Jeremy represents the Lord thus expostulating again with the Jewish Nation (ch. 5. 22, 23.) Fear ye not me, saith the Lord, will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the Sand for the bound of the Sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it, and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; and though they roar, yet can they not pass over it; but this people hath a revolting and rebellious heart, they are revolted and gone. The words, as I conceive, have these two things in them; First, That the Lord is to be feared, who doth such things, who set bounds to the Sea, &c. Secondly, That the wickedness of mans heart is admirable, or rather, that we are to be astonished at the wickedness of mans heart, which is more boisterous and disobedient then the raging waves of the Sea. The Lord sets bounds to the waves of the Sea; which waves in their own nature are altogether boundless; liquid waves have no bounds of their own, yet the Lord having put bounds to them, they are kept in bounds. The Sand bounds the Sea, so that though the waves thereof toss, they cannot prevail; though they roar, they cannot pass over; but this people have revolted and are gone; as if he had said, I the Lord have put a bound to the Sea, I have also set a bound to the wickedness of mans heart; what is that? My Word, my Law. The Law of God is a moral bound to stop and keep in compass the raging waves of mans corruption. God doth not alwayes put an external bound by sword and judgment to stop men whether they will or no from sin, but he alwayes sets a moral bound to stop them; this is supposed in the Text, I put a bound to the Sea, to the Sea also of mans heart, to the wickedness that is there; but this people are revolted and gone, they have broken all my bounds, even that perpetual decree of my righteous Law. Now as when the Sea breaks its bounds, the waters flow infinitely, there is no stopping them; so when the heart of man breaks bounds, revolts and is gone, he sins infinitely, he makes no end of sinning. By these Scriptures we may understand in what sence the iniquities of wicked men may be said to be infinite; though nothing is infinite in a strict and proper sence, but God himself.

Vellet sine fine vivere, ut posset sine fine peccare. Greg.

Is not thy wickedness great, and thine iniquity infinite?

But hath Job given Eliphaz any just occasion of this surmise, that his sin was in this sence infinite? Did he ever observe either wickedness in general, or those particular wickednesses which he presently enumerates; taking a pledge, denying relief of the poor, stripping the naked, &c.? Had he seen any of these evils acted by Job? Certainly he had not. Job was a man of another frame of life then these things import; these black lines and colours would never make the picture of Job's heart or life; this is as ill a draught of a man as could be made; yet Eliphaz puts all this upon Job, at least, by supposition; Is it not thus? But what reason had he for this supposition? None but this, the greatness of his affliction, the infinite troubles that were upon him. God set no bounds to Job's sorrows; therefore he thought Job had sinned beyond all bounds. Hence observe,

We are ready to judge their sins great, who are the greatest sufferers.

Though we know nothing by them, though we can charge nothing upon them, yet this thought riseth naturally in us, when we see any under great and extraordinary sufferings, surely they are great and extraordinary sinners. The worst of sinners never suffered more in this world, then the best of Saints: Witness those Jewish Worthies, whose torments are reported by the Author to the Hebrews (chap. 11. 37.) And as these were adjudged to suffer, because they were thought the worst of sinners, so, doubtless, many who saw them suffer, thought them such, though they knew nothing done by them to make them such. Read also this Spirit (Luke 13. 2. Acts 28. 4.) This hath been formerly observed from other passages in this Book, and therefore I only touch it, and pass away.

Again Eliphaz seems to take Job off from the wrong ground of his sufferings, and tells him, though he looked to other reasons, yet the true reason was the greatness of his wickedness, and the numberlesness of his iniquities. Hence observe,

That, Few think of, or hit upon any other cause of suffering, but sin.

Sin is so much and so often the cause of suffering, that we do it no wrong to suspect it as the cause of all sufferings; and it is indeed one kind of cause (causa sine qua non) of all our sufferings, so that we can hardly wrong sin by this suspition, but we may easily wrong both God and man by it. When the blind man came before Christ, his Disciples asked him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man or his Parents, that he was born blind? They could hit upon nothing but sin, why the man was born blind (John 9. 2.) But at the third verse, Christ answered, Neither hath this man sinned nor his Parents; he vindicates both from this suspition. What man was this? and who were his parents, that they sinned not? Were they clean from sin? Not so neither; but the meaning of Christ is this, neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, so, as that either his sin or theirs should be reckoned the special cause why he was born blind. There was somewhat else in it, which the Disciples took no notice of, nor did they understand. Christ doth not deny but that a mans own sin, and the sin of his parents may be a cause of blindness; but neither the one nor the other was the cause in that mans case: as if Christ had said, Can you think of nothing else why a man is afflicted, but only his sin? There are many other causes of suffering besides that. The cause why some some suffer, is the trial of their Graces. The cause why many suffer, is to bear witness to the Truth, and to encourage others both in the profession of it, and in persecutions for it. And Christ particularly assignes another cause of the sufferings of the blind man, That the work of God might be made manifest in him: That the work of God in his power and mercy might be seen in restoring this man to his sight, therefore was he born without the power of seeing. The blindness of that man was an occasion to make a very glorious discovery of God. Much of God had not been so eminently seen at that time, if that man had alwayes seen. Many are cast down upon beds of sickness, or into a state of poverty, that the work of God in raising them up to health and plenty, may be made manifest. The design of God looks beyond the sin of man in the afflictions of most men, yet man seldom looks beyond it. Note from the whole verse, Thirdly, That, We are more ready to judge the sins of others great, then our own.

Is not thy wickedness great, and thine iniquities infinite?] Eliphaz might have said as much of himself and his own sin; and it had been but a duty to have done so; we should not aggravate the sins of others, nor extenuate or lessen our own; we should not set the sins of others in open light, nor provide coverings for our own, yet most commonly we run the contrary course; we have a favourable opinion, and excuses ready for what we have done, while we have hard thoughts of, and give harsh censures upon what others do; our own sins we can call moats, and the sin of others beams. The better any man is, the better he judges others, and the worse of himself. Paul spake no complement, while he said, that he was less then the least of all Saints, and the chief of sinners; usually they who are the severest observers and censurers of others, either flatter, or have not well observed themselves.

Fourthly, Forasmuch as Eliphaz seeing Job under great sufferings, saith to him, Is not thy wickedness great? The counsel in it self was seasonable. Hence observe,

That, In time of suffering, it is good both to put our selves and others upon enquiry about our sins.

So the Prophet (Lam. 3. 39, 40.) Why doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins? Let us search and try our wayes, and turn again to the Lord: Times of afflictions should be times of inquisition; when the Lord is smiting, we should be searching; when we have received many wounds, it is time for us to be suspecting our selves of many sins; and the counsel of others is not to be rejected, when seeing us in sorrow, they advise us to consider what our sins are, how great and how many. For though we should be tender in pressing those who are under the load and burden of affliction, with the burden of their sins, yet they who are so, shall do well and wisely, to press it upon themselves.

Fifthly, Whereas Eliphaz saith, Is not thy wickedness great, and thine iniquity infinite? And in the next verse, concludes upon it; Thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, &c. All which were but conjectures and suspitions; observe,

That, Suppositions and conjectures are no fit grounds, upon which to build a judgment concerning the faultiness of others.

We must not censure upon I hear so, I suppose so, I think so; but upon I know it is so: Many have run into great sin by judging the sins of others great. Judge not (saith our Saviour, Matth. 7. 1.) that ye be not judged. He speaks not against all judgment; but either, First, Against severe and harsh judging; or, Secondly, Against false judging; or, Thirdly, Against inconsiderate or rash judging. When we judge without due ground, not knowing the why or wherefore of our judgment, take heed of such judging, that ye be not judged, that is, lest having judged others unduly, ye receive your due in judgment. Eliphaz had nothing upon knowledge to charge Job for, yet while he questions, Is not thy wickedness great? He doth more then seemingly conclude that his sin was very great, and his iniquities infinite. And in the next verse, in stead of querying, he comes to peremptory concluding.

Verse 6. For thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and stripped the naked of their cloathing.

Now begins the special Charge or Indictment; now he enumerates several sins: As if he had said, What dost thou stand looking for matter or reasons why thou art thus afflicted? Here are the reasons, I will name them to thee; Thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought. Thus Eliphaz poureth upon him, and discharges whole vollies of shot, but all at random, and besides the mark. Before, he spake in the third person; he speaks now in the second: Thou, thou art the man, thou hast taken a pledge. Again, Eliphaz had formerly dealt with Job as an hypocrite: he then granted that he had some shews of holiness, and some appearance or counterfeit of goodness at least; now he denieth that: now he pulls off his vizor or mask, and objects against him bare-faced. Before he charged him with falseness of heart, while he professed and practised Religion; but now he objects such practices against him, as no man doth, who hath but a profession of Religion. He objects those crimes against him which are proper to prophane open sinners, to common oppressors, who raise themselves upon the ruines, and enrich themselves by the spoiles of their weaker brethren: These are sinners not only against the Law of God, but light of Nature; these are acts not only of impiety, but of cruelty, inhumanity and tyranny.

Thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought.

Job was a Magistrate, and this would have aggravated his sin exceedingly, if it had been true; for any man to oppress another, is very wickedness; but for a Magistrate, who is set up to be a protector, a reliever of others, a helper of the friendless, and a Judge of the widow, for him to carry himself thus, for him to oppress and grind the faces of the poor, is most tyrannical. Thus Aristotle defines a Tyrant; He is one that rules so as to turn all to his own private benefit or profit: He that governs so, governs for himself; whereas true government seeks and respects the good of others. Just Governors are a general blessing, and their aim is the common, not their private wealth. Thus Eliphaz renders Job a very Tyrant, who, when he should be a nursing-father to his Countrey, proves a devourer of it; and when he should provide bread for those about him, he takes their bread, yea, their blood from them, and gives them a stone. Thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought.

Tyrannus est, qui ita dominatur, ut ad proprium commodum & utilitatem omnia conferat. Ar. l. 4. Polit. & 1. Eth.

There are three aggravations of his sin supposed in these words.

First, That he took a pledge.

Secondly, That he took it of a brother.

Thirdly, That he took it for nought.

Thou hast taken a pledge.] The Hebrew is no more then this, Thou hast pledged. The word signifies also to bind or fasten a thing as with a cord; and the reason is, because a pledge given is an obligation, a tie or bond to perform the promise made, or pay the debt contracted. A promise is an audible bond, but a pledge is a visible bond. It is no sin, in it self, to take a pledge, no more then it is a sin to buy, sell, or to engage a man any other way, to perform a bargain, or repay a debt. The Law of God published by Moses, allowed the taking of a pledge; what is it then which Eliphaz chargeth upon Job as sinful in taking a pledge? I conceive there are two things which shew sinfulness in taking a pledge, and that both are implied here.

In Hebræo simplex est verbum חבל quod est pignorare, aut pignus accipere, idem est obligare.

First,

First, He intimates that Job did not wait to receive a pledge at the hand of his brother, but he did, as it were, rush in upon him, and took the pledge; for so tender was the Lord in reference to the poor of his people, or to those that should be in need to borrow of their brethren, and so give a pledge for security, that he giveth this special order (Deut. 24. 10.) When thou dost lend thy brother any thing, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge (It was not unlawful to receive a pledge from his brother, but to go into his house, was against the Law) but thou shalt stand abroad, and the man shall bring it out to thee. Some conceive that this was the sin charged upon Job; Thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother, thou hast not according to this expres Law of God, tarried for it; and supposing that Eliphaz and Job lived before the giving of that Law, yet the Light of Nature teacheth, that we should not press a man, or pull his pledge from him, but that the borrower should go into his house, and bringing his pledge, deliver it up freely with his own hand into the hand of the lender. It is an affliction to have need to borrow, and therefore the borrower should be so tenderly dealt with by the lender, as not to add affliction to him. It is a courtesie to lend to him that is in need, but as some in giving, so most in lending, spoil all the courtesie of it; while they lend their money, they snatch or gripe at their security; whereas the old Law said (the equity whereof, though not the formality, remaines to this day) Thou shalt not go into thy brothers house to fetch his pledge, but thou shalt stand abroad, and the man shall bring it out to thee. Some Criticks tell us, that this is signified in the Etymology of the Latine word, which signifies a pledge: Namely, that the Lender should not take, but receive it from the hand of the Borrower. It is the duty of borrowers to pay: The wicked borroweth and payeth not again (Psal. 37. 21.) The Apostles rule to the godly is, Owe no man any thing but to love one another (Rom. 13. 8.) Now, as it is the duty of the borrower to pay, so of the lender to be moderate, and not to exact or impose heavily upon him, for the assuring of his payments. As he that buyeth, should be as if he bought not, so he that lends, should be (in this respect) as if he lent not; he should lend with so much mildness and meekness of spirit, as if he gave rather then lent; or as if (the contrary whereof Solomon found in his experience, Prov. 22. 7.) himself the lender, were servant to the borrower. Job is charged first with failing in this; as if he had over-eagerly pressed upon his brother for a pledge; Thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother.

Ipsa pignoris Etymologia, docere hominem videtur pignus non tam propria manu auferendum ab invito & misero debitore, quam accipiendum nonnisi ipsius debitoris manu oblatum: pignus enim appellatum est a pugno, quia res quæ pignori dantur, manu traduntur. Cajus.

Secondly, The taking of a pledge from a brother, may be expounded of with-holding a pledge when it is called for, or of the not restoring it, when the Covenants are performed. This is not only to take it, but to take it away; suppose the pledge hath been given into a mans hand, yet if he will not restore it, or give it back out of his hand when called for, but make excuses or delayes, This is to take away the pledge. And thus some make out the sin of the Text, Thou hast taken a pledge, that is, thou hast swept it quite away, thou hast refused to restore the pledge, when that which was borrowed upon it, hath been in due time tendered to be payed or restored. The Prophet Ezekiel (chap. 18. 14, 15, 16.) numbers the contrary practices among those Negatives for which the Lord declares himself much pleased with the son of a wicked father; A son that seeth all his fathers sins that he hath done, and doth not such like, that hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lift up his eyes to the Idols of the house of Israel, that hath not defiled his neighbours wife, neither hath oppressed any; that hath not withholden the pledge, neither hath spoiled by violence, &c. He shall not die for the iniquity of his father, he shall surely live. Here sinning in the matter of a pledge, is pitcht upon with-holding it, not upon taking it: For though a man have a pledge fairly delivered up to him, though he doth not rush into the borrowers house, and there be his own carver, taking what himself listeth, to secure that which he hath lent, yet if he with-hold the pledge when it is required and desired to be returned upon promised satisfaction made, this very sinful and oppressive. Some, when they get a good thing in their hands, they are loth to part with it, and will have a device to prove it forfeited by the Borrower, when indeed 'tis only coveted by the Lender. Hence note,

That, Violently to take, or unjustly to detain the pledge committed to us, is to act the part of the oppresser.

That Law which saith, Thou shalt not steal, doth as much forbid the detaining in our hands, as the laying of our hands upon that which is our neighbours. And he that with-holds the pledge when the debtor is ready, and offers to redeem it, is like him that with-holds the debt when the lender desires him, and he is able to repay it. Thou hast taken or with-holden a pledge; that's thy sin.

Secondly, There is a further aggravation of sin in the words respecting the person from which the pledge was taken; a Brother: Thou hast taken a pledge from thy Brother. This addeth to the sin; we should be kind to all, but especially to a brother. A brother may be taken either strictly, for one next or near by birth or blood, a brother by consanguinity; such are in the most proper sence, our brethren and our own flesh. Or the word Brother may be taken in a large sence, for any that are near to us, as being either of the same profession of Religion with us, or living in the same City, Society, or under the same Government with us. These are our brethren and our own flesh too. And so the Prophet calleth them, even when pinched with hunger and nakedness, the more to move the bowels of our compassion towards them (Isa. 58. 7.) When thou seest the naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thy self from thy own flesh: As richly cloathed as thou art, and as naked as they are, thine own flesh they are. When Eliphaz saith, Thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother, he takes in brethren under all distinctions. This he adds to heighten Job's sin; Thou tookest a pledge from thy brother. Hence note,

That, As it is unjust and uncharitable to wrong any man, so most of all, those that are near to us.

To wrong a brother of any latitude or degree is sinful, and still the nearer the brother is, the more sinful it is to wrong him; the sin which a man commits against himself, is therefore greatest of all, because a man is nearest to himself; so in proportion the nearer any one is to us in any relation, the more we sin in wronging him. The Apostle puts it under that notion; If a brother or a sister be naked and destitute of dayly food, &c. Jam. 2. 15. And again, 1 John 3. 17. Whosoever hath this worlds good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? That is, the love of God doth not at all dwell in him, or at best it dwelleth very poorly and undiscernably in him. To see strangers, yea enemies, destitute, and not relieve them, is uncharitable; but to see a brother or a sister, and chiefly a brother or a sister in spiritual relation (for of such I conceive the Apostle speaks particularly in those places) I say, to see such destitute, and not to relieve them, this is highest uncharitableness.

Again, Some render thus (not, Thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother, but) Thou hast taken thy brother for a pledge. This speaks yet louder, and is a sin of a blacker colour then the former; thou hast not only taken thy brothers pledge, but himself, his very person for security or for paiment. But what is it to take a mans brother for a pledge? or how was that done? These two things may be in it; Either first, More generally; Thou hast imprisoned him: As (Matth. 18. 28.) 'Tis said of the cruel Creditor, that he took his brother, and cast him into prison till he should pay the utmost farthing: Now though all kind of imprisonment be not sinful, not only as to the Law of Nations, but as to the Law of God; yet cruel imprisonment is very sinful; Thou hast taken thy brother for a pledge: Thou hast not spared his person when he had not a purse to pay thee; Thou hast (as it hath been said among us) made Dice of his bones. Some would never pay, were it not for fear of a prison, but to put and detain a poor man in prison when he hath nothing to pay, is not only unchristian, but barbarous and inhumane. Or secondly (which was used in ancient times) Thou hast taken thy brother for a pledge, that is, thou hast made him thy slave: To be cast into prison, is a slavery, and a man may be made a slave, yet not imprisoned. And though it may be a duty (when we have nothing else to satisfie it with) to work out a debt, yet it is a very high severity for to force a debtor to pay with his work. We read how the poor Widow came to Elisha the Prophet, and bemoaned her case to him (2 *King.*4. 1.) Thy servant my husband is dead, and thou knowest that thy servant did fear the Lord, and the Creditor is come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen. This is to take a brother for a pledge: The Prophet seems to aim at this, while he describes those hypocritical Fasts among the Jews (*Isa.*58. 6.) Is not this the Fast that I have chosen, to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? To fast, and not to reform, is to mock God rather then to humble our selves. Here are the true fruits of fasting; and they all run into the point in hand, the avoiding and turning from all injurious and vexatious dealings with our brethren. First, The bands of wickedness, that is, of oppressing Laws or pinching Contracts. Secondly, Heavy burdens, either of services or taxes: From these the oppressed should be freed, and every yoke imposed by these or any other way of grievance, broken off from the necks of our brethren.

In pignore accepto fratris tui Sept.

There is yet one word more very considerable in the Text, for the heightning of this sin.

Thou hast taken a pledge of thy brother for nought, or without cause. This word was opened (chap. 1. 9.) Where Satan suggests against Job's sincerity; Doth Job serve God for nought? And again (chap. 2. 3.) Where the Lord asserts and vindicates the sincerity of Job against Satans calumniations; Thou movedst me against him to destroy him without cause; that is, thou hadst no cause to move me so against him; he is no such mercenary servant as thou hast maliciously pretended: Thus here; Thou hast taken a pledge of thy brother for nought, or, without cause, that is, without any necessary cause; there was no reason thou shouldest take a pledge from thy brother when thou tookest it; thou mightest have trusted him, but thou wouldest not any further then thou hadst full security put into thy hand, or rather, then thou didst take it into thy hand whether he would or no. As if he had said, Thou wouldest not relieve thy brothers poverty, upon the promises which God makes to those who charitably relieve the poor; thou wouldest neither take Gods word, nor trust thy brother in any case, further then thou didst see him; unless he would put into thy hand, thou wouldest not put into his. True charity must and will make some ventures; Cast thy bread upon the waters (saith Solomon, Eccl. 11. 1.) A good man is a Merchant, and will trust his bread where he hath no more assurance of a safe return, then the Merchant hath of his Ship and Lading from the winds and waters.

Thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother. Again, Without cause, or for nought, may have this meaning, thou didst oblige thy brother to restore that which really and indeed he never received from thee; thou didst put a debt to thy brothers account which he never made by borrowing. David complains of such kind of unkind usage (Psal. 69. 4.) They that hate me without cause, are moe then the hairs of my head: They that would destroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty: then I restored that which I took not away, that is, which I took not away, either as borrowed of them, or as stoln from them. I was neither debtor nor a thief, I had nothing of theirs in my hands, yet I was forced to restore. This is the worst sort of taking a pledge for nought.

Thirdly, For nought, that is, when there was no reason to take so great a pledge of thy brother; the thing which thou didst lend him, was but some trifle, yet thou wouldst have a pledge of thy brother for it; thou wouldest have great security for an inconsiderable debt; that's the course of many oppressors, by lending a little, they will have much to secure it. And this is to take a pledge of a brother for nought; there should be some equality between the debt and the security; he that lends a trifle, a small matter, and requires great assurance, takes a pledge of his brother for nought: So that all unreasonable and unequal demands for security, either taking it (wherein charity bids us trust) from the poor, or taking (where in justice we should not take any thing) when nothing was lent, or when there is no reason we should take so much; any of these harsh and injurious practices, is the taking a pledge of our brother for nought. Hence observe,

That, The less cause we have to do any evil, the greater is the evil which we do.

But hath any man a cause to do any evil? he hath not; by cause, I mean a provocation; there is no cause for which we should do any evil; but there may be many provocations or temptations to do evil. Peninah provoked Hannah sore to make her fret (1 Sam. 1. 6.) It was not for nought or without cause that Moses his passion was stirr'd, and that he spake unadvisedly with his lips; the murmurings and complainings of that unsteady people provoked his Spirit (*Ps.*106.33.) Now the less provocation, the greater always is the sin; as to sin against admonition, or against any of those means that might keep us from sin, makes the sin the greater, so, when there is no occasion leading us unto sin. This was one reason of greatning the sin of our first Parents, in eating the forbidden fruit: Why did they eat? were they ready to starve? were they in any streights? had they not the whole Garden before them? did they not eat the forbidden fruit without cause, or for nought? Solomon saith (Prov. 6. 30.) Men do not despise a thief if he steal to satisfie his soul when he is hungry; for though to steal for meer hunger, doth not take away the sinfulness of the fact, yet it doth much abate it; because the man is provoked to do it for the supply of his present and pressing need; but for a rich man (who hath no need) to steal, for a man to steal who is not hungry, how sinful is it! Our greatest necessities cannot wholly excuse our sin; but to sin where there is no necessity, doth greatly increase our sin. Saul thought he should come off without blame when he had so much to say for his rash Sacrifice (1 Sam. 13. 12.) I said the Philistims will come down upon me to Gilgal, and I have not made supplication unto the Lord; I forced my self therefore, and offered a burnt offering. But doth Samuel approve this Plea? We have his resolution in the next verse; Thou hast done foolishly, thou hast not kept the Commandment of the Lord thy God. Though Saul found himself under a moral force to do what he did, yet that did not free him either from guilt or punishment when he ventured to do it. David smarted for numbring Israel, though Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number them (1 Chron. 21. 1.) What shall we say then of those who do more then David, altogether unprovoked by Satan? who rather tempt themselves, then are tempted unto evil? As the good we do is so much the better, so the evil we do is by so much the worse, by how much we do it the more freely and unconstrained. Thus Eliphaz aggravates the first instance of Job's supposed wickedness. To take a pledge from a man in the manner expounded, is not only illiberal, but sinful; To take a pledge from a brother in distress, is more sinful; but to take a pledge from a brother for nought, is a degree of sin which hath many degrees of sinfulness beyond both the former. Eliphaz had yet but begun Job's indictment, this is the first Crime objected: A second, and a third, and more are following. Thou hast taken a pledge of thy brother for nought,

And stript the naked of their cloathing.

It may be questioned, If they were naked, how could they be stript of their cloathing? He that is naked, hath no cloaths to be stript of. 'Tis gone in a Proverb, A naked man cannot be stript by a hundred men; he that hath nothing, can lose nothing; how then is it said here, Thou hast stript the naked of their cloathing?

Nudus nec à centum viris spoliatur.

I answer, The naked are not here to be taken strictly for such as have no cloaths at all; but for those who have but few cloaths, or for such as are but meanly and thinly cloathed; any that are poor and low, any who are in want, may be numbred among the naked. 'Tis frequent, as in Scripture, so in common speech, to express those as being quite without that of which they have but little. We say of a man that hath but a little knowledge, he is an ignorant man; and of a man who hath but a little learning, that he is an illiterate or an unlearned man. Thus we may say of a man that hath but little store of cloaths, little store of the world about him, that he is naked, that he hath nothing. The Apostle useth this Language (1 Cor. 4. 11.) Even to this present hour, we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, &c. Not that the Apostles went about without cloaths, but they were but mean in their apparel, poor in their appearances, and that he calls nakedness. So the Apostle James, in the second Chapter of that Epistle, ver. 15. If a Brother or a Sister be naked, &c. He doth not mean it only of of such as have never a rag to cover their nakedness, but of such as are ill furnished with cloaths. The Lord threatens his own people (Deut. 28. from vers. 4. to 48.) in case of disobedience, with this affliction; Because thou servedst not the Lord with gladness of heart in the abundance of all things, therefore thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, &c. That is, thou shalt not have thy Wardrobes stored and filled with change of rayment, but thou shalt feel and be pincht with want and poverty. So here; Thou hast stript the naked of their cloathing; that is, those that were evil cloathed, thou hast uncloathed, and instead of relieving their wants, thou hast encreased them.

Quædam etiamsi vera non sint propter similitudinē eodem vocabuto comprehensa sunt; sic qui malè vestitum & pannosum videt, nudum se vidisse dicit. Sen. l. 5. Ben. c. 13.

And thus the words may allude to the taking of a pledge, about which Eliphaz spake before; Thou hast stript the naked of their cloathing, that is, thou hast taken a pledge from thy neighbour, and stript him quite of it. Therefore the Law provided against this oppression (Exod. 22. 26.) If thou at all take thy neighbours rayment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it to him before the Sun go down, for it is his covering. The breach of which Law is discovered and reproved (Amos 2. 8.) And they lay themselves down upon cloaths laid to pledge, that is, they detained them all night, whereas they should have delivered them before the going down of the Sun. And thus their sin is aggravated, in that it is said in the next words, that they did this by every Altar. It was their sin to make many Altars; and this encreased their sin, that they durst do acts of wrong to men, where they pretended to worship God. The like Law is given about the pledge, Deut. 24. 6. No man shall take the upper or the nether milstone to pledge, for he taketh a mans life to pledge; that is, he takes the thing away without which he cannot live; if his milstone be taken away from the Mill, how shall he grind his Corn to make Bread, which is the Staff of life? And again, at vers 13. of the same Chapter, the Law is renewed in reference to rayment; In any case thou shalt deliver the pledge again before the Sun goeth down, that he may sleep in his own rayment and bless thee; and it shall be righteousness unto thee before the Lord thy God. Thus we may conceive Eliphaz speaking here, though not eying that express Law, yet from the common light of Nature, which teacheth that the poor and naked should not be stript of that little provision and small pittance which serves only to protect them from cold and starving.

Chaldeus legit lectulos oppigneratos. Vel certe pro illo ipso vestimento quo & se operiebat diu nocteque jacens se contegit.

Further, By these words, Thou hast stript the naked of their cloathing, we may understand not cloathing only, but all the necessaries of this life, any thing which is of such concernment to our lives as our cloaths are; for as bread in Scripture is put for all the necessaries of this life, so is cloathing, Isa. 3. 6, When a man shall take hold of his Brother, saying, Thou hast cloathing, be thou ruler over us, &c. Thou hast cloathing, that is, thou hast Goods, thou hast an Estate, thou canst make provision for us; there Cloathing is put for all outward conveniences, as in other Scriptures, Bread is. So that according to the extent of this interpretation, Thou hast stript the naked of their cloathing, takes in all sorts of bodily grievances put upon the poor.

Hence observe, That, To oppress the poor, is the highest and greatest oppression.

It is our duty to cloath the naked, how great then is their sin who strip the naked of their cloathing? It is sinful and unjust violently to take cloaths from him that hath greatest variety of cloathing; we may not rob the rich, what is it then to take from them who have not? or (as we say) to rob the Hospital? Solomon (Prov. 28. 3.) tells us of an oppression which is very grievous, and that is the oppression of a poor man; which is true both actively and passively, when the poor man is the oppressor, 'tis so; 'tis so also when the poor man is the oppressed. Solomon intends both; for he makes the poor to be the oppressed, and a poor man the oppressor. The poor man that oppresseth the poor, is as a sweeping rain, which leaveth no food. 'Tis worse with the poor when the poor oppress them, then when the rich oppress them; the rich may oppress them much, but they come not so near, as when a poor man oppresseth; for as the imbecility of the oppressed poor man can give him no help, so the necessity of the oppressing poor man will shew him no mercy. Nothing doth more harden the heart of a man, then his own want; and he hath little feeling of anothers misery, who is under the feeling of his own; he that hath nothing takes what he can get, and his own hunger devoureth all. The rich man oppressing the poor, is a dashing rain; the great man oppressing the poor, is a thundering rain; but the poor man oppressing the poor, is a sweeping rain. As they who never knew poverty, so they who know it most, have the least stock of pity for the poor. Such are a sweeping rain indeed. There is a refreshing, a fatning, a filling rain, which the Lord sends upon the thirsty earth, this produceth store of food. It rains corn and wine, milk and butter: There is also a sweeping rain that takes away food, and destroyes the fruits of the earth. Such a rain is a poor man oppressing the poor. Want is the greatest spoiler.

Secondly, We may expound the Text thus; And stript the naked of their cloathing, that is, Thou hast stript them till they are naked; for in Scripture we find the denomination to be taken from the end of the action, or that which the action tends to: As to illustrate it a little (Isa. 47. 2.) Take the milstones, and grind meal. Now we do not grind meal, but whole corn, to make meal. So Isa. 44. 15. He baketh bread: Now we do not bake bread, but dough, that it may come to be bread; when it is bread once, it needs no more baking. So (Dan. 2. 21.) He giveth wisdom to the wise, that is, he giveth wisdom to those who before were rude, and so makes them wise. Thus here, the denomination of the act is given from that to which the act hath a tendency, Thou hast stript the naked; not that they who are naked indeed, can be stript; but thou hast stript them, and so made them naked. This very phrase is used (Hos. 2. 3.) Lest I strip thee naked, saith the Lord to the Church, that is, lest in stripping thee, I leave thee naked; lest I take away all the good things with which thou art encompassed. So here, Thou hast stript the naked of their cloathing, that is, thou hast stript them till thou hast made them naked.

From this learn, That, There is such a Principle of unnaturalness in the nature of man, as to take away all, and leave nothing.

We find more then cloaths taken away by some, they go closer then to the cloathing (as the Lord complains, Mic. 3. 3.) Who eat the flesh of a people, and flay their skin from off their backs: There's oppression and cruelty in their blackest colours; they will not leave them so much as their skin upon their backs. Skin is natural cloathing, as Garments are artificial cloathing. These took away not only the cloathing which art, but that which nature had provided and put upon them, they flayed their skins from off their backs; yet we are not to conceive that they were so cruel to pull off their skin, but because they would have all to their very skin, therefore they are said to take skin and all. They who are so unmerciful, that they will not leave a rag to cover their skin, are justly charged with that unmercifulness, which will not leave so much as their skin to cover their flesh; yea (as it follows in the same place) that they would gnaw their bones; they will have all, cloaths, skin and bones from another, rather then not have enough for themselves. Cruelty joyned with Covetousness, knows no bounds.

Eliphaz having shewed some of those particular evils, which he supposed Job had done, proceeds to shew what good he had not done. Sins of omission render men as foul and vile as sins of commission do. He that doth not the good which he ought and can, doth evil.

Verse 7. Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, thou hast withheld bread from the hungry.

Thou hast not given water to the weary.

Water is a very common thing, and the word which is here used, takes in all natural waters, the whole Element of water. Seeing then water is not under lock and key, but lies open to all comers, how comes it to be any mans gift? I answer, First, If we understand the words literally and strictly, yet sometimes, and especially in some places, to give a cup of water to drink or a bucket of water to wash in, is no small charity to a wearied traveller. But secondly (I conceive) Job is taxed with not giving water, to shew his refusing to do the smallest charity. So we find it expressed (Matth. 10. 42.) When Jesus Christ would assure us that the least office of love or respect which we do to a distressed Saint or a Believer, upon that account as he is a Believer, shall be rewarded; he gives it in this language, Whosoever shall give to drink to one of these little ones a cup of cold water, only in the name of a Disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward. As by one of these little ones, he means any, the least of Believers or righteous persons; so by the gift that he speaks of, water, or cold water, a cup of cold water, he means the least of favours. Cold water is a cheap commodity, and a little cold water, only a cup of it, cannot (as some things cannot, because they are worth so much) be prized, because it is worth so little; yet he that gives but this little thing, this (almost) nothing in the name of a Disciple, he shall not lose his reward. So here, to set forth the hardness of Job's heart (as Eliphaz conceived) he puts it in these terms, Thou hast not given water (no not cold water) to those that are weary; as if he had said, thou hast not only denied a feast or a banquet of wine, which might put thee to some cost and charges, but thou hast denied them water, cold water, which is not chargeable at all, which doth not so much as put thee to the cost of a little fire to heat it, or of any ingredient to mix with it; thou hast denied them this cheapest charity. An old Poet (speaking of a place where water was sold) saith, That which is lowest prized, a thing of no price, Water, is sold here. Thus far hast thou, O Job (saith Eliphaz) fallen below the Law of Love, Thou hast not given water: And to whom did he not give it? The next word answers that Query.

Non inania in eos etiam levia quæ sub frigidæ aqua nomine designat officia esse decerint. Hilar.

——venit vilissima rerum hîc, Aqua. Hor. Sat. 1.

To the weary.] That is, thou hast not given water to whom it doth most properly belong, or who had perfect need of it, the weary, the thirsty. There are some to whom we may very well refuse to give water, or any other refreshment of nature; they have enough, if not too much already, not only in possession, as the rich; but in use or abuse rather, as the intemperate and the drunken: To give water to such, is to powre water into the Sea; but thou hast not given it to the weary, nor to those who are like the dry and parched ground.

In that the matter of charity is placed in water, observe,

That, Charity is accepted, and uncharitableness condemned in the smallest matter.

It is not the quantity of the gift, but the affection of the giver; it is not the quantity of that which is denied to be given, but the heart of him that denies it, which the Lord takes notice of; be it much, or be it little that is given, if it be given with an honest and willing mind, the Lord accepts it; and be it much or be it little that is denied, if it be denied with a churlish and uncharitable spirit, the Lord is displeased with it; and the less that is which is denied, the more sinful is the denial, and the more is the Lord displeased with it. When crusts or crums of bread, which fall from our Table, are denied, when a cup of cold water is denied, how cold is charity? And is it not crumbled into a lesser nothing then those crums? We should honour the Lord with our substance, and our charity should not only have cost in it, but liberality in it; how do they honour the Lord with their substance, who will hardly give to him (that is, to his poor) the shadow of their substance? If the Lord should command us to give some great thing to testifie our charity, should we not do it? how much more when he saith, give but water to the weary for my sake, and I account you charitable?

Secondly note, That, Churlish and hard-hearted persons stick at small matters as well as at great.

It is supposed (Acts 5. 15.) that the very shadow of Peter was healing to the sick. There are some so hard-hearted, that they would hardly bestow their shadow upon the poor to do them good. It troubles them to part with the least imaginable benefit, or do the least imaginable courtesie, not only great things, but small things, even the smallest things, the chipping of their Loaf, the parings of their Apple, yea, the very huskes which their swine eat (as the Letter of the Parable concerning the prodigal intimates, Luke 15. 16.) are stuck at as too much for them who have nothing. And thus the heart of a wicked man is stated to the whole business of obedience; his heart is much against obedience in a small matter, as in a great; he is so far from swallowing the Camel of holy duty, that he strains at the very gnats of it; and if a mans spirit be against obedience it self in its own nature, if his spirit be unsuitable to it, let it be a duty of the least or lowest degree, he cannot but stick at it. The servants of Naaman the Assyrian, said to him, Had the Prophet bid thee do some great matter, wouldest thou not have done it? how much more when he saith unto thee, Wash in Jordan and be clean? There is a reason why we should rather do small things then great, as to the outward act; but, I say, if the Spirit of a man be cross-grain'd, and lie against the duty, he is as unfit and as backward to do a little, as to do a great deal; he will not so much as give water to God or man; or if he do give it, he doth not give it with a heart let out in love to God, or in compassion to the most needy man. It is a hard matter with him to give or do at all; but it is an impossible matter for him to give or do with a ready or chearful mind. Thus the covetous man, the hard-hearted worldling cannot give so much as water; a worldly man never thinks that himself hath enough of the world, and he never thinks that others have too little; when he is full, he thinks all others are full enough too. Such narrow-hearted creatures the Prophet Isaiah describes (c. 32. 6, 7.) Who, as they practice hypocrisie, and utter error against the Lord, so they practise oppression and utter cruelty against man; to make empty the soul of the hungry, and to cause the drink of the thirsty to fail. The instruments of the Churl are evil. What instruments doth he mean? Some say, the instruments of his commerce, his weights and measures, he pincheth the poor there; that's true, those instruments of the churlish Merchant or Tradesman are evil: Yet we may rather expound it more largely for all the means, whether persons or things, whether Agents and under-officers, or courses and devices, which the churlish man useth as instruments to compass and bring about his purposes; all these savour of himself, they are evil, that is, false, treacherous, and lying in wait to deceive. For (as it follows) He deviseth wicked devices to destroy the poor with lying words, even when the needy speaketh right; or (as we put in the margin) when he speaketh against the poor in judgment.

Thirdly note, That, A little is much reckoned upon by those that are in need, or have nothing.

Water is a welcome mercy to the thirsty, to the weary, to those who are ready to die with heat and travel. The rich man in hell, would have been glad of a drop of water to cool his tongue. Sisera the General of Jabin's Army, begs of Jael, to give him a little water; for (saith he) I am thirsty (Judg. 4. 19.) The full soul loaths the honey-comb, that which is sweet and delicious, the full stomach loaths it; but they that are weary, hungry and thirsty, a piece of bread, a cup of water, how pleasant! how sweet! Such are glad of any thing, who are in want of all things. Much is little to them who have much, a little is much to them who have but little. The weary will thank you more for water, then the wanton will for wine. The weary asked but water to drink, and could not get it, thou wouldest not give it.

Fourthly, Eliphaz describing a wicked man, fixes most upon this sin, his unmercifulness to the poor. And there is a general truth in it.

That, To be without compassion to the poor, is the mark of a wicked man.

They who have found the compassion of God to their own souls (as every godly man hath) cannot shut up the bowels of their compassion towards the pined body of man. The Apostle John puts the question (1 John 3. 17.) How dwelleth the love of God in him, that do so? The love of God, either as taken for the love of God to us, or for our love to God, dwelleth not in him in whom there is no love to man. Now if the love of God dwell not in a man, God dwelleth not in him; and if God dwelleth not in him, Satan doth: And what can he be called but wicked, in whom the wicked or the evil one dwelleth? Thus the wicked Edomites dealt with the people of God when they were wearied in their March through the Wilderness. We read the children of Israel thus bespeaking the Edomites (Num. 20. 17, 18, 19.) Let us pass I pray thee, through thy Country, we will will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells, &c. We will put you to no trouble, no charge, we will be content with the common waters which we find abroad; this is all which we desire when we shall be weary and thirsty in our travels. And Edom said unto him, Thou shalt not pass by me, lest I cut thee off with the sword: And the Children of Israel said unto him, we will go by the high way, and if I and my Cattel drink of thy water, I will pay thee for it; I will only (without doing any thing else) go through on my feet. See what a spirit Edom was of; when Israel put it to the lowest, we will drink none of the water of your wells, or if we do, we will pay for it: No, Edom was so hard-hearted, that he would neither give, nor sell them water; they shall not have it either of free-cost or for money; thus uncompassionate was he towards a people that were travelling, that were weary and thirsty. The Inhabitants of Teman are commended for their tenderness to men in distress (Isa. 21.14.) They brought water to him that was thirsty, they prevented with their bread him that fled: They gave water and bread unasked; the wants of the distressed moved them, though they made no motion for the supply of their wants. They act most like God, who prevent us with their favours. Even the light of Nature leads to it. How unnatural then are they who deny water to them, who being weary and thirsty, beg for it? The mercy of God by Jesus Christ is highly commended to us upon this consideration, that he gives it not only in bounty, but in compassion; there is not only liberality, but there is a pity in it; therefore he saith (Matth. 11.28.) Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest. To give ease and refreshment to those that are weary and heavy laden, hath not only bounty and liberality, but pity and compassion in it (Psal. 136.23.) Thanks to God who hath remembred us in our low estate. It is an act of Grace for God to remember us in our highest estate, in our most flourishing estate; but to remember us in our low estate, then to give us in refreshings and comforts, this is a clearer act of Grace. As it is said (Psal. 68.9.) Thou, O God, didst send a plentiful rain, whereby thou didst confirm thine inheritance when it was weary. As the goodness of God is most seen in giving water to the weary, so is the wickedness of man in denying it. Eliphaz urgeth Job further with this uncharitableness.

And thou hast with-holden bread from the hungry.

Verbum עצר significat abscondere, negare, fraudare. Subtrahebas ei si habebat & prohibebas si non habebat, i.e, nolebas ei panem dare. Deus. Esurientium subtraxisti fructum panis. Ambr.

He gave no water, and he with-held bread. The word is sometimes rendred, to hide, to deny; and sometimes, to deceive a man of that which is due to him. Our Translation (Thou hast with-holden) carries that sence in it: Properly we are said to with-hold only that from a man which he hath a right to; Thou hast with-holden bread from the hungry. As hunger and thirst are put for all manner of extremity, so bread and water are put for all manner of supplies generally. The Greeks and some Latines interpret this strictly of a morsel of bread; Thou hast with-holden a morsel of bread; as the rich man in the Gospel did: Lazarus desired but the crumbs that fell from his Table, but could not get them. So here, thou hast with-holden not only a full Table, but a morsel of Bread; This latter clause and the former, are of the same sence; yet from that word with-holden, which implieth a wrong done to the poor, note,

First, That, The poor have a right in what rich men have.

And if they with-hold all from them, they shall be condemned not only as uncharitable and illiberal, but as oppressors and unjust; not only as not having given them relief, but as not having done them right (Prov. 3.27.) Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thy hand to do it. A thing is due upon a double account; first, By the Law of Justice; secondly, By the Law of Love: I conceive here that the Proverb is to be understood of a dueness, not by the Laws of common Justice (as if a man have his brothers estate in his hand, he cannot with-hold it from him without transgressing the Law of Justice) but of a dueness by the Law of Love, or more strictly, by the Law of Charity; thus it is a duty to do good to those that are in want; 'tis not only a favour that we shew to them when we relieve them; but there is a duty in it, which we owe to God, who hath commanded that their poverty should be supplied by the plenty and abundance which he hath given to others. If therefore it be demanded, who are they to whom this doing of good is due? I answer, not only they to whom thou art indebted in Justice, witness thy Hand and Seal; but even they to whom thou art indebted in Charity, witness their Want and Need. The poor have a right to what we are able to give, and can conveniently spare; yea, sometimes their right may lie somewhat beyond the line of our conveniency. So then there is a point of Justice in it, as well as of charity, in relieving the poor; and if (as the next words in Solomon imply) it be sinful to delay them till to morrow, it must needs be a wickedness to deny them for ever. Therefore the same Solomon (Prov. 22.2.) Speaking of the poor and the rich, puts them together; The rich and the poor meet together, the Lord is the maker of them all. Now the Lord is the maker of the poor and of the rich, not only in their natural constitution, as they are men consisting of body and soul (so indeed he hath made the poor as well as the rich, and they are both alike the work of his hands) but the Lord is the maker of them in that capacity or state wherein they are; he makes the rich man and the poor man, that is, he makes the one rich, and the other poor; he is the maker of them both: And Solomon (I conceive) puts that in, to shew first, that poor men should not envy the rich man; why? For the Lord hath made him rich: Why should thy eye be evil because the Lords eye is good?

And again, that the rich man should not despise the poor, or withdraw the bowels of his compassion from them: the Lord could have made thee poor too if he had pleased; therefore be compassionate towards them, for the Lord is the maker of you both. And this answers that Objection commonly given by some, Why, are not my goods my own? may I not do with them as I please? I have not stoln them, I have wronged no man in the obtaining them; It is well when men can say thus, that they have done no wrong in getting riches: but this is no argument (how justly soever any man hath got his Estate) that he should keep it all to himself, and not give a portion to those that are in want. The rich man with-holds what is due to the poor, when he with-holds relief from them. It is true, your estate is your own, it is yours, no man can challenge or claim it from you; I but God can claim it from you; you are possessors and masters of your estate in reference unto men; but you are but stewards and servants of your estate, in reference unto God. Now a Stewards business (you know) is not only to receive and lay up the estate of his Master, but it is his business also to pay or lay out according as he receives command or order from his Lord; thus it is in this case: Rich men are but Stewards to the Lord in reference to all that they have; therefore as they receive from him, and receive of the fulness of the earth, which is his (for the earth is the Lords and the fulness thereof) so they must issue it according to his order and command: Now he hath left a standing order for all times, that the rich should distribute to the necessities of the poor and hungry. Rich men must not think themselves Stewards only to receive in, but also to pay out what their Lord calls for; and therefore as they would give a good account of their Stewardship at the great Audit-day, let them take heed how they with-hold bread from the hungry. I might shew further, that the rich are not only obliged to give, or that it is their duty to give, but that they ought to give chearfully and readily, not upon constraint (2 Cor. 9.7.) That they ought to give liberally and bountifully, not with restraint; and that they ought to give sincerely, not thinking thereby either to merit at the hand of God, or to get the praise of men.

Secondly, From the matter of this Charge, Thou hast with-holden bread from the hungry, we may observe,

That, Not to do good, or the omission of doing good to the poor, renders us culpable, as well as the doing or commission of that which is evil or injurious to them.

Not to relieve the poor, is a sin, as well as to injure or oppress the poor; yea, not to relieve, hath injury and oppression in it. The reason of it is clear from the former point, because the poor have a right to so much of a rich mans estate, as is a relief of their pressing necessities, to preserve them from perishing. And every man must acknowledge that to deny any man his right (by what title soever the right ariseth) is to

is to oppress him. Nor is it enough to give them good words (which is yet more then some will give) unless we do them good (Jam. 2. 15, 16.) If a brother or a sister be naked, and destitute of dayly food, and one of you say unto them, depart in peace, be warmed and filled; yet notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit? Though you give them good words, yet if you give them no supply, what doth it profit? We may understand it two wayes.

First, What doth it profit the poor? Can they feed upon your good words? or will your good words cloath them? What doth it profit them, if ye say, be fed, and be cloathed, if you give them neither food nor rayment?

Secondly, What profit is it to you who say so? Will God take it well at your hands, that you have spoken kindly to the poor, when you did them no kindness? Therefore with-hold not thy hand, &c. And if it be so great a sin to with-hold our bread from the hungry, what is it to take their bread from them? Eliphaz having thus taxed Job with neglect of the poor, he proceeds in the next verse to tax him with an undue and partial respect to the rich. As he was rigid to them who had nothing, so he was indulgent to those who had enough, if not more then enough before.

Verse 8. But as for the mighty man, he had the earth, and the honourable man dwelt in it.

There is a twofold interpretation of these words; Some understand them so, as if this mighty man here meant, had been Job himself; and then the sence is thus rendred, All these evils were done by thee, and these good things not done, when thou wast a man in power, and so hadst no need to do any such evil, and hadst power enough in thy hand to do good. The Vulgar Translation reads it (according to this exposition) personally of Job; In thy might thou didst possess the earth, and being most powerful, thou didst dwell in it: That is, thou wast a man in power, thou hadst all in thy hand, thou hadst water and bread enough when the poor wanted it; thou canst not say that thou wast necessitated to keep the pledge, or strip the naked; but thou in thy greatness and might didst oppress them: this interpretation (though I assent not to it) aggravates his sin exceedingly; for the more power any one hath in his hand, the greater is his sin, as in the evil which he doth, so in the good which he doth not, or leaves undone; yea, it may be said that we do evil more then they who do it, when we have power in our hand to hinder them from doing it, and do not.

But Secondly, Take the words as they import the partiality of Job; The mighty man had the earth; thou hast been over-kind and favourable to him, how hard or churlish sever thou hast been to others.

The mighty man.] The Hebrew is, The man of arm; and it is usual in Scripture to call a strong man a mighty man, or a man in authority, a man of arm (Ezek. 22. 6.) Behold the Princes of Israel, every one of them were in thee to their power to shed blood. The Hebrew is, They were to their arm, that is, as far as they could reach forth their arm, or to the utmost of their power to shed blood, that is, to do mischief and wrong, to afflict and vex others even unto death, or the shedding of their blood. They who are evil, know not how to bound themselves in doing evil; if they want not power, they seldom want will to do it more and more. Thus the Prophet reproves that perverse generation; Behold thou hast spoken and done evil as thou couldest (Jer 3. 5.) That is, to the utmost extention of thy ability and opportunity. As those Princes shed blood to their arm, or as far as they could reach out their power; so did this people. And as the power of man, so the power of God is expresst by this arm (Job 40. 9.) Hast thou an arm like God? Canst thou thunder like him? That is, Hast thou power like God? (Isa. 30. 30.) The Lord shall cause his glorious voyce to be heard, and shall shew the lighting down of his arm, with the indignation of his anger, and with the flame of a devouring fire. The revenging power of God, like a Bird of prey, hovers over the heads of wicked men, but at last it lights down, and (as the word rather signifies) rests upon them.

Again, Some understand here by the arm of the wicked man, those who are his instruments, those who serve him, or whom he uses to supplant or suppress others, and reach his own ends by; such may well be called the arms of mighty men, the arms of the men of the earth. Evil men have their Seconds or Instruments to do evil. Upon this consideration it was said anciently, Do you not know that Princes have long arms? The meaning is, they have Agents and Servants in the several parts of their Dominions, who are their hands or arms, both for protection of those who are peaceable, and to take revenge upon the rebellious. We commonly say of a Servant that is discreeet and faithful, he is his Masters right hand. The mighty have many helpers, many arms and hands to carry on their designes, and to do their wills.

An nescis longas regibus esse manus?

As for the mighty man, or the man of arm, he had the earth.

This stands in opposition to what was spoken before, the poor man could not get a drop of water, nor a crust of bread, but the mighty man he had the earth: As if he had said, O Job, thou being in power, didst pass away great possessions to the mighty, thou gavest both thy sentence and assistance, that they should have the earth, but thou wouldest not help the poor so much as to a piece of bread or a cup of water; The mighty man had the earth: He speaks indefinitely, as if all the earth were his. Wicked men are called men of the earth (Psal. 10. 18.) To judge the fatherless and the oppressed; that the men of the earth may no more oppress.

But it may be objected, Is not every man a man of the earth? As Adam the first man was of the earth, earthy; so all men are of the earth, earthy: why is it then said of a wicked man, that he is a man of the earth, as if any man were of another pedigree or extraction?

I answer, A man of the earth is put in opposition to a man of heaven, to a man that hath his estate, or hope, or portion in heaven; the Saints have their conversation in heaven, and though they live upon the earth, yet they are not men of the earth: Carnal men are earthly-minded, they mind the earth, and that's both their hope and business; they are not only earth in their constitution, but earth in their affections; therefore they are called men of the earth; these men had much of the earth in their possession, as well as they had all of it in their affections and desires. The mighty man he had the earth. Hence observe,

That, Evil Magistrates in power, are more ready to favour great men, then to relieve poor men.

Eliphaz knew that Job was a Magistrate, a man in power, and he supposeth that under his government, the poor got no bread, but the mighty men had the earth; they had favour to have and do what they list. It is very common with the men of the world to be very free to those that are of the world; they are like those clouds which we may observe sometimes blown over the dry land, and emptying themselves into the Sea. The mighty that had store before, have more, and the poor, who had nothing, have nothing at all: Men love to bestow kindnesses upon them only to whom they are like, or whom they love. A good man helps those that are good, and wicked men care for none but such as themselves. Wicked men are called Oaks (Zech. 11. 2.) Howl ye fir-trees, for the Cedar is fallen (that is, the great man is fallen) because all the mighty are spoiled; howl O ye Oaks of Bashan, for the forest of the vintage is come down. The Chaldee Paraphrase saith, Howl ye Governors of Provinces: And he calls these Governors Oaks; first, Because of their strength; and secondly, Because of their fruit. What fruit do Oaks bear? Only Acorns; and who are fed with Acorns? only swine; Acorns are but hogs-meat: he gives the allusion thus, wicked men in power, bear fruit, but it is only for swine, that is, for wicked men; they bestow the tokens of their bounty, the overplus of their plenty upon hogs and swine, that is, upon carnal and sensual men; they have nothing for the people of God, for those that are the true objects of charity; they make their horses fat, their dogs fat, none are lean but Gods poor. Thus one of the Ancients reprehends those great ones of his time, Ye cloath the walls of your houses with Gold, with Arras hangings, and ye let the poor go naked; the poor ask bread, and give it them not; it may be your horse chews a golden Bit, and the poor man hath not a bit of bread. The spirits of carnal men are carried out from that which is their duty, they care not how profuse and lavish they are to those who Pariettes vestitis auro, homines vestis nuditate? panem postulat homo, & equus tuus aurum sub dentibus mandit. Ambros.

suit

suits with their own hearts; the poor having nothing, while the mighty man hath the earth. Thus Eliphaz reproved Job, though indeed it was otherwise with him; as appears in the defence which he afterwards made for himself against these gross insinuations. And as to this particular, he answers (chap. 29. 17.) I brake the jaws of the wicked, and pluckt the spoyl from between his teeth; he indeed pull'd the earth from the mighty, or the mighty from the earth; though Eliphaz here said, The mighty had the earth, and,

Acceptus vel elevatus facie habitabat in ea. Heb.

The honourable man dwelt in it.] The Hebrew is, The man whose face is lifted up; which phrase is interpreted two wayes.

First, Passively. Secondly, Actively. Passively thus; the man who is lifted up by others, that is, who is respected, who is reverenced according to his place or worth: All which agree with our rendring, the honourable man. And in the Hebrew, Princes and great ones are expreſt by that word which signifies to lift up the face; because such are lifted up above others, and are much respected by others. So the word is used (Gen. 19. 21.) See (saith the Angel to Lot) I have accepted thee: The Hebrew is, I have lifted up thy face, that is, I have respected and honoured thee by granting thy request.

Hebræi principes vocat Nasi, quasi elevatum facie & ab aliis acceptum.

Secondly, It may be taken actively, The man that lifts up the face dwells in the earth. What is it to lift up the face? It is to accept persons in Judgment, to accept him that hath the worst Cause, and to reject him that hath the best Cause, for private ends. As if Eliphaz had said, He that respects persons, that is, who perverts justice, he hath the Earth; and so here seems to be a description of all sorts of wicked men flourishing in Job's time, and under his wing. Some oppress openly, the mighty man, the man of Arms, comes by main force, and obtains the earth, or the riches and fatness of the earth. Others oppress secretly and cunningly, they accept persons, and are byassed in Judgment by their own Interest and Advantages: The man of this strain dwelt in it.

Acceptor personarum habitabat in ea. Pagn.

προσωποληπτεῖ est habere respectum personarum, sc. quod pauper sit aut dives, aut nobilis, aut honoratus,

The word notes two things. First, To continue; he dwelt there, thou let'st him abide; whereas if he had come into the Land, thou shouldest quickly have rooted him out. Secondly, The word signifies not only to dwell, but to sit; and to sit, in Scripture-Language, notes authority or dominion; he dwelt or sate in it, that is, he was the man in authority; he had the power, and the great places of government were entrusted in his hand. From both these, observe,

יָשַׁב Habitare, sedere.

First, That, Evil Magistrates are apt to pervert Justice, in favour of those who are great in power.

Favour should be shewed according to the justness of mens Causes, and not according to the greatness of their persons. But usually the mighty men have the earth, all goes on their side; and the honourable man dwells there, he sits safe and quiet, well and warm. This is so commonly seen, that 'tis become a Proverb, The mighty man hath the whole Earth for his house to dwell in; the poor man lies every where, but seldom dwells any where. The wicked are said to have their portion in this life, they would have the Earth to themselves, and they shall have nothing but Earth. So the Prophet describes them (Isa. 5. 8.) Wo unto them that joyn house to house, that lay field to field, that there may be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the Earth. Man is naturally a sociable Creature, and it may seem strange that he should desire to be alone in the midst of the Earth; therefore by his desire to be alone, we must not understand a strict loneness or solitariness; as if rich men had a mind to live alone, so as to have none about them or with them; but the meaning is, they would have none in power but themselves, none in possession but themselves; they are unwilling that any should have an Estate but themselves; they would have all others to be their Underlings and Tenants, their Servants and Villains, to till their ground, and gather in their revenues; they only would be Freeholders, all others must hold by their Copy, and do them homage. If the greatest man in the world were turned alone into the world, he would have but an ill being of it; therefore the meaning of the Prophet is, that they would be placed alone in the midst of the Earth to command and rule; all others must serve them. And they whose pride, ambition, or covetousness provokes them to dwell thus alone in the earth, shall find nothing beyond this earth, but to dwell in fire.

Potentis est terra; pauper ubique jacet.

Secondly observe, That, For a Magistrate to favour men because of their greatness and power, is an utter departure from his duty.

The poor man should have the Earth, that belongs to him as well as the rich. The mean mans right to his little, is as good, as the mighty mans to his great deal. Justice gives every man his own, without respect to the Owner.

Thirdly, Consider the words as a Charge brought against Job, he being a man in authority, and in place. Hence note,

He that lets wicked men oppress or wrong others, when he is invested and intrusted with power to hinder them, betrayeth his trust, and loseth the ends of his investiture.

The Lord chargeth Eli (1 Sam. 3. 13.) because of the great iniquity which his Sons committed; but it might be said, What was their sin to him? Yes, it lay in his power to hinder them; for Eli was the chief Magistrate in Israel, and therefore the Lord concluded, I will Judge his house for ever, for the iniquity which he knoweth, because his Sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not: But did not Eli restrain them? There is a restraining,

First, By way of counsel and advice; and in this sence Eli did restrain them (chap. 9. 23, 24.) He said unto them, why do ye such things? for I hear of your evil dealings with all the people; nay, my Sons; for it is no good report that I hear, ye make the Lords people to transgress. Thus he puts a moral stop in their way, shewing the hainousness of their sin, and dehorting them from it; but Eli being a man in power and authority, might have gone another way to work with them, he might have punished them for their sin: And because he did not, here was Eli's sin; and this is suggested as Job's sin. He was a man in power, yet he winked at those violent ones, and let them carry all the Earth, whenas he might have mended the matter, by checking their insolencies, and doing the poor right. This is charged on Thiatira, in reference to the neglect of using their Church-power (Rev. 2. 20.) Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, that calls her self a Propheteſs, to teach, and to seduce my Servants to commit fornication, &c. That Angel suffered her; how did he suffer her? He did not use that power that Christ had committed to the Church, to admonish, to reprove, to cast out, he did not stop that seducing Propheteſs by a due exercise of spiritual power, but suffered her to seduce uncontrouled. The more power we have to prevent or remove either spiritual or civil evils, the greater is our sin when it is not done; if Eliphaz had not supposed Job a Magistrate, he could not have laid this burden upon him, or have represented him in fault, because the mighty man had the Earth, and the honourable man dwelt in it, oppressing the weak, and vexing those of low degree.

Eliphaz goes yet one step further in the prosecution of this Charge, and arraignes him for another Crime, and that a very great one; The mighty man had the Earth, the honourable man dwells in it: But,

Verse 9. The widow thou hast sent empty away, and the arms of the fatherless have been broken.

As if he had said, Thou didst fill the full with good things, but the hungry thou hast sent empty away; the honourable have been provided for, but they who were destitute of all friends, found no friendship at thy hands, unless the breaking of their arms.

Thou hast sent widows away empty.

שָׁלַח Verbum dimittendi violentiam quandam affert, ut sit idem quod ejicere, extrudere, expellere.

There is somewhat considerable in the nature of the word which we render sent; for it implies a putting away with a kind of violence; thou hast cast them out, or bid them be packing; thou hast put them off with rigor and distaste. As if he had said, Thou hast not only let them go from thy house unrelieved, but thou hast reviled them and thrust them away, because they asked relief. So we may expound it by that (Gen. 3. 23, 24.) And the Lord God sent him (that is, Adam) forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. What this sending forth was, is expressed in the next verse; So he drove out the man. Such a sending away is here intended, thou hast sent widows away (as we speak) with a witness; thou hast chid or rated them them out of thy presence. As it is said of Gallio (Acts 18. 16, 17.) That he cared for none of those things, and he drave them from the Judgment-seat. Thus thou hast sent widows away.

Complutenses. Further, In the Chaldee Language, the word signifies to strip, or to pluck off the very skin. This is yet more tyrannical, Thou hast sent them away spoiled and stript, or, as it followeth in the Text, empty. Thou hast sent widows away, &c. It was not the mighty man, nor the great ones of the earth that he is charged to deal thus unkindly, or rather cruelly with, but the widow; that heightens the sinfulness of his tyranny. This very word by which a widow is expressed in the Hebrew, as well as her condition, calls for help and pity: It comes from a root that signifies, either to bind, or to be silent; taking it in the first signification, to bind, the widow may be so called for two reasons: First, Because the widow is (as it were) bound about with afflictions and sorrows; she hath many troubles about her, as so many bonds from which she cannot free her self without running into many other troubles. Secondly, The widow is so called, by the rule of contrary speaking; bound, that is, not at all bound, but free or loosed from her husband. Thus the Apostle speaks (Rom. 7. 1, 2, 3. 1 Cor. 7. 39.) Her marriage-knot is untied by death; If her husband be dead, she is loosed from the Law of her husband. she is left to her self, and her own dispose alone. Take the word in the second signification, to be silent: A widow is so called, because she seldom hath that natural, and never hath that civil liberty or freedom of speech her husband had, and therefore she needs others to speak for her, or must speak her mind by others, her self being either unable, or disabled to speak in her own case, or to speak for her self. This being the widows state, he hath the greater sin who deals unkindly with her. What? Thrust away the widow, whose heart is bound about, yea, and thrust through with many sorrows! What? thrust away the widow, who is unable to manage her own cause, and defend her self in her right! yet this thou hast done; Thou hast sent widows away אלמנה à verbo אלם Quod est colligare, ergo ligata dicitur per contrarium intellectum, quia jam soluta viro. Significat etiam habere linguâ colligatam, i.e. obmutescere aut mutum esse, quod mortuo viro non valeat loqui & litigare, quam vis contra æquum & jus rapinam bonorum suorum patiatur. Rab. Mor.

A radice ריק quod est effundere vel evacuare.

Erat ergo contumeliosum verbum dicere fratri Raka, i. e. vocare pauperculum & bonis omnibus exhaustũ

Empty. That is, without any help or comfort. The word is used to signifie the emptiness of a vessel (2 Kings 4. 4) It is used also concerning the Dreamer, who thinks that he hath eaten, but when he awakes, his soul (that is, his stomach) is empty (Isa. 29. 8.) So we may expound the word Racha (Mat. 5. 22.) He that saith to his Brother Racha; which some understand, not of a man that wants wit or honesty only, but wealth or plenty. And then to call a man Racha, is to upbraid him both with poverty and simplicity: As if it should (in disgrace) be said to him, Thou poor snake, thou silly fellow, what dost thou talk? thou who hast so little wit, thou who art not worth a groat? In the Story of Jephthah (Judg. 11. 3.) Such a sort of men are spoken of as his aiders and assistants; Then Jephthah fled from his brethren, and there were gathered together vain men to Jephthah, and went out with him. Some translate, poor men were gathered together, and went out with him. Vain men are usually idle fellows and vagabonds, and we may conceive his company or followers to have consisted of poor men rather then of vain men: And in that sence the word is used (Neh. 5. 13.) Even thus be he shaken out and emptied; that is, impoverished and reduced to nothing. And thus also the low estate of Jesus Christ is expressed (Phil. 2.) He emptied himself, namely, of his divine glory and splendor; that is, he shewed not his Majesty whilest he was in the flesh, but covered and vailed it, and was in appearance as a poor empty man, having voluntarily made himself of no reputation, though he were Lord over all. Such was the emptiness in which these widows were sent away by Job, as Eliphaz accuseth him. And this act may have a threefold interpretation. First, They were sent away empty, that is, not filled or relieved by thy charity; thou didst not open either thy heart or thy hand to supply their necessities, or to make them up in what they wanted and humbly desired.

Heb. Vacui, non ut putat Vatablus, Otiosi, sed ut alii inopes & bonis exhausti.

Secondly, Thou hast sent widows empty away, that is, thou hast given them no relief by thy Justice; some widows beg meerly for alms; others bring their case and cause to the Magistrate or man in Authority, for help against their oppressing Adversaries. In Luke 18. The importunate Widow saith to the Judge, Relieve me against my adversary; I beg not your Charity, but your Justice; The widow is sent away empty, when her Suit is not heard. We may understand Eliphaz either way, that when the widow sued for her right, she found no Justice, and when she came for an Alms, she found no Charity.

Thirdly, We may interpret it yet higher; Thou hast sent widows away empty, that is, widows came to thee full, or in a good condition, but thou hast emptied them by oppression, and taken away what they had. Covetous Magistrates care not how or of whom they get it, so they can get it; they empty the widows purse, yea, widows houses to fill their own. Christ reproved the Pharisees for this (Matth. 23. 14.) Wo unto you Scribes and Pharisees, for ye devour widows houses; ye eat them out of house and home, either by living upon, or by taking away their livings. We may understand Eliphaz in this sence also; Thou hast sent widows away empty, that is, widows came to thee for protection, and thou didst promise it; but then to make thy own market upon them, and serve thy self, thou hast oppressed them; they came to thee to do them right, and thou hast undone them by unrighteousness. It is ill enough to deny widows Charity, it is worse to deny them Justice; but it is worst of all to undo them by unjustice: yet those two Horse-leeches, Pride and Covetousness will not forbear to draw from the widow. Some rich men undertake the widows cause, only to enrich themselves by the spoils of the widow; and for this reason they promise help to those who are in misery, that they may make them more miserable, instead of helping them; Thou hast sent widows away empty. Thus Job was supposed to have dealt with widows.

Tradunt se ad tuendum majoribus, dediditias se divitum faciunt. Illud grave est, quod hac lege tueri pauperes videntur ut spoliant; hac lege defendunt miseros ut miseriores faciant defendendo. Salv. lib. 5. De Provid.

See next how Eliphaz chargeth him for his dealings with the fatherless.

And the arms of the fatherless have been broken.

Duo ista nomina in quantum despectui humano, in tantum misericordiæ divinæ exposita, Tert. l. 1. ad uxor. c. 8. Per viduam & pupillum omne genus miseriorum hominum significatur. Pined.

These two desolate names are alwayes found alone, but often as one in Scripture; the widow who is disjoyned from her husband, and the fatherless, who are bereaved of their parents, are commonly joyned together. And these two Names are taken in Scripture, either strictly, or more largely; strictly, to signifie only such persons as have either lost their husbands or parents; largely, and so the widow and fatherless signifie any that are in distress, or need our charity; because the widow and the fatherless stand often in need of charity, therefore these names in Scripture, signifie any that need our charity. While the Prophet saith (Hos. 14. 3.) With thee the fatherless findeth mercy; we are not to straighten his sence only to Orphans, but to any that are in distress; he that is a father may be called fatherless, and the child that hath a father, may be called fatherless, when extreamly needing the help either of God or man. And so the word widow must be understood (Rev. 18. 7.) Where Babylon boasteth, I sit as a Queen, and am no widow, that is, I am neither friendless nor helpless; or as the next words seem to expound it, I shall see no sorrow; which is usually the widows portion. Thus in the Text, by the widow and the fatherless, we must understand not only those who are formally so, but all in affliction, who are equivalently so.

The arms of the fatherless have been broken.] In the former part of the verse, he saith, Thou hast sent the widow away empty; charging the sin personally upon Job: here he only saith, The arms of the fatherless have been broken; as if he did not place the fault directly upon him: yet some translate it so; Thou hast broken the arms of the fatherless; making it Job's act: However our rendring layes fault enough upon him, and leaves him in particular without excuse, while it speaks only in general, The arms of the fatherless have been broken: For it is as if he had said, thou hast permitted their arms to be broken. And if he should object, What if the arms of the fatherless have been broken? what is that to me? Yes, you being in place and power, and having strength in your own hands to preserve the fatherless, if the arms of the fatherless have been broken, the sin must lie at your door. Every man is guilty of all the evil which he hath power and a call to hinder, and doth not hinder.

The arms of the fatherless.] Arms may be taken either properly or figuratively. The arm properly is a noble and most useful Limb of the body; we are not to understand it so here, as if he had broken the natural arms of their bodies: A mans arm is broken, when his power is is broken, though his skin be not so much as toucht. So then,

Per brachia robur, divitiæ, facultates quæ orphano pro brachiis & manibus esse possunt, intelliguntur.

By the arms of the fatherless, we are to understand whatsoever is the strength, or makes for the defence of the fatherless. The arm (as we toucht in the former verse) is put for strength, because the arm hath much strength and activity in it for the defence and use of the whole body. The estate, the friends, the kindred, all the means, helps and aids which are subservient to the good and protection of the fatherless, are by a Figure called the Arms of the fatherless. These arms, saith Eliphaz, Confringere, contundere. 1. Non subveniendo. 2. Detinendo substantiam ipsis à parentibus relictam.

Have been broken.] The word notes an utter breaking, a breaking to pieces; to break as a thing is broken in a Mortar with a Pestle. This breaking may be also considered two wayes; either as done by a positive act, or by a negative act, that is, by with-holding that help which might preserve them from breaking. The arms of the fatherless are broken by denying them protection, as well as by exercising oppression by them. Thus we see what a Bill of Indictment is here drawn up against Job, how he is charged with crimes which are not only against the light of Scripture, but even against the very light of Nature; even with those crimes which his hand was far from, and his heart further from, with those crimes which he did not only forbear to practise, but which his soul did abhor. Hence observe,

That, The most innocent persons are often charged with the foulest and sinfullest crimes.

Job was so clear in his own Conscience from this accusation, that he not only professeth openly that he never did, but imprecates a like vengeance upon himself if ever he had done it (chap. 31. 21.) If I have lift up my hands against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the Gate (that is, when by reason of my great power and authority in the place of judgment, I could easily enough have done it, no man daring to oppose or hinder me, but all rather being ready to countenance or assist me in it; if (I say) when I had these advantages over the fatherless, I did ever break their arms) then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone: As if he had said, If I have done this thing, let a divine and visible retaliation point me out for the man; let all the world see and read my sin in my punishment, and my injustice against man in the most discernable judgments of God upon my self. Thus free and innocent was Job, and yet thus accused. And indeed, if to accuse were enough, there is no man in the world could be innocent or free. Who is there of so unspotted a conversation, that may not be spotted with accusation? who, while his Conscience is pure, may not have much dirt cast in his face?

Secondly, Eliphaz accuses Job of all this, not because he knew it to be so, but because he thought it was so. Whence note (which hath formerly been toucht at)

That, To charge any man upon surmise, with things that we cannot prove, is a high breach not only of Charity, but of Justice.

The Lord reproves Job's three Friends in the last Chapter of this Book, because they had not spoken of him the thing that was right; and as they had not spoken the thing that was right of God, so not of Job. They pitcht upon no reason why they condemned him so much, but only because he endured so much. They concluded him a man of sin, because he was a man of sorrow. The Apostle gives us the true Genius of Charity (1 Cor. 13. 3, 4.) Charity believeth all things; not that Charity is so credulous as to take up every thing for truth which is scattered by any common and ungrounded report; thats no commendation in any man, much less is it the commendation of a godly man; therefore when the Apostle saith, Charity believeth all things, the meaning is, Charity interprets every thing in the best sence which it will bear, and makes the fairest construction which every mans case and condition will admit. And again, at v. 5. Charity thinks no evil, that is, it thinks no evil of others; as a godly man will not maintain evil thoughts, or suffer them to lodge within him, in reference to any sin, which himself is tempted to commit, so, a charitable man will not maintain or lodge evil thoughts of others, in reference to any sin which he can only suppose that they have committed. Again, as Charity thinks no evil, that is, it doth not plot evil against others; so thinks no evil by a rash surmising it of others. Thus, Charity believes all's well, and thinks no evil. How uncharitable then are they, yea, how unjust who believe all's ill, where they know of none; and think the worst of them in whom they never saw any thing but what was good? It is not enough for a man to say he doth not judge his brother maliciously; he ought not to judge him ignorantly. Though to speak or judge ill of another, because we wish him ill, be the greater sin, yet barely to speak or judge ill of another, by whom we know no ill, is very sinful: And then 'tis most sinful, when we do it not only as not knowing any evil they have done, but because we know, hear or see the evils which they suffer. 'Tis dangerous as well as improper to make the hardest and harshest dealings of God with any man, the ground of our hard and harsh thoughts of him.

Thirdly consider who they were whom Job is supposed to have oppressed; they were not the great ones, not the mighty men of the earth, but the fatherless and the widow. Hence note,

That, The poor are usually the subject of oppression.

The greater fish in the sea of this world devour and live upon the lesser; the strong should support the weak, and they who are uppermost, should uphold those who are under them. But because the weak and the underlings may most easily be oppresst, therefore they are most usually oppresst. As covetousness is cruel, so 'tis cowardly, and dares not meddle with its match. God in reference to spirituals, filleth the hungry with good things, and the rich he sendeth empty away (Luke 1. 23.) Ungodly men in reference to temporals, would send the rich empty away if they could; but they are so far from filling the hungry with good things, that they take away all the good things they can from the hungry; they care not if they starve the hungry, if they make the poor poorer, and take all from them who have but little,

Fourthly, Job having been a Magistrate, and so (by his place) a Minister of Justice, is strongly pressed with the doing of injustice. Hence note,

First, That, They who have power, may easily, though not always justly, be suspected for the abuse of it.

To have a power in our hands whereby we may do good, is a temptation to do evil. 'Tis hard to keep power within its bounds, and to rule that by which others are ruled, The Prophet (Isa. 1. 10.) calls the rulers of Sion, rulers of Sodom, because they ruled like them, or rather worse then they, eating up the people under their charge, rather then feeding them, and vexing those whom they undertook to govern, and to be a Shield unto against the vexations of others.

Secondly note, That, As oppression is a sin in any man, so it is most sinful in those who have power in their hands to relieve the oppressed.

Such act not only contrary to a common rule, but contrary to their special duty; by how much we have the more obligation not to do a thing, by so much we sin the more if we do it.

Thirdly note, That, As it is very sinful in Magistrates to wrong any man, so it is most sinful to wrong them, or deny them right, who have most need of it, the widow and the fatherless.

Magistrates are called Gods; and God who hath honoured them by putting his name upon them, expects that they should honour him, by imitating or acting like unto him. What a Magistrate doth, he should do like God; he should do it so, that every one may be convinced that God is in in him and with him of a truth. As God takes care of the widow and of the fatherless, so should he. God is known by this Title, A father of the fatherless, and a Judge of the widow, is God in his holy habitation (Psal. 68. 5.) That is, in in Heaven; for that's the habitation of his holiness, and of his glory; there he dwells, judging for the widow and the fatherless. And as that is the special business (as it were) of God in heaven, so they who are Gods on earth, ought to make it their special business to judge for the widow and the fatherless. Hence we find the widow and the fatherless commended by name to the care of the Magistrate. The fatherless have no natural parents living, or none near of kin remaining to maintain and defend them; therefore the Magistrate, who is (pater patriæ) the common father of his Countrey, should be their Foster-father. They who want power are the charge, and should be the special care of those in power. Thus they are commanded (Psal. 82. 3, 4.) Defend the poor and fatherless, do justice to the afflicted and needy; rid them out of the hand of the wicked. Here's their work; and the neglect of this work (how busie soever Magistrates are about other work) is often complained of aloud in Scripture, as a crying sin, as a sin that ruines Nations, and draws down publick Judgments upon a people. (Isa. 1. 17.) Cease to do evil, learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. And at verse 23. They judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them. Again (Jer. 5. 28.) They judge not the cause of the fatherless. It is a sin not to judge any mans Cause, not to judge the Cause of the richest, of the greatest; yet it is more sinful not to judge the Cause of the widow and the fatherless. And when he saith, They judge not the Cause, &c. The meaning is, they judge not the Cause of the fatherless impartially and righteously. And indeed, he that doth not judge righteously, doth not judge at all: And when the Prophet saith, They judge not the Cause of the fatherless, it is as if he had said, Among all the Causes that lie unjudged, this is the Cause that God takes most notice of, and is most displeased with the neglect of it, even when the Cause of the fatherless is not pleaded, or judged. All are forward enough to plead the Cause of the rich; but when the Client is poor, and appears (in forma pauperis) his Cause seldom finds any but a poor and formal pleading. We read (Acts 6. 1.) That there was a great murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the dayly administration. Church-Officers (in their capacity) as well as State-Officers (in theirs) ought to have a careful eye upon widows that are in want. And the Apostle James (chap. 1. 27.) sums up (as it were) all Religion into this one duty; Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and the widow. Not as if this were indeed all Religion, or the all of Religion; but as when the Spirit, in Scripture, hath to do with prophane persons, or meer moral honest men, who place all religion in civil righteousness and works of charity, then he calls them to first-Table duties, or to the sincere worship of God; so, when the Spirit is speaking to those who place all their religion in worship, or in first-Table duties, neglecting the duties of charity and righteousness, then we find all religion placed in second-Table work, in giving every man his due, in compassion to the poor, in helping the helpless, in feeding the hungry, in cloathing the naked, in comforting the sorrowful, and, by name, the fatherless and widow. This is pure religion, to visit the fatherless and widow; that is, this is the practical part, or the true practice of Religion, without which all Religion is vain. Therefore when the Apostle had said (v. 21.) Receive with meekness the engraffed word: Lest any one should stay there, and think he had done enough, when he had been a hearer, he adds, Be doers of the word, that is, look to the practical part of Religion; be diligent in the duties of love to men, as well as in those of the worship of God.

the

Take these two Inferences from the whole Verse.

First, Seeing God taketh so much care of the widow and the fatherless, Let the widow, let the fatherless trust in God. They who receive peculiar promises from God, should put forth suitable acts of faith towards God. Faith cannot work without a word, and where it hath a word, it ought to work. We have both put together in the present case (Jer. 49. 11.) Leave the fatherless children, I will preserve them alive; and let the widows trust in me: As if God had said, if none will take care of them, I will; I will take care of them, I will be a father of the fatherless, a husband to the widow, leave that care to me. Therefore let the widow and fatherless trust in God: A word from God, is a better and a bigger portion then all the wealth of this world.

Secondly, Seeing the Lord is so jealous over them, and so ready to take their part against all their adversaries, this should provoke them to be full of zeal for God. God stands up for their protection, therefore they should stand up for God their Protector and Patron. How careful should they be to please him who is so watchful to preserve them? Special promises call for special obedience, as well as for special faith: The more God engageth himself to do for us, the more should we engage our selves (in his strength) to do for him. None have more reason to be rich in faith and love to God, then the poor and fatherless.

Thus far we have examined the Indictment or Charge which Eliphaz brought against Job; now see what he infers upon it, here's thy sin, and there's thy punishment.

VERS. 10, 11.

Therefore snares are round about thee, and sudden fear troubleth thee;
Or darkness that thou canst not see, and abundance of waters cover thee.

THese two verses have variety of expressions, but the intendment of all is one and the same; Snares and fears, and darkness, and abundance of waters, signifie all manner of evils: All these are upon thee, because thou hast sent widows away empty, and hast suffered the Arms of the fatherless to be broken; because thou hast done these things, therefore Snares are about thee.

Some render the Original Text to another sence, not as bearing an effect of the former words, not as if he had been punished with these evils for those sins; but as if these evils had caused him to sin; and so the words are expounded as a kind of scorn; as if Eliphaz had said, When thou didst those things, no doubt snares, or fears, or darkness, or waters came upon thee, thou wast forc'd by suffering these evils, to do all this evil, wast thou not? was it not because thou wast prest with snares, and fears, and darkness, and waters, that thou didst oppress the widow and the fatherless? All which Questions are reducible to these plain Negations: Thou wast not pressed with any of these perplexities upon thy self, to oppress the poor; there was no snare, no nor any fear near thee, darkness did not hinder thy sight, nor did the waters of affliction cover thee: Thou hast not been thrust upon sin by these temptations, nor constrained by the moral violence of any incumbent necessity, but thou hast done it freely; to sin even in this manner, and at this height, hath not been thy refuge, but thy choice: Thou hast not acted these iniquities by any instigation, either from Persons or Providences, but upon thine own election. This is a fair sence, and a mighty reproof; seeing (as was lately noted) every evil we do is by so much the worse, by how much we have had the less provocation or solicitation to do it.

עֹרְבִין Non significat illationem aut convenientiam consequentis ad antecedens, sed convenientiam aptitudinemq; antecedentis ad consequens. Coc.

But I rather take the words as we render them, to express the sad effect and fruits of his sin; as if Eliphaz had said, Because thou hast taken a pledge of thy brother for nought, &c. because thou hast sent widows away empty, and the arms of the fatherless have been broken, therefore snares are round about thee, &c. The words may have a threefold allusion.

First, To the besieging of a City; snares are round about thee, thou art now hemm'd in on every side with troubles; as Christ threatens Jerusalem, thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, &c. A trench is but a great snare to catch men, as men catch birds or vermine in snares. Or,

Hostile aliquid & obsidionale significat.

Secondly, The allusion may be to imprisonment; thou art compassed with strong walls, and shut in with gates, thou art shackled with iron snares.

Thirdly, The words may allude to hunting and fowling; in such disports Nets and Snares are set to take the intended Game. Snares are often spoken of in Scripture, to intimate or set forth the afflictions and sorrows that intrap and hold the sons of men. So that to say, Snares are round about thee, is no more but thus, troubles are round about thee; and these snares are sometimes set by the hand of man, sometimes by the immediate hand of God. Good things are often made a snare to the undoing of evil men, and evil things are often made a snare to the troubling, though not to the undoing of good men. But I shall not prosecute this Allusion, having spoken of it Chap. 18. vers. 6, 7. 8.

Where

where Job complains that God had taken him in his snare; as also in Chap. 19. 5.

And sudden fear troubleth thee.

We may understand this fear; First, For the passion of fear, or for fear within: Secondly, For the occasion of fear, which is fear without. Sudden fear troubleth thee, that is, the appearance or apprehension of some terrible thing causeth thee to fear. Fear is often put in Scripture for the thing feared, for the object of fear, or for that which causeth fear. Thus also hope is put for the thing hoped for, and vision for the thing seen, or the object of the vision.

Passio pro objecto & materia sunt in omni idiomate familiare. Sanct.

Thirdly, Some expound fear in the Text, for that special fear which riseth from guilt, or for terror of conscience. Sudden fear troubleth thee; that is, thy conscience flyes in thy face and affrights thee; thy fear flows not from any outward troubles that threaten thee, or from wants that afflict thee, but from those wickednesses which have been committed by thee; thy conscience vexeth and tormenteth thee, not only with fear, but with suddain fear; fear rusheth upon thee unexpectedly, violently, like an armed man. Sudden fear troubleth thee. Taking fear in all or any one of these interpretations.

Note, Sudden fear surprizeth securest sinners.

When they shall say peace and quietness, then sorrow and anguish come upon them as pain upon a woman in travel, and they shall not escape. The Prophet in a vision (Zech. 5. 1.) Saw a flying roll; that flying roll was the Curse: And it was called a flying roll, to note the speedy and sudden coming of those judgments that were written in it; they came not only upon the spur, but upon the wing; they came flying; flying is a swift motion, and that motion is applied to judgement, when once God giveth it a Commission to come. Hence also (Deut. 32. 41.) the sword is called a lightning sword, or a sword that hath lightning in it; If I (saith the Lord) whet my glittering (or lightning) sword. The sword of the Lord is as lightning; it hath burning and swiftness in it; divine vengeance cometh as lightning. It is called also the overflowing scourge (Isa. 28. 15.) 'Tis a scourge because the lashes of it cause much smart and pain, and 'tis an overflowing scourge, to note the suddenness of it; the scourge comes in like a mighty flood.

Again, This suddenness of fear, or of things feared, may have reference unto the security of wicked men, who though they have often heard of dangers, and judgments have been threatned upon them, yet they alwayes come suddenly upon them, because they never prepare for them. To such as are unprepared, evils are alwayes sudden, how often soever they have been warned of them. As to him that is prepared, death is never sudden, though he dye (as we Vulgarly phrase it) a sudden death. So he that is unprepared for death, dieth suddenly, though he die that which we commonly call a lingring death. Thus death and judgment shall come suddenly upon all ungodly men. It shall be (saith Christ, Matth. 24. 37.) as in the dayes of Noah, they were eating and drinking, they were marrying, and giving in marriage, till the day that Noah entred into the Ark, and knew not till the flood came, and took them all away. But did they not know of the flood, till the flood came; assuredly they did, for Noah foretold them of and preached the coming of the flood, a hundred and twenty years before it came (Gen. 6. 3.) My spirit shall not alwayes strive (I will not alwayes be contending) yet his dayes shall be an hundred and twenty years; that is, he shall have an hundred and twenty years warning; all that time the old world had warning of the flood, and Noah preached upon that Text all that time; yet the flood came upon them (saith the Text) and they knew it not; that is, they regarded not what Noah said, they took no thought neither to prevent the flood, nor to prepare for it. The Author to the Hebrews tells us, that Noah by faith being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an Ark to the saving of his house, by which he condemned the world (that is, the then world of unbelief and hardness of heart) and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith (Heb. 11. 7.) He had a holy fear in him, and a faith also; a faith that the thing should be done, and a fear of God who threatned to do that thing. Thus by faith being moved with fear, he prepared an Ark for the safety of himself and of his household. Why did not the rest also make preparation? They did not believe, nor did they fear. Christ rebuked his Disciples in the storm at Sea (Matth. 8.) with, why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith; the old world might have been rebuked with, why are ye fearless, even because ye are of little, or rather of no faith at all. Unless dangers threatned be believed, they are never feared; and unless they be both believed and feared, they are never avoided. Whensoever the Lord of such servants shall come, he cometh in a day, when they look not for him, and in an hour that they are not aware of (Matth. 24. 50.) that is, he cometh suddenly. What can come more suddenly upon any man, then that which he looked not for, nor was at all aware of. Thus he shall come to cut them asunder, and to appoint them their portion with hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Sudden fear troubleth thee;

Vers. 11. Or darkness, that thou canst not see, and abundance of waters cover thee.

Some render this verse by way of interrogation; Shalt thou not see darkness? And shall not the abundance of waters cover thee? Shalt thou only not see darkness, and pass unpunished for such monstrous wickednesses? As if he had said, thou seemest to wonder, that darkness is upon thee, thou makest strange of it, that flouds or abundance of waters cover thee. But hast thou not deserved and called forth these Judgments, by many sinful provocations?

Aut autu[m] solus tenebras non videres & tanta scelera impunè ferres?

Others render this Text, not as a Question, but as a direct Assertion; Thou thoughtest, that thou shouldest, or thou hadst a conceit, that thou shouldest never see darkness, nor any trouble coming upon thee, thy heart was lift up in hope of impunity; thou didst perswade thy self, that God had as high an opinion of thee, as thou hadst of thy self, or thou hast flattered thy self in thy sinful way, and thou thoughtest that God would have flattered thee also.

But I shall rather (as we) connect it with the former verse, carrying on the same intention;

Or darkness, that thou canst not see.] Darkness may be taken either properly, or improperly; darkness properly taken is that of the Air by the withdrawing of the Sun: This is not here intended. Darkness improperly taken is that of our state, and it is twofold. First, Internal, which is indeed ignorance, or the darkness of the mind; as if he had said, darkness veils the eye of thy understanding, that thou canst not see, either the hand of God upon thee for thy sins, or those thy sins which have caused God to lay his heavy hand upon thee. Thy understanding is darkned, that thou canst not see; this intellectual or internal darkness is twofold.

First, Natural or inbred, every man hath naturally so much darkness in him, that as he cannot see the truths that are in the Word of God, so he cannot see the intendment of the Works of God.

Secondly, Judiciary, or inflicted (Isa. 6. 9.) Go and tell this people, hear ye indeed, but understand not: and see ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes. What were these eyes and ears that were to be made heavy and shut? Surely, they are to be understood, not of Organical, but of Intellectual ears and eyes. But who was to shut these eyes? A holy Prophet. And how was he to shut them? By propheſying or speaking to them in the Name of the Lord. The proper work of the Word is to open the eyes, and enlighten the mind. But when a people have long shut their own eyes against, or only dallyed with (that transcendent mercy) the light, then God (which is the severest judgment) shuts their eyes, and darkens them with light. Of this Judiciary darkness, some interpret the present Text, as if Eliphaz had said, there is a worse plague upon thee, then all those spoken of, even blindness and confusion of mind, so that thou canst neither see what brought thee into them, nor how to find thy way out, but art as a man under water, or in the dark, amazed in these thy afflictions, not knowing what to do, or which way to turn thy self.

Stupidas es planè nisi tua scelera harum tuarum calamitatum aquæ more inundantium & obruentium causam esse vides. Mere.

Secondly, Darkness taken improperly is External, so a state of sorrow and affliction, is a state of darkness. As before snares, so here darkness, notes any troublesom condition, or the trouble of any mans condition. And when to darkneſs, this is added, Darkneſs, that thou canſt not ſee, it may import the greateſt degree of darkneſs, even darkneſs in perfection, or as the Scripture ſpeaks, thick darkneſs, yea, outer darkneſs. There is a darkneſs in which we may ſee, a darkneſs which hath ſome kind of light in it; but when darkneſs is ſo thick that we cannot ſee, that is, that we cannot ſee any thing in it (as we commonly ſay of extream darkneſs, 'tis ſo dark that we cannot ſee his hand) then 'tis perfect darkneſs. Light is not (properly) ſeen, but 'tis the medium or means by which we ſee; much leſs is darkneſs ſeen, it being properly that which intercepts and hinders ſight; yet 'tis rare to meet with darkneſs which hath not ſome mixture or tinctures of light, or with ſuch darkneſs as in which nothing at all can be ſeen: yet ſuch was this metaphorical darkneſs, with which he ſuppoſed Job was muffled up. I have more then once in other paſſages of this Book, met with and explained this term, ſhewing how and why afflictions and troubles are expreſſed by it, and therefore I ſhall not now ſtay upon it. Only here take notice, that the old Heathens had ſuch conceptions of darkneſs, and therefore being in a proſperous ſtate they had recourſe to the Sun, to Jupiter, Minerva, Mercury, their Idol-Deities, as the diſpenſers of light and comfort; but being under ſufferings and ſorrows, they made their aplications to the Earth, to Neptune, and others, whom they vainly believed, were Rulers of the night and Lords of darkneſs, as if theſe could command and chaſe away all evils from them. Scripture Language is full of ſuch deſcriptions about men in ſorrow. Darkneſs, that thou canſt not ſee;

Gentiles idē ſentire guſtabant dū, non reſdum in proſperis, quos in adverſis adibant Deos. In proſperis quidem ſolē, Jovem opulentum Minervam, Mercuriū, Apollinē, hos omnes quaſi lucis & ſecundarum rerum largitores: at in adverſis tellurem, Neptunum & alios malorum depulſores, nocte multū potentes, quaſi tenebrarum ipſi domiai eſſent. Bold.

And abundance of waters cover thée.

* The word rendred Abundance, ſignifies a company or troop of waters, which meet and march together, even as horſes prepared for battel, and ready to give the charge. So the word is tranſlated (2 King. 9. 17) a watchman from the Tower ſaid, I ſee a company. And that was Jehu with his troops, who came marching furiouſly with the revenge of God in his hand upon the houſe of Ahab. And ſo Ezek. 26. 10. By reaſon of the abundance of their horſes, their duſt ſhall cover thee; thy walls ſhall ſhake at the noyſe of the horſemen, and of the wheels, and of the chariots. Read the ſame uſe of the word (Iſa. 60. 6.) The multitude (ſome read the inundation) of Camels ſhall cover thee; They ſhall come in ſuch abundance, that they ſhall come like a floud, and ſhall be as the gathering of many waters. Troops of Horſes and Camels ruſh together as many waters; and waters ruſh and throng together, even as many Horſes. Thus, here abundance, or an Army of waters come in upon thee and cover thee. Waters in Scripture frequently ſignifie afflictions (Iſa. 43. 2.) When thou paſſeſt thorough the waters (that is, through great afflictions) I will be with thee (Pſal. 18. 16.) He drew me out of many waters; that is, out of many afflictions (Pſal. 66. 12.) We went through fire and water, but thou broughteſt us forth into a wealthy place. Fire and water, note all ſorts of afflictions, hot and cold, moiſt and dry. And ſome conceive that water in a metaphorical ſence is ſo often uſed in Scripture to ſignifie affliction; becauſe water in a proper ſence did once afflict the whole world. As the general Judgment upon the world at the laſt day ſhall be by fire, ſo the firſt general Judgment upon the world, was by water; it was a floud of waters, by which the Lord deſtroyed the whole world. Likewiſe Pharoah and his Hoſt of Egyptians (which was the ſecond moſt Eminent judgment, that ever was in the world) were overwhelmed by the waters of the red Sea. Thus Moſes ſang, (Exod. 15. 4, 5.) Pharoah's Chariot and his hoſt hath he caſt into the Sea, his choſen Captains alſo are drowned in the red Sea; The depths have covered them, they ſank into the bottom as a ſtone. And again (verſ. 10.) The Sea covered them, they ſank as Lead in the mighty waters. Water being the Element and the Inſtrument, which God hath ſo often uſed in his angry diſpenſations towards ſinful men, it may emphatically expreſs any diſpenſation of his anger. Yet if we conſider the very nature of the thing it ſelf, it carrieth ſignificancy enough to be the Emblem of ſaddeſt and ſoareſt affliction.

* שמע Quamvis multitudinem aut inundationem ſignificat cum celeritate quadā & ſtrepitu.

Firſt, There is in water a ſwallowing power; as water is eaſily ſwallowed, ſo it ſwallows all up. Man cannot ſubſiſt in it when it is moſt peaceable, and he can hardly eſcape out of it when 'tis enraged. Sorrow and affliction are ſwallowers alſo, unleſs mercy appear and moderate them, they drown and overthrow all. The Apoſtle uſeth that expreſſion when he adviſeth the Corinthians (2 Epiſt. 2. 7.) To forgive and comfort the inceſtuous perſon, whom, according to his advice, they had formerly Excommunicated or caſt out from fellowſhip in the Church; Leſt (ſaith he) ſuch a one ſhould be ſwallowed up with over-much ſorrow. Sorrow of any ſort, even ſorrow for ſin may poſſibly have an exceſs, or an over-muchneſs in it; and when ever it hath ſo (beyond the end for which it ſerves, for ſorrow is not of any worth in it ſelf, but as it ſerves to a ſpiritual end; when (I ſay) ſorrow hath ſuch an exceſs, then) not only the comforts, but the gifts and uſefulneſs of the perſon ſorrowing, are in danger to be ſwallowed up by it.

Secondly, Water doth not only ſwallow up, but enter in; while it covereth the body, it fills the bowels. Thus affliction like water, fills within as well as covers without. David complains that his afflictions did ſo (Pſal. 69. 1.) Save me O God, for the waters are come in unto my ſoul. Not only have theſe waters ſweld over me, but they are ſoakt into me. Inward or ſoul-afflictions, as well as outward, and bodily afflictions, are ſet forth by waters (Pſal. 109. 18.) As he cloathed himſelf with curſing, like as with his garment, ſo let it come into his bowels (or within him) like water, and like oyl into his bones. Liquids penetrate, ſo do afflictions.

Thirdly, As the water is not mans proper Element, he lives and breaths in the Air, not in the Water; ſo affliction is not our proper Element, though it be due to our ſin, yet it is not proper to our nature. Man was not made to live in affliction, as the fiſh was made to live in the water; and therefore as it is ſaid, The Lord doth not willingly afflict nor grieve the children of men (Lam. 3. 33.) 'Tis (as it were) beſides the nature of God, when he afflicts the children of men. So it is ſaid (Heb. 12. 11.) No chaſtning for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, but grievous. Man is out of his Element when he is under chaſtnings. He was made at firſt to live in the light of Gods countenance, in the ſmiles and embraces of divine love. As man is out of his way when he ſins, ſo he is off from his end when he ſuffers; he was not deſigned for the overwhelming choaking waters of ſorrow and judgment, but for the ſweet refreſhing air of joy and mercy. It often proves a mercy in the event to be covered with theſe waters; to be covered with them, that we may be waſhed by them is a mercy; but only to be covered with them, eſpecially (as Eliphaz here ſaith of Job was) to be deeply covered with them is a deep and ſoar affliction. Abundance of waters cover thee.

> Hence note, That as God hath treaſures of mercy, and abounds in goodneſs, ſo he hath treaſures of affliction, and abundance of wrath.

As God hath abundance of waters ſealed up in the clouds, as in a treaſury, and he can unlock his treaſury and let them out whenſoever he pleaſeth, either to refreſh or overflow the Earth; ſo he hath abundance of afflictions, and he can let them forth, as out of a treaſury, when he pleaſeth. And as we read (Ezek. 47.) that the waters of the Sanctuary, thoſe holy waters were of ſeveral degrees; firſt, to the ankles; ſecondly, to the knees, then to the loins; and then a river that could not be paſſed over, abundance of waters. Thus alſo the bitter waters, the waters of affliction are of ſeveral degrees: ſome waters of afflictions are but ancle deep, they only make us a little wet ſhod, there are other waters up to the knees; and others to the loins, and others we may rightly call abundance of waters, a Sea of waters; I am come into deep waters (ſaith David, Pſal. 69. 2.) or into the depth of waters, where the flouds overflow me. And having ſaid (Pſal. 42. 6.) O my God, my ſoul is caſt down within me. He adds in the next words (verſ. 7.) Deep calleth unto deep at the noiſe of thy water-ſpouts: All thy waves and thy billowes are gone over me. Where, by deep to deep, by water-ſpouts, by waves and billows, he elegantly ſets forth his diſtreſs, in alluſion to a Ship at Sea in a vehement ſtorm and ſtreſs of weather; when when the same wave upon whose back the vessel rides out of one deep, plungeth it down into another; thus the afflicted are tossed and overwhelmed in a Sea of trouble, till they are at their wits end, if not at their faiths end.

Take two or three Deductions from all these words laid together. We see, by how many metaphors, the sorrows of this life are set forth, even by snares, and fears, and darkness, and waters.

Hence note, First, That as God hath abundance of afflictions in his power, so he hath variety of wayes and means to afflict the sons of men; either for the punishment of their sin, or for the trial of their graces.

If one will not do it, another shall; if the snare will not, fear shall; if fear will not, darkness shall; and if darkness will not, the waters shall; and if waters of one hight will not do it, he will have waters deep enough to do it, abundance of waters shall do it; he hath variety of wayes to deal both with sinners and with Saints.

Secondly, Consider the inference which Eliphaz makes, Therefore snares, &c. are upon thee; that is, because thou hast done wickedly in not relieving and in oppressing the poor, therefore snares have entangled thee. This (though false in Job's particular case, yet) is a truth in general; and it teacheth us, That, there is an unavoidable sequel between sin and sorrow. Look upon sin in its own nature, and so the sequel is unavoidable, sin is big with sorrow; as affliction burdens the sinner, so sin is burdened with affliction. Sin hath all sorts of affliction in its bowels; and we may say of all the evils that afflict us, they are our sins. Sin is formally the transgression of the Law, and sin is virtually the punishment of transgressors. Many (I grant) are afflicted for trial of their graces (as hath been shewed before) but grace had never been thus tryed if man had not sinned. Sin is the remote cause of all afflictions, and it is the next or immediate procuring cause of most afflictions. Would any man avoid the snare, let him fear to sin; would he avoid fear, let him fear to do evil; would he keep out of darkness, and not be covered with abundance of waters, let him take heed he drink not iniquity like water, let him have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. God tells the sinner plainly what portion he is to expect, Say, wo to the wicked, it shall be ill with him; for the reward of his hands shall be given him (Isa. 33. 11.) We may as well hope to avoid burning when we run into the fire, or dirtying when we run into the mire, as to escape smarting when we run into sin.

Yet more distinctly, we may consider all those evils comprehended under those words in the Text, Snares, darkness, &c. either in reference to wicked men, or to the Saints. Snares and darkness upon the wicked, are the issues of divine wrath. While these sad dispensations are sent out and meet with Saints, they are the issues of divine love. For though a godly man may provoke God to anger, and find by many evidences that God (as to his actings) is angry with him, yet as to his person he alwayes loves him. And therefore (as a wicked mans Table is made his snare, so) he is assured that his snare shall be made to him a Table, that his darkness shall work light, his evils good to him. He is also assured that the Lord will deliver him out of these snares, and cut the cords of the wicked (Psal. 129. 4.) That he will deliver him from fear, from darkness, and bring him up out of the abundance of waters which cover him, as David speaks (Psal. 36. 2.) For this (that is, because thou art so gracious) shall every one that is godly pray unto thee, in a time when thou mayst be found (the Hebrew is, in a finding time) which according to our translation, notes the season when God may be found, as the Prophet speaks (Isa. 55. 6.) Yet it may be well expounded for the time when trouble finds, that is, takes hold of the godly man: And so the word is used (Psal. 116. 3.) The pains of Hell gat hold of me (we put in the Margin) found me. In which sence the word is used also (Psal. 21. 8.) Thine hand shall find out (that is, take hold of, and apprehend) all thine enemies, thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee. Now in this finding time, either when God may be found, or when trouble finds a godly man, he (setting himself to pray) hath this promise, surely in the flouds of great waters, they (that is, the flouds of great waters, by which are meant, great dangers) shall not come nigh him (that is, the godly man) to hurt or drown him. Sometimes prayer keeps the flood off, and alwayes prayer delivers the godly man out of the flood. Wicked men have no mind to come nigh God with their hearts (and so some interpret the latter part of this verse in the Psalm) nor will God admit them nigh unto himself, in the flouds of great waters. And the flouds of great waters shall not (which is the scope of our reading) come nigh the godly man for his hurt, when he draws nigh to God in prayer with his heart.

Thus we have seen the sins of Job drawn out into a charge, and the Judgment of Eliphaz upon it, what the event, the sequel, or issue of those sins was, snares, and fears, and waters, and darkness.

There is yet one thing further, that I shall here take notice of from the constant course of Job's friends in dealing with him. We see that still they charge him with sin, and still insist upon it, that all his afflictions and miseries were the fruits of his sin. Job (as hath appeared in opening several passages of this Book) hath as often disproved their inference, and denied that his sufferings were caused by his sin, at least not by any such way of sinning, as they charged him with. Labouring also much to enform them, that God hath many other reasons why he afflicts his people; and that God might take liberty to afflict him, though he were no such kind of creature as they rendred him; yet notwithstanding all he could say, either to purge himself or better conform them, they persevered in the same opinion, both concerning his person, and the cause of his afflictions.

Whence note, It is hard to convince those who are under a mistake, whether about persons or doctrines.

Error is as binding upon the conscience, and as strongly embraced by the affections, as truth is; for it binds and is embraced, not in the name of an error, but in the name of truth. And men are therefore wedded to, and in love with their own conceptions, because (how monstrous and hard favoured soever in themselves, yet) nothing is more beautiful in their eye then they, No man (saith the Apostle) ever hated his own flesh, but loved and cherished it. The flesh of our minds (such are all false principles and positions) is more loved and cherished by us, then the flesh of our bodies. Besides, when men have once taken up an opinion, they think it a dishonour to lay it down again. 'Tis rare to find a man that will yield up his Judgment, though it be a misguided one, or acknowledge that he is in an error, though he begins to take some knowledge, or at least some suspition of it. A light intimation or only the appearance of a probability will amount to a proof against either persons or doctrines which we like not; but the clearest demonstrations will hardly raise a jealousie against what we like. Let Job say what he will in his own case, he cannot be believed by his friends; and his friends will say again what once they had said, though it had been more then once before fully answered. The present age hath given us sad experiences of the thing. For, as many have been unstable, and tossed to and fro with every wind of (false) doctrine, so others have been stubborn and unmoved from their errors, though the strongest winds of truth have breathed, yea blown hard upon them. And those prejudices which have (with so much severity) been taken up by brethren against brethren; how do they remain, in many minds, as mountains unmoved to this very day?

I know not which is worse, unsetledness in the truth, and an easiness to let it go, or tenaciousness in an error, and a hardness to let it go. Nor do I well know which is worse, a readiness to take up hard thoughts of our brethren, or an unreadiness to lay them down. Were the laws of love to man, and zeal for God observed, these extreams would alwayes be avoided. Pure zeal for God would fix us in the truth, and make us more easie to be brought off from our most applauded errors. True love to man, would cause us to examin every ground of suspicion against a brother twice, before we do indeed suspect him once; and it would cause us to rejoyce in any appearance of his innocence, whereby we might discharge our own spirits of all suspicions concerning him. Our love (as the Apostle prayes, Phil. 1. 9.) ought to abound in knowledge and in all judgment; that is, we ought to love judiciously as well as affectionately or sincerely. So that, true love will not over-look the faults of another, nor will it approve against light. Yet true love is ready to entertain any light offered, that grounds of suspition may be removed, and we restored to a right understanding of our brethren.

VERS. 12, 13, 14.

Is not God in the height of Heaven? and beholds the height of the Stars how high they are.
And thou sayest, How doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud?
Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he seeth not, and he walketh in the circuit of Heaven.

IN the former part of this Chapter, we have found Eliphaz charging Job with those hainous crimes, injustice and uncharitableness towards man; in these three verses he proceeds to charge him with a higher crime, even irreligiousness and impiety against God; as if (at least) Job doubted, if not denied the providence of God about what is done here below, or affirmed that he neither rewarded the righteous according to their good, nor punisheth the wicked according to the evil which they have done. That's the scope of this context, in which we may observe,

First, A twofold truth held forth.

Secondly, A wrong suggestion of two errors, as arising from those truths.

Thirdly, An indeavour to prove and make good what he had wrongfully suggested.

These two truths are contained in vers. 22. first, God is in the height of Heaven; secondly, The Stars are very high; these are clear truths; from these Eliphaz makes a wrong suggestion, as if Job upon those grounds of Gods being in the height of Heaven, &c. had pleased himself with this conceit, that God could not (at such a distance) take notice of what passeth among, or is acted by men in this inferior world.

(Vers. 13.) And thou sayest, how doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud? As if he had said, God being in the height of Heaven, cannot know, much less judge concerning the state of things here below; why what should hinder? He tells us what in vers. 14. where (which was the third thing) he endeavours to prove his suggestion; Thick clouds are a covering to him that he seeth not, that's the first proof: and then we have a second, in the latter end of that verse, God hath other things to do then to mind what is done here; he hath higher business and imployments then to look upon us, who are creeping upon mole-hills, and engaged about a heap of earth; for, he walketh in the circuit of Heaven; that is, there lieth his great work, he hath enough in a nobler Sphear to imploy himself in; and therefore surely, thou thinkest, that God takes no care at all, or not such special care about the affairs and wayes of men. This is the sum and scope of these three Verses. They are a new charge of impiety upon Job, as shutting up or restraining the providence of God to the things of Heaven alone; and we seek how Eliphaz frames arguments and proofs of the point for Job, which (as will appear afterwards) never came into his heart.

Now though Eliphaz misapplied all this to Job, yet herein he fully characters, and clearly paints out the spirit of carnal men; for such secure themselves in their evil wayes upon this presumption, that God takes no notice of them, or that he hath something else to do then to trouble himself with what they are doing.

Vers. 12. Is not God in the height of Heaven?

There are divers readings of these words; first thus, Is not God higher then the Heavens? A second thus, Doth not God possess the high Heaven? The Original may strictly be rendred, God the height of Heaven; that is, God is above all heavens: we render well, God is in the height or sublimity of Heaven.

This Question, Is not God in the height of Heaven? is taken three wayes.

First, Some read it as an Exhortation given by Eliphaz to Job, to draw off the motion of his thoughts, and most of all the setled bent of his heart from those inferior things, his losses and troubles, his sorrows, pains, and sicknesses; he would divert his mind from these worldly sorrows, and raise it up to heavenly enjoyments, Is not God in Heaven? As if he had said, Why standest thou poring upon things below? Why dwellest thou so much upon thy dunghill, and thy present poverty; God is in the height of Heaven, consider him there. This is both a safe and a very spiritual way to ease our minds of all the troubles and sorrows which we meet with in this world; could we but ascend in Spirit to the height where God is, could we by an eye of faith look to him, live upon him, and in him, all burdens would be light, and pressures easie to us.

Deus sublimitas cœlorum. Hebr.

Secondly, This question may be taken as a plain assertion or affirmation, and it is of the same value and signification with this; God is in the height of Heaven, there he is, and from thence he beholds all the children of men, their wayes and works.

Thirdly, Is not God in the height of Heaven? May be understood not as the question of Eliphaz, and so his affirmation; but as the question of Job, and so his supposition. As if Eliphaz apprehended Job thus speaking in his heart, Is not God (sayest thou) in the height of Heaven? Or, doest not thou, O Job, say thus, God is in the height of Heaven? I grant that he is there; but I deny that he is there, in thy sence, or according to thy opinion. He is not concluded, or shut up there, he is not so in the height of Heaven, but that he mindeth what is done upon the Earth, yea in the very depths of Hell. As if he had said, Thy thoughts and conceptions of God are too strait and narrow; thou speakest much below God, while thou sayest he is in the height of Heaven. While thou confinest God to Heaven, thou makest him like thy self on Earth.

Annon Deus est (inquis) in altitudine cœli? Jun.

From these words in the two former Expositions,

Observe, That the height of Heaven, or Heaven above, is the place of Gods special residence.

Heaven is my throne (saith the Lord, Isa. 66. 1.) The throne is the seat of a Prince, there he declares his power, and his state; his glory shines from his throne. A Prince looks like a common man when he is abroad in the world, but when upon his throne, then the rayes of Majesty break forth, and he appears as he is. Thus the holy Prophet begs a gracious look of the Lord from Heaven (Isa. 63. 15.) Look down from Heaven, the habitation of thy holiness, and of thy glory. Heaven is called the habitation of Gods holiness, and of his glory; because his holiness and glory shine forth more in Heaven, then upon the Earth; little of the holiness of God is discovered to us here, though so much of it breaks forth here as causeth the heart of carnal men to quarrel with it continually. Nor are any able with these eyes, or rather with these hearts to bear the glory of God, or endure his holiness. When but some extraordinary glimpses of these appeared to Isaiah, he cryed out, Wo is me, I am undone (or cut off) because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts (Isa. 6. 5.) As God is of purer eyes then to behold iniquity, so man is of impurer eyes then to behold the glory and holiness of God in clear manifestations of it, and therefore Heaven is the seat, the habitation of his holiness, and of his glory. Hence we may take two further inferences.

First, That our hearts and our eyes should be lifted upwards. The whole current of Scripture speaks of God as above in Heaven: And that's the reason why the Apostle (Col. 3. 1.) exhorts, Set your affections on things above, and not on things here below; and as on things above, so most of all upon God who is above. The old word was, Lift up your hearts; and David saith in prayer (Psal. 25. 1.) I lift up my soul to thee. And again (Psal. 123. 1.) Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the Heavens. Yea our Lord Jesus Christ himself when he prayed (Joh. 17. 1.) Lift up his eyes to Heaven, and said, Father the hour is come, glorifie thy Son, &c. The eye lift up to Heaven is a sign of the heart lift up to Heaven; and that corporeal visible action, serves to fix our most spiritual affections upon the invisible God. 'Tis indeed an easie thing to lift the eyes up to Heaven, but it is very hard yea impossible, without a divine assistance, to lift up the heart to Heaven; the heart of a prophane worldling muds

Sursum corda.

so

so much in the Earth, that he seldom lifts up so much as his eyes to Heaven; and how much or how often soever a hypocrite lifts up his eyes to Heaven, yet still his heart muds in the earth. The eye looks upward naturally, but if ever the heart look upward, 'tis a work of Grace.

Secondly, Then serve the Lord with reverence and holy fear, in all your addresses to him and appearings before him. We reverence those who are high on earth, and shall we not reverence him who is higher then the highest, him who is in the height of Heaven? While Christ bids us say, Our Father which art in Heaven; he teaches us, as to pray with confidence, because God is our Father; so to pray with reverence, because he is a Father in Heaven (Matth. 6. 9.) The Preacher (Eccles. 5. 2.) makes this an argument why we should be taken up in high thoughts of God, why we should speak in a reverential manner both of him, and to him? Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thy heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. He puts (as it were) a double bridle upon man in his drawing near to God; first, upon his mouth, Let not thy mouth be rash; and secondly, upon his heart (for the heart will talk at random as well as the mouth, yea the heart will talk more at random then the mouth can; and there is praying with the heart alone, as well as with the heart and mouth together; therefore saith he) Let not thy heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; Why? for God is in Heaven, and thou art upon the earth, therefore let thy words be few. Here are indeed two arguments to enforce this composure of spirit; first, the highness and greatness of God; secondly, the lowness and vileness of man. Consider God is above, and thou art below, not only in regard of place, but of state and dignity, of power and majesty. The being of God in Heaven, notes not only a power of soveraignty to command us, but a power or ability both to punish and to provide for us; to punish our rashness, and to supply all our wants wherewith we acquaint him, and humbly mention before him; therefore Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thy heart be hasty, &c. The same Solomon in the same book, allegorically describing the declined decrepid condition of man, saith of the old man, that he is afraid of that which is high (Eccles. 12. 5.) Young men will be clambering and ascending, but old men are afraid of that which is high; they dare not go up a high steep place, least their strength or breath should fail, or least their brain should turn, and they through giddiness tumble down. Old men love to keep upon level or even ground, and are afraid of that which is high. Surely both young and old, have reason to be afraid of him that is high, to have reverential thoughts of God, who is in the height of Heaven, higher then the Heavens. The distance of man from God, as God is in Heaven and man on earth, is great; and the dissimilitude of man to God, as God is holy and man corrupt, is far greater; either of these Considerations single is enough, but both these laid together, is abundantly enough to keep the heart in an humble self-abasing frame before the Lord.

Secondly, Taking these words, Is not God in the height of Heaven? As the supposed speech of Job: thou sayest God is in the height of Heaven, that is, confined to Heaven, so, that he looks no further; but thou art deceived, God is not lockt up in Heaven, he looks to all things here on Earth. As the Earth is the Lords, and the fulness of it, as to right and propriety; so the Earth is the Lords, with all the fulness of it, as to care and providence. Though there be a distinctness in the manner or manifestation of his being in Heaven and on Earth; yet he is as truly and as much on Earth as he is in Heaven.

Hence note, God is omnipresent, or every where.

Though we are to adore and worship God as in Heaven, yet we must not shut up God in Heaven; as he is in Heaven, so he is upon the Earth also; he is with us, yea he is in us; he is in all places, not circumscribed by any, nor limited to any place. God is present in all places, and fills all places with his presence, only he doth not declare his presence alike in all places. The Lord appears where and as he pleaseth, but he cannot be otherwise or otherwhere then he is, and that is every where. While the Psalmist queried, Whether shall I go from thy presence? He was so far from imagining that any such place could be found, that in the very next words he concludeth God to be every where, by an enumeration of all places (Psal. 139. 7, 8.) If I ascend up to Heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in Hell, behold thou art there (Hell standeth in utmost opposition to Heaven; as Heaven in Scripture-language is the highest, so Hell is the lowest place; now saith David, If I make my bed in Hell, thou art there) If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the utmost parts of the Sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me; that is, there I shall find thee efficaciously present with me. The Lord having said (Isa. 66. 1.) Heaven is my throne, presently adds, and the earth is my footstool; so the earth is called, because its scituation in nature is below the Heavens; his throne is there, his footstool is here. (Jer. 23. 23, 24.) Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not afar off? Can any hide himself in secret places, that I shall not see him, saith the Lord? Do not I fill Heaven and Earth, saith the Lord? All these expostulating questions, are resolved into this one position. God is every where; and though some read the first, not as a Question, but as an Assertion, thus, I am a God at hand, and not a God afar off, yet the sence is the same; God therein affirming, that he is ever near us, and never afar off from us, whersoever we are. Though God be in those places which are furthest off from us, as well as in those that are near at hand; yet God himself is never afar off from us, but alwayes at hand. When Solomon had set up the Temple (1 King. 8. 27.) he was sure of the presence of God in it; and therefore did not speak doubtingly, but admiringly, when he asked, But, will God indeed dwell on Earth? (that is, will God manifest himself gloriously on the Earth?) Behold the Heaven, and Heaven of Heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded? Solomon knew that Heaven could not contain, that is, limit God, much less could the house which he had builded. Yet the Lord made the Temple another Heaven to himself, it was as his second Heaven; there the Lord had a kind of glorious residence, beyond what he had in any other part of the world. Now the Assemblies and Congregations of the Saints are in a special manner the dwelling place of God, and his second Heaven; he dwells so much in the Churches that he seems not to dwell at all in any part of the world beside (2 Cor. 6. 16, 17.) I will dwell in them, and walk in them. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye seperate saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. God who is in all the world, dwells only in and with his people. They who separate from whatsoever is unholy, have him nearest them who is altogether Holy. To conclude this point, we may make use of that distinction of the Schools to clear the difference, how a corporal substance, and a spiritual, as also how a spiritual created and uncreated substance, may be said to be in a place. All bodies are in place circumscriptively, spiritual substances created, Angels and souls of men are in place definitively: We cannot draw a line about an Angel, as about the body of a man; yet the Angel is so in this place, as not in another: but God who is a spirit and uncreated, is in place repletively, that is, he filleth all places where he is, but is not limited by any place where he is: He is (as some have not unfitly spoken) a Sphear whose center is every where, and whose circumference is no where. This is a mystery which indeed we are not able to comprehend by reason, but we must take it down by faith. The Lord is in the height of Heaven, yet so there, as he is not shut up there.

But if any shall yet query, How is the Lord every where? How is he in Heaven, and in Earth? Is it so as the Sun may be said to be every where? The Sun is seated in Heaven, yet is by way of communication on Earth; the Sun by light, heat, or influence, is all the world over, in some degree or other, yet the Sun moves only in his Orb. Or is God so every where, as a Soveraign Prince, who though in person he reside here or there, yet in power and authority he is every where within his own Dominion? I answer, No, these allusions are far below this truth. God is every where, not only as the Sun by light, heat, and influence; not only as a Prince, by his power and authority, but (as we speak) in person, and in his Essence. Further, the Lords presence in all places is not as that of the Air, which is more every where then the Sun; the Air is every where filling all places, and so encompassing all bodies, as if it made them all but one great body; yet that part of the Air that is in one place is not in another, for the Air is divisible. But we must not take up any such apprehensions of God, for as he is every where, so he is wholly every where; God cannot be divided or parted as the Air is and may. The divine Essence (as one of the Ancients hath expressed this astonishing mystery) is whole within all things, and whole without all things; no where included, no where excluded; containing all things, contained of nothing; yet not at all mingled with the nature of these things, nor defiled with their pollutions. That which the Philosopher speaks of the soul of man (That it is all in the whole body, and whole in every part of the body) comes nearest this mystery. Some quarrel at that expression about the soul, yet there is a truth in it. The soul is indivisible, much more God; wheresoever he is, he is all and altogether; he is every where, and every where all. So he is in the height of heaven, and so he is on earth below.

Divina essentia est tota intra omnia & tota, extra omnia nusquam inclusa aut exclusa, omnia continens, à nullo contenta, nec propterea immistu rebus aut rerum sordibus inquinata. Augustin. Epist. 55. ad Dard.

But if God be every where, why doth Christ teach us to pray, Our Father which art in Heaven (Matth. 6. 13.) And when the Heathen made that scoffing demand, Where is now their God? Why did David answer, Our God is in Heaven (Psal. 115. 2, 3.) To these and all other Texts of like import, we may answer, Heaven is not there spoken of as bounding the presence of God, but as guiding the faith and hope of man. In the morning (saith David, Psal. 5. 3.) will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up. When the eye hath no sight of any help on earth, then faith may have the clearest visions of it in Heaven. And while God appears so little in any gracious dispensation for his people on earth, that the enemy begins to scoff, Where is now your God? Then his people have recourse by faith to Heaven, where the Lord not only, is, but is glorious in his appearings. From whence as he seeth how it is with us, so he seems to have a kind of advantage to relieve us.

But as some Scriptures seem to confine God to Heaven, so other Scriptures seem to deny that he is every where on earth. Thus Moses said to the people of Israel (Numb. 14. 42.) Go not up for the Lord is not among you. And again (Deut. 7. 21.) Thou shalt not be affrighted at them, for the Lord thy God is among you; with some the Lord is, with others the Lord is not; and he is with the same persons at one time, not at another; how then can it be said, that the Lord is every where present? I answer, when Moses saith (and many other Texts which speak in the same form) that God was sometimes with his people, and sometimes not; we are not to understand it at all of a local presence, or absence, but of a favourable presence or absence. Thus God is with some persons, and not with others; thus he is sometime present with, sometime absent from the same person. It was this favourable presence for which Moses did so earnestly entreat the Lord, (Exod. 33. 15.) If thy presence go not with us, carry us no further; that is, unless thou please to be with us, to prosper our way, and protect us in it, let us stay where we are. This presence of God is a high favour indeed, and God is thus present but in few places (comparatively) of the whole earth.

Once more, those Scriptures may seem to imply that God is so in Heaven, that he is not also upon the Earth; which speak of his coming down from Heaven to Earth, (Gen. 11. 5.) And the Lord came down to see the City and the Tower which the Children of men builded. Whence some may infer, if he came down to see the City, then he was not there before, and if so, then he is not universally present in all places. Again (Gen. 18. 20, 21.) And the Lord said, because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great; and because their sin is very grievous, I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it which is come unto me, and if not, I will know. This passage yields the same difficulty and objection; to both which we may add that of David (Psal. 14. 2.) The Lord looked down from Heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand; he doth not say, God was among the children of men here below, but being in Heaven (as a man standing upon a high place or Tower) he looked down.

I answer, These Texts speak of God after the manner of men, or they speak thus, not to teach us, how God knows what is done on earth; but to confirm, and assure us that the Lord doth clearly and certainly know whatsoever is done by, or among men on Earth; even as clearly and certainly as a man knoweth any thing by his view upon the place. God knoweth all things presently, without searching, though never so secret; and all things certainly without enquiring, though never so doubtful. God neither ascends, nor descends; he doth not come down by any motion, but he comes down to our apprehension; he shews us after our way, that he knoweth, because we cannot conceive his way of knowledge. If I would assure another man that I certainly know such a thing, I tell him, I came from the place, I saw it, or I beheld it with my own eyes; now that's all that is intended, when 'tis said, the Lord came down from Heaven to behold, and see the Tower of Babell, and the condition of Sodom; or it is, to admonish all Magistrates and Judges, that they pass no sentence of punishment, either upon places or persons, upon bare here-say and reports; but that they first enform themselves fully of the matter of fact, as Job professed his course was in all legal proceedings (Chap. 29. 16.) The cause which I knew not I searched out. Thus we see notwithstanding all these appearances from Texts of Scripture to the contrary, that this Scripture truth standeth firm. The Lord is so in the height of Heaven, that he is every where also here upon the Earth.

From which take these two Deductions,

First, Seeing the Lord is every where present, we should be every where holy.

For wheresoever he is, he is the holy Lord. That was the charge which God gave to Abraham, Walk before me, and be upright; as if he had said, Wheresoever thou walkest, walk as having me present with thee, and be upright in my presence. I (saith David, a type of Christ, Psal. 16. 8.) have set the Lord alwayes before me; he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved. He that by faith eyes God continually as his protector in trouble, shall not be moved with any evil that he suffers; and he that eyes God by faith as his pattern in holiness, shall not be moved from doing that which is good. This thought, The Lord is at our right hand, keeps us from turning either to the right hand or to the left. It is said of Enoch, that he walked with God (Gen. 5. 22.) and though the History of his life be very short, yet 'tis said of him a second time (vers. 24.) that he walked with God. He walked so much with God, that he walked as God, he did not walk (which kind of walking the Apostle reproves, 1 Cor. 3. 3.) as men. He walked so little like the world, that his stay was little in the world. He was not (saith the Text) for God took him; he took him from the world to himself, or (as the Author to the Hebrews reports it) he was translated that he should not see death; for he received this testimony that he pleased God.

Secondly, It followeth, if God be every where present,

That the godly are never out of the reach of God to help them, and that the wicked are never out of the reach of God to punish them.

(Isa. 43. 2.) When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee, and when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt. The presence of God is the protection of Saints in the evil which they suffer; and they who do evil cannot be hid from his punishing presence. There is no running from God. It is said of Jonah (Chap. 1. 3.) That he fled from the presence of God. Whether fled he? The Text saith he fled to Sea, but did not God find him there? He fled from the commanding presence of God, but he fell into the angry presence of God. We have a large description in Amos 9. how carnal men hope to shift out of the hand of God. I (saith the Lord) will slay the last of them with the sword, though they dig to Hell, thence shall my hand take them. We read what wise counsel the servants of the King of Benhadad gave him after he had been defeated by the King of Israel (1 King. 20. 23, 24, 25.) Their Gods are Gods of the hills, therefore they were stronger then we, but let us fight against them in the plains, and surely we shall be stronger then they. Make thee an Army like the Army that thou hast lost, horse for horse, and chariot chariot for chariot, and we will fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger then they, and he hearkened to their voice and did so. Why did they desire to fight them upon the plain? They thought God was a God of the hills and not of the valleys; but (ver. 28.) A man of God said to the King of Israel, thus saith the Lord, because the Assyrians have said, the Lord is God of the hills, and not of the valleys, therefore will I deliver this great multitude into thy hand. As if he had said, however you deserve not in the least that I should own you, or assist your cause; yet that I may confute the blasphemous and derogatory principles of these Syrians, I will give you a second victory against them, even in the valleys, where they suppose they have you at an advantage, and shall deal with you beyond the extent of my power and Territory. Though God had no cause to respect the honour of the Israelites, yet he could not forget the honour of his own Name, which was obscured by those superstitious Syrians. The most received Doctrine and Divinity of the Heathens confined their gods to certain places, some to this City, and some to that; some to the hills, and some to the plains; some to the Sea, others to the Land. 'Tis said that the same night in which Alexander the Great (of whose Conquests Daniel Prophesied) was born, that the Temple of Diana at Ephesus was burnt to the ground. And the Heathens gave this as the reason of it, because Diana was absent from her Temple, being gone to assist at the birth of Alexander; implying that their Goddess was so in one place, as she could not attend what was done elsewhere. Such were the gross conceits which they had of their gods, and they imagined the God of Israel to be such a one, as their own. The veriest Idolater in the world presumes his god as good as any is. But Jehova the living God hath taught us to say, Who is a God like unto thee? And our experiences have sealed to it, that there is none like the God of Jesurun, who rideth on the Heavens for thy help, and in his excellency on the Skyes (Deut. 33. 26.) And we have learned to comfort our selves in all places and streights, in this assurance, that he is the God of the hills, as well as of the valleys; of the Sea, as well as the dry Land; and that he is as truly present in the lowest depths, as in the highest Heavens. Is not God in the height of Heaven?

And behold the height of the Stars how high they are.

The Hebrew is, Behold the head of the Stars; The head of a man is the highest part of him, and the head of any thing is the top of it. Behold the head or height of the Stars how high they are; Stars are high, but God is higher; many creatures are high, but God is high above all creatures. The creature is strong, but God is stronger; the creature is wise, but God is wiser; the creature is glorious, but God is infinitely more glorious: The glory, wisdom, strength, and highest height of the creature, is but a glimpse of what God is. The Stars are high. I shall not enter into an Astronomical discourse about the Stars, or the height of Stars. I shall not meddle with a Jacob's staff, to take the elevation of the Stars, no need of such discourse here; all that is intended by Eliphaz, is a proof that God is infinitely exalted in his highness and majesty above the Stars.

Behold the height of the Stars how high they are.] This word Behold in Scripture is often applied to things of wonder; to say, behold, is not a calling for the bare act of the eye to see the height of the Stars; but it calls for a work of the mind, duly to consider of, and to wonder at their height. Some creatures, especially the heavenly, are not only useful, but wonderful; and 'tis as hard to understand them, as it is comfortable to enjoy them. The Hebrew word for Heaven cometh from a root which signifies to amaze and astonish; and indeed there are natural wonders and mysteries enough in the Heavens to astonish any considering man. And the true reason why we are no more astonisht at them, or do no more admire them, is because we do so little consider them. We often see or look upon the Stars, but we seldom behold them: And therefore David saith (Psal. 8. 3.) When I consider the Heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon and the Stars which thou hast ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? As the beholding and consideration of our own works will make us ashamed, because they appear so bad; so the consideration and beholding of the works of God will make us astonisht, because they appear both so good and great. Behold (saith the Apostle, 1 John 3. 1.) what manner of love the father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the Sons of God; even this transcendent Love of God in our Adoption is passed by as a small matter, by those who will not take the pains (or rather the pleasure) and leisure to behold and consider the manner of it. No mervail if the power of God in making the highest Stars, be passed by as a low thing, by those who do not behold, that is, diligently consider them Behold the height of the Stars how high they are.

We are called to consider this,

Hence note, That it is our duty to contemplate the excellency of the creature.

God hath not only given us the book of the Scripture, but of the Creature, and we must attend to the reading of this as well as of that, even to the reading of every leaf and line of it. There are four great leaves of this book. First, The Heavens; Secondly, The Earth; Thirdly, The Sea; Fourthly, The Air. These are the four great leaves of this book of the creature; in every one of which we should labour to be expert Scholars, and spell out the name and mind of God in them. For though (as I said before) beholding notes wondering, yet we must not behold them to wonder at them, like children; but we must behold them to learn somewhat from them, or to be instructed by them as men.

Behold the Stars.] First, In their number; as God said to Abraham (Gen. 15. 5.) Look now towards Heaven, and tell the Stars if thou be able to number them; and he said unto him, so shall thy seed be. 'Tis matter of wonder that God should make so many of those eminent Lights, that he should set up so many flaming torches in Heaven for man to see his way, and work by on Earth. That God who hath spread this Canopy over our heads, should also embroyder it with such a multitude of golden spangles, which render it as much our delight, as it is our duty, to behold them.

Secondly, Behold the Stars in their order, they move by rule, they keep their ranks, none of them go out of their place, or forsake their station. They who are skilled in the motion of the Stars, know where to have them a hundred years hence. In Judges 5. it is said, The Stars in their courses fought against Sissera.

Thirdly, We should consider the Stars in their magnitude, what vast bodies they are; some of them are bigger then the whole body of the Earth (as Philosophy teacheth us) though, to apearance not bigger then the blase of a candle, nor broader then the palm of a hand.

Fourthly, Consider also the difference of the Stars in their greatness, and magnitude; they are all great, but not all of a greatness, not all of one size. Astronomers divide the Stars into six magnitudes. We should likewise observe, and wonder at their light, which is their glory: the light of the Stars is the glory of the Stars, and so the more light any Star hath, the more glory it hath. Thus one Star differeth from another Star in glory (1 Cor. 15. 41.) But I shall not stay upon these things, having insisted somewhat largely upon them at Chap. 9. vers. 9. Whether I refer the Reader. Only note here, that as the Stars of Heaven are of several degrees; God hath not levell'd them, either in light or magnitude: so he hath diversly distributed the light of parts, and gifts; of understanding and knowledge; of estate and power, to and among the children of men here on Earth. 'Tis good for all, that all are not alike; the universe could not be either so beautiful, or so orderly, if every particular had the same beauty, or were of the same order. And he that cannot be content to have less, and to be lesser then another, is altogether unfit, not only to be as great, or to have as much as another, but to be or have any thing at all. Nor is any man more fit to be more then he is, then he that can rejoyce while another is more then he.

Secondly note, The creature leads us to God.

That's the tendency and scope of all that is here asserted. Eliphaz calls not Job to the meditation, or contemplation of the Stars to leave him there. Some study the Heavens much, but their lives are earthly; they study the Stars, yet there is nothing but dirt in their hearts; and the reason is, because they study the Stars for the Stars sake, and not for Gods sake; and make the Stars their end, not their way, or as Stars, to lead them to God. This is the reason why many Astronomers and Philosophers, who busie their heads and minds much in speculation about the nature of the Heavenly bodies, know not at all what it is to have their conversations in Heaven, or to mind the things that are above. We should so behold the glory of the Stars, as from thence to infer, that God is much more glorious; yea, that these things which were made glorious, have no glory in comparison of that Glory which made them. Plato taught his Schollers to say, The Earth is beautiful, the Heavens are more beautiful; but God who made the Earth, and the Heavens, is more beautiful then both. The visible creature shews the invisible God (Psal. 19. 1, 2.) The Heavens declare the glory of God, and the Firmament sheweth his handy work. But O how glorious is the invisible God, who hath made such visible creatures? And what a work-Master is he who hath set up such a work? (Rom. 1. 20.) The invisible things of him from the creation of the world, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and god-head. The things that are made, carry us to the maker of them; and they tell us, that none but he who hath an eternal power and god-head, could possibly make them. The Heathen thought the Sun, Moon, and Stars to be gods, therefore certainly there is much of God to be seen in them. And Job saith (which doth plainly shew that in nature it is so, Chap. 31. 26.) If I beheld the Sun when it shined, or the Moon walking in brightness, and my heart hath been secretly inticed, or my mouth hath kissed my hand; this also were an iniquity to be punished by the Judge, for I should have denyed the God that is above; that is, if I have been inticed to worship the Sun, or Moon, as ravisht with their beauty (for 'tis so far from being a sin, that 'tis a duty to behold the Sun when it shineth, and the Moon walking in brightness; but so to behold them, as to adore them, or do obeysance to them (which was the custom of the Heathen, expressed it seems among them by kissing their hand, as we do at this day in token of respect and reverence to men above us) this is an iniquity, even that gross iniquity of Idolatry, or worshiping the creature instead of, or more then the Creator, who is blessed for evermore. Now (I say) inasmuch as these creatures have so much of God in them, that many Heathens have mistaken them for God; how will it condemn us of dulness and stupidity, if we be not led to God in the knowledge and beholding of them? For as to make these creatures gods, so not to see God in these creatures, is to deny the God that is above.

of

Thirdly, While we behold the Stars of Heaven, it should exceedingly both humble us and make us thankful, for whose use, comfort, and accommodation in this life, God set up those Glorious Lights. God did not make them for his own use, he had no need of them, he was from everlasting without any of these creatures. The Stars are nothing to him; the Sun is nothing to him; yea in that state of glory we shall injoy God for ever, we shall have light without Sun; so that these lights were made for our use, and for ours only, while we are walking in the dark vale of this present world. Now, while we behold the height of the Stars how high they are, and consider for whom as well as by whom they were made; even for us, for poor us, who are but dust and ashes: This should at once lay us low in humbleness (looking upon them as an honour too great for us) and raise us up in thankfulness, because the benefit and comfort of them is so great to us. Thus David speaks in that excellent propheste of Christ (Psal. 8. 3.) When I consider the Heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon and the Stars which thou hast ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him? As if he had said, thou hast made all these creatures for man; see what a Heaven, what Stars God hath framed, and set up for man. Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him? Thus behold the height of the Stars, how high they are; as to lead thee unto God, and to admire his highness, so to be humbled at thy own baseness, and to be thankful for his benefits.

Eliphaz having laid down these two Propositions, God is on high, and the Stars are high; proceeds to make an inference from both, which he formeth up (by way of supposition) from Job's own mouth.

Vers. 13. And thou sayest, how doth God know?

As if Eliphaz had said, thou art so far from making that right improvement which thou oughtest of these truths; that the Lord is in the height of Heaven, and that he hath made those high and glorious lights in Heaven, that indeed thou doest quite pervert his meaning in making them; Thou sayest, how doth God know? Instead of honouring God who formed these lights, thou art darkning his honour, and eclipsing the light of his omniscience. For whereas thou shouldest have said, seeing God is on high, and hath made the Stars, which are so high, surely nothing can be hid from his knowledge. Thou sayest, How doth God know? And there is a twofold saying of this; first, a saying with the tongue; secondly, with the heart: The vain heart of man hath many sayings, and this among the rest, How doth God know? (Psal. 14. 1.) The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God. And he that saith in his heart, How doth God know? speaks as foolishly as that fool doth, who saith, There is no God. To deny that or doubt whether God knoweth all things, is not only to doubt, but to deny that God is at all; he is not God who knoweth not all things.

Dicit, 1 verbis prolatis, 2 mentis cogitatione & falsa persuasione.

And thou sayest, how doth God know?] The conjunctive particle And, is here put as a causal, And thou sayest; that is, therefore thou sayest, how doth God know? So the sence is more clear, Is not God in the height of heaven? &c. He is. And what then? The use thou makest of it is this, Thou sayest, how doth God know? So the particle is used (Gen. 49. 15.) He saw that rest was good, and he gave his shoulders to the burthen, &c. that is, therefore he gave his shoulders to the burthen.

Thou sayest, how doth God know?] We may answer, first, Negatively, Not by sense, as we; eyes and ears are ascribed to God improperly in Scripture; nor doth God know by discourse, drawing one thing from another; but in the Affirmative, he knows intuitively, he knows every thing nakedly in it self.

Again, Some read, What doth God know? How far doth his eye extend? What are the objects of his knowledge? To this we may answer, God knoweth all things, even the hearts of all the children of men, there are no secrets to God. But whether we expound it of the manner or matter of divine knowledge, the sence is the same; either an affirmation that God did not know all things, or at least a doubt whether he did or no. Thou sayest, how doth God know? But where, and when did Job say this? Job might challenge Eliphaz; bring your proofs and witnesses against me; why do you impute such thoughts to me, and frame such imaginations in my breast? certainly Job never spake this, and as surely Job never thought this, yet Eliphaz puts it directly upon him. What was his ground? Only as the former crimes of uncharitableness and injustice, his breaking the arms of the fatherless, &c. were fastned upon him, because of the fears, snares, and darkness in which he was; as if he must needs have done those evils, because he endured so much evil. Job's sufferings were great, and therefore according to the Logick of Eliphaz, his sins must needs be very great. So here, he hath only this to prove his supposition, that Job said, How doth God know? Because Job had said, that God doth sometime prosper wicked men, and afflicts the righteous. As if he who saith, that God suffers wicked men to prosper in this life, must needs also say, that God regards not the things of this life; so that Eliphaz seems to speak thus, We have heard thee saying, that the wicked prosper, and that the godly are afflicted; what need we any further witness, that thy opinion is, God neither takes notice nor care of the things here below. Out of thine own mouth we condemn thee as guilty of this blasphemy, that, Thou sayest, how doth God know?

Existimabit hæc consequi ex Jobi dictis, quasi necesse sit eum qui dicat improbos prosperè agere, existimare etiam Deum res humanas non curare. Merl.

Hence observe, First, That good men are sometimes charged with saying and doing the worst and vilest things.

Thus (1 King. 21. 13.) Naboth was accused of blaspheming God and the King. Christ himself was taxed with blasphemy blasphemy more then once (Matth. 9.3.) And behold certain of the Scribes said within themselves, this man blasphemes. There they did not only aver it, but they said it within themselves. At other times they spake it openly, (Joh. 10.33.) The Jews answered and said, for a good deed we stone thee not, but for blasphemy; because thou being a man makest thy self God. And again (Matth. 26.65.) He hath spoken blasphemy, ye have heard his blasphemy. To speak or do well and hear ill was the portion of Christ, and may be the portion of the holiest of those who are Christs.

Secondly note, That when men are heated in dispute, they are apt to make false inferences from the tenets and sayings of their opposers.

Eliphaz saith, Job denied providence, whereas Job adored it; that he denied Gods knowledge of the good and evil done in the world, because he maintained, that good men receive evil, and evil men good in the world. When we deny Transubstantiation, or that the bread is changed into the very substance of the body of Christ; Papists infer, that we deny, that Christ spake truly, when at his Last Supper he said, This is my body; and they will hence force it upon us, that we say, God is not omnipotent, because we affirm that it is inconsistent with the nature of a true humane body (such as Christ hath now in Heaven, though glorified and spiritual) to be in many places at once. For as some deny the omnipresence of the Divine Nature, so Papists affirm the omnipresence of the Humane Nature; and (say they) while we deny this, we deny the omnipotency of God. Others charge us that we make God the author of sin, and that, according to our tenet, all the impiety and wickedness that is in the world lieth at his door; because we affirm, that God hath passed an Eternal absolute and unchangeable decree concerning all the sons of men. When all other arguments fail, how usual is it to make the divinest truths guilty of the most uncomly and ugly consequences that are imaginable.

Further, Thou sayest, How doth God know? Take it either of the inward or of the outward saying, either of the tongue or of the heart, saying so; Eliphaz would prove from it, that certainly Job was a wicked man. And his inference had been true, if he could have proved it true, that Job had so.

Hence observe, That to have evil thoughts, or to speak evil of God, is the character of a wicked man.

He that is good, must needs both think, and speak good of God. David doth often aggravate the wickedness of his enemies, from the language of their hearts and tongues, (Psal. 10. 11.) He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hides his face, he will never see. And again (Psal. 144.7, 8, 11.) Send thy hand from above, rid me, and deliver me out of great waters, from the hands of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falshood. If the mouth speaketh vanity, the hand is full of falshood; we may even feel deceit in their hands, whose mouths speak any kind of vanity; but especially this, which is the vainest vanity of all, How doth God know? or surely God doth not know. Such the Psalmist rebukes (Psal. 94.4, 5, 7.) How long shall they utter and speak hard things? What things were those? The next words shew us, They brake in pieces thy people, &c. yet they say, the Lord shall not see, &c. understand ye brutish, among the people, he that formed the eye, shall he not see? There is no greater argument of brutishness and ignorance, then to question the knowledge of God, or to say, How doth God know?

And (which is the same in other words) can he judge through the darke cloud.

As if Job had further argued thus, I am safe enough from the knowledge of God, for as he is high above me, so there are dark clouds between him and me; Can he judge through the dark cloud? My opinion is he cannot. For knowledge goeth before judgment; he that knoweth not certainly, can never judge rightly. Justice is pictured blind, in reference to persons, but not in reference to things or causes; Justice must take no notice of this or that man, whether he be great or little, high or low, a near friend or a stranger; Justice is blind as to all these considerations, and knoweth no man; but Justice must know every mans case and cause; unless man know that, how can he judge? And if God know not that, how can he judge? He must have light to see what is done, before he pass sentence upon what is done; therefore, Can he judge through the dark cloud? Surely he cannot. Thus the Atheist concludes indeed, and thus Eliphaz represents Job concluding in his own heart; there is not only a great distance between God and me, not only is he in the height of Heaven, and I below on Earth, but there are many gloomy clouds between him and me; as he is high above me, so there are such impediments in the way that he cannot see me. The Vulgar reads, He judgeth as through darkness. Now the best of Saints see God through a glass darkly, or in a riddle (1 Cor. 13. 12.) And secure sinners think that God seeth them only through a cloud darkly, or (as Eliphaz speaketh) through a dark cloud, he knoweth not clearly but dimly. To judge through a cloud, is to judge of things confusedly, not distinctly; by guess or conjecturally, not exactly or face to face. This is all the sight which an evil heart alloweth God (if he allow him any) concerning his wayes and actions. They who do things which cannot abide the light, are willing to believe that all they do is in the dark. Theirs are works of moral darkness, and therefore they please themselves with thinking that their works are hid either in natural or artificial darkness. It is said of the Lord in Scripture (Psal. 97. 2.) Clouds and darkness are round about him, while judgment and righteousness are the habitation of his throne; but these imagine that God cannot proceed in judgment and righteousness, because clouds and darkness are round about him. It is said (1 King. 8. 10, 11, 12.) The cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the Priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud, for the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord. Then spake Solomon, the Lord said that he will dwell in the thick darkness. Read, Exod. 20. 21. Deut. 5. 22. Psal. 18.11. God is light (saith the Apostle, 1 John 1.) and he dwelleth in light which no man can approach unto (1 Tim. 6. 16.) How then can he be said to dwell in thick darkness? I answer, those Scriptures which say that God dwells in darkness, that clouds and darkness are round about him, teach us, that God and his wayes are much hid from us; we are not able to look up to him, or see clearly what he doth, much less can we see what his counsels are. The clouds and darkness which are about him, do not hinder his sight of us, but our sight of him. Our darkness is no darkness to him; but his darkness, yea his light is darkness to us. Again, God is said to dwell in a cloud, to reprove our boldness and curiosity, who are too apt to pry into what is not to be known, and to neglect our duty in what we know, or to neglect the knowledge of our duty. God hath some reserves in counsels; some of his providences are wrapt up in clouds. He will be trusted and honoured in what he is not seen or known. Not to know these things is indeed our nescience, but not our ignorance; and not to seek after the knowledge of these things, is our duty, not our sloath. Thus God who dwells in light, dwells also in a cloud; for he dwells in light that no man can (no nor ought to) approach unto. We may come near his light by faith, but we cannot come near his light by knowledge. There is such an infinite, such an overcoming light in God, that it is a darkness to us; the most Eagle like eye of a humane understanding are not only dazzel'd, but quite blinded with his brightness. Now as no man can judge through this light of God, so some men are ready to say (and thus Eliphaz brings in Job saying) that God cannot judge through dark clouds, through clouds and darkness. Nor doth Eliphaz bring in Job saying thus only by way of doubt or question, but by way of averment and resolution in the next verse.

Et quasi per caliginum judicat. Vulg.

Sit non novit ergo nec judicare potest, ad rectum enim judicium requiritur cognitio causæ.

Vers. 14. Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he seeth it not.

This verse is but an explication of the thirteenth, Can he see through the dark cloud? There he puts the question, here he gives a peremptory answer, he cannot certainly; for, Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he cannot see. The Hebrew for thick clouds is but one word, which in the root, signifies Thickness, or, to be thick. Some clouds have a kind of thinness in them, and are as it were transparent.

עבים Nubes dictæ sunt à densitate, à radice עבה densum esse. q.d. sicut nos latet Deus, ita Deum latent nostra cœlestia, illi tantum patent.

parent. Others are more gross and opacous, quite hindering and intercepting our sight of all that is beyond them; with these (saith Eliphaz) thou O Job, vainly conceitest, that the sight of God also is intercepted, so that, as we cannot see God, so God cannot see us; a vail of thick clouds seclude his sight. Nor is this the only reason why thou art overcom with this ignorant perswasion. Thou hast a second, which though possibly thou wouldest conceal, yet will not I; and this is it, Thou also sayest,

He walketh in the circuit of Heaven.] As if thou hadst said, suppose God can see through the thick cloud, and so my former reason should fail; yet I know well enough that the great God of Heaven hath other matters to meddle with, other affairs to busie himself about, then to trouble himself with me. He walketh in the circuit of Heaven; we are not to take walking as a meet motion, but as walking notes imployment; He walks in the circuit of Heaven, that is, he is wholly taken up there. When the Lord asked of Satan, Whence comest thou? he answered, From going to and fro in the Earth, and from walking up and down in it. Now what doth Satan when he walks up and down the world, doth he walk like an idle vagrant that hath nothing to do? Doth he walk with his hands in his pockets, as having no business? Doth he walk meerly to take the Air, or to take his pleasure, to see, and be seen? No, when Satan walks about the world, his walking is working, he goeth about to tempt, to try, to lay snares and baits, to catch and captivate the souls of men. So here when it is said, God walketh in the circuit of Heaven, the meaning is, his business, yea even his whole business lies there; he hath enough to do in Heaven, and therefore hath no leisure to attend what is done on Earth. That's the scope and tendency of these words which Eliphaz fastens upon Job; He walketh in the circuit of Heaven. We are sure enough of him. The words carry the same sence, with that speech of the whorish woman (Prov. 7. 18, 19, 20.) Come (saith she) let us take our fill of love till the morning, let us solace our selves with loves. But the young man might possibly object, your husband will come home, and that will spoil all: No (saith she) never fear it, he is far enough out of the way; The good man is not at home, he is gone a long journey; He hath taken a bag of money with him, and will come home at the day appointed; that is, he will not come home till the day appointed, he hath great business abroad, and he hath carried money enough with him to bear his charges till he hath done his business. He is riding and running in a far Country, and minds not home, nor hath he the least suspition of what we do at home. Thus when the sinner is about to depart far from his duty, he puts or conceives God far from him. He walketh in the circuit of Heaven. From the general scope of Eliphaz in the thirteenth and fourteenth Verses,

Hoc verbo videtur connotari studium inquirendi. Pisc.

First observe, Carnal men frame conceptions of God like themselves.

Thus the hypocrite is described (Psal. 50. 21.) Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such a one as thy self. Not that he thought God was a man, but that God had such thoughts of good and evil, as man hath. As if what is right in mans eyes, were so in the eyes of God also; or as if what did not displease man, were pleasing, or not much displeasing unto God. When the Lord saith (Isa. 55. 8.) My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor your wayes my wayes; he doth plainly intimate, that they did begin to frame thoughts of God like their own; but saith God, As the Heavens are higher then the Earth, so are my thoughts then your thoughts, and my wayes then your wayes; that is, as my thoughts have a vastness in them to all things beyond yours, so especially in this thing, the performance of my promise for the pardon of sin. O how unlike is God to man in this? God is not more unlike man in his absolute freedom from the least inclination to commit any, the least sin, then he is in the admirable freeness of his inclination to pardon any, even the greatest sin. Men are commonly not only unmerciful to those who wrong them, but revengeful, and when once offended are hardly drawn to a reconcilement; and seldom so fully reconciled, but that somewhat of offence stayeth behind. But the thoughts of God are not so. He is slow to wrath, and ready to forgive. He quickly pardons the offence, and receives the offender into favour; no more retaining the memory of his offence (as to his hurt) then if he had never offended. Thus the Lord would assure sinners, that his thoughts in pardoning sin are not as theirs. And it is but need he should do so; for when sinners begin to be awakened, they frame such thoughts of God, as to pardon of sin, as they have in themselves: when they look upon their sins as too big to be pardoned by man, they conclude presently the Lord cannot or will not pardon them. And as many under temptation, frame thoughts of God like their own about the pardon of sin; so it is the constant course of wicked men (which is indeed the worst of their sins) to frame thoughts of God like unto themselves, while they commit and continue in sin. Man should not dare to imagine any thing of God in reference either to his justice or mercy, either about the punishing or pardoning of sin, but what he hath declared of himself; all that we imagine beside that, is the making of another God. There are many false gods made with mens hands, but the hearts of men make many more. The heart of man makes thousands of false or strange gods. Every undue, every wrong imagination of God, is the forming up of a strange, of a new god. When we ascribe to God such a kind of power, such a kind of knowledge, such a kind of holiness, such a kind of justice, such a kind of mercy, as is common to the creature, in all this we frame up a new god to our selves. And thus those Gentiles of whom the Apostle speaks (Rom. 1. 21, & 25.) Became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkned; in what was their foolish heart darkned? in false notions of God; therefore they are said (Vers. 29.) To change the glory of the incorruptible God, into an Image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, four footed beasts, and creeping things. Now as there is the changing of the glory of the incorruptible God into the Image of a corruptible man, that is, into the external Image of a corruptible man (for some set up false gods in the likeness of men;) so there is a changing of the glory of the incorruptible God, into the internal Image of a corruptible man, that is, into such thoughts and conceptions as are ordinarily in men. Let such consider, that, if to make a worship of our own for the true God, be indeed to set up a false god; (all they worship false gods who set up a strange worship for the true God; now, I say, if they who do but set up a new worship for the true God make a strange god) what then do they who in their hearts set up a new god, that is, who frame conceptions of God which himself never gave ground for in his Word? Such was the conceit which Eliphaz had of Job, when he presumes him saying, How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud?

Secondly, From the particular misapprehension of God imposed by Eliphaz upon Job; And thou sayest, how doth God know? &c.

Observe, Sinful men fancy to themselves that God either doth not or cannot take notice of them in their sinful wayes.

Thus they reason, Can he see through the dark cloud? and conclude, Thick clouds are a covering to him that he seeth not, and he walketh in the circuit of Heaven. What Eliphaz layes to Job's charge falsly, is often charged by the Holy Ghost upon wicked men truly (Psal. 10. 11.) He hath said in his heart God hath forgotten, he hides his face, he will never see it. Who this He is, whose heart speaks this language, appears clearly in the former part of the Psalm, where he is more then once called The wicked (ver. 2, 3.) and where more then one of his wickednesses are described (ver. 7, 8, 9, 10.) His mouth is full of cursing and deceit, and fraud; under his tongue is mischief and vanity: he sitteth in the lurking places of the villages: in the secret places doth he murther the innocent, &c. After all this, he saith in his heart God hath forgotten; that is, he hath forgotten the poor whom I have under my power, therefore I may safely oppress them. He hideth his face, he will never see it; that is, God will never take any knowledge, either of my doings or of their sufferings. We have a sample of the same impiety (Psal. 73. 11.) And they say, how doth God know? and is there knowledge in the most high? behold, these are the ungodly in the world, &c. And again (Psal. 94. 6.) They slay the widdow, and stranger, and murther the fatherless (here are their works of darkness)

yet

yet they say, the Lord shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard. Not only did they presume that the Lord did not see, but that he should not; The Lord shall not see! As if they could stop or blind the eyes of God as easily as they had blinded their own Consciences. Take one instance further (Ezek. 8. 12.) Then said he unto me, Son of man, Seest thou what they do? hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, The Lord seeth us not, he hath forsaken the Earth. Much like the language here, He walketh in the circuit of Heaven; he hath other business to do then to mind us. As God is sometimes said to forsake the Earth in wrath, to punish the sin of Man; so wicked men say, he always forsakes the Earth in neglect both of their sin and punishment. And as Idolaters who have a mind to other gods, are willing to believe that God hath forsaken the Earth, as to the protection of them; we (say they) are in danger, God takes no care of us, therefore blame us not if we betake our selves to other gods for protection; If he had not forsaken us, we had not forsaken him: So all sorts of resolved transgressors, who have a mind to any sinful way, are willing to believe that God hath forsaken the Earth, as to any observation of them. We may do what we list, for God doth not mind or regard what we are doing. If we thought he did indeed see us, we durst not thus sin against him: But seeing he doth not trouble himself with any care about us, why should we trouble our selves with any fear about him? Now, this Presumption that God doth not see us in what we are doing, opens a door to the doing of all evil. Security from danger is the great encouragement unto sin. Though wicked men would not be less sinful, yet they would not sin so much, or be so full of sin, did they not vainly flatter themselves out of the sight of God. Every man would fain believe that God doth not see him when he is doing that which he would not have seen or be seen in doing it. And how do men please themselves in this false hope that God doth not see them, when they do that which is displeasing unto God!

From the intendment of Eliphaz to convince Job, that the clouds are no covering to God, and that the circuit of Heaven doth not confine him.

Thirdly observe, God is omniscient, he knows all things.

Thou sayest thus, How doth God know? I tell thee God doth know; and thou hast an argument upon thy back, if thou hast none in thy heart to prove it; thy sence or feeling may teach thee, if thy reason or understanding do not, and by thy suffering thou mayst see that God seeth what thou hast been doing. This great truth, That God is omniscient, or knows all, may easily be known, and ought to be believed by all. When the Lord had made the world in six dayes (Gen. 1. 31.) He saw all that he had made; all was in view at once, he had a prospect of the whole creation in his eye. And as all his own creatures, so all our creatures are seen by God; he seeth all that himself hath made, and he seeth all that we have made, or are making day by day (Gen. 6. 5.) God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the Earth, and that every thought of the imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually, or every day. The Lord saw, that is, the Lord knew fully (infinitely more fully then we know those things which we see) every imagination or figment of the thoughts of mans heart. The figment of our thoughts, is what the mind fashioneth or maketh up within it self by thinking: corrupt nature keeps a constant mint of evil imaginations in the head, as it hath a sink of filthy affections in the heart. The mind of man hath a formative faculty in it: And the same word which the Holy Ghost useth to signifie the work of God in making man (Gen. 2. 7.) The Lord God formeth man out of the dust of the Earth, or dust out of the Earth (the same word, I say) is used in the Noun (Gen. 6. 5.) to signifie, the imagination of man, because that is always shaping moulding or forming one sort of thoughts or other, and, naturally, none but ugly evil thoughts. These are the creatures which man (as fallen) is the maker of; and he maketh (as I may say) infinite creatures, he is forming them continually in his imagination; that's the shop wherein there's a dayly Creation (such as it is) of monstrous wickednesses, till God by his new Creation changeth the frame and nature of it. Now (I say) as God seeth his own creatures, so he seeth all our creatures, though we make them in the shop of our darkest imaginations. And much more doth he see all the creatures which we make without, that is, all our bodily and external actions (Jer. 17. 10.) I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins; if he search our hearts, then surely he searcheth all our wayes; if he seeth our thinkings, then surely he seeth our walkings. Therefore 'tis said (1 Sam. 2. 3.) The Lord is a God of knowledge; the Hebrew is, The Lord is a God of knowledges; that is, all things fall under his knowledge; he is perfect in all knowledges there is nothing knowable, but the Lord knows it; and by him actions are weighed: now the weighing of actions is more then the seeing of actions; many see that which they cannot weigh. He weigheth actions, that is, he takes not only the action it self, but every circumstance of it into consideration; he takes his ballances, and tries fully, how much each ingredient weighs, and what it comes to. He weighs whole States, Kingdoms, and Nations. So it was said to the Babylonian Monarch Belteshazzar (Dan. 5. 26, 27.) Mene, God hath numbred thy Kingdom and finished it; Tekel, Thou art weighed in the ballances, and art found wanting. Thy councels, thy policies, thy undertakings, the whole compass, all the contrivance of thy Government are weighed and found too light. And as God weigheth the actions of Princes, so of private persons (Prov. 5. 21.) The wayes of a man (that is, of every man, even of the meanest man) are before the Lord, and he pondereth all his paths; he puts them into a Ballance, and doth not only see them, but ponder or weigh them. David saith of some wicked men that they weigh the violence of their hands in the Earth (Psal. 58. 2.) though they do violence, yet they do it not violently, but with a kind of skill and deliberation. They do wrong and oppress with a shew of Justice, whereof weights are the common Emblem. Now as some men do evil, not hastily, rashly, or all at once, but give it out by weight, and with a seeming gravity and zeal for Justice. So the Lord doth never look over the wayes of men rashly or hastily, but weighs them out even to a grain, yea to the dust of the ballance he pondereth all their paths; that is, he knows them throughout. Therefore David (Psal. 139.) having spoken much to this point of the exactness of Gods knowledge, concludes at vers. 6. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me, it is high I cannot attain unto it. Some expound this Text, not of the knowledge of God concerning us, but of our knowledge concerning God. Thy knowledge or the knowledge of thee is too wonderful for me, I cannot attain unto it. Others thus, This thy knowledge (namely that which he had before described) is more wonderful (or more exact) then that I should be able to deceive it. We may impose upon and deceive the most knowing man, but we cannot impose upon or deceive God. I conceive our reading to be most sutable both to the Text and Context. Such knowledge, that is, such knowledge as thou hast of me, of the least and greatest things, even of all things that I or any man doth, is too wonderful for me. For though we may know some actions of men, yet we cannot know them all, and we can hardly weigh any of them to the utmost. And in this acknowledgment we may take notice of the Psalmist modesty, who though he had the immediate assistance of a prophetical Spirit; yet confessed, that he was not only not able to know God, but not to know himself, his thoughts, words, and wayes, as God knew them. Such knowledge of my self as thou O Lord hast of me, is too wonderful for me, I cannot attain unto it.

Some perhaps may query upon this, if the Lord knoweth all the wayes of men, and pondereth all their actions, is not this a trouble to God? Is not this a disturbance of his peace, and a distraction to him?

I answer (as I said before) this is to frame a God like our selves, for to him that is omniscient, it is all one to know all, and to know but one thing: it is no more distraction, no more trouble to God to know all that we do speak, or think, then to know any thing. If two or three speak to a man together, he is not able to take in their sence; the variety of their discourse makes such a hurry and trouble in his spirits, that he looseth all that is spoken. But the application of Thousands or of Millions at the same time in speaking to the ear of God, is no more trouble, then if but one did speak; an infinite ears hears all, and an

an infinite eye ſees all, without any the leaſt diſtraction; the infinite knowledge of God takes in all the actions of all men, as eaſily as the ſingle action of any one man.

Again, Others may ſay, ſurely the Lord will not take ſuch exact knowledge of all the actions of men, eſpecially of mean men, or ſurely not of the mean actions of meaneſt men; poſſibly of ſome perſons in great place, and of ſome great things done by thoſe perſons he may take notice; but to ſtoop to ſmall things, if it be not a trouble, yet it cannot but be a diſhonour to, and too great a condeſcention for the great God. The Heathens ſaid their Jupiter had no leaſure to deal in ſmall matters; and may not we Chriſtians ſay, Is it not honourable enough for our God, to have to do with ſmall matters.

I anſwer, This alſo is to frame a God like our ſelves; as it doth not weary God to behold, to try and ponder all the wayes of all men (which was the fear concerning Moſes that he ſhould be tired out with the various caſes and affairs of that great people; and was therefore adviſed by Jethro to make more Judges, that ſo the weightier matters only might be brought before and judged by him) So it is no diſhonour at all to God, no, it is his honour that he takes cogniſance of the ſmalleſt matters as well as of the greateſt, of the loweſt as well as of the higheſt concernments of the children of men (Pſal. 113. 5, 6.) Who is like unto the Lord our God, who dwelleth on high? who humbleth himſelf to behold the things which are in Heaven, and in the Earth. Who is like to God in this? This is the honour of the high God that he will humble himſelf to behold the loweſt things, the things which are in the Earth, as well as things in Heaven; and the leſſer, the leaſt things in Earth, as well as the greater or the greateſt. Though the Lord be high yet he humbleth himſelf unto the lowly (Pſal. 138. 6.) and as to lowly perſons, ſo to the loweſt things. Indeed the Lord doth humble himſelf to behold the things which are in Heaven, it is a condeſcention in him to take notice of any Creature; yet he doth not only humble himſelf to behold things in Heaven, but things in the Earth, and in this who is like unto the Lord our God? This is his glory, and for this he is to be glorified, yea to be cryed up with this admiring Elogium, Who is like unto the Lord our God? None among the ſons of men are like him in this, yea there is no God like unto the Lord our God in this. We have cauſe to ſay (conſidering our vileneſs) What is man that thou ſhouldeſt take notice of him? 'Tis too great an honour for man, but it is no diſhonour to God to take notice of the meaneſt man. The greatneſs of God appears as in the making, ſo in the governing and diſpoſing of the ſmalleſt things. The power of God is ſeen in making a fly or a worm, as well as in making an Elephant or the vaſt Leviathan; ſo alſo is his wiſdom and providence ſeen in the obſerving and ordering of thoſe buſineſſes and motions of the creature, which compared to others are but as a fly to an Elephant, or but as a worm to Leviathan. There is nothing doth more detract from the greatneſs of God, then the denyal or diſ-belief of his cogniſance of and care about little things. And as it ſhews the exacteſt perfection of holineſs attainable by man in this life, when he taketh an account of and reproves himſelf for the leaſt ſins, whether they be omiſſions of that good which he is commanded to do, or comiſſions of that evil which he is forbidden to do. So it is an undeniable argument of the exactly and abſolutely perfect holineſs, juſtice, goodneſs and faithfulneſs of God, that he taketh an account of, and will certainly reward or puniſh every man for the leaſt good or evil which he hath done. This is the glory of him who walketh in the circuit of Heaven, that he ſees all to the center of the Earth. Eliphaz having thus detected and reproved (as he thought) thoſe thoughts and aſſertions of Job which detracted ſo much from God, as if he did not mark the wayes of men; proceeds to put the queſtion to him, whether himſelf had well marked the wayes of wicked men.

VERS. 15, 16.

Haſt thou marked the old way which wicked men have troden.

Which were cut down out of time, whoſe foundation was overflown with a flood?

THE word tranſlated to Mark, notes a diligent obſervation; ſo it is uſed (Chap. 10. 14.) If I ſin then thou markeſt me (that is, thou takeſt exact or ſtrict notice of me) and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity (Pſal. 37. 37.) mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, that is, take ſpecial knowledge of him, for the end of that man is peace (Pſal. 107. 43.) Who ſo is wiſe will obſerve, or mark, theſe things, he ſhall underſtand the loving kindneſs of the Lord. So here, Haſt thou marked? Haſt thou with diligence and ſeriouſneſs of ſpirit obſerved, the old way which wicked men have troden. The Hebrew is, The way of age, the way of ages, or as ſome read, the Eternal way, the way of Eternity. David prayeth (Pſal. 139. 23, 24.) Lead me in the way everlaſting; that is, Lead me in the way of holineſs and righteouſneſs, which leads to eternity. Which yet one of the Rabbins expounds, as a periphraſis of death; for death is called, The way of all the earth (1 King. 2. 2.) The way of all fleſh (Joſh. 23. 14.) As if David had ſaid, Lord, if upon ſearch thou findeſt that I walk in any way of wickedneſs, that is, of wilful ſinning, then deſtroy me, lead me to my grave, yea caſt me with the wicked to Hell, or to everlaſting condemnation. Maſter Broughton thus, Haſt thou marked the way of the old world?

But what was this way of the old world, about which Eliphaz queſtions Job, whether he had taken notice of it yea or no? The way of the world may be taken two wayes.

Firſt, For the way of their ſins.

Secondly, For the way of their puniſhment.

Firſt, Haſt thou marked the old way of their ſin? And the old way of their ſin may be conſidered under a twofold notion.

Firſt, As it was the way of their opinion. Secondly, As it was the way of their practice: Some reſtrain it here to the way of their opinion, and interpret Eliphaz as chiefly intending that, Haſt thou obſerved the old way, that is, the old Erroneous opinions which were in the firſt ages of the world? In thoſe times there were not a few like thy ſelf, who either flatly denyed or belied the providence of God, who ſaid (as thou doeſt) How doth God know? Surely he hath forſaken the Earth, and intermedles not with what is done here below. Thus a Learned Interpreter expounds the Text, with reference to their ungodly opinion, They (ſaith he) who lived in the time of the flood denyed providence; haſt thou (O Job) marked their opinion and conſidered it? And that this wicked Error did prevail in thoſe times, may be Collected from what is reported by Beroſus of the Giants (of whom we read in Geneſis. 6. v. 4. There were Giants in the Earth in thoſe dayes) Among other of their abominations, this (ſaith he) was one, or this was a Chief one, the root, or ſource of them all; they blaſphemed God, and contemned Religion, they thought there was no ſupreme Power, none to whom man was accountable for any of his actions. Haſt thou marked this old way of Error?

In purſuance of which Interpretation, the words which we render, Haſt thou marked, may be expounded thus, Haſt thou taken up the old way? Art thou a follower of that Sect, of that Tribe who have gone in that wicked way? Doeſt thou alſo maintain their blaſphemy, that God takes no notice of man? This notion holds fair with what he had ſaid before.

Secondly, As it may be referred to thoſe abominable, Atheiſtical opinions which reigned in thoſe times, ſo to the wicked Practices, to the old Cuſtoms and ſinful Courſes which were followed in thoſe times; for where a wicked opinion is lodged in the heart, what kind of wickedneſs is there that they may not break forth in the life? And ſo here the old way is the way of ſin, the corrupt courſe and practices of that debauched generation, eſpecially the way of pride and ambition, which appeared much in the titles given them, Mighty men, men of name, or as we render, Men of renoun. They were men of honour and name with men, but we read not of any honour they did to or received from God. It is the higheſt diſgrace, to be memorable for actings againſt grace, or for ungracious actings.

Again,

שמר

Obſervare Dei actiones imprimis ipſius judicia magna pars ſcientiæ eſt.

Senitam ſæculorum vel ſeculi, æternam aut æternitatis, nam ea omnia denotat vox עלם Rab. Kimchi.

Ad eos opinio hæc referenda eſt, qui vixerunt tempore diluvii cenſebantq; tollendam providentiam. Vatabl. Gigantes religionis contemptores. Beroſ.

Cuſtodiendi verbum proſequi exponitur. Merc.

Num observavit perpetuum ordinem, quem in puniendis talibus impiis tenuit Deus, postnatos homines, Merc. Putat hunc esse perpetuũ ordinem domini ut impios hic puniat, sed fallitur. Merc.

Again, The old way may be taken for the way of punishment, or for that course of divine Justice which was executed upon wicked men in those elder times. There is a way of Judgment which God takes, as there is a way of Sin which man takes. Sinful wayes lead into troublesom wayes, and end in death. Hast thou considered the way of justice which the Lord went in towards those old sinners, pouring out his wrath, and emptying the vials of his indignation upon them, till he had consumed and swept them off as rubbish from the face of the earth? Hast thou marked the old way, which either the lusts of wicked men have led them into, or which the justice of the Lord hath brought them into? Hast thou observed the old way?

Which wicked men have trodden?

The Hebrew is, Men of Iniquity; Which phrase plainly imports, that he doth not speak of the ordinary race, or rank of sinners; but of the extreamest sinners, men so full of Iniquity, that they deserved this black Title, men of Iniquity. Antichrist is called not only a man of sin, or the man of sin, but (which implyeth a sinner of a higher form, then both the former) That man of sin (2 Thes. 2. 3.) He being indeed not only amongst the chiefest sinners, but the chief of sinners. The phrase in the Text is a degree lower then that, yet it notes a very great degree. And therefore when the Prophet would assure the greatest sinners repenting and returning to God, of the readiness of God to pardon, he expresseth them in this stile (Isa. 55.7.) Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man, or (as the Original Text hath it) the man of iniquity, his thoughts, and &c. As a man of Bloods, notes a very bloody man, a man given up to that particular sin of cruelty: So a man of iniquity, is one given up to sin in general. Hast thou marked the old way which wicked men; men of iniquity, have Trodden. This word, Trodden, referred both to a sinful and a suffering way, notes the frequency of their going or being in those wayes. And as it is referred to their sinful way alone, it notes first, their boldness in sinning; secondly, their resolvedness to sin: A trodden way, is such a way as a man hath often gone, and in which he is not afraid to go. Hast thou marked the old way.

Hence note, First, The way of sin and Error is an old way.

The Devil sinned from the beginning, and men have sinned from their beginning; not only have there been sinnings, but great sinnings from the beginning; the old way is the way of sin, though the oldest way be not. There was holiness before there was sin, and truth before there was error; so that the way of sin is the old way, but not the oldest way. God, all whose wayes are holy, was from everlasting. The Angels who have been holy as long as they have been, were from the beginning. And the first beginning of man in his conversation, was, no doubt, like his constitution, holy. He quickly went out of the way, but surely his first step was not out of the way, he went right before he went wrong, and stood before he fell. Again, if you take the way for the way of punishment,

Note, That God in all ages hath punished sinners in their sinful wayes.

God hath every where, and every when, left the tract and print of his anger and displeasure upon sinners; though some particular sinners have gone unpunished in some age, yet there was never any age wherein sin was not punished in some. The Lord gives a moral stop to sin perpetually, that is, by his Laws he declares against it; his Word is express against all ungodliness, both the Word of his Command, and the Word of his threatning. Now as the Lord doth alwayes put this moral stop in the way of sin, so, he often puts a Judiciary stop, or a stop by way of Judgment. And as in Genesis 3. he sets a flaming Sword in the way of the Tree of Life; so he continually sets a flaming Word, that is, a threatning to keep the way of the Tree of Death, that is, of sin. Thus he alwayes meets sinful men in the way of their lusts (as the Angel met Balaam when he went to curse the Israel of God) with a drawn Sword to stop them in their way; the Lord hath set many drawn Swords in the way of every sin; and he hath left the prints of his wrath upon the backs of many sinners, that we should take heed of sinning. The Lord hath left many sad examples upon record against sin, nor hath he at any time favoured it, or done any thing which might indeed encourage sinners; for though sometimes wicked men have prosper'd, yet, should we look into all times, we cannot find that wicked men were ever blessed; Judgment hath overtaken them sooner or later. And if it hath at any time come too late to overtake them in this world, yet it will come soon enough to overtake theirs in this, or themselves in the world which is to come. No man is blessed, at any time, who comes at last to be miserable.

Thirdly, In that he saith, Hast thou marked the old way?

Note, It is our duty to observe and mark, as the way of sinful men, so the way in which God punisheth their sin.

All the wayes of God are to be marked; as we are to observe what the Lord speaks, so what he doth; his Works as well as his Word are remarkable. Whoso is wise (saith the Psalmist, Psal. 107.43.) and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord. I may say also, that they shall understand the judgments of the Lord. And again, the Prophet confirms it (Hos. 14. 9.) Who is wise, and he shall understand these things; prudent, and he shall know them: for the wayes of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them, but the transgressors shall fall therein. The wicked fall in the way of his commandments, and therefore surely they shall fall in the way of his judgment. And as the Lord hath given us Examples of this, so he hath given this as the use of those Examples, that we should mark and observe them. The Apostle (1 Cor. 10.) shews that all the dealings of God with that his ancient people the Jews, are written and recorded as our Examples (Vers. 5, 6, 7.) With many of them God was not well pleased, but they were overthrown in the wilderness. Now these things were our examples, to the intent that we should not lust after evil things as they lusted, neither be Idolaters, as some of them were, nor fornicators, nor tempt Christ, nor murmur, &c. He shuts up all with the same doctrine (vers. 11.) Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples, and are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the earth are come; therefore let him that standeth take heed least he fall. The Apostle Peter also (2 Pet. 2.) brings in; first, The instance of the Angels that fell; secondly, Of the old world; thirdly, Of Sodom and Gomorrah, Whom God condemned with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly. The Scripture speaks of two sorts of Ensamples. First, for Imitation; secondly, for Caution; the lapsed Angels, the old world, these Cities Sodom and Gomorrah, are all left as Ensamples for caution, that all after ages marking the old way of their sin and punishment, might fear to sin and suffer as they have done.

Fourthly, From the manner of this expression (which wicked men have trodden) taking the way conjectively, for the way both of sin and punishment, this troddenness of it notes the frequent passage which many have made through it. They have not gone it once only, but often.

Hence observe, As wicked men offend often, so the Lord hath punished often; as they have made paths in sin, so God hath made paths in judgement.

It is easie to follow sinners (as it were) by the print and tract of those evils which have overtaken them. But I pass it here, because Eliphaz proceeds more directly to describe the punishment of wicked men in the next words.

Vers. 16. Which were cut down out of time, and whose foundation was overflown with a flood.

At this verse the Original hath a very conspicuous note of distinction. The Jews are very exact in observing the letters and the verses of every book in the Bible, and between these two verses is the middle of the book: there being exactly the same number of verses behind as we have had before in this whole book of Job (taking vers. 16. Inclusively) So that now we are half the book over according to the number of verses. The whole containing One thousand and seventy. The former part hath had Five hundred and thirty five, and as many remain for the latter part. This I touch only by the way.

חצי הספר

קבט Plerique reddunt ſuccidi ſunt; ſed verbum hoc nunquam occurrit in ea ſignificatione in ſacris literis, ſed tantum apud doctores Hebraorum idq; per metathesin literarum à verbo קמם Cum enim tantum occurrat in libro Job, ibi vertitur rugare aut corrugare aut rugas contrahere. לא עת Sine tempore, vel non tempus, i. e. antequam explerent vitæ annos, ſecundam communem naturæ legem.

לא עת Sine tempore verti poteſt, ſine æqua.

m potuiſſet diutive ſiſtere. gur. pti ſunt naturi. pt.

Which were cut down.] The words carry an alluſion to the felling of trees; as if he had ſaid, theſe men were like great Oaks and tall Cedars, but the Lord cut them down. The word is conceived more properly ſignifying to wrinkle, or to make furrows in the face; for this word is uſed but once more in all the Bible, and it is in Chap. 16. of this Book, verſ. 8. and there we tranſlate, wrinkles; Thou haſt filled me with wrinkles, which is againſt me. So ſome render it here, Who were wrinkled out of time. Now what are wrinkles? They are the marks of old age, and they ſhew that weakneſs is coming upon us, or that we are in our declining condition; ſo that it is a very Elegant expreſſion to ſay, They were wrinkled out of time, that is, they were old afore they were old; before they were old according to the nature of man, they were made old by the Judgements of God; they lookt as if they were worn, ſpent, and eaten out by time, whereas indeed they were ſpent, eaten and worn out with the wrath and indignation of God which fell upon them. Thus they were wrinkled out of time, or before their time.

They were cut down, and no time, as ſome render: but it may be ſaid, as Solomon did (Eccleſ. 3.1.) There is a time for every thing; how then could they be cut down in no time? There may be a twofold interpretation given of this Hebraiſm.

Firſt, This, to ſhew that they died a violent not a natural death, that either God by his immediate Judgments did cut them off, or that he gave them up to the Juſtice of man, who cut them off before their time. Man hath a ſet time, an ordinary time of dying (the dayes of man are threeſcore years and ten, this is the ordinary time of dying) they that dye before, are in Scripture ſence, Cut down out of time, or not in time, that is, not in that time at which men uſually dye according to the courſe and cuſtom of nature.

Secondly, When 'tis ſaid, They were cut down without time, the meaning is, they were cut down very ſuddenly, as if it were done without any time at all; God was ſo far from lingring or taking up long time to deſtroy theſe men, that he cut them down (as it were) without any time at all, even in a moment, in an inſtant, as ſpeedily as a man can think it, far more ſpeedily then any man can do it. He did it without delay: As uſually the grace of God, ſo often the wrath of God makes no demurs.

Obſerve from the manner of Expreſſion, Cut down,

That, God brings ruining judgments on the ſtouteſt of ſinners.

He doth not only pull off ſome of their fruit, and leaves, or lop off their branches; but he cuts them down, yea he ſtubs them up by the roots, till there is nothing left, they are cut down root and branch. Thus the Lord threatned the houſe of Jeroboam (1 King. 14. 10.) Behold I will bring evil upon the houſe of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam, him that piſſeth againſt the wall (that is, every man of his houſe) and him that is ſhut up and left in Iſrael (that is, him that is moſt eſteemed, as things ſhut up are; and him that is leaſt eſteemed, as things left abroad are; or thoſe who are ſecured or have ſecured themſelves in ſtrongeſt holds, as men ſhut up are, as well as thoſe who are left naked and expoſed to the eaſieſt dangers, as men left at large are) and will take away the remnant of the houſe of Jeroboam (that is, all who have eſcaped or ſurvived the former troubles) as a man taketh away dung till it be all gone; that is, till his houſe be utterly exterminated: for dung being a filthy and noyſom thing, men never leave taking it away, from places where it is an annoyance, till they have taken it all away. That which is offenſive in the whole nature of it, is offenſive in the leaſt degree of it.

Again, When 'tis ſaid, He cuts them down without time, or before their time, We may Obſerve, Wicked men are often ripe for Judgment, before they are ripe in years.

It is ſaid in Geneſis 15. The iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full, their ſin is not come to a full ſtature; for as there is a fulneſs of ſtature in holineſs unto which Saints at laſt arrive in Chriſt, ſo there is a fulneſs of ſtature in wickedneſs to which the Lord ſuffers ſinners to arrive; and as when Saints have attained their full ſtature in holineſs, they are received into glory; ſo when wicked men have attained a full ſtature in wickedneſs, they are cut off and turned down to deſtruction. Though the Lord ſuffer long, yet he will not alwayes ſuffer. And as ſome are but young men, yet old Saints, and have had much experience of God, and of the wayes of grace, though but little of the world (that diſtinction which the Apoſtle gives of Saints into little children, young men, and fathers (1 Joh. 2. 13, 14.) is not to be underſtood in reference to natural years, but to ſtanding in grace, or to a growth and progreſs in holineſs) ſo ſome wicked men, are but of few years, or but young in reference to their natural age, who yet are old in ſin, aged in wickedneſs, they are fathers in abomination, while but children in time, and ſo are cut down before time. Wicked men are never cut down till they are ripe in ſin, but they are often cut down before they are ripe in nature.

Thirdly, Which were cut down out of time; namely, in little time, or without delay.

Hence note, That, God can quickly make an end of wicked men.

He needs not take any long time to do it. He took but very little time to make the world, it was made in ſix dayes, which in reference to the greatneſs of the work is no time: when a great thing is done in a little time, we may ſay it was done without any time at all. Now if the Lord could frame a world without time, ſurely he can cut down the world, or the inhabitants of it in a little time? Ruining work is eaſier then building work. He that built (in this ſence) without time, can pull down without time; we need not trouble our ſelves with ſuch thoughts as theſe, when we ſee wicked men, enemies of God and his people in their height and ſtrength; O what a length of time will it require? O how many years muſt be ſpent in cutting down theſe ſtrong Oaks, thoſe tall Cedars? The Lord can cut them down in a moment. Our late experiences have ſhewed us wicked men cut down without time; before they thought they could be ſhaken, yea toucht, they have been cut down; when they concluded they could not be reached, they have been ruined. The Jeſuites and other Machavillian politicians have a received Maxim of State among them; Take time, and ye may do any thing. If you are diſappointed in a project this year, wait a few years longer (ſay they) and you ſhall either find or make a way to accompliſh it. But the Lord can do any thing he hath a mind to at any time, or without taking time. The Apoſtle propheſying of the Antichriſt ſaith (2 Theſ. 2. 6, 7.) Now ye know what withholdeth, that he may be revealed in his time; for the myſtery of iniquity doth already work, only he who now letteth will let, till he be taken out of the way. The power and ſplendor of the Roman Empire ſtood in Antichriſts way, and he could not cut it down without time; he was hacking and hewing, heaving and thruſting many years, yea ſome ages before he could remove that block out of his way, and ſo make a way for his own greatneſs. The wiſeſt of men muſt have time to bring about their ends. Only God, the only wiſe God, can cut down and remove whatſoever ſtands in his way (though it ſtand like a great mountain) without time or without taking time, if once his time be come in which he would have it removed. The wicked of thoſe elder times were cut down ſuddenly, without time. Eliphaz confirms it further in the next words,

Whoſe foundation was overflown with a flood.

In this latter clauſe Eliphaz ſeems more clearly to hint at ſome particular wicked men, or to ſhew who thoſe wicked men were that he intends as the object of his obſervation, namely, thoſe whoſe foundation was overflown with a flood. It is uſual in Scripture, by ſome one word to allude to great actions and changes paſt. Take two or three inſtances for illuſtration of this (Pſal. 55. 15.) David imprecates vengeance upon his enemies in this language; Let them go down quick into Hell. Which expreſſion carrieth a plain alluſion unto that dreadful judgment (Numb. 16. 31, 32.) It came to paſs as he (that is, Moſes) had made an end of ſpeaking all theſe words, the ground clave aſunder that was under them; and the earth opened her mouth and ſwallowed them up and their houſes, and all the men which appertained pertained unto Corah, and all their goods. They and all that appertained to them went down alive into the pit, &c. This historical Narration the Psalmist hints at in his imprecation, as is plain by that word quick or alive; Let them go down quick (or alive) into Hell; that is, let such wrath seize upon them, as seized upon Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, on whom the Earth closed, and they perished from among the Congregation. Again, when the Apostle makes promise to Saints in the behalf of Christ, what assistance they might expect from him in time of temptation, and what issue from it, he thus assures them; The God of peace shall tread Satan under your feet shortly (Rom. 16. 20.) Which plainly bears upon that first grand Promise, that (Christ) the seed of the Woman should break the Serpents head (Gen. 3. 15.) for it is by virtue of that act of Jesus Christ bruising the head of Satan, that Satan is trodden under our feet. As Christ bruised him under his own feet, so he will bruise, or tread him under our feet; the seed of the woman in person, as well as in their representative, shall break the Serpents head. Lastly, those words (Rom. 9. 16.) hold a clear correspondence with that story (Gen. 27.) concerning Jacob and Esau, So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy. He had said before that God loved Jacob and hated Esau; and concludes upon it, So then, it is not of him that willeth, &c. We may take notice in that famous piece of divine History, that much means was used that Jacob might obtain the blessing; Rebecca her heart was set upon it, she did what she could to procure the blessing for her younger Son, her will was wholly in it; and Jacob, he run for it too; for as soon as ever his mother had given him counsel, he ran presently to the flock and brought in a Kid to make the savoury meat for Isaac; now the Apostle Paul to advance the freeness of grace, doth not only instance in those two persons; but useth a phrase of speech which savours so much of that passage, that though he had not named the men, yet every man who knew the Scriptures must needs understand both of whom and of what he meant it; It is not of him that willeth, &c. that is, it was neither Rebecka's will to have it so, nor Jacob's haste (which appear'd in his running to the flock) to have it so, that gave him the blessing, but it was of God that shewed mercy. And as it was then, so it is now, though a man be as willing as Rebeckah, or though he make as much speed as Jacob for his blessing, yet all comes freely by the grace of God. Thus the frequent usage of Scripture shews us how much the Spirit of God delights to lead our thoughts (by the light of some one word) a great way back into the consideration of what had been done and written of old for our instruction. The words of the Text now under discussion (Whose foundation was overflown with a flood) are surely an allusion to some particular persons or action in the dayes of old, and they may be applied three wayes.

First, To the drowning of the whole world in the time of Noah by a flood, when the Lord opened the windows of Heaven, and overwhelmed both man and beast in those mighty waters, which universal judgment is (by way of eminence) called, The Deluge, or, The Flood, unto this very day.

Secondly, They may have respect to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, which Cities, though they were destroyed by fire, yet it was with a flood of fire. The Text saith expresly (Gen. 19. 24.) Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of Heaven, and he overthrew the Cities and all the plain, &c. They were overflown with a flood of fire.

Thirdly, The allusion may be carried to the destruction of Pharaoh and the Egyptians in the red Sea; they also were overflown with a flood. The waters of the red Sea which stood up as a wall for Israel to pass thorough, at the Command of God returning upon the Ægyptians, swallowed them up, them and their Chariots and their Horses. The enemy said (thus Moses describes that fatal overthrow, Exod. 15. 9, 10.) I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil: my lust shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them. Thus the enemy raged and foamed with revenge, like a tempestuous Sea, and had opened all the sluces of his will to overflow them. And when the enemy had thus breathed out his wrath in a four times repeated, I will; then the Lord did blow with his wind, the Sea covered them; They sank as lead in the mighty waters. So then the words may relate to any of those three signal Judgments, to the drowning of the old world with a flood of water, to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah with a flood of fire, or to the overthrow of Pharaoh and his Egyptian host in the red Sea.

Hunt locum à v. 15. ad v. 20. omnino respicere ad dimersionem Pharaones & Egyptiorum non levibus suadeor conjecturis. Pined.

But more particularly, for the explication of these words, whose foundation was overflown with a flood.

Whose foundation. This word Foundation taken in a proper sence, refers to a material building. And the foundation of any building is the stability and strength of it; by Foundation, in a metaphorical sence, we are to understand all those things by which the state of persons or things is upheld; and here whatsoever wicked men support and bear up themselves by, as a building is born up by the foundation, is to be understood as their foundation. So their Power, their Riches, their Councel, their Wisdom, their Friends and Confederates; whatsoever, I say, is the support of their worldly State, that's their foundation. And thus it is here said, their foundation was overflown, Ea omnia quæ illis velut fundamenti loco erant, in quibus spē & præsidium ponebant, &c. Mere.

With a flood. In two of the former instances, to which the allusion was made, their foundation was overflown by a flood properly taken. If we take it more generally for all wicked men, who at any time have been overthrown, we may say, that they have all been overflown by a flood metaphorically. For so

First, The displeasure of God, by what means or instrument soever put forth is called a flood; whether it be by Sword, or by Famine, or by Pestilence, it is a flood (Isa. 8. 7.) We read War compared to a flood, Now therefore behold the Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many (what were these waters? Even the King of Assyria, and all his glory; the King of Assyria with his Armies, in which he gloried, or which he counted his glory, were the waters of the river, strong and many) and he shall come up over all his channels, and go up over all his bands (that is, the former limits of his Dominion) And he shall pass thorough Judah, he shall overflow and go over. There the Sword is compared to a flood, or to a mighty river, which bears down all before it. The same Prophet speaks again in the same language (Isa. 59. 19.) When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a Standard against him; as if it had been said, The enemy shall come rushing in like a mighty torrent; but the Spirit of God, like a more mighty wind, shall blow and rush upon him, causing him to recoile and give back, or (as our Margent hath it) put him to flight. Again (Ezek. 13.) The Prophet foreshews the approaching calamity upon those who had seduced the Jews into a vain security; which is there called, the building of a wall with untempered morter. A wall he calls that prophesie, because it promised safety, and defence; but he calls it also a wall built with untempered morter, because that false prophesie was a weak prophesie, and should shortly fall. The manner how, he gives us in the notion of the Text (vers. 13.) Wherefore thus saith the Lord God, I will even rent it with a stormy wind in my fury, and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, &c. that is, wrath shall be upon it (the Babylonian Army was the special judgment in which that wrath was expressed) and that shall be an overflowing shower. Great and continual showers will try the strongest buildings, and quickly overthrow the weak. A wall of untempered morter is no match for a storm. As our Saviour also assures us in the close of his Sermon on the Mount (Mat. 7. 27.) where all those evils, troubles, afflictions, sorrows, and persecutions, whether sent upon such as are really godly, or only in name and outward profession, are called rain, floods, winds. So saith the Text, The rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon the house, and it fell, and great was the fall of it. While it stood, it stood to no purpose but for a shew; but when it fell, it fell to purpose, The fall thereof was great. Thus it is more then evident from Scripture phrase, that rains and floods signifie all sorts of afflicting evils; and therefore we need not restrain the word flood in the Text to a deluge of Elementary water, or of water in a proper sence, but we may enlarge it to any kind of afflicting evil or trouble whatsoever that falls upon man. And the Scripture is (I conceive) so frequent in the use of this metaphor of a flood, and of waters, where great calamities are set forth, for these two reasons.

First, To note the swiftness and suddenness of the judgements of God. Floods come often very suddenly, and rise not only beyond expectation, but before there is any the least expectation of them. Noah's flood was long foretold before it came; but when the time came, wherein it should come, it came at once. Though God give long warning of his judgments, yet most men are surprized with them, they come like a flood.

Secondly, To note the irresistibleness of the Judgments of God. Who or what can stand before mighty waters? Great floods do not only wash and over-flow all, but ruine and overthrow all, there's no resisting. Such are the Judgements of God, they are a flood both for their suddain rising and breaking in upon sinners, and likewise for their irresistible violence in breaking and ruining them.

Further, It is not to be passed by, that Eliphaz doth not only say, They were overflown, but, Their foundation was overflown with a flood. He calls it the overflowing of their foundation, to note, that they were totally or utterly ruined and overthrown: for when the foundation is destroyed, all is destroyed; destruction to the foundation is the worst of destructions. The cruel enemies of the Jews cryed, Rase it, rase it even to the foundation thereof (Psal. 137.7.) but to rase the foundation it self is more cruel then rasing to the foundation. When the Lord threatned a full and final destruction of those foolish Prophets who had seen vain visions for his people, he said (Ezek. 13. 14.) I will break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered morter, and bring it down to the ground, so that the foundation thereof shall be discovered, &c. that is, I will destroy it as far as destruction it self can go. There shall not only not a stone be left upon a stone of this building above ground, but even the under-ground stones shall not be left: The very foundation shall be opened and discovered. That which lyeth at the bottom, or the bottom it self of those flattering prophesies, all the wiles and secret wayes of them shall be revealed. David complains of those irreparable breaches made upon the civil state in this stile (Psal. 11.3.) If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do? The civil foundation of a Nation or People, is their Laws, and Constitutions, the order and power that is among them, that's the foundation of a People; and when once this foundation is destroyed, what can the righteous do? What can the best, the wisest in the world do in such a case? What can any man do, if there be not a foundation of Government left among men? There is no help nor answer in such a case, but that which follows in vers. 4. of the same Psalm; The Lord is in his holy Temple, the Lords throne is in heaven, his eyes behold, his eye lids try the children of men. As if he had said, in the midst of these confusions, when as it is said (Psal. 8. 5.) All the foundations of the earth are out of course; yet God keeps his course still, he is where he was and as he was, without variableness or shadow of turning. We read in the vision of the four Monarchies (Dan. 2. 34.) That the stone cut out without hands smote the Image upon his feet that were of Iron and Clay, and brake them to pieces. The stone did not strike the Image upon the head, or upon the breast, the golden head, the silver breast, &c. but upon the feet that were of Iron and Clay. Now the feet are to a natural body, as the foundation is to an Artificial body; a mans feet are the foundation of his body; if the feet be smitten and broken to pieces, the body must needs fall. And therefore as soon as ever it was said, That the stone brake the feet to pieces, the ruine of the whole Image is described in the immediately following words of the vision (vers. 35.) Then was the Iron, the Clay, the Brass, the Silver, and the Gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the Summer threshing floor, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them. The breaking of the feet, was the breaking up of the foundation, and so the breaking down of all. Whose foundation was overflown with a flood. Hence note,

First, Wicked men think themselves very sure, they have foundations, they lay foundations.

The people of God are sometimes over-conceited about the strength and stability of their worldly foundations. Holy David said, In his prosperity, I shall never be moved: Lord, by thy favour thou hast made my mountain to stand strong (Psal. 30. 6, 7.) And if a godly man may, by the strength of temptation, thus over-reckon the strength of an Earthly state; what may they do whose state, yea whose minds are altogether earthly? How often do they judge themselves wise and politick enough to lay for themselves an everlasting foundation in things which cannot last? And that they are so surely bottom'd in the favour of men, that they shall never be removed? Babylon thinks her self setled at this day upon such everlasting mountains, upon such perpetual hills of power and policy, that certainly her foundation shall never be overflown. Thus she spake her heart out, while she said in her heart (Rev. 18. 7.) I sit a Queen, and am no widdow, and shall see no sorrow. Babylon is bottom'd and foundation'd upon so many hills, that is, upon so many interests and advantages of strength, as render her (to her self) impregnable and unremoveable. And as this vain confidence bears up the Spirit of that Man of sin, so of very many sinful men, who presume they are upon a sure foundation, when indeed none but the godly mans foundation is sure (Prov. 10. 25.) As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more: but the righteous is an everlasting foundation. The wicked man supposeth himself founded as on a Rock of ages, an everlasting strength, such as the righteous man hath in God, or such as God is to a righteous man (Isa. 26. 3.) Yet as the whirlwind he passeth away, but the righteous is an everlasting foundation. We find not the Copulative word, is, expressed in the Hebrew, there 'tis only, but the righteous an everlasting foundation; so that I should rather read it thus, But the righteous have an everlasting foundation: wicked men seem to have, but the righteous man indeed hath an everlasting foundation. There is no earthly foundation everlasting; for all earthly things pass away, and are so far from lasting for ever, that they last but (as it were) for a little, for a moment. What then is this everlasting foundation? It is a foundation laid in heavenly things; the foundation which is laid in things above shall abide; the things which are not seen, and they only, are eternal (2 Cor. 4. 18.) but the strongest foundation laid in things below, endures but for a season; The things which are seen, are temporal, as the Apostle speaks in the same place. Such foundations are soon overflown with a flood. As will appear yet further in the next Observation; which take thus,

The flood and storm of Gods anger will overflow all the foundations, the strongest foundations of wicked men.

Their Riches, their Power, their Wisdom, their Councels, whatsoever they have imagined, laid and made for a foundation to themselves, either of honour or safety, shall be overflown and swept quite away; yea all their refuges laid together will prove but a refuge of lies (Isa. 28. 17.) Judgment also will I (saith the Lord) lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet; and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lyes, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place; that is, those places wherein they thought to hide and secure themselves against the overflowing scourge. A wicked man is in greatest danger when he thinks himself in greatest safety, and then most ready to fall when he saith in his own heart, or boasteth it out to others, that he is upon a sure foundation; for whatsoever opinion he hath of it, yet the truth is, his foundation is but sand; and (which makes his case more miserable) though he be told so, and others have found it so, yet he will not believe it. While (as the Prophet speaks, Isa. 44. 20.) He feedeth of ashes, a deceived heart hath turned him aside, that he cannot deliver his soul, nor say, is there not a lye, or (as the former Scripture hath it) a refuge of lies in my right hand. Only the righteous is, or hath (as Solomon speaks) an everlasting foundation. A righteous man hath two foundations which shall never be shaken, much less overthrown; whoso are setled on those foundations may be as confident as confidence it self.

The first of these two foundations is Gods eternal Decree, his Decree of Election, that's an unmoveable foundation, and that is the foundation upon which believers build their hopes. The Apostle (2 Tim. 2. 19, 20.) is proving that even in the house of God, that is, among the outward professors of the name of God, there are of all sorts, vessels of Gold and Silver, vessels also of Wood and of Earth; Some to honour, and some to dishonour; and when he had said of Himeneus and Philetus, that they had erred concerning the truth, saying that the resurrection is past already, ready, and so had overthrown the faith of some, vers. 18. He presently adds, What though it be thus, what though some men have fallen from their foundation, Yet the foundation of God standeth sure, having this Seal, The Lord knoweth who are his, vers. 19. Where we have, first, the foundation of God, namely, his decree of Election: Secondly, the Seal or assurance of it, as to him, even his own certain knowledge of the Elect, The Lord knoweth who are his. So that while hypocrites or meer verbal formal professors back-slide and Apostatize from the faith, yet the Elect are safe and stand fast in the purpose of God; and while many discover themselves to be vessels of dishonour in the house of God, Wood and Earth, of base and brittle materials; yet Saints, indeed, who are vessels of honour made of purest metal, of Gold and Silver, these shall abide for ever. He that is once a vessel of honour, shall alwayes be so, For the foundation of God standeth sure, having this Seal, The Lord knoweth who are his.

Secondly, As there is this more hidden foundation, upon which Saints are sure, and which no flood can overflow; so there is another sure foundation, and that is Jesus Christ, upon which Saints are built; and therefore the holy Prophet having discovered that refuge of lies which he threatens should be swept away by the overflowing scourge, subjoyns by way of Opposition in the next verse (Isa. 28. 16.) Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Sion for a foundation, a stone, a tryed stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation, and he that believeth shall not make hast. Whom the Prophet means by this sure foundation, the Apostle tells us expresly and by name (1 Cor. 3. 11.) Other foundation can no man lay then that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ; and they that are built on him the living Rock (as all Believers are) have eternal life, and shall never perish. This Christ himself teacheth us (Matth. 7. 24, 25.) Whosoever heareth these sayings (of mine) and doth them, I will liken him to a wise man that built his house upon a Rock. And what's the Rock that these wise men build upon? This Rock is Jesus Christ, he is the Rock of Ages; he fails not, nor can they fail who are in him; as it followeth, Then the rain descended, the floods came, the winds blew and beat upon the house, and it fell not, for it was founded on a Rock. Saints are lively stones, and they coming to Christ (by faith) who is a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God and precious, are built up a spiritual house (1 Pet. 2. 4, 5.) If this house should fall, Christ must fall too, for though Christ and his house are distinguished, yet they are not divided; Christ and his house are one: So then, though the flood of angry men, and of enraged Devils beat upon it, yet they shall return foaming out their own shame; and when they have done their worst, they shall but wash this house, leaving it somewhat more clean, but no whit unsetled. This is the glory and priviledge of Believers, that while the strongest foundations of the earth are overflown with a flood, they have a twofold foundation; that of Election in the Love of God, and that of Redemption in the Blood of Christ, which cannot be overflown by any the most violent and impetuous flood.

So then, ungodly men are miserable, when they appear most happy, and at their best estate are altogether vanity; for either their estate hath no foundation, or but such a foundation as cannot stand, and that is as bad or rather worse then none at all; it is better to have no appearance of strength, then to have nothing but an appearance of it.

Further, may we not from the opposite state of godly men (at least intimated in this, and toucht before) conclude, that they are happy when they appear most miserable? And that at their worst estate, they are altogether above uncertainty? For as they have a foundation, so such a foundation as will stand all storms and weathers; what can be added to their felicity, who are in an estate so good (in the nature of it) that they need not desire a change; and so sure in the foundation of it, that they need not fear a change, much less an overflowing flood?

Eliphaz proceeds to describe the particular wickedness of those men, or how they did express their wickedness; Whose foundation was thus overflown; They say unto God depart from us, &c.

VERS. 17, 18.

Which said unto God, Depart from us, and what can the Almighty do for them?
Yet he filled their houses with good things: but the counsel of the wicked is far from me.

IN the former context Eliphaz had charged Job with impiety against God, and called him to consider the dispensations of God in former times towards impious men; here he shews us what their impiety was, it was impiety hightned into blasphemy; the several abominations which were in their hearts, brake out at their lips, and were vomited out of their mouths in black coller, in coller as black as Hell.

Vers. 17. Which said unto God, Depart from us? &c.

These words are filled with the very spirit of malice against God himself; and we have the same breathed out in the same language in the former Chapter at the fourteenth verse: there the Reader may find them explicated, and I shall add somewhat for a further explication here.

Which said to God, Depart from us.

To this height of madness do some wicked men arise; their spirits being big with sin, they bring forth or belch out this monster of words; They say to God, Depart from us. They (as it were) send God a Writ of Ejectment, they do not pray or entreat God to depart from them; but with as much rudeness and incivility, as unholiness and prophaneness, Say unto God, Depart from us. 'Tis a word of command, from man, but such a one as breaks all the commandments of God. Moses (Numb. 16. 26.) beseeches the people, saying, Depart I pray you from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs; but here we have wicked men not praying God to depart, but bidding him, they say, Depart from us. David speaks to the wicked (Psal. 119. 115.) Depart from me ye evil doers, for I will keep the Commandments of my God; he bids them begone, he would not give them the least welcom or entertainment. And so Jesus Christ is described speaking to the wicked in the day of Judgment (Matth. 7. 23.) Depart from me, away, get you out of my presence, I will not have to do with you, I will do nothing for you; Depart. His is a word of command, indeed, which though they have no will to obey, yet they shall obey it whether they will or no. Thus in the present Text wicked men presume to say to God himself, Depart from us, &c.

Hence note, First, That wicked or meer carnal men, have some appearances and impresses of the presence of God upon their spirits.

They could not say to God, Depart from us, had they not some impressions and notions of God, of the will and Law of God, of the truth and power of God upon them. They who are alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, do yet feel a presence of God with them (Act. 17. 27.) That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us. Take mankind in general, good and bad, believers and infidels, there is a nearness of God unto them, unto them all: and that not only a nearness of God in what the Apostle there speaks of, common preservation (vers. 28.) In him we live, and move, and have our being; or of natural communications, of which the Apostle speaks there also, From him we receive life, and breath, and all things (vers. 25.) But further, God is with them, by a twofold light; first, by a light of Direction; secondly, by a light of Conviction. All have a light of Direction, first, by the Law written in their hearts; the Apostle is express for this (Rom. 2. 14.) For when the Gentiles (he means it of Gentiles unconverted) which have not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law; these having not the Law (that is formally published and preached to them) are a Law unto themselves. Which shew the work of the Law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, &c. And as all have a light of direction from the Law written in their hearts, or in the book of Conscience; so also, secondly, they have a light of direction from the Law of the creation, or from that which is written of God in the Book of the creature. The same Apostle makes this the ground of the righteousnes of God in that dreadful Revelation of his wrath against all ungodlines and unrighteousnes of men (be they who they will) who hold the truth in unrighteousnes, because that which may be known of God is manifested in them (or to them) for God hath shewed it to them. But how or where hath God shewed them this? The Apostle answers in the next verse (Rom. 1. 20.) For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse. So that though all men have not a light of direction from God so powerful as to change them and make them holy, yet they have a light so clear and full as is enough to make them guilty. And when they refuse to follow this light of direction in doing what is right, then follows that other light of conviction, their consciences troubling them (or as the Apostles phrase is, Rom. 2. 15.) their thoughts accusing them, because they have done that which is not right. This presence of God is common to all men, to the worst of men, and this is it which provokes them to say to God, Depart from us. And this is argument enough to stop the mouth of the Atheist, who saith in his heart, there is no God; when as yet he cannot stop the mouth of his own conscience from saying there is a God, while he saith (and this he alwayes saith, either in plain terms, or in that which is equivalent) to God, Depart from me. And from hence we may observe,

Secondly, That the presence, and manifestations of God to wicked men, are a trouble to them.

None are troubled with the nearnes of God to them, but they who are far from him; all natural men are far from God in state and in heart, and God is near all natural men, either in his word or in his works, either speaking his mind to their ears, or sending it in to their consciences. This light of God is not only not pleasing but vexing. They who love darknes cannot abide the light of direction, much les the light of conviction; so that if ever God be near in their mouth, near in their ear, or near in their conscience, yet as the Prophet speaks (Jer. 12. 2.) He is far from the reins; that is, though they speak, hear or think of God, yet they delight not in him, they have no desirings, no breathings after him; yea the more he offers himself to them, the more weary are they of him. What David spake in a temptation, they speak from their disposition (Psal. 73. 3.) I remembered God and was troubled. It troubles them when they are put in mind of God, it troubles them when God comes into their mind. God is holy, and they are unholy. The holy God must needs be a burden to an unholy heart. The Prophet puts the Question (Amos 3. 3.) Can two walk together except they be agreed? they cannot. That company is alwayes unpleasant to us, which is unsuitable to us; they who are not at one, are best pleased when they are furthest asunder. The wayes of God are grievous to wicked men, much more is God himself; they say what a wearisomnes is it to serve the Lord, they say his yoak is heavy, and his burden insupportable; the very outside of heavenly and spiritual work is burdensom to them; how then can they maintain communion with God (in truth of spirit) who is a Spirit, and will be worshipped in Spirit and in truth?

Thirdly note, Natural men are blind and foolish, they know not wherein their own happines doth consist, they forsake and throw away the mercies offered them, for lying vanities.

They who are not taught of God are full of mistaken and false principles, among which this is a principal one; They suppose they can do well enough without God, whereas indeed there is nothing can do us good without him, who is the chief good. Now, that the natural man believes he can do well enough without God, is plain from this abominable and hateful motion which such make to God in the Text, Depart from us. No man would desire God to depart from him, if this perswasion did abide upon his heart, That he could not subsist without him, or that he depended upon God for his subsistence. Therefore this is their opinion (though possibly they are as far from acknowledging it, as they are from the true knowledge and love of God.) That they can do well enough alone, that they can stand upon their own bottom without God, yea that they are self-sufficient, as God is; for whosoever doth not see an emptines and insufficiency in himself, and so place his All in God, makes himself a God. This is the way of wicked men, and this their way is their folly (as the Psalmist speaks, Psal. 49. 13.) Though their posterity approve their sayings. Who but they? They can maintain their being, yea their well-being without God; they can live and live happily whether he will or no. Surely if they thought they were beholding to him, either for being or well-being, either for life, or a happy life, they had never been heard saying to God, Depart from us. And if this be a truth that they have said so, and say so still every day; we need not stay to prove this a truth, that they shew their blindnes and foolishnes in saying so. Is not he foolish who would have the Sun depart from him, which enlightens him? Or who would have the Shield depart from him, which protects him? Or who bids the fountain be gone which gives him drink? God is all this to all men in some degree or other, and he promiseth himself such in the highest and best degree to all such as walk uprightly, even to be their Sun, their Shield, their Fountain, their Spring. Then, can folly it self utter more foolishnes then this, To say to God, Depart from us? Further, how foolish are they to refuse that, as if it were a hurt to them, which Saints who have the true wisdom, have prayed for; and still do pray for, as the greatest blessing and priviledge, The presence of God with them? How foolish are they who ask and desire that as a blessing, which God the only wise God threatens as the forest curse? (Jer. 6. 8.) Be instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee, lest I make thee a Land desolate, not inhabited. Utter desolation is the consequent, yea the effect of the Lords departure from a Land; and when he ceaseth in regard of his favourable presence to inhabit a Land, either none shall inhabit it, or none shall have a comfortable habitation in it. The Lord threatens this departure as the last and forest, or as the sum of all his judgements; and wicked men desire this, as if to be without God, were the chief or sum of their enjoyments. See another instance of this folly, among all the threatnings of God against sinful men, this is one of the greatest, that he will take away his Gospel, and the light of his Word from them; yet this a wicked man desireth, let the Gospel go, let the light of the Word go; he wisheth it gone, 'tis but a trouble to him, he is sick of it, it is a death to him. The best of good things is refused, and the worst of evils chosen by those that are evil. As their understanding is so blinded and distempered, that they call evil good, and good evil; that they put darknes for light, and light for darknes; that they put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter (Isa. 5. 20.) So their will and affections are so perverted, that they choose and embrace darknes for light, evil for good, and that which is most bitter, for that which is sweeter then the honey and the honey comb.

Fourthly observe, Wicked men are not only foolish, but wild and furious.

See at what a rate they speak, even as if they had God at their command; They say to God, Depart; as if God could not be where he pleased, as if God were at their limitting, and disposing. Here's madnes, like madnes it self. As there is madnes in the heart of man in the enjoyment of the creature (I said of laughter it is madnes, saith Solomon) Some are so over-acted with joy and laughter, in their creature-enjoyments, that whereas laughter is the proper passion of a rational creature, there is nothing more irrational then their laughter; 'tis plain down-right madnes. Now (I say) as some carnal men are mad in their manner of enjoying the creature, so they are more mad, in refusing the enjoyments of God the Creator. Who can tell how mad they are who desire God to depart from them? They are mad to purpose who would put God from them, yet they more, who think they can.

Fifthly note, That the godly and the wicked have quite contrary both desires and fears. What

What are the desires and fears of a wicked man? he desires to have God depart, he is afraid of the presence of God: what are the desires of a godly man? he desires nothing more then the presence of God; he sayes as Moses (Exod. 33. 15.) If thy presence go not with me, carry me no further; I desire to be no where, but where God manifests himself to be; let me see the day of my departure out of the world, rather then the day of Gods departure from me in the world; let riches go, let liberty go, let friends and relations go, so God stay with me. All company is solitarinesse to me, all fulnesse is emptinesse to me, and the most populous City worse then a desolate wilderness to me, where I find not the presence of God with me. I fear nothing like this, the departure of God from me. I read indeed (Luke 5. 8.) that Peter once said to Christ, Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord. But the reason was not because he was weary of the presence of Christ, but because he thought himself altogether unworthy of the presence of Christ. And therefore at another time when many of Christs Disciples went back and walked no more with him; and hereupon Christ said to the twelve, Will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of Eternal Life (Joh. 6. 68.) He who would not go from Christ, could not indeed desire that Christ should go or depart from him. They who have tasted how gracious the Lord is, can never totally depart from God, nor can they at all bear it, that God should depart from them. Thus the Church complains (Jer. 14. 9.) Why shouldest thou be as a stranger in the Land, and as a wayfairing man that turneth aside to tarry for a night? Why shouldest thou be as a man astonished, as a mighty man that cannot save? yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name, leave us not: Whatsoever thou doest to us, do not leave us; let any evil come, but do not thou go; let sword come, let famine come, let plague come, but do not thou depart; leave us not. Thus the Saints cling about a departing God, while wicked men are willing he should depart. And considering the opinion which these wicked men had of God, 'tis no wonder though they press him to depart; for what should God do with them, if he can do nothing for them, or do them no good: Such was their apprehension of God, as appears in the next clause.

And what can the Almighty do for them?

They should rather have said, What cannot the Almighty do for them? If the question be put, what the Almighty can do? The answer is at hand, he that is Almighty, can do any thing; yet these wretches say, What can the Almighty do for them? Almightinesse it self is questioned as weaknesse, and omnipotency as impotency by unbelievers.

Et quid operabitur omnipotens? Heb.

From the general sence of this Infidels question.

First observe, That worldly wicked men have low, and slight thoughts of God.

It is said of a wicked man (Psal. 10. 4.) God is not in all his thoughts; that is, he is in none of his thoughts, or God is not at all in all his thoughts. But is any man so void of God, that God is not in all his thoughts? Can any man utterly extinguish or blot the thoughts of God out of his heart? Is not the notion of a God written with indelible Characters upon the heart of man by nature? If not, how is the Law written there by nature? I answer, wicked men have thoughts, and cannot but have thoughts of God. But, first, They like not to retain God in their thoughts, or (which is the same) in their knowledge (Rom. 1. 28.) Secondly, The thoughts which they have of God, are unworthy of God; while they think of God, they think below God, and so indeed their thoughts are not at all the thoughts of God. While we think of God otherwise then he is, and hath revealed himself to be, we do not think of the God that made us, but we make an Idol-god in our own thoughts. Now wicked men think either that God hath no strength, power, goodnesse and wisdom, or can do little with what he hath; What can the Almighty do for them? They who are afar off from God by unbelief, are not able to discern his power, his goodnesse, his wisdom, his faithfulnesse, his All-sufficiency: They neither understand what God affirms of himself, nor give credit to what he hath promised unto us. We say of those things, which appear more then they are, that they affect more afar off then near at hand; but those things which are more then they appear, affect more when they are nigh, then when they are afar off. God is infinitely more, then he appears; and he being near to those who believe, affects them wonderfully: But God is far from unbelievers, and they are far off or in a state of fartheſt distance from God, therefore they are not affected with him; but say, who is God? What is Gods power? What is his Almightinesse? We have heard much of him, but we see little in him. They look upon God, as if he were like the Idols (described, Psal. 115. 4, 5, 6, 7.) Who have eyes, and see not; ears, and hear not; hands, and handle not, &c. All the attributes of God, that he is Almighty, Unchangeable, &c. are but a sound of words or empty titles in their ears. A believer can make a living out of any attribute of God; for when the Scripture saith, he lives by faith, the meaning is, he lives upon the goodnesse, mercy and power of God, revealed in the promise, and laid hold on by faith. Thus the just live by faith upon God, but the wicked and unbelievers cannot live upon those terms; they see little or nothing in God to make a living of, and therefore they say, What can the Almighty do for them?

Secondly note, That carnal men count the service of God unprofitable.

What can God do for them? If they serve him, what profit is it? His is a lean service, they shall but starve themselves by attending upon him, and undo themselves by doing his work. Thus they said in the former Chapter, and so they say again in this. The carnal man accounts nothing good, but that which is outwardly good: Who will shew us any good? (Psal. 4. 6.) they know that all good cometh through the hand of God, that it cometh in at the door of the promise; they can look no further then they see, and therefore because they see no profit, they look for none; they do not see that God doth any thing for them, and therefore they conclude he cannot: What can the Almighty do for them?

Thirdly note, That, The spirits of worldly men are meerly mercenary.

If they do any thing for God, or at the command of God, they do it only upon hopes of reward, they never obey commandments for the holinesse that is in them, but for the benefit that comes by them. What can the Almighty do for them? As when Judas betrayed Jesus Christ, he went out with a mercenary spirit to do that wickednesse; What will you give me, and I will betray him? So when a carnal man serves Jesus Christ, he saith, What will he give me? What can he do for me? He cannot serve God for nought, that is, freely, as Satan charged Job in the beginning of this book; Job serveth thee, said Satan, because thou hast done so much for him, because thou hast served his turn, and made a hedge about him; this was Satans slander upon that good man; but 'tis no slander to say so of carnal men, Do they serve God for nought? They do not, they cannot; if they may gain by godlinesse, they will do somewhat, which shall have a shew of godlinesse; profit will make any thing pass with, and pleasing to a carnal mind, though in it self it be never so displeasing. Such is the nobleness of the people of God, that though there be a reward in serving of him; yet they are ready to serve him without reward, they can serve him upon a bare command, abstract from promises and profit; they can obey God as a Creator, though he should not be a rewarder. Godlinesse is profitable for all things, and hath the promise both of this life, and of that which is to come; yet a gracious heart loves godlinesse more then profitableness, and eyes the work of God more then his reward.

Further, for the opening of these words; some read thus; What can the Almighty do against them? The Hebrew particle stands indifferently to both, and may be translated for, or against; in which sence we find it in the thirty fifth of this Book, vers. 6, 7. If thou sinnest what dost thou against him? that is, what hurt dost thou to God? Thy sin cannot reach, or wound him, what dost thou against him? Thus here, They say to the Almighty, depart from us, and what can the Almighty do against them? Surely the Almighty mighty is not able to hurt us; from him we expect no good, and from him we fear no evil. Were not these mighty men think you, who thought the Almighty could not match them? These were mighty men indeed, Giants, sons of Anak no doubt they were, but Giants in wickedness. And so this reading gives us a further character or discovery of a wicked mans Spirit.

Si peccaveris quid ei nocebis? proprie, quid ei facies?

Hence observe, Some wicked men have this presumption, that let God do his worst, he cannot hurt them.

I find in Scripture a threefold false and presumptuous apprehension, which evil men have of God while they are doing evil.

First, Some presume that God will protect them from evil while they do evil (Mich. 3. 11.) The heads thereof judge for reward, and the Priests thereof teach for hire, and the Prophets thereof divine for money; yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us? none evil can come upon us. These were such as made it their business to break the Law of God, yet they thought God would not suffer any trouble to break in upon them.

Secondly, Others presume that, at least, God will not be so severe as to inflict those evils which he hath threatned. The old world was threatned with a Deluge, but they could not believe that God would make good his Word, they even mockt at the credulity and simplicity of Noah, to see him build that great Ship or Ark upon the dry Land, as if he meant to sail his vessel without water: As for them, they neither believed nor feared a flood. So they (Isa. 5. 19.) will put the Lord to a trial, Let him hasten his work that we may see it; let us see what he will do. As if they had said to the Prophet, you told us what he would do, how severe he would be, what meaneth all your talk, we would see something done. What will the Almighty do against us? Surely nothing, he is not so strict as you make him. The Prophet describes the worst of men, the men setled on their lees, speaking thus (Zeph. 1. 12.) They say in their heart, the Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil; that is, he will neither reward nor punish, he will neither help nor hurt. To say either of these is alike dishonourable unto God; to say either, much more both (though indeed to say either is to say both) is to say, not only that God is neither to be loved nor feared, but that he is not at all. It is the glory of God to do the one as well as to do the other, and unless he could do both, he could do neither (Isa. 45. 7.) I form the light, and create darkness (the darkness of trouble is of God as much as the light of comfort) I make peace and create evil; the evil of punishment is as much the creature of God as peace is, and God doth as much appear a Creator in the one as in the other; the doing of this kind of evil doth as much shew the power, and providence of God, as the doing of good; yet those in the Prophet said the Lord will do neither; He will neither do good, neither will he do evil.

Thirdly, Those in the Text were raised to a higher pitch of presumption then both the former; for they said, what can the Almighty do against us? As if they had said, let him do his worst, we fear him not; to think that God will shield us from the evil which others threaten, or that he will not bring that evil upon us which himself hath threatned when we do evil, are very high actings of presumption: But to think that God can do nothing against us, to think that the Arm of God is shorter then that it can reach us, or weaker then that it can over power us; to think that we have out-grown Divine Justice, and are too big or too strong to be dealt with by the Almighty, is presumption to madness; wo to those sinners who secure themselves in the goodness of God to them; more wo to those who secure themselves in Gods neglect of them; but above all, wo is their portion who secure themselves as it were in the weakness of God, even while in words they acknowledge his power, saying, What can the Almighty do against us?

Thirdly, Others read the words thus; They say to the Almighty, Depart from us, and what hath the Almighty done against them? That is, what hurt hath God done them? They are troubled at the presence of God; but what cause hath God given them to be troubled at his presence? And then we may connect these words with the words of vers. 18. What hath God done against them? yea he filled their houses with good things; that's all the dammage he did them? This is a fair sence, and consistent with the Original Text: leaving the Reader to his choice, I shall only give the observation which riseth clearly from this.

God never giveth wicked men any just cause to be weary of him.

He never doth them any wrong, and he often gives them many a blessing, and have they any reason to bid him depart? He is usually very patient towards them, and doth never bring any evil upon them till they have doubly deserved it; and have they any reason to be displeased at that? Yea whensoever he punisheth them in this world, he punisheth them less then their sins deserve; indeed there is a punishment behind adæquate and commensurate to their sin, but they shall never be punished beyond what or more then their sin deserves. Seeing then their punishment in the next life, though it will be great beyond imagining, yet shall not be great beyond deserving; and all their punishments in this life are less then the demerit of their sin (As was penitentially confessed by Ezra in the name of the Jews after they had been broken by the sword, and brought into captivity for their sin, Chap. 9. 13. Seeing (I say) 'tis but thus with them when 'tis worst with them) What hath the Almighty done against them? Is not all their destruction (meritoriously) from themselves?

Again, How much soever God punisheth them in this life, they have no reason to complain, or say to God, Depart from us: for even those punishments are messages from God to awaken them out of their sins, and so to prevent worser punishments; therefore when God perceived that stubborn people going on in their sins, he telleth them he will smite them no more, as implying that it was his favour to smite them (Isa. 1. 5.) Why should ye be smitten any more, ye will revolt more and more. Surely then such have no reason to say to God, Depart from us, when he smites them, as if he did them either hurt or wrong, seeing he smites them, that they might return unto him; those judgments of God are a mercy, which are sent to teach man his duty. Now if the judgments of God have sometime mercy in them, and never have any injury in them, what hurt or injury can there be to man in the service of God? Hath the Almighty done any thing against them, whom he lovingly invites to the doing of his will? And yet some complain of wrong when they are only called to do what is right, and cry out as if God hurt them, when he doth but govern them. The Lord calls his murmuring people to account about this thing (Mich. 6. 3.) O my people, what have I done to thee (that is, what hurt, what wrong have I done unto thee) and wherein have I wearied thee, testifie against me; as if he had said, thou hast nothing to bring against me in evidence, unless it be my kindness, as it follows (vers. 4.) For I brought thee up out of the Land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of servants, and I sent before thee, Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. O my people, remember, &c. Consider all my dealings with thee, all the deliverances I have wrought for thee, all the Statutes and Ordinances, all the Laws and Commandments which I have given thee, and then let thy Conscience speak; what have I done unto thee, which is an evil to thee? Or wherein have I wearied thee, in the things which I have required thee to do? I have done many good works for thee, and I have commanded thee to do many works, such works as are not only good in themselves, but good for them who do them; for which of these is it that thou art weary of me? There is not that wicked man in the world but God may say to him, what have I done to thee, or what have I called thee to do, that thou shouldest be weary of me? That thou shouldest desire me to depart from thee? Thus if we read the words in this latter sence; What hath the Almighty done against them? They carry a reproof of their ingratitude against God, who had not hurt them, yea who had done them good. If we read the words in the second sence, What can the Almighty do against them? They carry a high contempt and slight of his power, as if God could do them no hurt. If we read the words in the first sence according to our translation (which I rather pitch upon) they carry (upon contrary terms) a like contempt of the power of God, as if he could could do them no good; What can the Almighty do for them?

Verſ. 18. Yet he filled their houſes with good things.

The Hebrew is, And he filled their houſes with good things; we tranſlate yet, which better clears the meaning and ſcope of the Text, according to our reading of the former verſe; They ſay to God, depart from us, and what can the Almighty do for them? Yet he filled their houſes with good things; as if he had ſaid, they thought God could do nothing for them, whereas indeed he did all for them; all the good they had, they had it from God, He filled their houſes; that is, he gave them abundance; he did not only put ſome good things into their houſes, but he filled their houſes with good things, they had a plentiful eſtate; God gave them a rich portion in the good things of this world, his Corn, his Wine, his Oyl, his Flax, his Gold, his Silver, were their portion. He filled them, and they rebelled againſt him; he beſtowed many benefits upon them, which they abuſed to ſerve their luſts, and vainly triumphed in what he freely gave them, as if they had been ſpoils forcibly taken from him.

Horum quidem domos ipſe implevérat bonis. Jun. q. d. Dei beneficiis abuſi ſunt impii & tanquam de ſpoliis Dei ipſius triumpháverunt. Jun.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That God doth them good that are evil.

Chriſt perſwaded his hearers (and us in them) upon this account to love their enemies, That they and we might be the children of our father which is in Heaven; For he maketh his Sun to riſe on the evil and on the good, and ſendeth rain on the juſt, and on the unjuſt (Matth. 5.45.) As God hath ſome peculiar people, ſo he hath ſome peculiar bleſſings, and good things, which the world in common ſhares not in; but he hath a ſort of bleſſings, and good things, which are the common ſhare of the world; Rain and Sun, Fat and Sweet, Gold and Silver are ſuch good things as their hearts and houſes are often filled with, whoſe hearts and houſes are empty of goodneſs. Theſe good things God gives them, who know no more why he gives them, then they did, why he did not ſuddenly bring evil upon them; of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 2.4.) Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance? when God doth good to thoſe that are evil, whether it be by beſtowing good upon them, or by withholding evil, he doth it uſually for one of, or both theſe reaſons.

Firſt, That they might repent and live; knoweſt thou not what Meſſage the goodneſs of God brings? Speaks it not thus, Repent, repent? yea doth not divine goodneſs (taking thee by the hand) lead thee to repentance?

Secondly, The Lord doth them good who continue in the evil of ſin, that they might be left inexcuſable when the evil of wrath and puniſhment falls upon them; every mouth ſhall be ſtopped, and all the world of wicked ones become guilty before God, when they remember that they ſinned, and went on to ſin againſt the God that fed them, againſt the God that cloathed them, againſt the God that filled their houſes with good things, and protected them in the uſe and injoyment of thoſe good things, with which he had filled their houſes.

Secondly, In that he doth not only give them good things, but filled their houſes with good,

Obſerve, God giveth great portions of good things to wicked men.

They have not only enough to live upon, but they have enough to live comfortably upon; they have not only enough to live upon themſelves, but they have enough to lay up for their children after them; the Lord is not only good, but he is liberal and bountiful (in its kind) to the worſt of men: they whoſe hearts are ſhut to him, his hand is open to them; he is inlarged towards them who are ſtreightned towards him: And this is added not only to render the goodneſs of God more glorious, but the ſin of man more ſinful and odious in our eyes. Whence obſerve, Thirdly, Sin hath by ſo much the greater evil in it, by how much it is committed againſt the greater goodneſs.

It is a horrible wickedneſs to ſay to God depart from us, though he empty our houſes of all good things; but it is much more horrible wickedneſs, to ſay ſo when he filleth our houſes with good things. What? When God hath filled our houſes, ſhall we kick him out of doors? This was the ſin of Jeſurun, that when he waxed fat kicked, as Moſes ſaith (Deut. 32 15.) Thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs; Then he forſook God that made him, and lightly eſteemed the rock of his ſalvation. Their ſin is great who lightly eſteem God while he makes them lean; but how ſinful is their ſin, who ſlight God that hath made them fat? As good things received, bind us ſtronger unto duty; ſo good things abuſed, bind us ſtronger under guilt.

Fourthly, As we connect theſe words with the latter branch of the former verſe; What can the Almighty do for them? Yet he filled their houſes with good things. We may take this Obſervation,

Though carnal men receive many good things from God, yet they know him not as the fountain of them.

They who are evil cannot own God purely, either in good or evil. It is but ſeldom that they ſay, with that wicked King, This evil is of the Lord (2 Kings 6.33.) And it is ſeldomer that they ſay, This good is of the Lord. They ſay, what good doth God for us? Even while he filleth their houſes with good things. Indeed the beſt of Saints receive many good things from God which they know not of; they receive many ſecret mercies, ſecret I mean not only to others, but to themſelves; and ſo they are not able to give God the glory of them diſtinctly, becauſe they have not a diſtinct knowledge of them. But all the good things which the wicked have are to them of an unknown original. Though they know what they have, yet they know not from whence or from whom they have what they have; they know not who feeds them, who cloaths them, who provides for them: yea though they make many formal acknowledgments of this, and will tell you of Gods goodneſs to them; yet really they know it not, nor do they cordially acknowledge it. The Lord complains of his people about this (Iſa. 1.3.) The Ox knoweth his owner, and the Aſs his Maſters crib (he upbraids them not only as below other men, but as below the beaſts, as if the reaſonleſs creature had acted more rationally then they) but Iſrael doth not know, my people do not conſider: What was it they did not know, nor conſider? They knew not nor conſidered what the Ox and the Aſſe knew and conſidered; The Ox knoweth his owner, he knoweth that his Maſter feeds him, as well as works him. Thus alſo the Aſs knoweth his Maſters crib; as he knoweth that his Maſter imployeth him; ſo he knoweth that his Maſter provideth for him. The dull Aſs takes notice of the crib, and knows where and by whom he receiveth good; but ye my people know not me, ye do not conſider him that feeds you; For I have nouriſhed and brought up children, and they have rebelled againſt me, they never honoured me as the fountain and founder of their felicity. The Prophet Hoſea reproves the ſame ſottiſhneſs and blindneſs in that people (Chap. 2.8,9.) For ſhe did not know that I gave her Corn, and Wine, and Oyl, and multiplied her Silver and Gold, which they prepared for Baal. Therefore I will return and take away her corn in the time thereof. As if the Lord had ſaid, I will make them know that I can take theſe things away, ſeeing they would not know, or at leaſt not acknowledge that I am he who gave them. Carnal men attribute their good things, and the filling of their houſes with them to any thing rather then to God: they thank their friends or their good fortune: they thank themſelves, their policy, their induſtry, for what they have: they aſcend not up to God in thankfulneſs for what they have: they who ſay, What can the Almighty do for them? How ſhould they acknowledge, that the Almighty hath done any thing for them? The Prophet (Hab. 1.16.) ſpeaks of men whoſe portion was fat, and their meat plenteous; but to whom did they refer all this? Whom did they acknowledge for their benefactor, or as the cauſe of thoſe great ſucceſſes? The Prophet tells us, They ſacrificed to their nets, and burnt incenſe to their drags. The words carry an alluſion to fiſhing, in which Work or Art, nets and drags are the inſtruments of the fiſher-man; ſo that to ſacrifice to the net or to the drag, is to give the honour and thanks of all our attainments to ſecond cauſes, and creature helps, to our own wit, wit, power, and induſtry, &c. To theſe ſaith the Prophet they ſacrificed, that is, they honoured them in the place or ſtead of God: Sacrifice is proper and peculiar to God, and therefore he that offers ſacrifice to any thing, makes it his god, or puts it in the place of God; they who thank themſelves for the good they have, are a god to themſelves. And thus we find the Aſſyrian aſcribing all to his own power (Iſa. 10. 14.) By the ſtrength of my hand I have done it, and by my wiſdom, for I am prudent; and I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treaſures, and I have put down the Inhabitants like a valiant man; he did not think that the Lord did it by his hand, but (ſaith he) by the ſtrength of my hand I have done it: my right hand is my God, my wiſdom is my god. Theſe, theſe, have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treaſures. See how the Lord checks this inſolency (verſ. 15.) Shall the ax boaſt it ſelf againſt him that heweth therewith? Or ſhall the ſaw magnifie it ſelf againſt him that ſhaketh it? Men (I grant) are living inſtruments, yet they can do no more then inſtruments without life (the ax and the ſaw) unleſs God act them, or act by them. An ax or a ſaw can do as much without man, as man can do without God; yet vain proud man is as full of boaſting as if he could do, or had done all alone.

Fifthly obſerve, That the portion of wicked men lyeth all on this ſide Heaven, and heavenly things.

God filleth their houſes with good things, but they are the good things of this life; they have nothing that reacheth to eternal life. They have nothing that concerns pardon of ſin, or grace, much leſs have they glory for their portion (Act. 14. 16, 17.) God did not leave himſelf without witneſs (among the Heathen Nations) in that he did good, and gave rain from Heaven, and fruitful ſeaſons, filling their hearts with food and gladneſs; ſo much they received from God, as filled them with food for their bodies, and made their lives comfortable; but no more, that was all they had. As Abraham in the parable tells the rich man in Hell (Luke 16.25.) Son, remember that thou in thy life time haſt had thy good things. And what were the good things which he formerly had? We have an anſwer at verſ. 19. He was cloathed in purple and fine linnen, and fared deliciouſly every day. As the Pſalmiſt is expreſs (*Pſal.*17. 14.) that the men of this world have their portion in this life, ſo, his purpoſe is to ſhew, that they have their portion in the things of this life; for he adds, Whoſe bellies thou fillest with thy hid treaſures, that is, with thoſe treaſures of corn, wine, and oyl, which are virtually hidden in the Earth, and brought forth by the Earth. God fills the bellies of the wicked, but he fills the Spirits of the godly; he fills the former with the hidden treaſures of the Earth, he fills none but the latter with the hidden treaſures of Heaven.

Laſtly note, That the gifts of God even in temporal things are free and undeſerved.

Not only are ſpiritual gifts and graces, together with eternal life undeſerved, but even temporals, and the things of this life. The Lord gives them unto his enemies, to thoſe that ſay to him, depart from us; and what do theſe deſerve at his hands, but ſtripes and death? He gave Chriſt to us while we were moſt unworthy of him; when we were yet enemies Chriſt died for us; ſinners do no more deſerve bread then they deſerve Chriſt; we no more deſerve the comforts of this life then eternal life; the one is of free grace to the elect, and the other is of bounty and goodneſs to the wicked. The old Egyptians (as ſome writers report them) were careful to confeſs the undeſervedneſs of thoſe outward favours, the plenty and abundance of corn and cattel, with which Egypt was ſtored; in teſtification whereof they every year brought into the Temple of their Idol Serapis, a meaſure ſhewing how high the river Nilus roſe and overflowed its banks (for Egypt being a flat Country, is watred by the overflowings of Nilus) and by the riſing of thoſe waters they could (very probably) prognoſticate the plenty or ſcarcity of the year enſuing. And they therefore took an exact account how many cubits high the river ſwell'd, leaving it in the Temple of Serapis, thereby acknowledging (as ſome conceive) that their Idol god was the beſtower of all that plenty, or (as Eliphaz here ſpeaks) that he had filled their houſes with good things.

But the Counſel of the wicked is far from me.

We had theſe words before (Chap. 21. 16.) Job made uſe of them there, and here Eliphaz, therefore I ſhall add but little for explication in this place. In general know, they are a proverbial ſpeech, by which the abhorrence of our ſpirits concerning either things or perſons is ſet forth to the utmoſt; as when we ſay to any man, be gone, depart from me, or as Chriſt to Satan, Get thee behind me, we ſhew our vehement deteſtation of his perſon. So when a man ſaith, ſuch or ſuch a thing is far from me, his meaning is, he utterly deteſts it, or that the thing is the very abomination of his ſoul. Therefore while Eliphaz ſaith, The counſel of the wicked is far from me, it is, as if he had ſaid, I cannot indure to have any thing to do either with the wicked, or with their counſel; O my ſoul come not thou into their ſecret, unto their aſſembly; O mine honour be not thou united (as dying Jacob beſpake his ſons Simeon and Levi, Gen. 49. 6.)

Puto Vulgarem eſſe dicendi modum, quo homines aliquid execrantur & à ſe arceri longiſſime jubent; Qualia ſunt, apage, avertat Deus. Pined.

But what is the counſel of the wicked? Their counſel may be taken, firſt, for that diſhonourable opinion which they held of God, that he could do nothing either for them or againſt them. I (ſaith Eliphaz) am of another mind, of another faith and perſwaſion. Their counſel is far from me who either deny the providence of God, or think they can hide themſelves from the eye of his providence; I believe that his eye beholdeth all, and that his hand worketh whatſoever pleaſeth him.

Secondly, Others by Counſel underſtand the ſcope of wicked men; ſo Calvin reads, the intent of the wicked is far from me; I have other purpoſes and deſigns then they have; The plowing of the wicked (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 21. 4.) is ſin; that is, the ſtirring and plotting of his mind to get his deſires ſatisfied is ſinful; I deſire not (ſaith Eliphaz) to put my hand to their plow. The counſel of the wicked is far from me.

Thirdly, As the deſign and plot, ſo the courſe and way of the wicked is far from me. The counſel of a man is put for the means by which he acteth his deſigns, as well as for the method in which he layeth them. We ſhall not wrong the drift of the Text in which ſoever of theſe three ſences we underſtand this proteſtation, The counſel of the wicked is far from me.

Again, There is a threefold difference about the reading and relation of theſe words, which put together will give us yet a further light and underſtanding about them.

Firſt, The Septuagint read thus, The counſel of the wicked is far from him; and the antecedent, to him (according to their ſence) is God himſelf. As if Eliphaz had ſaid, the counſels and reſolutions which the wicked take up, God cannot abide, they are far from him. His are holy, theirs are unholy counſels.

Quæ conſilia illi ineunt longe ſunt à Deo.

Secondly, Others apprehend, that Eliphaz ſpake thus in the perſon of Job, and only reaſſumed what he had ſaid (Chap. 21. 16.) O this is the man that ſaid even now the counſel of the wicked is far from me: Pray conſider, this is the man that profeſſed he would not ſo much as come near a wicked man, he would have nothing to do with their counſels, not he; he would be taken for a man of another ſpirit, of another frame then they; but ſee what he is, ſee how he joyns with them, how he walks in their wayes, how he follows their counſels; though he denies them with his lips, and makes ſtrange as if he knew them not, yet indeed he is of the ſame piece and ſpirit with them: and while he ſaith, the counſel of the wicked is far from me (behold his hypocriſie) the counſel of the wicked lieth in his boſom, and is embraced by him.

Quaſi Job ore tenus non reipſa impiorum conſilium improbaret. q.d. Num poteris dicere, te non ſentire cum improbis, cùm tu, ut ipſe providentiã Dei tollas.

Thirdly, Which is more plain and clear, we may expound theſe words not only as ſpoken by Eliphaz, but as therein ſpeaking of himſelf; The counſel of the wicked is far from me; that is, I am a man of another ſtrain, of another grain then they, I am a man of another mould and make then they. Therefore O Job, what you ſpake before I ſpeak again, and I ſpeak it upon better grounds, with a better heart then you; you ſpake with your lips, or from the teeth outward, that the counſel of the wicked is far from you; but I have proved that you approach too near them both in courſe and counſel; I ſay, what you ſaid, but I ſay it (which you did not) in ſincerity; I profeſs, and what I profeſs is true, that the counſel of the wicked is far from me. The ſame truth may be profeſſed by different perſons, upon different grounds, and to different ends: the ſame premiſes do do not alwayes yield the ſame concluſions in the minds of men, though in themſelves they do. Eliphaz thought his counſel as far from Job's, as Job had profeſſed himſelf to be from the counſel of the wicked. When Job ſaid, The counſel of the wicked is far from me; his purpoſe was to ſhew, that though he was afflicted while many wicked men were proſpered, that yet he was not at all ſpirited or principl'd like wicked men: And that therefore his friends aſſertion muſt needs be falſe, who numbred him with the wicked becauſe he was afflicted. Eliphaz ſeems to retort this upon Job, and to ſay, if this be ſo, as thou affirmeſt, ſurely then God hath laid aſide the care of this world, and let all things run at ſix and ſevens; for ſurely if he took notice of men, either what they were, or what they were doing; he would never ſuffer the wicked to proſper, no nor to eſcape unpuniſhed. And ſeeing thou continueſt ſo ſtiff in thy opinion, that thou doſt not ſuffer theſe grievous calamities for thy ſin, thou ſeemeſt to me plainly to comply with their blaſphemy, who query, How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? This counſel of the wicked is far from me. And ſeeing as Job before, ſo Eliphaz here aſcribes counſel (which is the moſt deliberate act) to the wicked,

Hæc ſunt ipſius Eliphaſi verba, quibus ſeipſum commendat; ut qui potiori jure quam Job, & multo verius poſſit aſſerere ſe toto cœlo ab impiorum ſententia diſcedere. Jun. Piſc.

Eliphaz vult ex uno cum Jobo principio iiſdemq; præmiſſis contrariam elicere concluſionem. Bold.

We may Obſerve, Firſt, That wicked men ſin adviſedly; or, that many of their ſinful wayes, are ſtudied wayes.

And as the more ſtudied they are, the more ſinful they are; ſo they ſtudy moſt for thoſe which are moſt ſinful. They are not hurried into ſin by paſſions, or thruſt on upon ſin meerly by the violence of temptation: They ſit down and go to counſel how they may compaſs their ungodly purpoſes. A godly man doth not conſent unto ſin, much leſs doth he conſult about it; The evil which I do I allow not: I (ſaith the Apoſtle) conſent to the law of God that it is good (Rom. 7.) A godly man ſins dayly, but ſin hath not his conſent or allowance when he hath done it, much leſs doth he conſult or adviſe how to do it. Sin doth not pleaſe him conſequently, much leſs doth he project it antecedently. 'Tis the character of a wicked man, that his ſin is his counſel, and that his art is in it as much as his nature: The counſel of the wicked is far from me.

Secondly, Eliphaz doth not ſay how far the counſel of the wicked was from him, but that it was far from him, and by far, he means furtheſt; as if he had ſaid, it is as far from me as far may be, I have no compliance with their counſels.

Hence obſerve, That the ſpirit and way of the godly and the wicked are as different as their end and concluſion ſhall be.

They are at furtheſt diſtance; they are like two parallel lines, which how far ſoever they run together, they never meet together, nor touch in a point. The concluſion of a wicked man or his end is far from that of the upright: the end of the one is light, the end of the other is darkneſs; the one ends in ſorrow, the other in joy; the end of the one is peace, of the other trouble. And ſo the way of the one is ſin, the way of the other is holineſs; the way of the one is oppreſſion and covetouſneſs, the way of the other is juſtice and righteouſneſs; the way of the one is faith, the way of the other is unbelief. Now as darkneſs and light, joy and ſorrow, peace and trouble, can never comply or be united; ſo neither can ſin and holineſs, oppreſſion and juſtice, faith and unbelief. There's no communion between theſe contraries, between theſe wayes and ends, counſels and concluſions. And unleſs we keep far from the counſels of the wicked, we cannot go far from their concluſion; nor can we avoid their end, but by avoiding their way. The ſame way brings the ſame end, whether we reſpect good or evil. And hence it is that the Spirit of God by Solomon gives ſuch a vehement admonition, to beware of the way of wicked men (Prov. 4. 14, 15.) Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men; avoid it, paſs not by it, turn from it, and paſs away. As in the former context, he as a careful Father, had preſſed his Son to the cloſeſt purſuit of wiſdoms way; ſo here, he as earneſtly preſſeth him to depart from the path of wickedneſs; he would have his Son not only not go into it, but not ſo much as paſs by it, that is, not go near it; as the next words intimate, turn from it, as if he had ſaid, keep at a diſtance, keep aloof off, do not ſtay ſo long within ſight of it as to look upon it; that's his laſt counſel, paſs away, not to return or come near it any more. And while we conſider whither that way leads, we ſhall eaſily grant that when all is ſaid, little enough is ſaid to lead us away from it. Where the way is ſin, the wages is death. Therefore let him who deſires to avoid the concluſion of the wicked, ſay, The counſel of the wicked is far from me.

VERS. 19, 20.

The righteous ſee it, and are glad, and the innocent laugh them to ſcorn.
Whereas our ſubſtance is not cut down; but the remnant of them the fire conſumeth.

ELiphaz ſtill purſues the ruine and extirpation of wicked men; he ſhewed us before the ſinfulneſs of their practices towards man, and the folly of their opinion, in ſaying to God depart from us; who had never hurt them, nor given them any cauſe to be weary of his preſence, unleſs this diſpleaſed them, that he filled their houſes with good things. And becauſe they declared themſelves thus vain, therefore Eliphaz rejected both them and their way, The counſel of the wicked is far from me. Now, in this verſe he acquaints us with the event or iſſue of their counſels, and how the righteous carry themſelves, when God calls the wicked to an account, and reckons with them for their prophaneneſs and irreligion.

Verſ. 19. The righteous ſee it, and are glad.

Who the righteous man is, and what denominates a man righteous, hath been ſhewed before. The righteous ſee it, what do they ſee? That which they believed and looked for; the fall of wicked men. The act of ſeeing may be referr'd either to the perſon ſeeing, or to the object ſeen: as 'tis referr'd to the perſon of the righteous, ſo ſeeing notes both their priviledge and their pleaſure. They are admitted to ſee this ſpectacle of divine Juſtice, and it is their happineſs to ſee it. This David intimates (Pſal. 37. 34.) Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he ſhall exalt thee to inherit the Land: when the wicked are cut off thou ſhalt ſee it. The righteous ſhall be honoured with this ſight, yea and pleaſed with it, the cutting off of wicked men by the hand of God. The righteous man hath a promiſe to ſee this (and promiſes are the conveyances of mercies (Pſal. 91. 8.) A thouſand ſhall fall at thy ſide, and ten thouſand at thy right hand, but it ſhall not come nigh thee, only with thine eyes ſhalt thou behold and ſee the reward of the wicked. Thou ſhalt be a ſpectator, not a partaker in that calamity. Wicked men ſometimes glut their eyes with beholding the troubles of the Saints, and they account it a happy day, when they can have ſuch a ſight. They ſign that day with a white ſtone, when the black ſtone of the moſt unjuſt and cruel condemnation proves the preſent lot of the righteous. David diſcovered ſuch a ſpirit in his enemies (Pſal. 35. 21.) They opened their mouth wide againſt me, and ſaid, aha, aha, our eyes have ſeen it. What had they ſeen? The former verſe tells us, They ſpeak not peace, but they deviſe deceitful matters againſt them that are quiet in the Land. When theſe deviſes took, and had ſucceſs; then they were pleaſed, then they had what they would, and ſaw what they deſired. And thus the enemies of the Church are deſcribed (Mich. 4. 11.) Now alſo many Nations are gathered againſt thee, and ſay, let her be defiled, (there is a twofold defiling, a defiling with ſin, and a defiling with blood and miſery, the latter is meant by the Prophet, let her be defiled) and let our eyes look upon Sion. They counted it a bleſſed ſight to ſee Sion bleed; the wicked would have ſuch ſights often, though uſually their eyes fail with waiting, and their hope is as the giving up of the ghoſt; but righteous men ſhall ſee (the righteous God hath ſaid it) vengeance poured upon the wicked.

Voluptatem importat hujuſmodi aſpectus.

Again, we may expound this act of ſeeing with reference to the object ſeen: and ſo it imports two things, firſt, the cer-certainty of their fall: wicked men ſhall undoubtedly be deſtroyed, and there ſhall be eye witneſſes, honeſt and faithful witneſſes, teſtifying their deſtruction; The righteous ſhall ſee it, and report it to after generations.

Secondly, As ſeeing notes the certainty of their fall, or the evidence and clearneſs of it, ſo the publickneſs of it; that which is done to the eye, is done openly. What the juſtice of God doth againſt the wicked ſhall not be done in a corner, but as upon the houſe top. The reading of the Septuagint is full to this ſence; They ſhall be made publick examples. It is the care of juſt and wiſe Magiſtrates, not only to puniſh malefactors, but to puniſh them openly, that ſo all may ſee and fear and do no more preſumptuouſly. There are three ſpecial reaſons why offences are puniſhed; and the Greeks expreſs each puniſhment by ſuch a word as carrieth a diſtinct ſignification of thoſe reaſons. Firſt, Some are puniſhed, that themſelves may amend and better their manners; this they called σωφρονισμος. Secondly, Others are puniſhed, to repair the honour or maintain the dignity of thoſe againſt whom they have offended, leſt if ſuch ſhould eſcape without condigne puniſhment, authority ſhould be contemned, grow cheap, or be lightly valued; this they called τιμωρια. A third ſort were puniſhed for example, that others might be deterred from doing the ſame things, leſt they alſo incur the ſame ſufferings; this was called παραδειγμα. As much as to ſay, the holding of a man forth in his ſufferings to the open view, that he may be ſeen of all men, and that all may be warned to avoid his error. And thus the Lord who is the righteous Judge of all the world puniſheth wicked men. The ſame word is uſed by the Evangeliſt Matthew (Chap. 1. 19.) Joſeph being troubled that Mary was with child (for he knew not the myſtery of her over-ſhadowing by the Holy Ghoſt, was minded to put her away ſecretly, and would not make her a publick example; he was unwilling to bring her to juſtice, or that others ſhould ſee either her (ſuppoſed) ſin or puniſhment. But as God doth work many glorious ſalvations for his people, that the wicked may ſee it, and be aſhamed; ſo he brings many viſible deſtructions upon the wicked, not only that the righteous may ſee it and rejoyce, or be glad (which act follows next to be opened) but that the wicked may ſee it, and tremble to do wickedly.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That the Lord ſets up wicked men many times as examples of his wrathful juſtice.

Not only do they feel wrath upon themſelves, but others ſee it; the Lord ſometimes chaſtens his own people in the view of the world, and ſets them up as examples of his fatherly diſpleaſure. Thus Nathan ſpeaks in the name of the Lord to David (2 Sam. 12. 12.) Thou didſt it ſecretly, but I will do this thing (what thing? I will afflict and chaſten thee for this great offence) before all Iſrael, and before the Sun; that is, in plain and clear light: Though thou haſt done this evil in the darkneſs of many cloſe contrivances, yet I will draw the curtain, and make the penal effects of thy ſin as conſpicuous as the actings of thy ſin have been cloſe and covert. Again (Numb. 25. 4.) when the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab, and Iſrael had joyned himſelf unto Baal-peor, ſo that the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael; Then the Lord ſaid to Moſes, take all the heads of the people (that is, the capital offenders, or chief rulers, who gave way, or at beſt gave no ſtop to ſuch wickedneſs) and hang them up before the Lord againſt the Sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Iſrael. To hang them up before the Sun, is a phraſe of ſpeech importing the publickneſs of their puniſhment (as it is ſaid of the ſeven Sons of Saul, that they were hanged on the hill before the Lord, 2 Sam. 21. 9.) for caution unto all; whatſoever is done in the ſight of all, or ſo that all may ſee, is ſaid (in the Language of the Jews) to be done before the Sun. To which ſence alſo we may interpret that viſion of the Prophet Zechariah (Chap. 5. 6, 9, 10, 11.) at verſ. 6. we read of an Ephah, and this lift up (verſ. 9.) between Earth and Heaven; the Ephah was a meaſure of dry things among the Jews: and in that viſion it ſignified that the ſin and puniſhment of the Jews were meaſured and proportioned; this Ephah being lifted up and carried, I (ſaith the Prophet) ſaid, whither do theſe bear the Ephah? (verſ. 10.) And he ſaid unto me, to build it an houſe in the land of Shinar, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed and ſet there upon her own baſe. The building it an houſe in the land of Shinar (that is, in Babylon) ſignified the laſtingneſs or continuance of their ſin in the ſad conſequents of it, their puniſhment and baniſhment in ſtrange lands, not for the ſpace of ſeventy years only, as by the Babylonians, but (as ſome of the Learned expound the viſion) for many ſeventies by the Romans: and as this Ephah had a houſe built for it, noting the ſetledneſs and duration of the Judgment which ſhould come upon them for their ſin; ſo alſo it was ſet upon its own baſe, to ſignifie the notoriouſneſs or conſpicuouſneſs of the Judgment, it being as a houſe ſet upon pillars for all to behold and take notice of: as we ſee fulfilled to this day, ſince the firſt overthrow of their eſtate by Titus Veſpatianus, and their final diſperſion by Ælius Adrianus. There are I grant other conceptions about that viſion, but as this ſuits well with the point in hand, ſo with the calamitous ſtate of that people to this day.

And thus the Lord threatned the King of Tyrus (Ezek. 28. 17.) Whoſe heart was lifted up becauſe of his beauty, and who had corrupted his wiſdom by reaſon of his brightneſs. Now what will the Lord do? What courſe will he take with him? The next words enform us; I will caſt thee to the ground, and I will lay thee before Kings, that they may behold thee; he doth not ſay, I will caſt thee into the ground, but to the ground, and lay thee before Kings; that is, thou ſhalt be a ſpectacle for all the Kings of the Earth, that they may behold as what thy pride and ſelf-confidence have brought thee to, ſo what their own (if they tread thy path) either will or juſtly may bring them unto. Thus alſo in verſ. 7. of Judes Epiſtle, the Apoſtle ſaith, That Sodom and Gomorrah, and the Cities about them in like manner, giving themſelves over to fornication, and going after ſtrange fleſh, are ſet forth for an example, ſuffering the vengeance of Eternal fire. The Judgments of God are not only puniſhments to them who went before, but premonitions to them who come after.

The righteous ſee it, and are glad.] Here is the effect which that ſight wrought upon the righteous: The eye affects the heart, and the heart is affected ſutably to the object, either with joy or with ſorrow. The deſtruction of men is a ſorrowful object, and therefore we might rather expect that the righteous beholding it ſhould be affected with ſorrow; but the Text affirms a direct contrary effect of this ſight; The righteous ſee it, and are glad.

Hence obſerve, The judgments of God upon the wicked are matters of joy to the righteous.

It is the duty of Saints to mourn with them that mourn, and to rejoyce with them that rejoyce (Rom. 12. 15.) But then we muſt underſtand theſe mourners and rejoycers to be ſuch as themſelves are. Saints muſt mourn with mourning Saints, and rejoyce with rejoycing Saints. The godly are not bound either to joy the joys, or ſorrow the ſorrows of the wicked. The judgments of God upon the wicked have a twofold effect eminently noted in Scripture. Firſt, They cauſe fear: And ſecondly, They cauſe joy. When exemplary juſtice was to be done (according to the Law of Moſes) upon preſumptuous tranſgreſſors, it is ſaid (Deut. 13. 11.) All Iſrael ſhall hear, and fear, and ſhall do no more any ſuch wickedneſs. David (Pſal. 64.) having complained to God in prayer of the cruelty of his enemies, and begged protection from their malicious practices, grows up to much aſſurance, that down they muſt (verſ. 7, 8.) But God ſhall ſhoot at them with an arrow, ſuddenly ſhall they be wounded; and then (verſ. 9.) All men ſhall fear, and ſhall declare the work of God, for they ſhall wiſely conſider of his doings. Thus fear is the iſſue of divine judgement; and yet joy is the iſſue of them at the tenth verſe of the ſame Pſalm; The righteous ſhall be glad in the Lord, and truſt in him, and all the upright in heart ſhall glory. Fear is a common effect; All men ſhall fear: Gladneſs, faith and glorying (which is faith triumphant) are peculiar to the upright, when the arrow of God wounds the wicked. We have this double effect again expreſt upon the ſame occaſion (Pſal. 107. 42.) He poureth contempt upon Princes, and cauſeth them to wander in the wilderneſs where there is no way, but he ſets the poor on high: The righteous ſhall ſee it and rejoyce. What ſhall they ſee? Not only only the godly poor set on high, but ungodly Princes filled with contempt, that's part of the spectacle which the righteous shall behold, and beholding rejoyce: yet this is not all, for it follows; And all iniquity shall stop her mouth; The abstract is put for the concrete, iniquity for men of iniquity: And so the meaning is men of iniquity, or wicked men shall stop their mouths: their mouths shall be stopt with shame and fear, they shall have nothing to say when the Lord doth this; They shall not mutter a word against the works of God: but as Hannah speaks in her Song (*1 Sam.*2.9.) shall be silent in darkness. A like report raiseth the hearts of the people of God into a holy merriment (*Psal.*97.8.) Sion heard, and was glad, the daughters of Judah rejoyced. What was the matter? what good news came to Judah? what to Sion? the Text resolves us; Because of thy judgments O Lord: The answer is not, because of thy mercies, or because of thy goodness O Lord, but because of thy judgments, and those were dreadful ones (v.3.) A fire goeth before him and burneth up his enemies round about. Confounded be all they that serve graven Images, &c. v.7. Sion heard of it, and was glad. Once more (*Psa.*58.10.) The righteous shall rejoyce when he seeth the vengeance, he shall wash his feet in the blood of the ungodly. Not that the righteous delight in blood, or proudly insult over the worst of enemies; the Psalmist doth only in hyperbolical strains of Eloquence, borrowed from the language of triumphant conquerers, express a compleat and glorious victory. The stile is of the same signification with that (*Psal.*68.23.) That thy foot may be dipped in the blood of thine enemies, and the tongue of thy dogs in the same. When so much bloud is shed that the foot may be dipt and washed in it, that dogs may lay it up like water, this argues a great destruction; and when the wicked are thus destroyed, the righteous shall rejoyce.

But here it may be queried, What matter of joy is this? why should the righteous rejoyce in the sorrows of the wicked? is it not alike sinful to be troubled at the joys, and to rejoyce at the troubles of our brethren? The light of nature condemns rejoycing over those who are in misery; and we have an express Scripture against it (Prov. 24.17.) Rejoyce not when thine enemy falleth, let not thy heart be glad when he stumbleth. And David puts it among the sins of his enemies (Psal. 35.15.) In my adversity they rejoyced. And he professed (*vers.*13.) that when they were sick his cloathing was sackcloath, and that he humbled his soul with fasting. David was so far from rejoycing when his enemies were ruined, or dead, that he mourned when they were but sick, and would not eat, when they could not. And as Davids holy practice denied it, so doth Solomons divine precept; Rejoyce not when thine enemy falleth. How then shall we reconcile these Texts?

I answer, there may be a rejoycing at the afflictions and troubles of others, which is not only unbecoming and unseemly for the righteous, but very sinful. As

First, To rejoyce, and be glad, meerly because an enemy is fallen into misery, is both unseemly and sinful. And so we are to understand Solomons Proverb; Rejoyce not when thine enemy falleth. Some understand this of falling into sin. He makes himself a sinner indeed, who rejoyceth because another hath sinned. He that rejoyceth because another hath sinned, rejoyceth upon the matter because God is dishonoured. Such joy is a kind of thanksgiving for Satans victory. But as to rejoyce because another falls into sin, is the worst fall into sin; so to rejoyce meerly because an enemy falls into misery, is worse then our own falling in misery. He shews that he hath not the heart of a man in him, who is glad at the misery of any man. And he who rejoyceth thus when his enemy falleth, doth himself fall much worse. The ruine and down-fall of an enemy (suppose him the vilest enemy) considered in it self, is meat and drink to none but revengeful and envious spirits. David was much troubled and chargeth it as an extream piece of folly upon himself, Because he was envious at the foolish when he saw the prosperity of the wicked (*Psal.*73.3.) Now it is an issue flowing from the same principle, purely to envy the prosperity, and purely to rejoyce in the adversity of the wicked. Nero was justly reckoned a monster among men, who could sing when himself had set Rome a fire: And they have some-what of a Neronian spirit in them, who can sing when they see their enemies consuming in the fire. God delights not in the misery of man (as it is misery upon man) nor do they, who are taught of God.

Secondly, As to rejoyce or be glad at the destruction of enemies, meerly because they are destroyed; so to rejoyce upon private ends or respects, because they being taken out of the way and removed out of the world we hope to have more scope and room in the world for our selves; or because we hope to step into their places, to sit down in their seats, to possess our selves of their lands and riches, to fill our selves with their spoils; upon this account to rejoyce when wicked men fall, when the Lord pours out contempt upon Princes (because (I say) we hope to be gainers by it) is altogether uncomely for the righteous. Let the righteous take heed to themselves, that they be not found thus rejoyceing in the calamities of the wicked. They who do so are either but pretenders to godliness, men who are only of the faction of the righteous (for though they who are righteous indeed are far from a faction, yet there are a sort of men, who profess righteousness as if it were nothing but a faction, now (I say) they who thus rejoyce are but either of the faction of the righteous) while they are really of the number of the wicked; or if they are really righteous who do so (and I confess that a righteous man may do so, David (which was acting the counter-part) envied their prosperity, and by the same reason any godly man may be acted out in joy at their adversity; but now, (I say) if they who are really righteous do so) we must conclude them under a sore temptation, and they will at last conclude of themselves as David did in the counter-case, (*Psal.*73.22.) So foolish have we been and ignorant, even as a beast before thee.

You will say then, how may or do the righteous rejoyce when the ungodly fall, and not fall into sin themselves?

I answer, First, The righteous rejoyce at the fall of the wicked, as blessing God who hath kept their feet from those wayes in which the wicked have fallen. As 'tis a great mercy to be kept out of those ill-wayes, to be kept from siding with those corrupt interests, in the pursuit of which we see many broken; so 'tis a duty to rejoyce that we have not walked in their way whose end we see to be nothing else but destruction.

Secondly, The righteous have cause to rejoyce and bless God when they see the wicked fall, because themselves are saved, and keep their standing; because themselves have escaped the danger, and the Lord hath been a banner of protection over them in the day when the wicked fell. Moses after the destruction of Amaleck built an Altar, and called the name of it Jehova-Nissi (*Exod.*17.15.) that is to say; The Lord is my banner. And in like cases the joy of the Saints is not properly in the destruction of the wicked, but in their own deliverance, through the mighty power and good hand of God with them. It is the presence of God with them, the appearance of God for them, which is the gladness of their hearts.

Thirdly, The righteous then rejoyce, because the Church and people of God are in a fair way to peace; when the Lions are destroyed, the sheep are in safety; when the Wolves and the Bears are cut off, the flock rests quietly: so in this case when men of devouring cruel spirits, wicked and ungodly ones, are removed, the flock of God, the sheep of his pasture feed quietly, none making them afraid. The fall of the enemies of Sion, is the establishment of Sion; yea in a great measure of mankind. As the Prophet most elegantly sets it forth (Isa. 14.6,7,8.) He who smote the people in wrath with a continual stroke, he that ruled the Nations in anger, is persecuted and none hindereth. The whole earth is at rest, and is quiet: they break forth into singing, yea the fir-trees rejoyce at thee, and the Cedars of Lebanon, saying, since thou art laid down no feller is come up against us. How often have wicked men in power felled not only the Fir-trees and Cedars of the world, but the goodly trees of righteousness in the Lords plantations; have they not therefore reason to sing when such fall, seeing the Fellers themselves are then felled and fallen?

Fourthly, Joy ariseth to the righteous, because God is honoured in the fall of wicked men; And that's their chiefest joy. That God is honoured is more joy to the righteous, then that themselves are saved, how much more then, that the wicked are destroyed? There is a threefold honour arising to God when the wicked fall.

First, God is honoured in his justice; such a day is the day of the declaration of the righteous judgment of God; as the Apostle speaks of the great day of Judgment (Rom. 2.5.) Thou after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest treasurest up to thy self wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. Some do even question the justice of God when wicked men prosper, but he is vindicated in his justice when wicked men fall. It cannot but please righteous men, to see the righteous God exalted, or God exalted in his righteousness. They know and believe that God is righteous, when the wicked prosper (Jer. 12.1.) But when the wicked are punished, they proclaim his righteousness. Then they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works Lord God Almighty, just and true are thy wayes thou King of Saints. Who shall not fear thee O Lord, and glorifie thy Name, &c. for thy judgments are made manifest, (*Rev.*15. 3,4.) The Lord is alwayes alike just, but it doth not alwayes alike appear how just he is. And as, that God is just is the faith and stay of the Saints, so the appearances of his justice are their joy and triumph.

Secondly, God is honoured much in the attribute of his truth; in the truth of his word, in the truth of his threatnings, when the wicked are punished. God hath spoken bloody words concerning wicked men; not only in reference to their future estate in the next life, but to their present estate in this. Say to the wicked it shall be ill with him, the reward of his hands shall be given him. But what is this reward? There are two sorts of rewards; First, Rewards of love and favor according to the good which we have done; Secondly, Rewards of wrath and anger, pœnal rewards, according to the evil which we have done. Now when the Lord puts these pœnal rewards into the hands of the wicked, or pours them upon their heads, he is honoured in his truth as well as his justice, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. As the promises are yea and Amen (2 Cor. 1.20.) So also are the threatnings, unto the glory of God by us. But as when David saw his life in danger every day, he began to question the truth of God, in the promise, that he should live to reign and sit upon the throne of Israel; for saith he (Psal. 116. 11. when things went thus with him) I said in my hast all men are liars, even Samuel among the rest, who assured me of the Kingdom by express message from God, but surely he also is deceived, and hath fed me with vain hopes. Now as these words of David, according to our translation of them, and the truth of the thing in frequent experiences, shew, that Godly men are apt to question the truth of the promise, when themselves are by seemingly contradicting providences much afflicted; so they are apt to question the truth of the threatnings when they see outward providences prospering the wicked; Therefore when the threatnings have their actual yea and Amen, that is, when they are executed upon the ungodly, this also is to the glory of God by us, that is, God is glorified by all his people, who hear of it in the truth of what he hath spoken. Again, as God is magnified in the truth of his threatnings, when any particular wicked man is punished; so when common calamities come upon the wicked, the truth of God, or God in his truth, is magnified two wayes. First, As such calamities are a fulfilling of many Prophesies; Secondly, As they are the answer or return of many prayers. The vengeance which falls upon the Enemies of the Church of God is drawn out by prayer, Luk. 18.7,8. And there is nothing wherein God is more honoured, then when prayer is answered; For as therein he fulfils our wants, so his own word; Who hath not said to the seed of Jacob, seek ye me in vain.

Thirdly, When the wicked fall, the Lord is honoured in the attribute of his power; How great is his power, who pulls down great power? It argues the Almightiness of God, when he puts the mighty from their seats: when the Oaks and the Cedars, when the high walls and mountains are shaken and removed by his blows and batteries. When Pharaoh and his Egyptian host were drowned in the red Sea; Then Moses magnified God in his power (*Exod.*15.2.) The Lord is my strength and song (that is, I will sing of the strength of the Lord, not of the strength of man) he is my God, and I will prepare him an habitation; my fathers God, and I will exalt him.

In these three attributes, justice, truth, and power, God is honoured, when the wicked are destroyed; and therefore it cannot be uncomely for the Saints to rejoyce when they are destroyed. The Lord by his Prophet assures the Church his Jacob, that all the enemies thereof shall be scattered (Isa. 41.15.) Behold, I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument, having teeth, thou shalt thresh the Nations and beat them small, and shalt make the hills as chaff, &c. The mountains and the hills to be threshed, were the mighty ones of the earth, setting themselves against the wayes and designs of heaven. The Instrument or flayl wherewith they were to be threshed was the worm Jacob (*vers.*14.) God did not so much make an Instrument for the worm Jacob, as he made the worm Jacob his Instrument. Behold, I will make thee, (not for thee) a new threshing Instrument; But when the worm hath done this great work, when he hath threshed the mountains, and made the hills as chaff; What must he do then? The sixteenth verse tells, Thou shalt rejoyce in the Lord, and shalt glory in the holy one of Israel. Glorying is more then rejoycing: Glorying is a kind of rapture or extasie of the soul. As there is an extasie of infatuation, so there is an extasie of Gracious admiration. Fools and mad men are besides themselves for want of reason; the wisest and best of men, are besides themselves through the abundance of the Grace of God in them, and the abundance of the goodness of God towards them. When the goodness of God acted mightily towards us, meets with the Grace of God acting mightily in us, we are lifted up so far out of our selves, that we can see nothing in our selves, and then in whom or in what can our rejoycing be, but in the Lord the holy one of Israel?

Gaudebunt de eorũ exitio, non vindictæ cupiditate, sed zelo dei accensi qui hoc modo declarabit sibi cura esse res humanas. Drus.

This joy is not, First, the joy of the Epicure; A sensual joy, in wine and belly chear, in eating the fat, and drinking the sweet, in carnal merriments and musick. Nor is this, Secondly, a cruel joy in the ruine and destruction of men, which the Prophet rebukes (Obad. v. 12.) Thou shouldest not have rejoyced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction. Nor is this, Thirdly, a proud joy, or a joy of ostentation, when men spread their plumes, and publish their own wisdom, greatness and power. Nor is it, Fourthly, a covetous joy, such as theirs is who are glad because they have fill'd their purses, enriched their families, and their hand hath gotten much. Nor is it Lastly, a secure joy, because when evil men are cast down we hope to sit warm and well, safe and quiet upon their ruines. But this joy consists, First, in high thoughts and valuations of God; Whom have I in heaven but thee, &c. (*Psal.*73.25.) Who is like unto thee O Lord among the Gods (*Exod.*15.11.) It consists, Secondly, in a sweet rest of complacency in God. Return unto thy rest O my soul: that is, turn in to God, live nearer him, saith a Godly man (to his soul) in such a case (*Psal.*116.7.) This joy is the rest of the soul in God; He who is rest to himself (as God is) may be so infinitely more to us. Thus, The righteous see it, and are glad.

And the innocent laugh them to scorn.] This heightens the sence of the former part of the verse; not only are the righteous glad when the wicked are destroyed, but they laugh them to scorn. The righteous, in the former part of the verse are the same with the innocent here: yet we may distinguish them. The innocent are taken two wayes in Scripture; First, the innocent are they who are pure from sin; Secondly, the innocent are they who are pure or free from punishment, or from trouble; freedom from sin, and freedom from trouble are so dependant upon one another, that one word may well express both. Thus the word is used (2*Sam.*14.9.) The woman of Tekoah said to the King; My Lord O King, the iniquity be on me, and my fathers house, and the King and his throne be guiltless or innocent, that is, free from all evil and trouble. While she saith, The iniquity be upon me, her meaning is, let the punishment of the iniquity be upon me, let the King and his throne be guiltless; let no punishment of iniquity fall either upon the King in person, or, upon his government. In the same sence the word is read (*Exod.*19.21.) If he (that hath been smitten) rise again and walk abroad upon a staff, then he that smote him shall be quiet; the Hebrew is, then shall he be innocent, that is free from punishment, he shall not have any censure, or judgment for it. We have the like use of the word (*Numb.*5.19.) in the case of the woman suspected by her husband for disloyalty in breaking her marriage vow; she being for her purgation to drink the bitter water, the Priest was to bespeak her in this manner: If no man hath lien with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness with another in stead of thy husband, be thou free (or innocent) from this bitter water that causeth the curse

Innocens in Scriptura sumitur, non solùm activè, pro eo, qui nemini nocet, sed etiã passivè, pro eo cui nemo nocet.

Innocens iste ab aquis istis amarissimis. Heb.

curse, that is, let the water do thee no harm; as if he had said, thou shalt feel no evil of pain by it, if thou art not guilty of the evil of sin. Thus some expound the word here. The innocent shall laugh them to scorn, that is, they who are free from those troubles with which the wicked are over-taken and undone, those particular righteous men who escape the storm untouched, laugh the wicked to scorn. Many of the Hebrew writers fix upon a special person; and by the Innocent, understand Noah, as if it were a report of what was done upon the old world; Then the righteous, that is (as the Chaldee Paraphrase explains it) the sons of righteous Noah saw (the flood) and were glad, and innocent Noah laught the prophane old world to scorn. When Noah, and his sons were building the Ark, the old world in stead of believing and fearing the report or prophecy of a deluge, laught them to scorn, and in derision, doubtless, ask't them what voyage they intended, and whether they meant to sail their Ship over the dry Land; as for them they never dreamt of a Sea hanging in the clouds, and ready to drop down upon their heads. Now as the ungodly world derided Noah and his Sons for their credulity before the flood came, so 'tis probable enough that when the flood came upon that world of the ungodly, Noah and his Sons laught and derided their incredulity. They who laugh at divine threatnings, deserve to be laughed at under divine sufferings.

Videbant filii Noë justi & lætabuntur, & Noë innocens subsannabit eos. Targ.

Others apply this particularly to the Tragedy of Pharoah and his Egyptians overwhelmed and drowned in the red Sea, of which it is said, (*Exod.*14.30,31.) Thus the Lord saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians, and Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the shoar; and Israel saw that Great work, which the Lord did upon the Egyptians. The effect of this sight is two wayes described in that holy History: First, By the acting of fear and faith: And the people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord and his servant Moses. Secondly, by the acting of their joy in the Lord, and their holy insultation over the drowned Egyptians (Chap. 15. vers. 1.) Then sang Moses and the children of Israel this Song unto the Lord, and spake saying, I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously, the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the Sea. Thus also that innocent people saw the ruine of their wicked enemies, and laughed them to scorn.

Yet I conceive Eliphaz speaking here rather upon a generally experienced and positive truth, then strictly and particularly aiming at those ancient Examples. The Innocent, that is, any innocent person, whether innocent in reference to the doing of evil, or having escaped the sufferance of evil, laugh them to scorn.

Before, he said, the righteous see it, and are glad; now he saith, the innocent laugh them to scorn: it is one thing for a man to be glad in himself, and another thing to laugh other men to scorn: for though to be innocent carries in it somewhat less, or at the most but so much as to be righteous, yet to laugh the unrighteous and wicked to scorn when they fall, carries in it much more then to be glad when they fall. And besides, the word in the Hebrew signifies the most scornful laughter, such a laughter as is expressed, by a distortion of the mouth, and lips, or by a kind of fained lisping with the tongue, and artificial faultring in speech; For as they that lisp and faulter in speech are usually derided and laught at, so they that deride and laugh at others will purposely lisp, or faulter in speech. Stammerers are contemptible; and many stammer at others in contempt; This imitation of a defect in nature shews the excess of malice. Such is the force of this expression, The innocent laugh them to scorn.

לעג Denotat gestum qui fit ore, labiis, & ficta balbutie, sive quod balbutientes irrideri soleant, sive quod irrisores balbutiant, per contemptum & malignam imitationē.

Here it may be questioned, how a good man, an innocent person can do such a thing; can he thus laugh the wicked to scorn? it is difficult enough to salve it as consistent with Grace, for a righteous man to rejoyce at the fall of the wicked, but it is far more difficult to salve it, how a righteous man may laugh them to scorn: scorning and deriding are the practices of lewd persons, of sons of Belial; such indeed are usually scorners and jeerers. The enemies of Jesus Christ are so described (*Psa.*22.7.) All they that see me (that is, all the wicked that see me; for many Disciples saw Christ in his sufferings, and did not only pity him, but honour and believe on him, but (saith he) all they (who are mine enemies) that see me) laugh me to scorn, they shoot out the lip, and shake the head. And David tells us (*Psal.*1.1.) that to sit in the seat of the scornful, is the conclusion of those who have first walked in the way of the ungodly; and Secondly, stood in the way of sinners. The common Latine translater renders that in the Psalm, not the seat of scorners, but the seat of the pestilence. And indeed they have spiritual plague-spots upon them, and the surest tokens of eternal death, who are given up to be scorners. Therefore question it again, how are the Innocent scorners?

I answer, That as when humane affections, which are below the divine nature, are attributed to God, (such are to repent, to be grieved at the wickedness, and to laugh at the calamity of the wicked) we say these note only an effect upon the creature, not a change of affection in God (for, in him there is no variableness nor shadow of change) so when those actions, which are below or unsutable to a renewed regenerate nature in man, are attributed to the Saints (such as these, to wash their feet in the blood of the ungodly, to laugh them to scorn in their saddest miseries) we must say, that these note rather what the wicked deserve, then what the godly do. The godly are no scorners, but there is that in wicked men which is worthy to be laughed to scorn; or wicked men do that, for which they deserve to be laughed at; whatsoever is evil in such like actions, is far from the heart and spirit of the godly. And therefore as Scriptures of such a tenour are to be interpreted and understood in such a manner as becomes and is consistent with the holiness of God, so also (in their proportion) to the holiness of the Saints. The laughter of the Saints in these dispensations is serious; and their scorning, the acting of their graces, not of their corruptions. And thus it is said of God himself (*Psal.*2.4.) He that sitteth in heaven shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision. And (*Prov.*1.26.) I will mock at your calamity, and laugh when your fear cometh: when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind, &c. that is, I will carry my self so towards you, I will pity you (who have been scorners of my word, and have set at nought my counsel) no more then men pity those, whom they laugh to scorn; such is the laughter of the Saints at the calamity of the wicked. And thus Eliah derided Baals Priests, while they wearied themselves in their foolish superstition (1 King. 18.27.) And it came to pass at noon that Eliah mocked them, and said, cry aloud, for he is a God; either he is talking, &c. Thus Hierusalem is expressed (*Isa.*37.22.) when Sennacherib sent up that proud threatning message, the Lord sent a comfortable message to his people by Isaiah the Prophet; Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib the King of Assyria, this is the word which the Lord hath spoken concerning him; the virgin the daughter of Zion hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn, the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee. The daughter of Zion, and the daughter of Jerusalem are but one and the same; she was called a virgin, not (as some have conceived) because she was never taken or forced by any enemy, nor was she so called, because she had preserved her self pure and chaste in the worship of the true God (for she had her failings and Idolatrous dalliances before that day) but she was so called because of that special care which God had of her to protect and save her against the insultations of the enemy then ready to assault her, even as a virgin is protected from violence in her fathers house. And the Prophet to assure them that it should be so, speaks of the ruine of Sennacheribs Army, and Jerusalems laughter, as accomplisht and come to pass already; The virgin daughter, &c. hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn, and shaken her head at thee. What God saith shall be done, is as good as done already. The Assyrians were yet in their Jollity, laughing at Jerusalem, and promising themselves the spoil of the people of God, yet (saith the Lord) Jerusalem hath laughed thee to scorn; that is, assuredly she shall. And as the people of God do sometimes formally and explicitly laugh at the downfal and witherings of the wicked, so they always virtually and secretly laugh them to scorn, even when they stand and flourish in their greenness and prosperity: For while the Godly are not daunted with the power and splendour, while they are not terrified with the threats and high looks of the wicked, but in the singleness and simplicity of their hearts, keep close to God, his wayes and truths; even this, though they use the duest respect to them in regard of their authority, both in word and gesture, is a laughing them to scorn: For this is as a thorn in the sides of evil men, and as a prick in their eyes; when they see they will not stoop to their greatness in any sinful compliance with their commands. This is a truth, but the former is the truth intended in this Text.

Irrisio, & ὅσα κερκετικὰ, & similia quæ affectum humanū significant, uti à deo longè absunt, ita quæ mali moris sunt ab ecclesia. Coc. Ut hæc de deo σκοπευτικῶς ita de sanctis ἀγιοπρεπῶς sunt intelligenda.

Hence Note, That wicked men are not only miserable but ridiculous.

They are the laughter of the innocent, upon more accounts then one.

First, Because they do such childish and ridiculous things, such things as can never reach the ends they desire and purpose: they are justly laughed at, whose counsel and courses are unsuitable, much more, when contrary to their designs.

Secondly, Wicked men become ridiculous, while the Lord frustrates their wisest counsels, and blasts those hopes which were bottom'd upon the most probable principles and foundations, while he takes them in their own craft, and entraps them in the snare which they laid for others.

Thirdly, While he over-rules all that they plot or act to serve his own ends, and fulfil his own holy counsels. Hence the enemies of God are said to pine away; this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people, that have fought against Jerusalem, their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet (he doth not say, that they shall be slain, but their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet) and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth (Zech. 14.12.) which as some interpret of their bodily languishment, that they shall live dying continually, or that their life shall be a continual death, so all interpret the cause of this consumption to arise from vexation of spirit, because they shall see themselves scorn'd and laughed at, or that they are become ridiculous to all the world, but chiefly to Jerusalem, the Church and people of God, whom they shall behold in good condition, notwithstanding all the opposition which they have made against them; which Eliphaz also clearly expresseth in the next words.

Vers. 20. Whereas our substance is not cut down, but the remnant of them the fire consumes.

There are divers readings and rendrings of this verse: First, Some with an affirmative interrogation; is not their substance cut down? that is, it is cut down; And then this verse is a continuation of the former discourse concerning the utter extirpation of the wicked; The righteous are glad, they laugh them to scorn; is not their substance cut down? and doth not the fire consume the remnant of them? As if Eliphaz had said, Whatsoever they had of any substance or moment is cut down, and if possibly there be any small inconsiderable remainder of them, fire (that is, some devouring Judgement) will meet with it, and make an utter end of it.

Innocens subsannabit eos, quia nõ fuit succisa substantia nostra, &c. q. d. ut qui se & res suas salvas, illos autem penitùs igne illo divino videant jure absumptos. Bez.

Secondly, Another understands this twentieth verse as a reason of the former; the righteous are glad (when the wicked fall) the innocent shall laugh them to scorn, because our substance was not cut down; as if he had said, our safety will be matter as of praise to God who hath preserved us, so of holy scorn and insultation over ungodly men, who longed to see our destruction, and said in their hearts, that surely our day was not only coming, but hastning; whereas indeed we see the day come upon them which burneth as an oven, and themselves as stubble. Wicked men are for the most part doubly disappointed; First, By their own fall, when they looked to stand: Secondly, By the standing of the righteous when they look, yea, and long for their fall; This double disappointment doth at once double their sorrow, and the joy of the Innocent, who laugh them to scorn, because their own substance is not cut down, but the remnant of them the fire consumeth.

Innocens subsannabit eos dicens, etsi non est succisa substantia nostra, tamen excellentiã illorum consumpsit ignis. Pisc. Cæ nondum abscinditur substantia nostra & residuũ illorũ absumit ignis, assuesce quæso cum illo. Jun.

There is a third translation which makes these words the form in which the innocent express their laughter at the wicked. When the innocent laugh them to scorn, they will thus bespeak them: Whereas or Although our substance is not cut down, yet the remnant of them, or the best the excellency of them the fire hath consumed.

There is a fourth reading, which makes the second part of the Chapter begin with this verse. For hitherto Eliphaz hath been describing the sinfulness of wicked men, and the wrath of God upon them for their wickedness. But here he is supposed entring upon a very serious exhortation to repentance, after this manner, or to this effect; O Job, now while our substance is not quite cut down, and the fire consumeth the residue or the remnant of the wicked, acquaint thy self with God, or apply thy self to God; as if he should say, before thou art clean cut down, before thou art utterly ruined, as many wicked men have been heretofore, and now are, humble thy self and seek to God, that thy sin may be forgiven, and thy wound healed. Some parallel this in sense with that of the Preacher, Eccl. 12.1. Remember now thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth, while the evil dayes come not, nor the years draw nigh wherein thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them. Thus Eliphaz is conceived exhorting Job, While our substance is not cut down, while we are not totally undone, while the fire of Gods wrath is consuming the remainder of wicked men, do thou acquaint thy self with God, and repent. And though our translation makes not this connection, yet it joyns fully in the sense of the Original.

Quum subsistentia nostra non sit excisa, reliquias autem iterum ignis assumpserit. Tygur.

Ita bene ut nihil melius. Bold.

קימה ἡ ὑπαρξις, existentia vel potius τὸ ἕστηκὸς ἢμῶν quo subsistimus duramus, vel subsistantia, i. e. vita qua subsistimus, nam stare valet interdum superstitem esse. Drus.

Whereas our substance is not cut down.

So this verse is an ellegant conclusion of the whole matter hitherto insisted upon by Eliphaz, and he shuts it up in two parts: First, shewing the state of the innocent, who are brought in speaking thus, Our substance is not cut down; strictly, that by which we stand or subsist, our substance or subsistence, which some expound not by goods, but by life; we may take it both wayes, our life, and that by which our life is maintained, or by which we and our families subsist, is not cut down.

There is yet a difficulty in regard of the Grammatical sense of these words. For Eliphaz having spoken before in the third person plural, The righteous are glad, and the innocent laugh them to scorn, should (as it may be thought) rather have continued his speech in the same form, and have said, Whereas their substance is cut down, but he puts it in the first person plural, Whereas our substance is not cut down, &c.

We may answer two wayes; First, that it is usual in Scripture to vary the number, while the same person or persons is or are spoken of, take only one Instance, Hos. 12. 4. He (that is, the Angel of the Covenant) found him in Bethel, that is, Jacob: And there he spake with us. It should according to Grammar be read thus; And there he spake with him. Having found Jacob in Bethel, he spake with him in Bethel. But we see both the person and number are varied, the former words running in the third person singular (being meant particularly of Jacob) the latter in the first person plural, There he spake with us; The Spirit of God thereby signifying, that, what God spake at that time to Jacob personally, he spake to all the spiritual seed of Jacob, whether of the Circumcision or Uncircumcision, virtually. He so spake to Jacob as that the substance and effect of his speech reacheth down to and hath an influence upon us, believers, who are his posterity according to the Spirit. Besides this, other Scriptures hold out the like variation of the number, as in the Text, which is the first answer.

Secondly, Eliphaz might purposely vary the number, that himself might put in for a share, and be numbred among those, who had obtained that sparing mercy, not to be cut down while others were consumed. And so this reason of the change is purely spiritual, much like that last opened out of Hosea.

Whence Note, That the righteous are often preserved in common calamities.

(Psal. 20.8.) They are brought down, and are fallen, but we are risen and stand upright, our substance is not cut down. God takes special care of his own people; they are under a promise; there can be no greater safety, no better security then to be under a promise: the promise is the best shelter in a storm, and the best shield against the dart. The Apostle Peter gives us two famous examples of this, (2 Pet. 2.5,6.) God spared not the old world, but saved Noah, &c. bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly. And having turned the Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, &c. and delivered just Lot, &c. From both which examples he concludeth (vers. 9.) The Lord knoweth how to deliver the Godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. When judgment begins at the house of God, what shall the end of them be that obey not the Gospel of God? as the same Apostle speaks (1 Pet. 4.17.) It is a sure argument to the wicked that they shall be judged, when they see God bringing judgements upon his own house

house and people; but the wicked are many times judged while the house and people of God are preserved and untoucht; and when both good and bad, both the innocent and the wicked are wrapt up in the same calamity, when they are (as it were) thrust together into the same furnace, the Lord makes a difference, they are not cut down as the wicked are cut down, nor consumed as they are consumed. When the righteous are cast into the fire, they are purged, but not consumed; but (as it follows in the second part of this conclusion, shewing the state of the wicked)

The remnant of them the fire consumeth.

Fire in this place is not taken strictly, as opposed to water; God indeed hath often made fire in kind his scourge. And the Apostle Jude saith of Sodom, That it suffered the vengeance of eternal fire: But all the judgments of God are in Scripture compared to fire (Mal. 4. 1.) Behold the day cometh that shall burn like an Oven, and all the proud, yea all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. There is a burning, and not by fire; There is so great a judgment and terror in fire let loose and breaking its bounds, that it may well signifie all judgments, or any thing that is terrible. (Isa. 5. 24.) As the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaffe, so their root shall be rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust. Thus here, the remnant of them the fire consumeth; that is, the wrath of God appearing in some visible judgment, consumeth the remnant.

But what is this remnant which the fire consumeth?

I answer, First, we may expound it of persons. The remnant of persons, all that are left of their family, their children and posterity, their kindred and relations are taken away and consumed from off the face of the earth.

Secondly, We may expound it of things, the remnant of goods, whatsoever remains of their estate, the odd ends, the very gleanings and leavings of their great riches and worldly substance, are all eaten up and brought to an end, so that nothing of them or theirs remaineth.

Thirdly, The remnant of them may be the remembrance of them. A fire shall consume their name and memorial, they shall never be thought of, nor spoken of any more with honour.

יתר Significat illud quo quis alium excellit, ideo reliquiarum nomine impiorum excellentem & supra cæteros mortales ingentem fœlicitatem intelligo. Pined.

Fourthly, The word remnant, as it signifieth in the Original any thing which remaineth, so especially that which remaineth in way of excellency, or eminency; not as we say the fagg-end of a thing, but even the uppermost and best of it. So that (after this translation) the remnant of them is the excellency of them, that which they thought most durable, and honourable, that which they looked upon as most substantial and intrinsecal to their greatness, that very thing the fire shall consume. So the word is used (Psal. 17. 14.) Deliver my soul from men which are thy hand, O Lord, from men of the world, &c. whose belly thou fillest with thy hid treasures, they are full of children, and leave the rest (or as we supply, the rest of their substance) to their babes; the rest, that is, the best; their bellies are full of hid treasures while they live, that is, they have and use abundance of the things of this life themselves; and they leave the rest, he doth not mean the scraps or parings after they had filled their own bellies, but by the rest or the remnant, ('tis the word of the text) he meaneth the choicest of what they had; even that they leave to their babes or children, when themselves must be gone and leave the world. Thus we may understand the word remnant in this place, not for a poor pittance, but for the best, the choicest things, for the flower and cream of all they had, even these things the fire shall consume, vengeance shall pursue and follow, till all be turned into smoak and ashes.

I have in divers other passages of this book met with Texts shewing the utter consumption of wicked men, therefore I shall not stay upon it here; only take this brief note;

That the Lord hath a different fire for the righteous and the wicked.

He hath a fire for his own people, but it is a purging fire, a cleansing, a refining fire. Like that (Mal. 3. 3.) He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver. The Lord also hath a fire for the wicked, but it is a consuming fire. He kindles many fires upon them, and himself is a consuming fire to them. But it may be said, that God is a consuming fire also to his own people; for the Apostle speaking of himself and other believers, saith (Heb. 12. 29.) Our God is a consuming fire. I answer; First, 'Tis true, the God of Believers is a consuming fire, but he is not a consuming fire to believers; even the hearts of believers ought to be over-awed with a holy fear of that in God, which they shall never feel from God. Secondly, God is sometimes a consuming fire to believers; but it is only to consume their corruptions, or their corruptible comforts: He will never consume either their Graces or spiritual interests. These he will not consume, whatsoever he consumes. But the whole of a wicked man is as combustible matter before him. There went up a smoak out of his nostrils, fire out of his mouth devoured (Psal. 18. 8.) That is, God poured out wrath, which devoured them like a fire. Fire (I mean natural fire) is a great devourer, it hath a strong stomach, there's nothing but pure Gold too hard for its digestion; but mystical fire, the fire of divine wrath is infinitely a greater devourer. Wrath kindles many devouring fires, but wrath it self is the most devouring fire; who can stand before it? who can abide the heat and flames of it? This is the Tophet prepared of old for the wicked; This fire is able to consume branch and rush, the root and top of the wicked in one day, and yet it will continue consuming them to eternity. The remnant of them the fire consumeth.

Eliphaz having thus far prosecuted a description both of the unrighteousness and of the ruine, both of the sin and punishment of wicked men, closely insinuating that Job was the man concern'd in all this large Discourse, he, in the latter part of this Chapter, turns his speech into a serious Exhortation to move Job to repent, and seek God, giving him many assurances and promises, that (in case he did so) it should not be in vain.

VERS. 21, 22, 23.

Acquaint now thy self with him, and be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee.
Receive, I pray thee, the Law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart.
If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up, thou shalt put away iniquity from thy Tabernacles.

ELiphaz having reproved Job for sin, and prest him with the remembrance of the Judgments of God against sinners: now turns his speech into a serious Exhortation moving him to seek the favour of God, and humble himself, Acquaint now thy self with him, and be at peace. From this course and method in which Eliphaz deals with Job, take this note:

That in dealing with sinners we are not only to threaten, but to perswade and propose the promises of peace to them.

Daniel dealt so with Nebuchadnezzar; yea, though he had told him of a decree in heaven past against him (Dan. 4. 22. 27.) yet he gives him faithful counsel, and exhorts him to break off his sins by righteousness, and his iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor, if it might be a lengthning of his tranquility, or (as we put in the Margin) a healing of his error. Hopes of mercy prevail with many, more then fear of wrath, and they are sooner led then driven unto Christ. Thus Eliphaz; Acquaint now thy self with him, and be at peace.

This verse 21. contains two general Propositions. First, a Proposition concerning duty, in the former part of the verse; Acquaint now thy self, &c. Secondly, Concerning mercy in the latter, thereby good shall come unto thee. The duty of acquainting himself with God, and being at peace with him, is explained in vers. 22. Receive, I pray thee, the Law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart. That's a good Comment upon, Acquaint now thy self with him, and be at peace. The Proposition of mercy, or the promises laid down in the close of that verse, are drawn out in all the following part of this Chapter, in which Eliphaz by most ample proposals of good things, doth provoke Job to turn from those sins of which he supposed him guilty, and to return to God.

Promissionibus invitat amplissimis, quæ & in se verè sunt & cum lege cõsentiunt, non tamen perpetua ut Eliphaz putat. Merc.

Acquaint now thy self with God.

The Original word which we render to acquaint, hath some variety of significations: As first to be familiar with another. And so it is used by David (Psal. 139. 3.) to shew the Intimacy which God hath with all our wayes, works, and thoughts; O Lord (saith David) thou hast searched me and known me, &c. thou art acquainted with all my wayes; As if he had said, Lord, thou knowest my wayes infinitely more clearly and distinctly, then any of my neerest acquaintance, who converse with me every day. It is used secondly, to express the customary doing of a thing (Numb. 22.30.) Balaams Ass spake thus by a miracle, Was I ever wont to do thus unto thee? Hath it been my custom, or have I familiarly served thee thus, said the Ass, when he thrust Balaam against the wall.

שכן Profuit, commodus, aptus fuit. Profice cum deo. Rab. Mos.

Thirdly, To profit; one of the Rabbins translates the Text thus, Profit with God; as who should say, thou hast been an unprofitable servant to God all this while, be thou now profitable unto him, serve him and his Providences, advance his name and glory; or thus rather, Thou hast but played the Truant hitherto, be thou now a good proficient in the School of Divine doctrine and discipline under the holy precepts and various providences of God. We find it applied to that sense at the second verse of this Chapter; Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wise may be profitable to himself? Man cannot be profitable unto God, or add any advantage to him by what he doth, but man may be profitable unto himself, or do himself good in doing the good will of God; yea God reckons it, and rewards man for it, as if he had been profitable to him, when he acts as becomes a faithful servant to him. So some expound it here, be profitable unto God, be a faithful and industrious servant unto him: having received his talents, do not lay them up in a napkin, hide them not in the earth.

Thirdly, Master Broughton reads thus, Reconcile thee now unto him. That's Gospel language, like that of Paul (2 Cor. 5. 20.) Now then we are Ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christs stead, be ye reconciled to God. So he conceives Eliphaz speaking here, I pray thee now reconcile thy self unto God. Master Beza reaches that sence fully, Return into his favour, get into his heart again; God hath as it were lockt thee out of his heart, and shut the door upon thee, now get in again; and the Tygurine reads very aptly, Accommodate thy self to him, that is, every way suit thy self to him; thou hast heretofore been humorous, or hast followed thine own spirit, and hast labour'd to please thy self, now accommodate thy self to him, or comply with him in every thing, be no more at thine own but at his dispose. All these rendrings comply well both with the words and the general scope of Eliphaz in this part of his discourse. Our translation fully joyns with the first of them.

tedi cum oso in g a- iam. Bez. Accommo- a te illi. Tygur.

ssuesce cum Pagn. eg. atabl.

Acquaint now thy self with him.] Get into a familiarity with God. The word implieth a likeness, or a suitableness between two in their wills and affections, in their wayes and counsels; for from likeness in these familiarity or acquaintance doth arise. So that Eliphaz here speaketh to Job as one that had estranged himself and departed from God, as one who had broken off Communion with God, and so he must needs have done, had he run such a course of wickedness as Eliphaz charged him with, in the former part of this Chapter. Therefore upon that supposition he gives Job wholesome advice, Acquaint now thy self with him.

Hence observe, First, That as man by nature is a stranger from God, so every act of sin, especially great and continued actings of sin, breed a further estrangement from God.

We act the part of nature every time we sin, and that in a proportion brings us back in some degree to what we were by nature, strangers unto God. A godly man (who hath had acquaintance with God) sinning puts back his acquaintance, and a distance grows between God and him. Believers after great sins and follies committed, are not forward to come into the presence of God, they have a kind of listlesness to duty, a listlesness to prayer, and to all acts of communion with God. And God himself appears as if he did not much care for them when they come, they have not those Communications from God which he usually vouchsafeth his. God doth not give them the meeting as formerly; they do not find the Lord presently, though they seek him earnestly. So that both wayes there is an Estrangement; sin separates between God and the soul, not onely judicially but naturally. If God should not depart from sinners, or command them to depart from him; yet they would of themselves depart from him. It is not possible for one, who willingly lives in sin, to live willingly in the presence of God: For as to be cast out of the presence of God, is the extreamest punishment of wicked men, so also is their being in his presence. The same thing is both their desire and their punishment. They are punished with a departure from God, and they desire nothing more then to be out of his presence.

Acquaint thy self now with God.] Secondly, Whereas Eliphaz exhorting Job to repentance, counsels him to acquaint himself with God, Observe, That Repentance is the renewing of our Communion or acquaintance with God.

As sin is a turning from God, so repentance is a returning to God; 'tis a change first of our mind, and then of our way. Impenitency brings the soul into an acquaintance and unholy familiarity with Satan; Repentance brings back the soul into its former acquaintance, and holy familiarity with God. As the first conversion (which is from a state of sin) so the second and every renewed conversion (which is from our falls into sin) renews our converse with the most high.

Thirdly, take this general observation;

A godly man is (as we may say) one of Gods acquaintance or familiars.

God calleth Abraham his friend; friendship cannot be without familiarity, there must be acquaintance before there can be love; if therefore there be friendship and love between God and man, there must be Acquaintance; we cannot love either persons or things, while unknown.

But it may be said, How can we, who are at such a distance, acquaint our selves with God?

I answer, we (who of our selves are afar off) are made nigh by the bloud of Jesus Christ, and being thus made nigh in our state, we draw nigh or acquaint our selves with him by several Acts. As first, To think or meditate of God, is to acquaint our selves with and draw nigh to God; meditation is an inward discourse and converse with God, it is a Soliloquie between God and the soul. Acquaintance is got by Conference: when friends meet and confer, that doth not only begin, but confirm, strengthen, and heighten their acquaintance. Saints have many thoughts of God, and that's their acquaintance with God. How precious are thy thoughts to me, O God! (saith David, Psal. 139. 17.) how great is the sum of them! when I awake I am still with thee. How was David still or ever with God? He was so in his thoughts, and meditations, in the actings and goings forth of his soul to him. Now he that is still or ever with a person, must needs be acquainted with him, I am still with thee, alwayes meditating upon thee. We find him again in the same holy frame (Psal. 63. 5, 6.) My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness, and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips; while I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches. As the Lord is ever thinking upon his people, they are written upon his heart, and graven upon the palms of his hand; and when his outward actings towards them are such, as may seem to intimate that his heart is withdrawn from all intimacy with them, yet even then he thinks most of them. This he acknowledgeth concerning Ephraim (Jer. 31. 20.) Since I spake against him I do earnestly remember him still. Since I spake against him, that is, since I spake against him by words of rebuke and correction, since I spake against him by rods of chastisement and correction, (as Ephraim found and confessed he had; Thou didst chastise me, and I was chastised) since I spake thus against him, I do earnestly remember him still. I remember him, and I remember him strongly, my heart is much upon him. And when the Lord saith thus, we are not to understand it as a man will remember an Enemy, when he speaks against him; he'l remember him indeed, and that earnestly to plot mischief against him, and to execute his revenge; but the meaning is, I remember him in mercy, my affections go out to him, my bowels are moved towards him. Such is the remembrance which God had of Ephraim, even when he was speaking against him and smiting him. Now as the Lord doth remember his people at all times, and earnestly remember them them at ſometimes. So his people in their proportion do earneſtly remember the Lord, they mind him often, they would mind him alwayes, they like to retain God (which the natural man liketh not, Rom. 1.28.) in their knowledg, or to acknowledg God; They have not ſome flitting tranſient thoughts and acknowledgments of God (as a carnal man may have) but they fix and retain God in their thoughts and acknowledgments; they think of God, what he is in his nature, they think what God is in all his perfections, they meditate of all his glory, of his juſtice, of his mercy, of his faithfulneſs, of his power, of his truth, of his unchangeableneſs, of his all-ſufficiency, they acquaint themſelves with God in all theſe; for indeed we are never acquainted with God, till we come to a diſtinct knowledg of him in all theſe parts of his glory, which yet are all but one and the ſame glorious God. To know only in general that there is a God, is not to acquaint our ſelves with God; our acquaintance with him conſiſts in a ſpiritual and fiducial knowledg of all his revealed perfections, ſo far as it is poſſible or lawful for man to ſearch and know. To be acquainted with any man, notes more then a general knowledg of him, how much more to be acquainted with God.

Secondly, We acquaint our ſelves with God, not only when we ſtudy his nature, or what he is, but when we ſtudy his works, or what he hath done. God is viſible in his works. That his name is near, his wondrous works declare (Pſal. 75.1.) We may acquaint our ſelves much with God in the works of Creation, but more in the works of Providence, in thoſe we may moſt legibly read his name, that is, his greatneſs and power, as alſo his goodneſs and mercy.

Thirdly, We acquaint our ſelves with God in the ſtudy of his Word; there he hath made a full diſcovery of himſelf and of his Will; O how I love thy Law (ſaith David) my meditation is in it night and day. The word of God is the demonſtration of the holineſs of God. There he hath ſet forth himſelf, how juſt, how pure, and how gracious he is. The Word is a glaſs in which God is ſeen, therefore acquaint thy ſelf with the word of God, and thou ſhalt be acquainted with God: reading and hearing the word of God is our going to God for Counſel. As we acquaint our ſelves with a man when we go to him, and ask his advice and counſel in any matter, or conſult his books; ſo every time we either read or hear the word of God in faith, we are asking counſel of God, and ſo acquainting our ſelves with him.

Fourthly, We eſpecially acquaint our ſelves with God in Prayer. That is nothing elſe but the opening of our hearts to God, a declaring of our wants to him. Prayer is the aſcending, the lifting up of the ſoul to God, therefore in prayer we acquaint our ſelves with God.

Fifthly, Our daily holy walking, is a daily acquainting our ſelves with God, every ſtep of a holy life is both towards and with God. The life of Enoch (who was too holy for a life here on earth, and therefore he was tranſlated that he ſhould not ſee death, his life I ſay) is deſcribed thus, Enoch walked with God (Gen. 5.24.) God and Enoch were like two familiars or intimate friends walking together; And becauſe he took ſo much delight in Gods acquaintance, God took him from all acquaintance with men; ſo ſaith that text, Enoch walked with God, and was not, for God took him. He was ſo taken with God, that God took him; or as the Author to the Hebrews ſaith, Tranſlated him (Chap. 11.5.) He was before tranſlated from nature to Grace, and he proved ſo great a proficient in that ſchool, that he was tranſlated from Grace to Glory (as it were per ſaltum,) by a leap over the grave; for he ſaw not death; From which ſad viſion, but one more (that I read of in all the Scripture, Elias by name) was excuſed before he was admitted to the beatifical viſion. Holy walking is the ſum of all our acquaintance with God, and our fulleſt acquaintance with God is but the iſſue of our holy walkings.

To draw towards a cloſe of this point, we may take notice, That there is a twofold acquaintance with God: Firſt, from neceſſity, when we come to him, and deſire to have to do with him, preſt with our own wants, fears, or afflictions; of this the Prophet ſpeaketh (Iſa. 26.16.) Lord, in trouble have they viſited thee, they have poured out a prayer when thy chaſtning was upon them. And of this the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks (Pſal. 78.34.) When he ſlew them they ſought him, and they returned and enquired early after God: nevertheleſs, they did but flatter him with their mouth, &c. Theſe make God their refuge, not their choice. They, I grant, who have made God their choice in good times, may comfortably make him their refuge in evil times. But to neglect God while it is well with us; and only to run to him while it is ill with us, or to have our evils and burdens removed, is to acquaint our ſelves with God, becauſe we cannot chooſe, or becauſe we cannot be without him, not becauſe we have choſen him, or deſire to be with him. As there is a patience, ſo there is an acquaintance perforce. Though God doth not refuſe acquaintance with many poor ſouls, when their neceſſities drive them to him, yet it is beſt to acquaint our ſelves with him for the love we bear to him, or the deſire we have to enjoy him, rather then (though we all have need of him, and are bound to come to him becauſe we have) for the need we have of him. And therefore, ſecondly, there is an acquaintance with God from pure love. As when we come to a friend, having nothing to do but to ſee him, and to renew or ſtrengthen our acquaintance with him. We do not come to load him with our cares, or adviſe with him about our buſineſſes, or deſire a courteſie of him, but, meerly and purely to ſhew our love to him. Thus to come to God when we are not preſt with fears, nor pincht with wants, nor clouded with doubts, nor vexed with troubles, is the moſt noble and ingenuous way of acquainting our ſelves with him. When we (as it were) make a journey to God, having nothing to do with him, but to viſit him and to deſire further communion with him; nothing to do with him, but to behold his excellency and his glory; nothing to do with him, but to tell him what our hearts are towards him; how we love him, how we depend upon him, how we deſire to pleaſe him, and to commit our wayes to him, to acquaint God with thoſe things which only concern our holy walking with him; this is to ſeek pure acquaintance with him. The Lord ſaith of Abraham his acquaintant or friend (Gen. 18.17.) Shall I hide from Abraham the thing that I am to do? I ſhould not deal with him as with my friend, if I did ſo. A friend who is as our own ſoul (Deut. 13.6.) ſhould know all that is in our ſouls. Now as God (whether we will or no) is acquainted with all that is in our ſouls; ſo a ſoul acquainted with God, will let him know all: Shall I hide from God the thing that I am about to do? ſhall I not tell him how it is with me? To acquaint our ſelves thus with God is a ſweet and precious duty. Much might be ſaid about it, I ſhall only adde theſe two things; Firſt, That all our acquaintance with God muſt be had through the mediator; There is no getting neer the Father but by the Son. Secondly, That the more we are acquainted with God, the more we are transformed into his likeneſs. Some have altered the habit of their bodies, yea the diſpoſitions of their minds by long acquaintance with others, and have looked or appeared like them, by often looking upon or being with them. When Moſes had been forty dayes in the Mount talking with God, his face ſhone, ſome rayes of a divine glory darted out from him, ſo that Aaron and the children of Iſrael were afraid to come nigh him (Exod. 34.30.) And thus every one who gets up into the Mount by faith, and acquaints himſelf with God, gets ſomewhat of God, which will draw a reverence upon him among men. As when Chriſt ſhall appear hereafter to us in glory, we ſhall be like him (ſaith the Apoſtle John 1 Ep. 3.2.) for we ſhall ſee him as he is; ſo according to the ſight which we have of and our acquaintance with Chriſt in the wayes of grace here, will our likeneſs be unto him. The more we are with God, the more we have of God. Acquaint now thy ſelf with him,

And be at peace.

There is a threefold Interpretation of this clauſe.

Firſt, it may be taken as an Effect of what was ſaid before, Acquaint thy ſelf with God, and be at peace; that is, If thou acquaint thy ſelf with God, thou ſhalt have peace. So in the Hebrew often the Imperative mood is put for the future tenſe, as, Do this, and live, (according to the tenure of the Covenant of works) that is, Do this, and thou ſhalt live. So acquaint thy ſelf with him, and be at peace; that is, thou ſhalt have peace. Peace comprehends all good; good of the mind, good of the body, good of the eſtate. When the Hebrews ſay, Peace be unto you, they ſay as much in that one word, as the Greeks ſay in three; whereof the firſt reſpects the welfare of the mind; the ſecond, the welfare or health of the body; and the third the ſucceſs of all our affairs and undertakings. So that while Eliphaz ſaith to Job according to this reading, Thou ſhalt be at peace, it is a promiſe of all manner of good flowing in upon the renewing of his acquaintance with, with, and his returning to a reverential converse with God. But because this promise follows in the next words, thereby good shall come unto thee, therefore I understand this clause as a duty, and not as a promise. Acquaint now thy self with him, and be at peace. To be at peace is a distinct duty from that of acquainting our selves with God, yet necessarily following upon it; The words may have these two things in them.

Imperativi pro futuro paſſim in lingua. Merc. Quando Hebraei dicunt pax tibi, ſignificant id quod Graecis verbis enunciant, χαίρειν, γίνεσθαι, εὐπραγίαν quorum primum ad animum refertur, ſecundum ad corpus, tertium ad affectiones exteras. Druſ.

Sedatiore animo esto. Bez.
Acquiesce in castigationibus Dei, atis repugnâsti; satis roterve rejectatus es, ergo mitesce.

First, Be at peace, that is, be quiet and content under the chastening hand of God, do not murmur, do not repine. Thou hast strugled enough already, now lay aside all impatiency and passion, all discontents and animosities; as, do not rage and rave, do not distemper and discompose thy self as thou hast done; There is a storm upon thee, but be thou of a calm and quiet spirit, kiss the rod, be not angry with it; we may express this frame by that which the Apostle Peter makes the chief adorning, or ornament of a woman, that she be of a meek and a quiet spirit, which with God is of great price; As meekness is a Jewel of the greatest price that women can wear; so it is a most rich and precious Jewel for a man to wear: and as at all times, so then especially meekness and peaceableness of spirit becomes man, when God seems to come in anger and to be at war with him. Bildad said of Job (Chap. 18. v. 4.) He teareth himself in his anger; As if he had said, the man's mad or distracted: now Eliphaz adviseth him, Be at peace, be quiet; This is a good interpretation, and we may note from it,

That it is our Duty to sit down quiet and satisfied under the saddest dispensations of God.

A submitting spirit under an afflicting hand, how comely is it? To be at peace in our selves, when all is unquiet about us, how blessed a sight is it? There are some who trouble themselves a great deal more then all the troubles that are upon them can. Man is naturally a very unquiet creature, an angry piece of flesh, when God is angry, he is apt to storm: till his heart is subdued to God, he cannot bear the hand of God. Wicked men naturally (as the Prophet Esay found them, Chap. 51. 20.) are like a wild bull in a net, full of the fury of God; and not only so, but full of fury against God, throwing up the dust, and moyling themselves when the net of God hath caught them, or when God hath caught them in his net. God catcheth his own people in his net many times as well as the wicked. His own people are like a dove in a net, but the wicked are like a wild Bull in a net. I grant, the Doves will flutter a while when the net hath caught them. Impatiency doth often break out in the best of Saints: it is a hard thing to keep the heart quiet within while our estate is unquiet without, and to be at peace in our selves, when God seems to be at war with us. It is hard for us to hold our peace, much more to be at peace in an afflicted condition; yet this lesson, though very hard, Saints have learned. David saith (Psal. 39. 9.) I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it. His was not a sullen silence, but a patient silence. He had not a word to say against God, when God spake hard words against him, yea, when God was at blows at sharps with him. Paul also had learned in every estate to be content (Phil. 4. 11.) However the world went with him, he was at peace.

In eo patiebabe, in tiam requi nunc natus es, velut is.

Secondly, Be at peace, may refer unto God, and so it is but the heightning of our acquaintance with him; for, first there must be an acquainting, and then a making up of peace; when friends fall out, they must first speak with one another, before the breach can be healed; if they do not treat, there can be no reconciliation. After treating comes peace; As peace is the fruit of the lips (Isa. 57. 19.) when God treats with man by man, so when man treats with man, and when man treats with God. Acquaint now thy self with him, call for a treaty, and therein make thy peace. Be at peace with him, do not any longer continue thy unholy war with God. Eliphaz supposing Job as a man setting himself against God, had reason to bespeak him thus.

Hence note, That till we do acquaint our selves with God, we can have no peace with him.

The wicked are like the troubled Sea, whose waves cast up mire and dirt; there is no peace to the wicked, saith my God (Isa. 57. 21.) Why no peace to the wicked? The wicked have no acquaintance with God, they are strangers, they are afar off from God, and God beholds them afar off, therefore there is no peace to them: if they have any peace, it is a false peace, a deceitful peace, or it is but a short peace, which will quickly break out into a war again: when once Conscience is awakened, when that sleeping Lyon is rouzed, what will become of all their peace? they will then find, indeed, that their soul is among Lyons; and that they have been only secure, not safe; or that theirs hath been at best, a truce only, not a peace; no peace till acquainted with God, and no acquaintance with God can produce peace, but that which is by Jesus Christ: He is the Peace-maker, who is also the Mediator; sinners cannot have peace by any immediate acquaintance with God, for he is a consuming fire, and sinners standing alone, are but as dry stubble before him. When we are made nigh to, or acquainted with God by the blood of Jesus Christ (and not till then) are we at peace with him. Acquaint thy self with him, and be at peace: no peace without acquaintance with God, no acquaintance with God but by Christ; therefore no peace but by Christ.

Secondly, Observe, That God is ready to give peace to, or to be at peace with those that acquaint themselves with him.

Acquaint thy self with him, and be at peace; as if he should say, thou shalt certainly be at peace with him, if thou doest but acquaint thy self with him; for the Lord will not always chide; his love is everlasting, but his anger towards his, continues but for a moment; As the wisdom of God in man, so much more, the most wise God, is gentle, and easie to be entreated. The Lord is found of those who seek him not (Isa. 65. 1.) Surely then he will be found of those that seek him; he is not implacable, no, nor inexorable. The Lord hath declared himself full of Compassion to returning sinners, so full of compassion that he seeks the acquaintance of sinners, and beseeches them to be reconciled to him; much more will he be acquainted with them who beseech him that they may be reconciled to him. Fury is not in me (saith the Lord, Isa. 27. 4, 5.) who would set the bryars and thorns in battel against me? that is, who would be so foolish as to encourage sinful men to be so fool-hardy as to stand out against me, or contend with me, for alas, (as it follows in the text) I would go through them, I would burn them together. There's no dealing with me upon those terms; but I will tell you upon what terms a sinner may deal with me; Let him lay hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me, and he shall make peace with me; that is, he shall not lose his labour, he shall find peace, if he take hold of my strength. One would think he should rather have said, let him take hold of my mercy and goodness, but he saith, Let him take hold of my strength. To oppose the strength of God is most dangerous, but by faith to take hold of it, that's both the duty and the priviledge of an humbled sinner. Proud sinners oppose the strength of God, humbled sinners take hold of it, as their strength. As a man seeing another whom he hath offended, but is unable to resist, or make his party good with him, with much submission takes hold of his arm or weapon, endeavouring by earnest suit to stay him from smiting. And indeed to take hold of the strength of God, is to take hold on his mercy: The strength of God to save sinners, lies in his mercy, and that mercy is in his Son, who is his strength to save sinners; if a sinner lay hold of this strength, the mercy of God in his Son, that he may make peace with God, if this be his design, he shall make peace; there shall not be a treaty with God in Christ for peace in vain; if a sinner should take hold of the strength of his own righteousness and performances, if he should take hold of the strength of all the Angels in heaven, he could not make peace with God, nor would God agree with him upon those terms. Such a soul must return (re infecta) without his errand. God is ready to be at peace with us, but we must have our peace in his way, not in our own. Acquaint now thy self with him, and be at peace. And this peace, whether in our selves or with God, is no light or unprofitable thing, as Eliphaz to provoke Job to pursue and seek after it, tells him in the last words of this verse, Thereby good shall come unto thee.

Thereby; whereby? or by what? what is it that shall procure, or produce this good? The answer is at hand; Thy acquaintance with God, thy being at peace will procure all good things for thee. Acquaint thy self with him, and be at peace:

peace: be at peace to thy own ſpirit, be quiet; be at peace with God, be reconciled, every way good ſhall come unto thee. M. Broughton renders, Proſperity ſhall come unto thee: the ſence is the ſame. Others read, inſtead of good ſhall come unto thee, thy comings in ſhall be good: thou ſhalt have a good revenue, a good in-come: whereas before evil came upon thee, now thy comings in ſhall be good. This is of the ſame meaning with our tranſlation. I ſhall not need to ſtay upon the opening of the words, there is no difficulty in them.

Proventus tuus erit bonus. Druſ.

From their dependance, in that he ſaith, Acquaint thy ſelf with him, and be at peace, ſo ſhall good come unto thee, Theſe words are brought in by way of inference upon the former, whence Obſerve, That when we are eſtranged from God, good is ſtranged from us.

God can ſtop the Influences of all our mercies from us, he can lay an embargo upon all Creatures from bringing any good to us; though there be ſtore of treaſure and rich Commodity in the place, yet he can bar up all, that no good can come unto us; yea, the Lord in ſuch caſes doth often lay a ſtop upon the ſpirit of prayer in his own people, and when the heart is ſtopt that we cannot pray, then uſually good is ſtopt and kept back from coming to us; Prayer is that which fetches in mercy and good things through the love of God in Jeſus Chriſt. Prayer may have a twofold ſtop. Firſt, Prayer may have a ſtop in the heart; Secondly, Prayer which comes forth of the heart may have a ſtop in heaven; the Lord doth even ſhut out prayer ſometimes, and when prayer is ſhut out, no good can get out to us. Prayer is ſent upon a meſſage to heaven; and if our meſſenger be ſhut out of doors and not admitted in, what anſwer can we expect by his meſſage? And the Lord as he doth ſtop ſuch from the receiving of further good, ſo from receiving of good by what they have already. We may have that which in the nature of it is good, and yet have no good by it; God can ſtop the creature in our hands, that it ſhall not at all give us any Comfort, as well as he can ſtop any creature comfort from coming into our hands. Unleſs the Lord (in one ſence) ſtop the creature, it quickly leaks out all the Comfort which he hath put into it, and proves to us indeed, what ſin hath made it, a broken Ciſtern: And unleſs the Lord open the creature, the creature cannot give forth that good which it hath; It will be to us as a Ciſtern without a vent to paſs out the water for our uſe. There's many a one who hath enough in his hand (take it in any kind) but he enjoys nothing of it, becauſe the Lord locks up the conduit, or the ciſtern, and then how much good ſoever there is in it, there's none for him. It is all one to us, whether we have only a broken Ciſtern for our portion, or a Ciſtern always lock't up; for as the one lets all the water run out, ſo the other holds all the water in; we are as far from good, if our Ciſtern hold all, as if it held nothing at all. It is then not only our duty and our holineſs to acquaint our ſelves and be at peace with God, but our wiſdom and our intereſt; For it is as he pleaſeth, always, and uſually as we pleaſe him, that either we have any thing that is good coming to us, or that any good cometh to us by that which we have.

Secondly, Note (which is a Corollary from the former Obſervation,)

That the renewing of our Communion with God, and making peace with him, is followed with all manner of mercies and good things.

So ſhall good come unto thee.] There was never any man a looſer by acquaintance with God: Gods acquaintance is a gainful acquaintance: Our acquaintance with God, ſhould we conſider it abſtractly and ſeparate from all benefit but his very acquaintance, yet that is benefit enough; God is the chiefeſt good, and therefore when we enjoy him, we enjoy all good. The enjoyment of God himſelf is infinitely more then the enjoyment of all created good things that come from God. Friends are ſometimes in thoſe heights of friendſhip and nobleneſs of ſpirit one to another, that they count the enjoyment of one another to be more then all the benefits they can heap upon or reap by one another; it is your good Company, ſaith ſuch a friend, and your acquaintance that delights me more then all the good you can beſtow upon me. And is not God much more ſo to us? Thus (I ſay) acquaintance with God alone is all good; but beſides (as the point leads us to conſider) God gives out good things from himſelf, to all his holy acquaintants; temporal or bodily good comes to us by his acquaintance, and ſo alſo (and that chiefly) doth ſpiritual or ſoul good. Acquaint thy ſelf with God, and the dews of grace, ſhowers of the Spirit ſhall fall into thy boſom. Acquaint thy ſelf with God, and ſpiritual comfort ſhall flow in unto thee, ſpiritual ſtrength ſhall flow in unto thee, thy ſoul ſhall be filled as with marrow and fatneſs. And as good ſhall come to thee in perſon, ſo to thine; to thy family and poſterity good ſhall come. And as God will cauſe good to come to ſuch, ſo to ſtay and abide with them. As good comes, ſo good continues according to the command and commiſſion which it hath from God. Thus he promiſed in the Prophet (*Iſa.*48.18.) in caſe his people had harkned to his commandments; Then had thy peace been as a river, and thy poſterity as the waves of the Sea. Thy peace and proſperity had not been as a Land flood or brooks of water which fail in ſummer when we have moſt need of them (all worldly things are apt to do ſo) but they ſhould have flowed perpetually as a river doth, which is fed by a conſtant Spring, or as the Sea doth which is the feeder of all Springs. A godly man gets not only a large portion of good things, but a laſting portion, yea a portion of thoſe good things which are everlaſting, by acquainting himſelf with God. And becauſe by acquaintance with God ſo much good comes to us; therefore Eliphaz preſſeth Job further to it in the next verſe.

Verſ. 22. Receive, I pray thee, the Law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart.

Receive,] That is, learn from his mouth; he that teaches gives, and he that learns receives; and the Hebrew word which we render here to Receive, ſignifies not ordinary receiving, but receiving with an earneſt deſire; yea, it implyeth a kind of violence in deſire, ſuch as they have who take ſpoils in war. They flie upon the ſpoil, and catch it with as much eagerneſs as they won it with courage. So Receive the Law from his mouth. David ſaith, I have rejoyced in thy word, more then they that find great ſpoils (*Pſal.*119.162.) O how ſtrongly did his heart run out to the word? and there is an Elegancy alſo in it, that this word which ſignifies to receive the Law, doth alſo ſignifie the Law or doctrine to be received (*Prov.*4.2.) I give you good doctrine, forſake you not my Law. The word which is there uſed for doctrine is the ſame that is here rendred to receive, the reaſon is, becauſe wholſome doctrine is worthy to be received, and ought to be received willingly, chearfully and gladly, and therefore the Goſpel which is the higheſt and moſt precious doctrine is called an Acceptable doctrine: This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all Acceptation (*1 Tim.*1.11.) The Goſpel is worthy not only of Acceptation, or of great, but of all Acceptation, and that from all men, even from the Greateſt; And ſo alſo is the Law, for, as ſhall be opened further afterwards, the Law in this place comprehends the Goſpel alſo. Receive the Law at his mouth.

Dat Magiſter quando docet, capit diſcipulus quando diſcit. Druſ.

לקח Verbum hoc ad prædam quæ cum violentia tollitur referri poteſt. Ex hac radice dicitur doctrina.

לקח quaſi accepta vel accipienda, quia ſc. lex debet accipi grato & lubenti animo.

Further, The word which we expreſs Receive, is rendred by ſome to buy; we may connect both ſences here. Receive the Law as a thing bought, and carry it home with thee. That of Solomon (*Prov.*23.23.) Suits it well; Buy the truth, and ſell it not. Truth is a Commodity the trade whereof goes but one way; all Civil Trades and Merchandizes are continued by buying and ſelling, but this ſpiritual trade is continued by buying only, without ſelling; it will be our profit to have this Commodity always upon our hands, or rather always in our hands. Thus here, Receive the Law at a price, buy it, and keep it; not that the Lord doth expect any price from us, or that we can bring any thing to him valuable for it. We buy it, when we take pains for it, when we do our utmoſt endeavour to receive the truth, when we receive the truth, not only as it is offered and brought home to us, but when we go out for it, and ſeek after it in all the means which God hath appointed as conveyances of it, that's buying the Law of truth.

Receive the Law.] Again, We may profitably conſider a double derivation of that word which we tranſlate, Law. Some ſay it is from a root that ſignifies to behold or Contemplate, to Conſider, to look about; and the Law is well expreſt by a word of that ſence, becauſe the whole Law is diligently to be obſerved and conſidered, looked into, and meditated upon, we are alwayes to behold it, and that in every part. For the whole Law is copulative, and he that offends in one part offends in all. David ſpeaking of the righteous man, man,(*Pſal.*1.2.) ſaith, he meditates in the law of the Lord day and night. What's meditation? but the Inward view of a thing,or the beholding it with an Intellectual eye; meditation is the continual turning of things over in the mind, to behold the excellencies and perfections that are in them.

תורת à radice תור Explorare aut circumquaq; luſtrare quia lex univerſa eſt diligenter obſervanda, ni quis in uno offendat.

A radice יָרָה *Quod eſt pluere irrigare; quare commune & fere idem eſt nomen,*pluviæ Doctoris & legiſlatoris.

Secondly, Say others, it proceeds from another radical word, that ſignifies to rain, and that not only ſome ſmall driſsling dewing rain, but full ſhowers, or as we ſay to pour down; and in the Hebrew,the ſame word ſignifies, to rain, and to teach,becauſe teaching by the word is like raining,or the ſending down of rain. The Apoſtle(*Heb.*6.7.) alludes to it.For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it,&c.by the earth he means thoſe who hear the word or doctrine, which comes down upon them like rain to ſoften their hearts, and make them fruitful. There are two other Texts of Scripture very ſuitable to this Expoſition (*Iſa.*30. 20.) Though the Lord give you the bread of adverſity,and the water of affliction, yet ſhall not thy teachers be removed into Corners any more, but thine eye ſhall ſee thy teachers. Thy teachers ſhall not be removed,ſo we render: but ſtrictly from the letter of the Hebrew we may read it thus: Though the Lord give thee the bread of adverſity,&c. yet ſhall not thy rain be removed from thee. It may ſeem ſtrange that they ſhould have the bread of adverſity, and the water of Affliction, and yet have alſo rain which naturally cauſeth the earth to bring forth bread, and fills the pools with water. But the Prophet who ſpeaks of corporal bread and water in the former part of the verſe, ſpeaks of ſpiritual rain in the latter, making this ſo full a compenſation to the people of God, for the want of the other two, that they ſhould have no cauſe to complain of it.As if the Prophet had ſaid,Though you are cut ſhort in outward things, yet you ſhall not be ſhortned in ſpirituals, the rain of holy doctrine ſhall not be removed from you, or as we tranſlate, thy teachers ſhall not be removed, &c. Some amongſt us would have the teachers of holy doctrine removed, leſt by feeding them the bread and water of the Land ſhould fail; as if the charge of publick preaching the riches of the Grace of Chriſt would be an undoing, or at leaſt an impoveriſhing of the Nation. Whereas (I touch it only by the way) the Prophet comforts the people of God in the midſt of all their wants and outward afflictions, that they ſhould not want the preſence of their teachers, nor the ſhowers of holy inſtruction by them. Again (Joel 2.23.) Be glad O Zion, and rejoyce in the Lord your God, for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cauſe to come down the rain, the former rain and the latter rain in the firſt month. That which we render,(The former rain moderately) others tranſlate, a Teacher of righteouſneſs, or according to righteouſneſs; ſo you may find in the Margin of your larger Bibles. And that's the great mercy which Zion is to rejoyce in; for can we think that Zion, the children of Zion ſhould be called ſo earneſtly to rejoyce meerly in natural rain, or the effects of it;becauſe of the abundance of Corn and Wine and Oyl, which the earth well watered uſually produceth? This is too poor a thing (conſidered alone) for Zion, to rejoyce in! Zion or the people of God do and muſt confeſs themſelves unworthy of the leaſt outward mercy, even of a ſhower of rain, or of a ſheaf of corn, and they ought to praiſe God, and be very thankful for theſe; But theſe are not properly, the matter of Zions gladneſs and rejoycing. In theſe the world rejoyceth, Who will ſhew us any good? (*Pſal.*4.7.) They are for Corn, and Wine, and Oyl; but Lord (ſaith David) lift up the light of thy Countenance upon me. Thou haſt put gladneſs in mine heart, more then in the time that their corn and their wine encreaſed: As if he had ſaid, Worldly men rejoyce in Corn and Wine; but I rejoyce more in the light of thy countenance. The light of the favour of God, and the light of the knowledge of God, are the chief matters of a believers joy.And this light of holy joy comes in uſually with and by the rain of that doctrine, which falls upon us from the mouth of God in the teachings of his Divine Law. Receive the Law from his mouth.

Non elongabit arte pluviam.

anſtè coldit prophetа nomibus doctoris ſeu legiſatoris & uviæ, ſeu nbris matinæ & otini.

But you will ſay, What is this Law which comes down like rain from heaven, and which we are to receive from the mouth of God?

I anſwer, The Law may be taken two wayes.

First, Strictly for the ten Commandments, or the five Books of Moſes, which are called the Law.

Secondly; More largely,and ſo the whole word of God is the Law. Chriſt himſelf calls the Book of Pſalms the Law two or three times in the New Teſtament (John 10.34.) Jeſus anſwered them, is it not written in your Law, I have ſaid ye are Gods? where was that written? in the 82 *Pſal.verſ.*6. And ſo again, (John 15.25.) But this cometh to paſs, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their Law, they hated me without a cauſe. What Law doth he mean? thoſe words we find (*Pſal.*35.19.) Take one text further? (1 *Cor.*14. 21.) In the Law it is written, With men of other tongues and other lips will I ſpeak unto this People. Where is that written? (*Iſa.*28.11.) So that the Law in a large ſenſe, is taken for the whole body of the word of God,or for the general Revelation of the myſtery of his will,in which ſenſe we may ſay the Goſpel is the Law: And the Goſpel is expreſly called the Law (or rule) of faith (*Rom.*3.27.) So that by Law here we may underſtand whatſoever the Lord hath given us,either as a rule of life, or as a rule of faith. The Seventy tranſlate Eliphaz ſpeaking in that latitude, Receive whatſoever God delivers, declares, or puts forth. Receive, I pray thee, the Law Ἐξηγοεῖσαν.

From his mouth.] From whoſe mouth? from the mouth of God; how can that be? Indeed Moſes went up into the Mount, and was with God fourty dayes, and there received the Law from his mouth; but could Job receive the Law from his mouth as Moſes did? I anſwer, If God had called him to it, as he did Moſes,he might. But that's not the purpoſe of Eliphaz. Neither are we (I conceive) to underſtand him of ſuch a Receiving from the mouth of God, as the old Prophets had who received the mind of God by Immediate Inſpiration, and dictates from God himſelf: for though they were not called up ſolemnly into a Mount (as Moſes) to receive the Law, yet the Spirit was ſent to make known the mind of God to them. And in that ſence the Prophet Jeremiah is ſaid to warn King Zedekiah from the mouth of the Lord (2 *Chron.*36.12.) And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord his God, and humbled not himſelf before Jeremiah the Prophet ſpeaking from the mouth of the Lord,that is, he received a word from God by an Extraordinary Revelation to carry unto the King who yet humbled not himſelf. And ſo (*Iſa.*30.2.) the Lord complains of his people that walked to go down into Egypt to ſtrengthen themſelves with the ſtrength of Pharaoh, &c. and yet had not asked at his mouth, that is, had not asked direction in the thing according to the wayes of Revelation then in uſe, by enquiring of the Prophets, or of the high Prieſt. And the Lord tells the Prophet Jeremy (*Chap.*15.19.) That he ſhould be as his mouth if he would take forth the precious from the vile; as if he had ſaid, if thou art faithful in my work, I will reveal my ſelf to thee, and thou ſhalt ſpeak even as I my ſelf ſpoke, thou ſhalt be as my mouth. Now, I conceive, Eliphaz doth not go thus high when he bids Job receive the Law from the mouth of God, as if he were to expect immediate direction and advice from him. For then, we may be ſaid to receive a rule or a law from the mouth of God, when we receive that which God hath manifeſted at any time as a rule and law for us with the reſt of his people to walk by: they who receive that law once delivered from the mouth of God, may be ſaid to receive the law from his mouth, though they are not the immediate receivers of it, yea, though it were publiſhed ſome thouſands of years before they were born. Some from theſe words, collect that the books of Moſes were written before this time, and that Eliphaz did refer Job to thoſe, bidding him receive that law which the mouth of God had ſpoken to Moſes; but though whether the law were then formally ſpoken or no is a diſpute, yet it is without all diſpute, that the mouth of God had then given a law or rule of life to his people; and ſo Eliphaz might ſafely and truly ſay, Receive, I pray thee, the law from his mouth, there having been a Revelation of the mind of God among the faithful in all ages and times. God never left his people to their own will, nor them to be their own Guide and Counſeller. For when the Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 2. 14.) that the Gentiles having not a law are a law unto themſelves; his meaning is not that they had no law, but one of their own deviſing. They indeed had not the law of God formally ſpoken to their ears, and preſerved in tables of ſtone, but they had the ſubſtance of the law of God naturally written in their hearts. So then, there hath alwayes been a law from his mouth formally in the Church, and naturally in the world.

Prophetæ ſunt quaſi os dei quia per ipſos loquutus eſt.

Therefore

Therefore saith Eliphaz, Receive the law from his mouth; and when he saith, Receive the Law from his mouth, it may have a double Opposition.

Ex ore ejus notanter dicit, i.e. non ex ore aut arbitrio tuo. Merc.

First, To the will and wisdom of Job; As if Eliphaz had said, Thou hast been hitherto a law to thy self, that is, thou hast followed thy own advice, run on upon thy own head, now receive the law from his mouth. Man naturally hath high thoughts of himself; and would be a law to himself. Not as (*Rom.*2.14. which place was touched before) The Gentiles having not a law, were a law to themselves; that is, they had the law of God written in their hearts by nature: but besides that, there is a law which man would be to himself against that law of nature written in his heart, and against the light of nature shining in his conscience, he would set up a law, even his own Lust, in opposition to the law of God. Thus he would be a law to himself, and not Receive a law from the mouth of God. Therefore saith Eliphaz; Now receive the law from his mouth.

Secondly, (from his mouth) may be opposed to the mouthes of others; as if he should say, if thou wilt not trust us, nor take our word, then trust God, we would not have thee depend upon us, nor upon any man living, not on the judgment or Authority of any Creature, but receive the law from his mouth; there is a law and a truth come from God, let thy faith be guided, and thy life ordered by that.

Hence Note, It is our duty to receive the rule from God.

The Lord hath power to give us the law, and we must receive the law from him. None have power to impose a law upon us but God himself, nor may we devise a law for our selves: God is the only Master of the Conscience, he alone can say, Receive the law at my mouth. If you ask, what is it to receive the law? I answer, it is more then to give it the hearing. To receive, is, First, to believe the law; Secondly, to receive, is to honour and reverence the law; Thirdly, to receive the law, is to yield up our selves to the obedience of it, to be cast into the mould of it, to subject our selves wholly to the mind of God in it; Then we receive the law when we take the Impressions of it, and have as it were the Image and stamp of it upon our spirits, and in our lives. Fourthly, then we receive it when, as it follows in the Text, we lay up his word in our hearts: barely to receive it is not enough, you must lay it up, treasure it up.

And lay up his word in thy heart.

This is opposed,

Præcidentis partis expositio & amplificatio. Ita legē suscipe ut ponas proprie, disponas arte cura sollicitudine observandi.

First, To forgetfulness of the word, receive the law and let it not slip out of thy memory.

Secondly, It is oppos'd to negligence in the practice of the law, lay it up that it may be forth coming to direct thee in every duty. In Conversion the law is written in the heart; every godly man hath a Copy of the law in his heart: That's the description of a godly man, (*Psal.*37.31.) The law of God is in his heart, none of his steps shall slide; which is not an universal exclusion of all failing and slipping, as if every godly man were as much past sinning, as he is past perishing: but when 'tis said, none of his steps, the meaning is, few of his steps shall slide, or he shall never slide so in any of his steps as not to recover his feet and get up again. He shall walk very holily, so holily as if all his walkings were but one continued act of holiness. But, to the text, None of his steps shall slide quite and for ever out of the way, because the law of God is in his heart. What David speaks in that prophetical Psalm of Christ (Psal. 40. 8. Thy law is within my heart) is true in its degree of every Christian, all the laws of God are in his heart. That Character is again given of them (*Psal.*84. 5.) In whose heart are thy ways; there is a suiting of the mind of God and the heart of man together in regeneration. But now the duty spoken of in the Text is another thing; for a man that hath the law written in his heart, may yet possibly forget to lay up the word and law of God in his heart, he may (under temptation and the pressures of corruption) be negligent in that; it is the work of a godly man, who hath the law of God in his heart already, continually to lay up the law in his heart; and so we are to understand such Scriptures as these (*Prov.*7.3.) Keep my Commandments and live, and my law as the apple of thine eye, bind them on thy fingers, write them on the table of thine heart, &c. The first writing of the law in the heart is by the finger of the Spirit, by Gods own finger. As it was God that first wrote the law in tables of stone with his own finger, so it is he that writes the law in these fleshly Tables of the heart by the finger of the Spirit: yet Solomon perswades his son to write the law upon the Table of his heart: when grace is received, and the law once written in our hearts, we do as it were put in several fresh Copies of the law, we are continually writing divine notions and Instructions upon our hearts; this renewed act is ascribed to us, because we through grace joyn in it. We have an Expression of like import (*Prov.*4.21.) My son attend to my words, encline thine ear to my sayings: let them not depart from thine eyes, keep them in the midst of thine heart. The heart is said to be the midst or Center of the body; now, saith he, keep the law in the very midst of thine heart, in the safest place; as the heart is the safest place, the middle of the body, so the middle of the heart is the safest place of the heart. So we may understand that of David, I have hid thy Commandments in my heart (*Psal.*119.11.) And (*Deut.*6.6.) These words which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart, that is, thou shalt lay them up there. Of this laying up the law in the heart we are to understand Eliphaz here; as if he had said, O Job, thou hast often heard of the law, but thou hast been a forgetful hearer, now hear it, and hold it now (as the Apostle exhorts the Hebrews, *Heb.*2.1.) Give the more earnest heed to the things, which thou hast heard, or shalt hereafter hear, lest at any time thou shouldest let them slip, or thou shouldest run out (as we there put in the margine) as a leaking vessel.

Further, This laying up the word in the heart, is oppos'd unto a bare barren knowledge; it is not enough to have the word of God in our heads, that is, to know it: it is not enough to have the word of God upon our tongues, that is, to speak of it, but we must lay it up in the heart; For though the heart in Scripture takes in the understanding, and the whole soul, yet chiefly it respects the affections: lay up the word in thine heart, that is, let thy affections be warm'd with it, while thy memory retains and keeps it, and thy understanding is enlightned with a true notion of it.

Hence Observe, First, The word of God is a precious thing.

We do not lay up trifles and trash, but precious things, and treasure; we lay up our Plate and Jewels, our Gold and Silver; the word of God should be more to us then thousands of Gold and Silver, it is the most precious Jewel, 'tis treasure, and therefore it must be laid up.

Secondly, The heart is the Ark or Cabinet, in which the word must be laid up.

There was an Ark or Chest provided for the law (Exod. 25.21.) and that Ark was Christ, he was typified by it; and indeed the law would be too hot for our hearts, too hot to lie there, if it had not first lain in the heart of Christ; we (since fallen) could never have been an Ark for it, if he had not been. The tables of the law were laid in the Ark, and the Ark (in which the law was put) had a mercy-seat which did cover it all over. (The dimensions of the Ark and of the mercy-seat were exactly the same, two cubits and a half in length, and a cubit and a half in breadth, (*Exod.*25.10,17.) So that nothing of the law could appear or rise up in Judgment against poor sinners. The propitiatory or mercy-seat covered all. Now as Christ hath been the Ark of the law to protect and cover us from the condemning power of it; so the hearts of believers must be the Ark of the law, where it must be laid up with a readiness of mind to yield our selves up to the commanding power of it. David propheeying of Christ saith (*Psal.*40.10.) I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart; yet he had said before, I delight to do thy will, thy law is within my heart. To clear which Scripture take notice that there is a twofold hiding of the righteousnes or word of God in the heart. First, So as to obscure or conceal it from others; in that sence David saith, I have not hid thy righteousness in mine heart, I have declared, thy faithfulness and thy salvation, and not concealed thy loving kindness and truth from the great Congregation. And thus no man ought to lay up the truths, the law, the promises of God in his heart to conceal and stifle them there. Secondly, There is a hiding of the law in our hearts, First, That it may be safe, lest Satan or the world should snatch it from us. Secondly, That we may further consider of it; when a man hath got an excellent truth, or Scripture, he should lay it up in his heart to ponder and meditate more upon it, to draw out the sweetness, and to experience the power of it. Thirdly, That we may have it ready at hand for our use; and so the Scribe instructed for the kingdom of heaven is described by bringing forth out of his treasury things both new and old. How sad is the condition of many that have heard much, but laid up little or nothing at all of all that word which they have heard. Some having laid it up in their note books, are satisfied with that; 'tis good and useful to do so; but do not let it lie there, get a Copy of it in your hearts; a few truths in your hearts are better to you then many truths in your books; no man was ever saved by the word in his book, unless that word were also written in his heart. God commanded the Jewes (Deut. 6, 8, 9.) to write the law upon the post of their houses, and on their gates, to bind them as a sign upon their hand, and as frontlets between their eyes. They were commanded also to put fringes upon the borders of their garments (Numb. 15.38.) which our Saviour calls Phylacteries (Mat. 23.5.) these were ribands of blue silk, or as some say, scroles of parchment upon which the law being first wrought or written, and then bound upon their garments, they were to look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the Lord (Num. 15.39.) Now, saith Christ, they make broad their Philacteries, and enlarge the borders of their Garments, as much of the law as you will upon their Cloaths, but none of it in their hearts. Thus the proud Scribes and Pharisees went about as it were Cloathed with the word of God, but his word was far from their hearts, nor did it appear in their lives; it is a meer vanity to have much of the law in our books, while we neglect to keep it in our hearts, and act it in our wayes. The former is good, but it doth no good without the latter. The want of this, the laying up the word in the heart, causeth the great want of Saints in the things of God; and as many loose that grace which they seemed to have, so many are at a loss in the use of that grace which they have, because they have not laid up the word of God in their hearts so carefully as they ought. We say proverbially, Sure bind and sure find; They who would surely find the comfort of the word of God when they need it, had need to bind it sure, when they receive it.

in

Vanissimi professio Pharisæi illi, qui cum ipsi non servarent in corde mandata, at membranulas decalogi complicantes & quasi coronam capiti facientes. Phylacteriū ex sua proprietate, custoditorium est. Bold.

VERS. 23, 24, 25.

If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up, thou shalt put away iniquity far from thy Tabernacles.
Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust, and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brooks.
Yea, the Almighty shall be thy defence, and thou shalt have plenty of silver.

ELiphaz having invited Job (at the one and twentieth verse) to renew his acquaintance with God, and now again pressing him to return to God, he reckons up those advantages which might move, and incourage him to it; he tells Job what will follow his return to, and acquaintance with God, and these advantages are of two sorts.

First, Temporal, and outward; Secondly, Spiritual, and inward; the temporal good things which he assures him of in case he repent, and turn to God, are set down, First, more generally in the three and twentieth verse, Thou shalt be built up. Secondly, They are set down particularly; First, He should then have riches, gold and silver, in the four and twentieth verse; Secondly, protection, The Almighty shall be thy defence, (in the five and twentieth verse) as he will fill thy house, so he will guard thy house and keep all safe.

In the following parts of the Chapter, Eliphaz assures him of eight blessings spiritual.

First, Joy in God, in the six and twentieth verse, Thou shalt have thy delight in the Almighty.

Secondly, Confidence, or holy boldness before God; Thou shalt lift up thy face unto God; thou shalt not hide thy head, and run into corners, but lift up thy face.

Thirdly, (which is an effect or part of the former) freedom in prayer; Thou shalt make thy prayer to him, (in the seven and twentieth verse.)

Fourthly, He assures him of audience, or of an answer to his prayer in the same verse; He shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy vows; that is, thou in thy prayer having made vows to God, God shall hear thy prayer, and so give thee occasion to pay thy vows.

Fifthly, He promiseth him not only that his prayer shall be heard, but that his very purposes and designs shall be fulfilled; Thou shalt decree a thing, and it shall be established to thee, in the eight and twentieth verse. When thou resolvest upon such a way or course in thy affairs, thou shalt have this priviledge, thy decree shall stand.

Sixthly, He promiseth him direction and counsel, what way he should take, what course to run, in the close of the same verse; And the light shall shine upon thy wayes, that is, thou shalt see what to do, the Lord will give thee counsel.

Seventhly, He gives him hope of rising out of any trouble, or that when others are overtaken with calamities, he should be preserved, at the nine and twentieth verse; When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, there is a lifting up, for God will save the humble person.

Eightly, He promiseth, that he shall not only have blessings personal, and family blessings, but he shall be a publick blessing, (in the thirtieth verse,) He shall deliver the Island of the innocent, and it is delivered by the pureness of thy hand. Thus you have both the general scope of this latter part of the Chapter; which is to stir up Job to return to God, and likewise the particular blessings and mercies which are held forth as arguments moving him to return.

Vers. 23. If thou return unto the Almighty.

To Return is used frequently in Scripture in a metaphorical sense, and signifies as much as to repent; sin is a going away from God, great sinning is a going far from God, a going, as it were, into a far Country, such sinners would go out of Gods sight, and fall out of his memory. Eliphaz had charged Job deeply with such departures; and now he speaks to him of returning.

And here we may consider the condition or state of Job, and the season in which Eliphaz presseth him to this duty, he was in an afflicted condition, the hand of God was upon him. Now Eliphaz adviseth him to return; intimating at least, that the present dispensation of God towards him, was a special opportunity for the duty he moved him unto.

Hence Note, When God afflicts us, when his hand is upon us, he speaks to us, repent, or bespeaks our repentance.

How often in Scripture doth the Lord complain as if he were wholly frustrated of his design, when either nations or persons being smitten by his judgments did not return unto him, or repented not? (Isa. 9.13.) They turn not to him that smiteth them: that is, they turn not to me the Lord: I have smitten them, and I alone can heal them, yet they turn not to me; as if the Lord had said, I therefore smote them that they might bethink themselves of returning, but they turned not to me. As they turned not at my word, or to me speaking, so they turned not at my sword, or to me smiting. I see they are not only Sermon proof, my Prophets spake to them in vain, but they are judgment proof also, my hand is upon them in vain, they return not. And as it was then, so at this day; for may we not observe, some mouldering in their estates, crushed in their hopes, crossed in their children, blotted and blasted in their credit, weak and sick in their bodies, even tired and worn out under several afflictions, yet no thought of returning to the Lord, or of making their way perfect before him. So that the Lord may say to them, as he once did to his ancient people the Jewes (Isa. 1.6.) Why should ye be smitten any more, ye will revolt more and more. The returning of many is like that which Solomon speaks of (Prov. 26. 11.) As a dog returneth to his vomit, so a fool returneth to his folly; As Jesurun waxed fat, and kicked, so some will be kicking while they wax lean.

עד שדי Revertere usq; ad dominum, videtur idem esse cum אל שדי Si plane & serio, toto corde, non ut ante hypocrita fuisti, &c. Merc.

Further, Eliphaz doth not speak barely to Job of returning, but he directs him to the object; If thou return

To the Almighty] And that is expressed in some translations very emphatically, Return home to the Almighty, return till thou comest to or reachest God, be thou sure to repent home; so the word is used (Hos. 14.2. Joel 2.12. Amos 4.6.) return home to God, stay not short of him in your repentance, that is, repent fully, seriously; And the intendment of Eliphaz in speaking thus, might be to reprove Job for his former (by him supposed) hypocrisie: thou hast returned before, but not to the Almighty, surely thou didst repent only as an hypocrite in former times when thou madest the greatest shews of of repentance. Therefore now repent is a sincere Convert. Thy former repentance was to thee a fruitless repentance, and therefore doubtless but a fained and false repentance. Thou couldst never after it recover out of thine afflicted, thy ruinous condition, and therefore surely thou didst never by it recover out of thy sinful condition, or from thy sins. But now, I promise thee, If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built.

Hence Note, That, True repentance is a full, a home returning to God.

Much of the progress of a Christian is to go backward, backward (I mean) from those sins and evils to which he hath (by temptation) been carried forth; nor (having sinned) can any man go forward till he return to God. We read in Scripture, of God returning to us, as well as of our returning unto God, in both there is repentance; when God returns to us, he repents of the evil of punishment, that he hath brought upon us; and when we return to God, we repent of the evil of sin which we have committed against him; only be sure (as the point directs) that ye return home to God. The Prophet found Israels repentance defective in this (Hos. 7. 16.) They return (that is, they make a shew of repentance) but not to the most High. There is a repentance which brings the soul never the nearer unto God: And that's a repentance (as we speak) never the near, or to no purpose. Thus another Prophet taxeth their fasting (Zach. 7. 5.) When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth and seventh month, even those seventy years, did ye at all fast unto me, even to me? Observe how he doubles it upon that point, as if the whole emphasis of repentance lay upon that point, To me, even to me. As David in confessing of his sin (Psal. 51. 4.) Against thee, thee, thee only have I sinned, &c. Many fast, but not at all to God, they return, but not at all to God. They fast to themselves, and return to themselves; that is, their own interest, not the honour of God, is the motive and end of their fasting and repenting. And hence the Prophet is plain and downright with Israel in this case (Jer. 4. 1.) If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the Lord, return unto me; as if Israel had used to return, but always short of God, or not to God; Israel made some stop in the work of repentance before he came at God. Now then (saith the Lord by his Prophet) O Israel, if thou wilt return, return to me. If thou hast any further purpose to return, be perswaded to return to some purpose. Let not thy repentance be any longer, such as is to be repented of. All our returnings are but wanderings, unless we return to God.

But when may we be said to return to God?

I answer: First, When we return out of a sence of sin against God, as well as of smart upon our selves; for when we return only because of smart, we return to our selves rather then to God; as when it is said in Hosea (Chap. 7. 16.) They returned, but not to the most High: We may see the reason of this charge at the fourteenth verse, They have not cried unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their beds: they assemble themselves for corn and for wine, and they rebel against me: As if he had said, All their crying and howling is not because they have sinned against me, but because their sins have pincht them; they do not mourn because of their wickedness, but because of their wants. 'Tis famine that moveth them, not my fear. They would fain be at their full tables again; they are all for corn and wine, nothing for grace and holiness. We may say of some persons repenting, as Job (Chap. 6. 6.) of the wild Ass braying, Doth the wild Ass bray when he hath grass, or loweth the Ox over his fodder? He applyed it to his own case, that he did not cry out without cause, nor complain when he felt no pain; but (I say) we may apply it to some persons repenting. They would never bray if they had but grass enough, nor low if they had fodder enough: That is, if they had but outward comfort enough, corn and wine, health and strength enough, did they but abound in these, you should never hear them complain, nor shed a tear, how much soever they abound in sin: All the world cannot satisfie the soul of a godly man, till (after sinning) he be reconciled to God: His soul is hungry and thirsty, notwithstanding all his corn and wine, till he be filled with the favour of God. And this is indeed to return to the Almighty.

Secondly, Then also we return to the Almighty, when we turn especially from and mourn for that sin whereby we have most provoked the Almighty; when that which hath most offended God, is most offensive and burdensom unto us. For though in repentance, every sin is to be repented of, yet some more: As Samuel said to the house of Israel (1 Sam. 7. 3.) If you do return to the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the strange Gods and Astaroth. But why doth he exhort them to put away that strange God Astaroth, by name, more then any other of their strange Gods? I answer, It was because they had most provoked the true God by worshipping that strange God, and therefore he counsels them as ever they would approve themselves to have returned to God in their repentance, to look to it, that they turned from that Idol. If every strange God must be put away when we return to God; How can we return to God, if we put not away our Astaroth. Thus the rule was given by the King of Nineveh, in proclaiming a fast (Jon. 3. 8.) Let them turn every one from his evil way (that is, from his beloved sin) and from the violence that is in their hands; that is, from the sin of oppression, by which they got much into their hands. But why doth he instance in that sin? Surely because that was the common sin of that City; they were an oppressing people, and loved the gain of oppression, or to get by violence: They lived more by the blood of others, then by their own sweat, more by the violence, then the labour of their hands, therefore they must particularly repent of that sin. If the covetous man return to God, he must turn from every sin, and from his covetousness. If the proud man return to God, he must turn from every sin, and from his pride; this is the nature of returning to the Almighty. Yet, Thirdly, Unless we do all this with the whole heart, we do not return to the Almighty (2 Chron. 6. 38. Jer. 3. 10. and 24. 7.) The wicked are serious and cordial in sinning, they must be so in repenting. But some sinner possibly may say, I have gone away too far to return: No (Jer. 3. 1.) Thou hast played the harlot with many lovers, yet return unto me, saith the Lord. Another will say, I have slidden back and relapsed, I have, as it were, repented of my repentance. The Prophet answers this doubt (Jer. 3. 12.) Return thou back-sliding Israel, saith the Lord. And again (ver. 14.) Turn, O back-sliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you, &c.

If thou return, &c.] Eliphaz having thus shewed him that it is his duty to return to the Almighty, now proceeds to shew that it will be his happiness; and this he doth by an enumeration of those manifold blessings which follow our returning to him. Whereof the first is,

Thou shalt be built up.] Affliction and trouble, which are the fruit of sin, pull down, and lay us waste; godly sorrow and repentance, which are our turning from sin, have a promise of this good fruit, That we shall be built up again.

This building up may be taken two wayes: First, More generally for an encrease in all good things: Secondly, More specially for an encrease in Children. In the Hebrew the same word, which signifies a son, signifies to build, because Children build up their Fathers house, or are their Fathers building; in that sence the word is often used (Gen. 16. 2. Gen. 30. 3. Ruth 4. 11.) It is said (Exod. 1. 21.) that God built the Midwives houses; which some interpret, he gave them Children, or made them more fruitful in child bearing. We read in the Law how that man was to be dealt with, who refused to take his Brothers Wife, according to the commandment of God in those times; and the conclusion of all is (Deut. 25. 9.) So it shall be done to the man that shall not build up his Brothers house; that is, who refuseth to marry his Brothers Widow, and (through the blessing of God) to have Children by her, which would be as the building up of his house, or the continuance of his name and family. Thus some understand the phrase here; Thou shalt be built up; that is, thou, who hast lost all thy Children; thou, whose house hath been pull'd down by the fall of a house, (Chap. 1. 19.) shalt have more Children and so thy house built up again. But I rather take the phrase here in that larger sence, and so to be built up, implyeth all kind of prosperity in outward things. (Mal. 3. 15.) Now ye call the proud happy, yea, they that work wickedness are set up, we put in the Margin, are built up; that is, they are very prosperous, they may have what they will in this world, or (as we say) the world at will. And (note that by the way) 'tis the worst character of an Age, When they that work wickedneſs (which ruines the beſt built State) are built up. The Lord makes a Promiſe in the language of this Metaphor to the Church (Jer. 31.4.) I will build thee, and thou ſhalt be built, O Virgin of Iſrael: As if he had ſaid plainly, I will bleſs thee, and raiſe thee up out of the duſt of thy preſent deſolate condition, into a glorious fabrick of proſperity and honour; ſo it follows in the ſame Text, Thou ſhalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and go forth in the dance of them that make merry. This ſence of the word is clear in that oppoſition uſed in the Pſalm (Pſal. 28.5.) Therefore, ſaith the Lord, I will deſtroy thee, and not build thee up; that is, thou ſhalt be deſtroyed for ever; I will never repair any of thy ruines, thine ſhall be as Aſaph ſpeaks (*Pſal.*74.3.) Perpetual deſolations. So that, when Eliphaz promiſeth Job, Thou ſhalt be built up, his meaning is; thy ruin'd ſtate ſhall be repaired, and thou ſhalt have not only a beautiful, but a well foundation'd felicity.

בן Filius inde dictus, quod ædificium sit & structura parentium. Merc. Prolem dedit. Merc.

Hence Note, It is no vain nor unprofitable thing to repent and turn to the Almighty.

If we by repentance pull down the ſtrong holds of ſin, if we forſake and lay waſte our luſts, the Lord will build us up, he will build us up with all manner of bleſſings; repentance is fruitful: There are many who profeſs they repent, but they do not bring forth fruits meet for repentance; but as true repentance is accompanied with our fruits of holineſs and obedience towards God, ſo with Gods fruits, the fruits of his love and mercy towards us. There is a kind of repentance in Hell, there's weeping, wailing and gnaſhing of teeth; but that's a fruitleſs repentance, as well as a faithleſs repentance; the damned are under chains of everlaſting darkneſs. Unſound repentance, or the repentance of Hypocrites in this life, is like the repentance of the damned in the next life; but true repentance is fruitful. If we as the Baptiſt exhorted the Jews (Matth. 3.) Bring forth fruit meet for repentance, our repentance will bring forth fruit meet for us; we ſhall have good things of all ſorts, if we ſorrow (as the Apoſtle ſaith the Corinthians did) after a godly ſort; godly ſorrow is rewarded with joy; if we humble our ſelves, God will lift us up. The ſorrows of Goſpel-repentance are like the ſorrows of a woman in travail, who (as Chriſt ſpeaks, John 16.21.) ſtraightway forgets her pain, for joy that a man is born into the world. The pangs and throws of godly ſorrow are therefore ſaid by the Apoſtle to cauſe repentance not to be repented of, becauſe that repentance brings forth joy to be rejoyced in, a maſculine joy, joy that a Man-child of Grace to build up our ſpiritual houſe is brought into the world. If thou return to the Almighty thou ſhalt be built up. And Thou ſhalt put iniquity far from thy Tabernacles.

The word imports, Firſt, Putting away with indignation: Secondly, Putting away to the utmoſt diſtance: Therefore we tranſlate, Put away far; 'tis but two words in the Original: Thou ſhalt put iniquity far, &c. Iniquity may be taken either for ſin, or for the effects of ſin, that is, puniſhment: if we take it in the firſt ſence for ſin it ſelf, then this latter clauſe muſt be underſtood as a duty; If thou return to the Almighty, thou ſhalt be built up, thou ſhalt put away iniquity far from thee; that is, it is thy duty to put away iniquity far from thee; as if Eliphaz here did ſet forth more fully what repentance is; Thou ſhalt be built up, if thou return to the Almighty; that is, if thou return ſo as to put thy iniquity far from thee. If we take iniquity in the ſecond ſence, for the puniſhment of iniquity, then the words are a promiſe: As if he had ſaid, If thou return, &c. then thou ſhalt rid and diſcharge thy ſelf and thy houſe of all the troubleſome effects of ſin; Thou ſhalt put iniquity, or all the ſad iſſues and conſequents of iniquity far from thee, none of them ſhall touch thee to annoy thee.

Maſter Broughton pitcheth upon the former ſence in his tranſlation, If thou caſt far off unrighteouſneſs from thy tents. That gives a perfect ſence to the whole ſentence.

Hence Obſerve, That, In true repentance ſin muſt be utterly caſt off and put away.

We return not at all to the Almighty, till we wholly turn from ſin; nor will the Almighty build up our houſe, till we put iniquity quite out of our houſe; till we turn it out of houſe and home; out of the houſe of our family, out of the home of our hearts; nor is it enough to put ſin away a little, or a little way, but it is muſt be put far away. There are ſeveral degrees of putting away ſin: Firſt, there is a putting it away out of our practice, or converſation, ſo that it hath no viſible being or abode in us or with us. This is a putting of ſin away; but this is not a putting of ſin far away. Secondly, There is a putting of it out of our affections, or out of our hearts; not as if we could keep it (while we are in the body) from having a place or dwelling there; but as keeping it from having a throne or reigning there. This is to put ſin very far away from us; it is no great thing to put ſin out of our hands; but it is hard to get it out of our hearts; Hypocrites will (poſſibly) lay down the practice of it, but ſtill their ſpirits cleave to it; they are not at all alienated from the love of it, but only reſtrained from the acting of it; ſuch are oftentimes kept from doing iniquity; but they do not at all put away their iniquity, much leſs put it far away. As it is with a natural man in reference to his doing of good, ſo to his not doing of evil: If good be at any time in his practice, yet it is far from his ſpirit, he hath no mind to it, he cannot ſay the Law of God is in his heart, or that he delights to do it; ſo if evil be at any time put out of his practice, yet it is ſtill in his ſpirit, his mind is toward it, he cannot ſay that his heart is withdrawn from it, or that he hates it. No, but as the Prophet Ezekiel ſpeaks of the ſtubborn Jews (Ezek. 11.21.) Their heart walketh after the heart of their deteſtable things. As every godly man is (in the main) like David, A man after Gods own heart, and walketh after the heart of God; ſo every ungodly man is a man after the heart of the Devil; and every Idolater or worſhipper of falſe Gods (who is one of the worſt of ungodly men) is after the heart of his falſe Gods, and he walketh after the heart of his falſe Gods, which the Prophet calls deteſtable things: Whatſoever is moſt after the heart, or according to the deſires and commands of an Idol, that the idolatrous heart walketh after, that is, he loves it, he delights in it; and thus doth every natural mans heart walk after the heart of his luſt, though ſometime his feet walk not after it, or he may ſeem to lay it out of his hand. But he that turns indeed from ſin, deals with it, when he is repenting of it, as the Lord doth when he is pardoning it. How is that? The Lord in pardoning ſin, puts it far from us (Pſal. 103.12.) As far as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, ſo far hath he removed our tranſgreſſions from us: That is, He hath removed them from us to the utmoſt imaginable diſtance; for ſuch is that of the Eaſt from the Weſt: They and we ſhall no more meet together again, then the Eaſt and Weſt ſhall or can meet at all. And thus in repenting a godly man deſires to put his ſin as far from him as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, that he and they may never meet together in the practice of them, as he is aſſured that God hath ſo pardoned them that they and he ſhall never meet together in the puniſhment of them. Thou ſhalt put iniquity far

From thy Tabernacles.] In which words he includes more then his own perſonal repentance; for by the Tabernacles, we are to underſtand the whole family or houſhold; the Tabernacle containing, is put for the perſons contained; in this Eliphaz ſeems to ſtrike at Job for his former courſe: As if he had ſaid, Wickedneſs hath lodged not only in thy heart, but in thy houſe, in thy family, children, and ſervants. And this ſurely was it which provoked the Lord to cruſh thy family of children and their ſervants with the fall of a houſe; now therefore I counſel thee to put away iniquity from thy Tabernacle, that is, from all that belong to thee, from all that are under thy ſhadow, and are committed to thy truſt and charge.

Innuit ante hac nec Jobum nec ejus filios culpa vacaſſe, ideo eum everſum & filios extinctos. Mere.

Hence Obſerve, That they who repent truly ſhould indeavour to purge ſin, not only from themſelves, but from all that belong to them.

They ſhould cleanſe not their perſons only, but their families, they ſhould ſweep their houſes, as well as their hearts from ſin. (*Gen.*35.2.) Then Jacob ſaid to his houſhold, and to all that were with him, put away the ſtrange Gods (or, the eſtranging Gods (ſuch are Idols, they are not only ſtrange, becauſe new Gods; and ſtrange, becauſe 'tis a ſtrange or wonderful thing that man ſhould be ſo beſotted as to worſhip ſuch things for Gods; but they are eſtranging Gods) becauſe they withdraw or ſteal away the heart from the true God; therefore said Jacob, put away the strange Gods) that are among you, and be clean, and change your garments. This outward changing of their garments signified the changing or cleansing of their souls. God principally looks at that, and the outward ceremony hath no acceptance at all without the inward sincerity: In comparison of which, as the Lord said in Joel, Rent your hearts, and not your garments; so he would say here, Change your hearts, and not your garments. Now Jacob was very careful that this blessed change of garments, betokening the change and cleansing both of heart and life, should be the livery of all his family and household Family sins bring family judgments as well as personal: and they that have the charge of a family, have (in a great degree) a charge of souls as well as of bodies; every Master of a family hath cure of souls: And he is to see so far as lyeth in him, that no sin nor wickedness remain or be harboured in his family, that his children and servants live not in ignorance; nor in any evil. In Numb. 6. Moses gives charge to the Congregation, That they should depart from the tents of those wicked men, Corah, Dathan, and Abiram. It is dangerous to be near the families of the wicked, but it is more dangerous to have wickedness remaining in our family, in our servants, or in our children. And if Masters endeavour not by all due means to remove sin out of their family, that in a little time may remove them out of their family, or (as we say) eat them out of house and home. Thou shalt put away iniquity far from thy Tabernacle. Thus much of this part of the verse, in the first sence, as iniquity is taken for sin; yet,

true

Further, As the word iniquity is taken for punishment, Thou shalt put away iniquity (or the effects of iniquity) far from thy Tabernacle; and then the words are both a new Promise, and a further explication of what is meant by being built up, which was the former Promise, Thou shalt be built up, and all evil shall depart away from thy Tabernacle. Iniquity, which properly signifies the evil of sin, is often put in Scripture, for the evils of trouble and suffering; and as all acknowledge this to be a truth, so some judge it the truth specially intended in this place. I shall therefore briefly note from it,

That, When we truly return to God from sin, then suffering evils depart from us and ours.

For though the Lord be pleased to dispence variously for trial of his people, and often suffers the evil of affliction to hang about their Tabernacles, who desire sincerely, and endeavour faithfully to put all iniquity far from their Tabernacles; yet this is the Promise of God, and this hath been often experienced by Godly men, That God hath turned trouble out of their doors, when they have humbly and zealously laboured to turn sin out of their hearts.

Eliphaz having incouraged Job by this general Promise, he draweth it forth into particulars. And that, first, in reference to outward things.

Verse 24. Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust, and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brooks.

בצר Munire. Aurum lectissimum quasi ab igne munitum, aut quod sit homini munimentum.

Then] That is, when thou hast acquainted thy self with God; then, when thou hast laid up his Law in thy heart; then, when thou hast returned to the Almighty thy self, and put away iniquity far from thy Tabernacle, Then thou shalt lay up gold as dust, &c. The word which we render Gold, signifies to fortifie, or to defend, and it is translated a defence at ver. 25. Solomon saith (Eccles. 7. 12.) not only, that wisdom is a defence, but that money is a defence (that is, it procures defence) and Gold is the chief of money. Though Gold be not a defence formally, yet virtually it is; Gold defends it self against all the forces of fire; and it is a principal means of defending us against the fire and fury of the greatest dangers. Thou shalt lay up gold as dust, &c. But Christ saith (Matth. 6. 19.) Lay not up treasures for your selves on earth. And it was a Rule given concerning the King of Israel in the Levitical Law, long before Israel had a King (Deut. 17. 17.) He shall not greatly multiply to himself silver and gold. How then doth Eliphaz say, that he who repents shall lay up gold as the dust? Is that fit work for him? I answer, The words are not to be understood as an exhortation to bend his endeavours to the gathering of riches; but as a promise from God that he shall, by a blessing from above, gather store of riches here below. Thou shalt lay up gold as the dust. By gold here, and silver in the next verse, we are to understand all manner of riches; because gold and silver are the chief riches, therefore all is contained under them. And when he saith, Thou shalt lay up gold as the dust, the words receive variety of rendrings: Some thus, Thou shalt lay up gold above the dust; as if he should say, thou shalt have more gold then dust, which is a strain of Rhetorick, expressing abundance: Others read, Thou shalt lay up gold upon the dust: As (Psal. 24. 2.) He hath founded it upon the Seas: A third renders, Thou shalt lay up gold by the dust. Like that (Psal. 1. 3.) A tree planted by the river side: A fourth thus, by way of counsel, And lay gold in the dust. Which two latter readings are expounded as a direction given to Job, how he should lay up gold; he must not lay up gold in his heart and spirit, but in the dust, or by the dust. As if he had said, Put that purer dust, that better concocted and refined dust, in the common dust; put the dust to dust; put thy gold in its proper place, where God and Nature put it. 'Tis but dust, and so a fit companion for the dust: Yea (say some) 'tis as if Eliphaz had said, Do not so much as make room for it in thy house, provide not chests for it, let it lye where it had its original: It came from the dust, there leave it, return it back to its own Country, to the place of its nativity. A Heathen hath this notion concerning gold and silver, &c. And he labours much to shew, that the site and position of these things in Nature holds forth how we ought to receive and estimate them; Even Nature (by which he means the ordinary course set in Nature) draws us off from coveting gold and silver; there is nothing which may provoke or stir up covetousness, which God hath advanced or set up high in the order of Nature: Gold and silver are the chief objects of covetousness; now both these, as also whatsoever else man is pressed about, and as it were trodden under foot in the dirt for, by burdensom or covetous cares, God hath thrust or trodden under our feet. Gold doth not fall out of the Clouds of Heaven, but lyeth under the Clods of the Earth: There God hath put them to be trampled and trodden under our feet, that we might scorn to have our affections trampled upon and trodden under foot by them, or such things as they. So then, all that this interpretation or translation aims at in saying; Gold must be put in the dust, is only to shew us, that our estimations should be taken off from it, or that we should place it as low in our thoughts, as God hath placed it in the order of Nature. And this is a spiritual sence, suiting that of our Saviour, Lay not up for your selves treasures on earth; make not great preparations to keep your earthly treasures, especially let them not be kept in your heart, or lye there where Christ only and the treasures of Heaven ought to be laid up. Put your gold in the dust, or let it be esteemed as dust, seeing at best it is but well concocted dust. So gold and silver are called (Amos 2. 7.) That pant after the dust of the earth upon the head of the poor. So the Prophet describes their extream covetousness, who will be rich though it be by impoverishing those who are poorest.

Et pone in pulvere Aurum. Coc. Noli animum auro apponere, nimisq; illud diligere, sed nihili æstima; dejice in terram unde ortum est, æstima ut terram & lapides petræ. Scult. Pone ubi deus & Natura posuit. Coc. Nulli nos vitio naturæ conciliat, nihil quidē quod avaritiam nostrā irritaret posuit in aperto: pedibus aurum & argentum subjecit, calcandum ac premendum dedit, & quicquid est propter quod calcamur & premimur. Sen. ep. 94.

Yet, I conceive, in this place Eliphaz hath another aim: And that where he saith, Thou shalt lay up gold as the dust, his meaning only is, Thou shalt lay up plenty of gold, or thou shalt gather much riches; for the dust of the earth, or sand of the sea, are used frequently to signifie abundance, or the exceeding numerousness of things, or persons; Who can count the dust of Jacob? and the number of the fourth part of Israel? (Numb. 23. 10.) That is, they are as the dust that cannot be counted, or numbred. That was the Promise made to Abraham (Gen. 13. 16.) I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth. So here, Thou shalt lay up gold as the dust; that is, gold more then thou canst tell, or cast up: Thou shalt have not only enough, but even more then enough. Job was very rich before; now saith Eliphaz, Thou shalt have gold as the dust; thy riches shall be increased, thou shalt have a greater store and stock then ever, Thou shalt lay up gold as the dust. And, as it followeth,

The Gold of Ophir as the stones of the brook.

'Tis the same thing in another tenour of words; the Hebrew is, Thou shalt lay up Ophir as the stones of the brook. The word gold is not expressed in the Original; yet it may well be understood; Ophir is put for the Gold of Ophir, because Ophir was the place of Gold, yea, of the richest Gold (1 Kings 9. 27, 28.) They came to Ophir, and fet from thence gold four hundred and twenty tallents, and brought it to King Solomon.

Ophir nomen Insulæ unde aurum primæ notæ adferebatur quod inde Ophir appellatum, hoc est, ut quidam opinantur Obrysum quasi Ophirisum. Drus.

Solomon. Ophir was a noted place in those times for Gold, both in reference to the plenty and purity of it. 'Tis a question much controverted, where Ophir is; some making it to be an Island in Africa; others place it in India; since the discovery of America, or the West-Indies, many contend, that Ophir is now called Peru; And they have (as they conceive) a probable ground for this opinion from that place in the holy Story (2 Chron. 3.6.) Where 'tis said, He (that is, Solomon) garnished the house with precious stones for beauty, and the gold was gold of Paruaim, which is near in sound to the name of that Gold-abounding Countrey in America called Peru. I shall not undertake to decide this Geographical Controversie about Ophir: That which is agreed on all hands is enough for my purpose, and the explication of this Text, that Ophir was a Countrey famous in ancient times, both for the plenty and excellency of the Gold found there, and brought from thence. Therefore said Eliphaz, Thou shalt lay up Ophir, that is, the Gold of Ophir, pure and precious Gold.

Vide Bold. in hunc locum Jobi.

As the stones of the brook.] That is, thou shalt have abundance of gold; to lay up gold as the dust, and to lay it up as the stones of the brook, or as the stones of the valley, are parallel expressions for plenty of Gold, sutable to those Hyperboles (2 Chron. 1.15.) The King made gold and silver at Jerusalem as plenteous as stones, &c. And Ch. 9. of the same book (v. 27.) The King made silver in Jerusalem as stones, and Cedar trees made he as the Sicamore trees that are in the low plain in abundance. Thus in the Text Job is promised to lay up the Gold of Ophir, as the stones of the brook.

Dabit pro terra filicē & pro silice torrentes aureos. Vulg.

The Vulgar translation reads differently, He shall give thee for earth a Rock, and for a Rock streams of Gold; which is a proverbial speech, implying a change for the better: As if he had said, Thou before who hadst a sandy foundation, shalt now build upon a Rock, as (Matth. 7.27.) And we find such language in the Prophet (Isa. 60.7.) where the Lord promiseth, For brass I will bring gold, for iron silver, for wood brass, &c. So here, For earth I will give thee stone, and for stone golden brooks, or brooks of gold; that is, those brooks where gold is; or, I will give thee much gold out of those brooks.

Idq; ponendo pro pulvere lectissimum aurum & pro rupe Ophirinū fluviatile. Jun.

Junius seems to favour this translation most of all, rendring the whole verse thus, connecting it with the former; Thou shalt be built up, &c. and that by giving thee for the dust the choicest gold, and for the rock the river gold of Ophir. By all assuring Job of a happiness in his civil state in case he did change or mend in his spiritual state. Then he who had so great a change in his worldly state for the worse, should have a greater change in his worldly state for the better. The next verse is a continuation of the Promise, much to the same intent, and almost in the same words, and therefore I shall open that also before I give any Observations.

Verse 25. Yea, the Almighty shall be thy defence, and thou shalt have plenty of silver.

There is some difference in the reading of this Verse, for the word which we translate defence, is the same which we translate gold in the former Verse. And hence some translate thus, Thy gold shall be mighty. Making the word Shaddai (which is one of the names of God, and usually rendred Almighty) to be as an Epithite to the word Gold. Thy Gold shall be strong or mighty. And thus some Translations render the word Shaddai (Ezek. 1.24.) where the Prophet saith, I heard the noise of their wings like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty; so we render; but others thus, As a mighty voice: So in the present Text, whereas we say, The Almighty shall be thy defence, or according to the strictness of the word, The Almighty shall be thy gold: Others give it thus, Thy gold shall be mighty. And this answers the latter clause of the verse, where we read, Thou shalt have plenty of silver; yet put in the Margin, Thou shalt have silver of strength, or strong silver. These readings have an elegancy in them.

But I shall keep to our own, which is profitable to us, and suitable to the Text; Yea, the Almighty shall be thy defence; the Particle (Yea) sheweth, that this is a higher step of mercy then the former: As if he had said, Thou shalt not only have gold, which is a defence, but better then gold, even the Almighty for thy defence; or, God, who is better then gold, will be thy defence, and the defence of thy gold. The Hebrew word is plural, Defences, which intimates; First, All sorts of defence: Secondly, Strong defence; The Almighty shall be thy defences: All manner of defence, and a strong defence unto thee.

Hence Note, God himself is pleased to be the Lord Protector of his people (who repent and turn to him) both in their persons and estates.

There are many in the world who have gold; but there are few who have this defence for it. The Prophet Haggai speaks of those who earned money, but put it into a bag with holes; that is, they could not hold or keep what they had gotten. It is the Lord that establisheth the creature to us, and defends it for us. The best things in the world take wings and are gone, unless the Lord stay them with us; and unless the Lord defend and keep them for us, they would soon be pull'd out of our possession. Some mens estates wast away they know not how, there is a hole in the bottom of the bag they thought not of. Others have their estates violently taken away from them, because the Lord is not their defence. The Lord is the Protector of his people, the Lord is a Castle, a strong Tower, all manner of fortifications about his people, to defend their estates and persons, much more their souls. And Eliphaz seems to mind Job that he once had, but now had lost this defence; God once made a hedge about him, or rather was a hedge about him, but he opened a gap or withdrew, and then in came the Sabeans and Chaldeans and spoiled all. Now then (saith he) return to the Lord, and he will once again be thy defence. How safe are they that have God for their defence, who live under the shadow and covert of the Almighty! How safe are they (I say) and all that they have.

Eritque omnipotens contra hastes tuos. Vulg.

The vulgar Latine is so full of this sence, that he leaves out the word defence, and only saith, The Almighty shall be (or shall stand up for thee) against thine enemies; and in this perfect outward happiness consisteth. For to have much, and that secured, is all we can desire for the things of this world. Many have gold, and riches store, but the thing that troubles them is this, how to make all sure; Return to the Lord, and he shall be thy defence; he shall be an Assurance Office to thee, he shall protect thee against all winds and weathers, against all enemies and pirates: The Almighty shall be thy defence, and the defence of thy gold.

Eritque omnipotens lectissimum aurum tuum & argentū virefque tibi. Jun.

Further, Because the word which we render defence signifieth gold also, as was shewed; therefore some keep to that reading, and thus translate this twenty-fifth verse, And the Almighty shall be thy choice gold, and silver, and strength unto thee. Which reading is likewise followed by Mr. Broughton, And the Almighty will be thy plentiful gold, and silver of strength to thee. This sence of the word is comfortable indeed: for to have told Job only this, Thou shalt lay up gold as the dust, and gold of Ophir as the stones of the brook; this had been (though a great mercy, yet but a common mercy) such as the men of the world have and enjoy. Many that know not God lay up gold as the dust; and they who serve him not have often store of silver. But when God himself saith, I will be your gold and silver, this is not only the richest of temporal, but the riches of all spiritual mercies. For when 'tis said, The Lord shall be thy choice gold and silver of strength to thee, the meaning is, he will be better to thee then the choicest gold, and a greater strength then silver unto thee. This is a rare and a distinguishing mercy. Wicked men may have gold from God; but no wicked man hath God for his gold.

Hence Note, That God himself is the riches, and fulness, the gold and silver of his people.

The Lord is my portion, saith my soul: Whose soul said this? It was the soul of a mourning Jeremy. And when said he this? Even then, when their lands and houses were possessed by the enemy; even then, when their gold and silver with all their goodly things were carried captive into Babylon; then Jeremy said, The Lord is my portion (Lam. 3.24.) the gold and silver which I had in my house are gone, but my gold and silver in Heaven is not gone into captivity, he is my portion still and for ever. They who have God for their gold and silver, are happier and richer then gold and silver can make them: What can be said more to draw our hearts to God, then this promise, that God will not only give us riches, but that himself will be our riches? What can be said said more to take a covetous mans heart off from the love of his gold then this? Take thy heart off from thy gold, and God will be thy gold. And so what can be spoken more prevailingly to the voluptuous man, who delights to swim in rivers of sensual pleasures: O take off thy heart from these pleasures of sin, which are but for a season, and God will be thy pleasure for evermore? What stronger Argument to take down the ambition of man, who hunts after high places and dignities in the World, then to tell him, withdraw from this pursuit, and God will be thy honour, and thy high place? We may say to the ambitious, to the covetous, to the voluptuous, and in a word, to all sorts of sinners, Ye shall find all that your sins can offer you, and infinitely more in God; your honours, and pleasures, your gold and silver, you shall have altogether in him. One of the Ancients speaks well and truly to the point; That man is too too covetous whom God doth not suffice; or, who is not satisfied with God. The only true reason why any man is not satisfied with God, is, because he knoweth not God: He that can say knowingly, The Lord is my God, cannot but say, I am satisfied. When God is ours, all is ours. And the pooreſt who are rich in faith, have as great a share in this riches, as the richest. God is the poor mans gold; they that have neither gold nor silver in their purse (as Peter said to the impotent man) may have gold in their hearts. The Almighty is their gold and silver too, as it followeth in the Text.

Nimis est avarus cui deus non sufficit. Bern. Deus meus & omnia.

And thou shalt have plenty of silver.

Some render, Thou shalt have silver of wearinesse: He means it not of silver, as it wearies a man in getting of it; but he means it of so great a quantity or sum of silver, as shall weary a man to tell it, or trouble him to weigh it. The manner of accounting silver was anciently by weight, hence that is paid in money is called a Pension. We translate fully to that sence, Thou shalt have plenty of silver; for they that have so much as tires and wearies them to tell or weigh, have store enough. We put silver of strength in the Margin. Silver is a strong metal, and it is strength, great strength to man. This rendring suits best with the beginning of the verse, The Almighty shall be thy defence, and thou shalt have silver of strength, or silver to strengthen thee. As for plenty, that was fully set forth in the former verse, where he is promised Gold as the dust, and the Gold of Ophir as the stones of the Brook. Besides, the word is divers times applyed to expresse strength by; but rarely, if at all in Scripture, to expresse plenty by; and here our Translators render it so, not properly, but tropically, as appears before; for properly it expresseth the greatest strength: As first, The strength of the Unicorn (Num. 23. 22.) God brought him out of Egypt, he hath as it were the strength of an Unicorn. Secondly, The strength of Mountains (Psal. 95. 4.) therefore I conceive it is best rendred silver of strength; as gold is cloathed with a word which signifies defence, so silver is joyned with a word that signifies strength, because there is much strength and defence in both, money being the sinews or strength of war: So that to say, Thou shalt have silver of strength, is as if he had said, Thy silver shall be a strength, or a blessing to thee. Some have silver, and it is no strength to them; or he calleth it, Silver of strength, because it should be confirmed and established for his use, and in his possession. He should find, by experience, that there was tack in it, that it was solid silver, or silver that had strength in it. So then, these are but several expressions of the same thing, all which gathered together heighten up the promise of this outward mercy; he should have gold, and God would be his defence, yea, his gold, and he should have silver plenty, enough of it to make a man weary to tell it; or he should have silver of strength, his silver should be a strength to him, and all this is assured him upon his repentance and return to the Almighty.

וְתוּעֲפוֹת à radice יעף lassus fatigatus fuit. Argentum lassitudinū; quod præ copia lassos reddit homines numerando illud vel certè appendendo. Nam olim appendebant argentum, unde Pensionis vocabulum in sermone latino. Drus. Nihil tam sanctum quod violati, nihil tam munitum quod non expugnari pecunia possit. Cic. בסף תועפות

Hence Note, First, That Godliness is the best and neareſt way, even to worldly gain.

Godliness is gainful, though a godly man should dye a beggar; but besides there is worldly gain in it, these promises are not made in vain. Christ speaks as much (Matth. 6. 33.) Seek first the Kingdom of God, and the righteousness thereof, and all other things (even gold and silver) shall be added to you. And the Apostle is full for it (1 Tim. 4. 8.) Godliness is profitable for all things; 'tis good to make men rich, it will bring in worldly profits; Godliness hath the promise of gold as well as of grace; of silver, as well as of pardon and peace; do not think that godliness is barren of outward blessings, or that we must needs lose all gain in this world, by getting that which fits us for the Glory of the next world. Know, that as the Lord makes his wayes sweet to his people by inward communications of himself, revealing his love and grace to them, yea, in them, so he makes his wayes sweet to his people, by giving them outward good things, blessing their basket and their store, filling their hearts with food and gladness.

Secondly Note, That, The godly man may lawfully poſſeſs earthly riches, gold and silver.

It is no sin to be rich, but when riches are got by sin: Poor Lazarus lay in the bosom of rich Abraham: As many poor men may be called the Devils poor; so some that are rich may be called Gods rich men. Again, if godliness have a promise (as it hath) of riches, then the godly may lawfully possess riches; which also may be instruments in their hands of glorifying God, and doing good among men. Nor can it be denyed that they know best how to use the things of the world and how to be the best Stewards of earthly treasures, who are instructed for the Kingdom of Heaven, and are (as the Apostle Peter exhorts Saints to be (1 Pet. 4. 10.) Good Stewards of the manifold grace of God.

Thirdly, Note, That riches, gold and silver, are at Gods diſpoſe.

He bestows them where, and upon whom he pleaseth. This promise of plenty of gold, upon repentance and returning to the Almighty, must needs procede from this supposition, that the Almighty hath gold and silver in his power. The world is the Lords, and the fulneſs of it (Psal. 50. 12.) God is the best Indies for gold. If any would trade for gold prosperously, let them trade heaven-ward; for God is every where Lord of the soyl, and he saith of all the precious mines hidden in the bowels of the earth, They are mine. See how the Lord speaks as the great Proprietor of all the gold and silver, of all the good things of this world (Hos. 2. 8, 9.) She did not know that I gave her corn, and wine, and oyl, and multiplied her silver and gold, which they prepared for Baal: therefore I will return, and take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the season thereof, and will recover my wool and my flax, &c. All's mine. Thus the Lord voucheth himself the great owner of all these things; all the gold and silver, all the wool and the flax, all the corn and wine are his. When the people and Princes of Israel, with David their King, offered so willingly and so liberally gold and silver, &c. for the building of the Temple, David makes this confession for them all (1 Chron. 29. 14.) All things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee. And may he not do what he will with his own? Men think they may, surely God both may and will.

Fourthly Observe, That, the plenty and ſtability of the creature, is from God, as well as the poſſeſſion of it.

Eliphaz promiseth Job from the Lord, Gold as the dust, and as the stones of the brook, with silver of strength. That we have it in such or such a proportion is from the Lord, as much as that we have any thing at all; he can give much as well as little; and that our proportion hath a defence and strength in it, is from the Lord; therefore we should honour the Almighty for every portion and proportion of worldly riches, and for the establishment of our portion whatsoever it is. Silver and gold have no strength in them unless the Lord who giveth these give them strength, and bid them stay with us to do us good.

Lastly, Observe, We may lawfully poſſeſs abundance of outward things.

'Tis sinful to make abundance our aim, or to contend for much in temporals; to do so in and about spirituals is our duty, and our contention for the highest degree, our commendation. We should design it, to lay up the Gold of Grace, as the dust, and the Silver of Sanctification, as the stones of the brook: We should forget all that we have, that we might get what we have not. Our desirings while pitcht upon an eternal object cannot be immoderate, but in temporals they quickly may: and therefore as to them, our moderation should be known to all men. Yet if God give in abundance of temporals in the lawful exercise of our callings, we may warrantably enjoy it as a blessing from him. The providence of God doth often bound us to a little, and we ought to be contented with the least portion of outward things, with bare food and raiment; but the Word of God doth not bound us to a little, nor doth it say, it is unlawful to have much. And as it is not unlawful to have much of the world; so it is a great exercise and tryal of our Graces to have much: As there are some Graces of a Christian which come not to tryal till we are in want; so there are other Graces which come not to tryal unless we have abundance. Want tryeth our patience, and our dependance upon God for a supply of what we have not; and abundance tryeth our temperance, our humility, our liberality, yea, and our dependance upon, and faith in God, for the sanctifying, blessing, and making of that comfortable to us which we have. When a rich man seeth an emptiness in his abundance without the enjoyments of God in it, he exerciseth as high a grace, and sheweth as heavenly a frame of mind, as that poor man doth who seeth and enjoyeth a fulness in God, in the midst of all his emptiness. And therefore Paul puts both these alike upon a divine teaching (Phil. 4. 12.) In all things I am instructed, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. And had it been unlawful to enjoy plenty, Eliphaz had never pressed Job to repentance by this motive, The Almighty shall be thy defence, and thou shalt have plenty of silver.

VERS. 26, 27.

For then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty, and shalt lift up thy face unto God.
Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him, and he shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy Vows.

IT hath been shewed from the former Context, how Eliphaz encouraged, yea, provoked Job to repentance, and returning to God, by the proposal of many promises, by promises of outward and temporal mercies, gold, silver, and protection. He might have what he pleased of God for the comforts of this life, if his life were once pleasing unto God. In this latter part of the Chapter he riseth higher and proposeth spiritual promises: And he begins with the best of spiritual promises, The free enjoyment of God himself.

Verse 26. For then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty, &c.

As if Eliphaz had said, If thou dost indeed repent and turn from sin, thy conscience which now troubles, yea, torments thee, shall have sweet peace in God, and thou who now grovellest with thy eyes down to the ground, by reason of thy pressing guilt and misery, shalt then with confidence lift up thy face unto God in prayer, and thou shalt find God so ready at hand with an answer, that thou shalt see cause chearfully to perform thy Vows, which thou madest to him in the day of trouble: That's the general scope of this latter part of the Chapter. I shall now proceed to explicate the particulars.

For then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty.

The first word implyeth a reason of what he had said before. Having spoken of temporal promises, he confirms his interest in them by assuring him of spiritual; For then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty. As if he had said, God will not deny thee outward comforts in the creature, seeing he intends to give thee the highest comforts, even delight in himself. 'Tis an Argument like that of the Apostle (Rom. 8. 32.) He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him freely give us all things? Thus Eliphaz seems to argue, seeing God will give thee himself to rejoyce in, or to rejoyce in himself, how can he deny thee gold and silver with those other conveniencies which concern this life? These being indeed as nothing in comparison of himself.

Then shalt thou delight, &c.] Then, that is, when thou returnest to God, and not till then, then thou mayest expect to receive much sweetness from him, such sweetness as thy soul never tasted or experienced to this day.

Then shalt thou have thy delight.] The word signifies to delight, or take contentment, whether it be outward contentment, or inward contentment, the delight of the body, or the delight of the mind; and so an universal delight, thy whole delight shall be in the Lord. Moses (Deut. 28. 56.) describes those women by this word, who were made up of delight, Thy tender and delicate woman; that is, such as are so delicate, that they are the delight of all who behold them, or who are themselves altogether devoted to their delights, who (as the Apostle Paul speaks of the wanton widow (1 Tim. 5.) live in pleasure; these are threatened with such calamities as should render their very lives a pain to them. The word is used again (Isa. 58. 13, 14.) Where the Prophet speaks of keeping the Sabbath; If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight; What then? Then shalt thou delight thy self in the Lord, thou shalt have curious delight, all manner of delight in the Lord, If thou call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable and shalt honour him; if thou hast a delight in duty, thou shalt have the delight of reward.

ענג Delectatus fuit corpore vel animo. Sonat etiam aliquid delicatum & molle.

Thus Eliphaz, Then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty. And 'tis considerable that he doth not say, thou shalt have thy delight in the merciful, or gracious God, but in the Almighty; in him thou shalt have thy delight, whose power is over all, and who is able to do whatsoever pleaseth him. Even the power and all-mightiness of the Lord shall be as pleasant to thee as his mercy and loving kindness.

Further, delight, in the general nature of it, consists in these two things.

First, In the suitableness and conveniency of the object, and the faculty, whether sensitive or intellective.

Secondly, It consists in the reflection and application of the faculty upon the object. So that to delight our selves in the Almighty, hath these two things in it.

First, A suitableness in our souls to the Lord.

Secondly, The souls reflecting upon the Lord as good and gracious unto us. This reflect-act breeds and brings in delight, and works the heart to an unspeakable joy in God. By this last and highest act of faith, we take in the sweetness of the Almighty, and delight our selves in him mightily. This Faith doth not only suck the Promises, wherein the love of God is evidenced to us, but is it self an evidence of the love of God to us. We suck and are satisfied with the breasts of consolation by believing (Isa. 66. 11.) that is, we believing draw forth that sweetness of the promise which the Word declares to be the portion of Believers. Thus spiritual delight is made up; and therefore Saints are said to rejoyce in believing, with joy unspeakable and full of glory (1 Pet. 1. 3.) That is, having as much and as clear a manifestation, yea, participation and taste of that Glory in believing, which is prepared and reserved for them against the next life, as they are capable to receive, and more then they are able to express, in this life. Then shalt thou delight thy self in the Almighty. We may look upon the words first as a Command; and then observe,

That, It is our duty to delight our selves in God.

Delight in God, is both a priviledge and a duty, it is commanded in the Law, and it is promised in the Gospel. God is pleased to give us many things in the world, not only for necessity, but for delight. A Heathen looking upon the various provisions which the Great Creator hath made, not only for the maintenance of man in his being, but for his comfortable and pleasurable being; some of which affect the senses, the eye, the ear, the taste, &c. others are sweetly contentful to the understanding, with all the faculties of the soul, He (I say) concludes this from it, The bountiful Creator hath provided for more then our necessity, or he hath provided more then will barely serve our turns to live upon, we are loved even up to our delights. Now I say, though the Lord hath provided delights for us in the creature, yet it is our duty, our greatest, our highest duty to delight chiefly in the Lord, to delight in him first, and to delight in nothing but in reference unto him; nothing should be pleasing to us, but as there is an impress or stamp of the love of God upon it, or as it tastes of his goodness. And indeed what can delight us long but this thought; That God

Neq; enim necessitatibus tantum nostris provisum est, usque in deliciis amamur. Sen. l. 4. de Benefic. 5.

God delighteth in us, or that we are a delight to God; that God is good, and that God is good to us? having tasted his goodness, we should love and delight in him, above all our delights. The Psalmist (Psal. 137. 6.) preferred Jerusalem above his chiefest joy; How much more should we prefer the God of Jerusalem above our chiefest joy. God delighteth in man whom he hath made, and who is his Son by Grace, next to Jesus Christ, who is his Son by Nature; and Jesus Christ delighteth in man whom he hath redeemed; And should not man delight in his Maker, in his Father, in his Redeemer? We have a most divine description of the delight which the Father takes in Christ his Son, and which Christ taketh in his redeemed ones (Prov. 8. 30, 31.) Then was I by him as one brought up with him, and I was daily his delight (Christ was the delight of his Father; and he delighted in his Father) rejoycing always before him; rejoycing in the habitable parts of his earth, and my delight was with the sons of men. Jesus Christ himself takes up many of his delights with the sons of men, whom he calls the habitable parts of the earth, even those of the sons of men that are a habitation of God through the Spirit. Now (I say) as the delight of the Father is in the Son, and the delight of the Son in the Father, and the delight both of Father and Son in the Saints, in the habitable parts of the earth, or with the sons of men; so the delight of the sons of men should be in the Father, and in the Son; there should our delight be, there should we take our highest contentment.

Hæ sunt piorum deliciæ & suavissimæ voluptates, deo placato frui, cujus etiam deliciæ sunt habitare inter eos qui ipsum animo reverentur & colunt.

Secondly, The words are rather to be taken for a Promise; Then shalt thou have thy delight in the Lord: Then, that is, when thou turnest from sinful delights, or delightest not in sin, I assure thee of spiritual delight.

Whence Observe, That they who mourn for, and turn from sin, shall have delights in the Lord.

When once sin is bitter to us, the Lord will be sweet to us; and until sin be bitter to us, the Lord is not sweet to us; sin hinders our delightful enjoyment of the creature, it puts gall and wormwood into our dish and cup, it is that which makes all relations grievous and burthensome to us; yet this is but a small matter, that it hinders us from the contentment and sweetnesses which are to be had in the creature; sin takes us off from delighting in God. That soul cannot delight in the Almighty, who loveth and continueth in the love of sin. If such profess delight in God, it is but a false boast, and a high presumption; it is impossible for such to delight in the Lord indeed. Job (Chap. 27. 10.) saith of the Hypocrite, Will he delight himself in the Almighty? Will he always call upon God? He may pretend to a delight in the Almighty, he may have some flashes, some raptures, but his joyes and delights are not in the Almighty; what joyes soever he hath they are in somewhat below God; the Hypocrite may delight himself in somewhat received from the Almighty, in some present benefit, or future expectation that he hath from the Almighty; he cannot delight in the Almighty himself, or in God as God.

As it is impossible in the nature of the thing, for a man to delight in sin, and in God too; so God hath said, that he who hath a delight in sin, shall not find any delight in him. God hath said, Delight thy self in me, and I will give thee the desires of thy heart (Psal. 37. 4.) But if any man will follow the desires of his own heart, he shall not delight himself in God. Sin separateth between God and us (Isa. 59. 2.) That is, it separates between the comforts and mercies which are in God, and us; sin doth not, cannot separate us from the power, or presence, from the eye, or justice of God; so sin doth not separate (for God is nigh to sinners both to see what they are doing, and to punish them for what they have done sinfully) but sin separates from all those delights that flow from God, from those joyes which his people take in him; yea, sin breeds a strangeness between God and the soul, so that the soul that loveth sin, cannot have any holy familiarity or converse with God. The Lord saith to those who repent (Isa. 1. 18.) Come let us reason together, &c. As if he had said, I am now ready to debate the matter with you that repent, and how great soever your sins have been, they shall be blotted out. Whereas before, the Lord tells them that he was weary of them, and that they were a burthen to him in all their services: Now when we are a burthen to God, God is never pleasant to us; if the Lord say he is weary of us, we cannot say we delight our selves in him. Our delight and pleasure in God is the fruit of his delight in, and well-pleasedness with us.

Thirdly, Eliphaz proposeth this delight in the Lord, as the most winning promise.

Hence Note, Delight in the Lord is the highest and choicest mercy.

There is nothing better, nothing sweeter then to delight in the Lord; delight in the Lord hath all true delights in it. David speaks this out fully in that place lately quoted to another occasion (Psal. 37. 4.) Delight thy self in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thy heart; that is, thou shalt have all thy desires fulfilled in this thing; delight in the Lord will be the fulfilling of all thy desires; not only shall they who delight themselves in the Lord, have all their desires filled up; but their very delight in the Lord is the fulfilling of all their desires. What is the glory of Heaven, but delighting in the Lord? And he who delights in the Lord, feels not the want or absence of any earthly Good. In thy presence is fulness of joy, and at thy right hand are pleasures for evermore (Psal. 16. 11.) Heavenly glory is nothing but delight in God; and all earthly good is nothing without delight in God. We may affirm four things of this delight, in opposition to all worldly delights.

First, This is a real delight; worldly delights are but shadows, or pageant like shews of delight. The joyes of a hypocrite, are like his holiness, meer appearances of joy; he hath no real, no true joy, as he hath no true, no real holiness. That man doth but fain a taste of joy, whosoever he is, that doth but fain the practice of holiness. Thus who wickedly hold out a holiness which they feel not, shall talk of joyes which they find not.

Secondly, Delight in the Lord is a strong delight; yea, it is a strengthening delight: That must needs be strong joy, which is strengthening joy; such is the joy of the Lord, as Nehemiah told that people (Nehem. 8. 10.) The joy of the Lord, is the strength of the soul, the strength of the inward man, it makes us mighty, it makes us Giants to run our race, the race of holiness. The Giant rejoyceth to run his race, because he is strong, and knows he can do it. The joy of the Lord is our strength, and is both an evidence that we are strong, and a means to make us so. Worldly delights are weak, and they weaken us; Delight in the Lord is strong, and it strengthens.

Thirdly, It is a lasting delight; not like the crackling of thorns under a pot (to which Solomon elegantly compares the laughter of the fool, Eccles. 7. 6.) that make a noise, and a blaze for a while, but are presently extinct. Now Solomon's fool may be either, first, the prophane man in the World; or, secondly, the Hypocrite in the Church. All the joyes of this pair of fools, the prophane worldling, and the formal hypocrite, are soon in, and soon out, like crackling thorns. But joy or delight in the Almighty is a lasting delight; it is not for a fit, or a pang, but for a continuance; yea, it continueth in the midst of all worldly sorrows, for it overcomes and conquers them. There is a laughter in which (saith Solomon, Prov. 14. 13.) the heart is sorrowful, and there is a sorrow in which the heart laughs; As sorrowful, yet always rejoycing, saith the Apostle (2 Cor. 6. 10.) Spiritual joy, or joy in the Lord is not extinguished, though surrounded with worldly sorrows, Many waters cannot quench this vehement flame, this flame of God (as Solomon speaks of love, Cant. 8.) neither can the floods drown it.

Fourthly, Delight in the Almighty is a holy delight, a delight which makes us more holy; the delights of the world are impure, and they defile us; we seldom take in worldly pleasures, but they leave some spot and taint upon our spirits or conversations; but the delights we have in the Lord are all pure, yea, purifying delights, they make the soul more clear, more holy, more heavenly; they make us like unto the Almighty, in whom our delight is. For what the object is in which we delight, such is the spirit of him that takes that delight; now the Lord in whom this delight is, being altogether holy, they that take delight in him, must needs be made or kept holy by it. As delight

delight in worldly things makes the heart worldly, base and dreggith, so this refines and purifies it. The more we drink of the rivers of this pleasure, the more sober we are; To be an Epicure (as it were) in these delights, is the highest temperance. Our feeding cannot be too full, nor our draughts too large upon these delights. Solomon (Eccles. 2. 2.) who had run a course through all worldly delights, and tryed them to the utmost, said of laughter, it is mad, and of mirth what doth it? There is a madness in the mirth of the world, what doth it? That is, What good doth it to any man? Many things it doth, it makes men vain, foolish, dissolute, dis-spirited for any goodness; But what good doth it? Doth it make any man better, more holy, more wise or fit for duty? No, it can do none of these things. But delight in the Lord, is all this, and can do all this, it is true, strong, strengthening, lasting, holy, a delight that makes us more holy. This is the portion of Saints at all times, though paid them in more or specially at some times; and that either, first, respecting the state and disposition of their own souls, as in the rest; or secondly, the state of and promised dispensations of God to the Church. (Isa. 65. 14, 18. Isa. 66. 11.) Then (also in a special manner) shalt thou have thy delight in the Lord. And because every man doth freely or willingly look to that in which he is delighted, therefore Eliphaz addeth, Quum unusquisq; libenter spicit id in quo delectatur, subdit, ver. seq. Aquin.

And shalt lift up thy face to God.

But some may say, Is that such a great matter: Is it any special favour to lift up the face to God, seeing to do so is common to mankind? The Naturalist saith, That whereas other creatures look groveling downward, God gave man an erect countenance, and bid him look heavenwards. How then doth Eliphaz promise, Thou shalt lift up thy face to God? We had the like expression (Chap. 10. 15.) If I be righteous, yet I will not lift up my head. And (Chap. 11. 15.) Then shalt thou lift up thy face without spot. The lifting up of the head, and the lifting up of the face, are the same; implying confidence, or well-grounded boldness in him that doth so: For all these phrases of speech imply a lifting up of the mind or spirit to God. As David saith (Psal. 25. 1.) Unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul. Eliphaz means not the lifting up of a heartless face or head, such as the Hypocrite or Formalist lifts up to God in worship; nor the lifting up of a meer living head or face, such as all men lift up to God according to the form or frame of their natural constitution, but the courage and confidence of the soul, and that a holy courage and confidence is here intended. And there are not many, who can thus lift up their face to God, as is promised here to Job by way of priviledge.

Os homini sublime dedit. Ovid.

Æquiparanda sunt cæteris ut vel oculos vel faciem vel animam ad deum tendere. Bold. Audiendum admonebis recurrendi ad deum. Aquin.

And shalt lift up thy face to God.

To lift up the face, is taken under a twofold notion in Scripture: First, As a gesture or bodily position in prayer: He that prayeth doth usually lift up his face to God; and so to lift up the face to God, is to pray unto God. A corporal posture being put often in Scripture to signifie a spiritual duty. Thus some understand it here, Thou shalt lift up thy face to God; that is, thou shalt pray: Secondly, (which further complyes with the duty of prayer) To lift up the face, notes (as was touched before) confidence of spirit, and boldness, courage, and assurance towards him, before whom the face is lifted up, whether God or man.

Excitet elevatio oranis habitus Pined.

Multum attollit qui sibi bene conscius est animi confidenti. Rus.

The Septuagint, who rather paraphrase then translate this Text, give this sence fully, Thou shalt be confident before the Lord (or thou shalt act fiducially and boldly before him) and behold Heaven chearfully. This lifting up the face is opposed to casting down the face, and that is a phrase used in Scripture to signifie shame and failing of spirit. When courage is down, the countenance is down too; as we say, such a man hath a down look; that is, there is an appearance of guilt upon him. The face is cast down three wayes: First, By fear: Secondly, By sorrow: Thirdly, By shame. (Ezra 9. 6.) O my God, I am ashamed and blush, to lift up my face unto thee; for our iniquities are increased over our heads. So (Luke 18. 13.) the Publican durst not lift up his eyes to Heaven: and possibly there was a complication of all these three causes why he durst not, fear, sorrow, shame; he was so much terrified, so much grieved, so much ashamed of himself, that he durst not lift up his eyes to Heaven. It was the speech of Abner to Asahel (2 Sam. 2. 22.) Turn thee aside from following me; Why should I smite thee to the ground? How then should I hold up my face to Joab thy Brother? That is, If I slay thee I shall be afraid to look him in the face, nor can I have any confidence of his favour; and it is well conceived, that he spake thus (for it is indeed a very unusual thing for the General of an Army, in the very heat of war, to look after the favour of the General of the opposite Army; but (I say) 'tis conceived he spake thus) as being convinced that he had undertaken a bad cause in upholding the house of Saul against David, and therefore had misgivings that he might shortly fall into the hands of Joab, David's General, and was therefore unwilling to provoke him by killing his Brother. This made him say, How shall I hold up my face to thy Brother Joab? As if he had said, I shall obstruct the way of my own reconciliation to thy Brother (in case the turn of things in this war cast me into his hand) by killing thee. Again, we may look back to Gen. 4. 5. where it is reported of Cain, That he was wroth, and his countenance fell; anger, and sorrow, and shame, falling at once upon him (because the Lord had respect to Abel and his offering, but had no respect to him or his) caused his countenance to fall; which phrase stands in direct opposition to lifting up the face in all the three occasions of it. For it implyeth, first, fear, which is opposed to boldness; secondly, sorrow or anger, which are opposed to content and joy; thirdly, shame, which is opposed both to freedom of appproach, and liberty of speech. We have an expression which parallels much with this, in that Prophecy of Christ (Psal. 110. 7.) He shall drink of the brook in the way, therefore shall he lift up his head; that is, he shall rise and appear like a mighty Conqueror, with boldness, honour, and triumph. So Christ himself prophecying of the troubles which shall be in the latter dayes, comforts the surviving Saints in this language; When these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads (that is, then take heart and boldness) for the day of your redemption draweth nigh (Luke 21. 28.) That is, the day is at hand, wherein you shall be freed from all fears and sorrows.

Quod legitur Exod. 14. 8. egressos filios Israel in manu excelsa, Chaldaicè dicitur, capite discooperto, i. e. palam, confidenter sine metu.

Hence Observe, Holiness hath boldness and freedom of spirit with God.

Then shalt thou lift up thy face unto God. As soon as Adam sinned, he hid himself from the presence of the Lord amongst the Trees of the Garden (Gen. 3. 8.) He ran into the thickets for shelter, he durst not appear or shew his face. But when once we are reconciled to God, and sin is taken off, when we are freed from the bonds of guilt, then we have boldness; reconciliation is accompanied with the Spirit of adoption, Whereby we cry Abba, Father; we can then speak to God as a Child to his Father; the Child dares lift up his face to his Father, and speaks freely to him. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty (saith the Apostle, 2 Cor. 3. 17.) And that's a threefold liberty. First, A liberty from sin: Secondly, A liberty unto righteousness, or a freeness and readiness of spirit to do good: Thirdly, Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is a liberty of speech, or access, with boldness in all our holy Addresses unto God. As the Apostle clearly sheweth at the twelfth Verse of the same Chapter; Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness (or boldness) of speech, as we put in the Margin of our Bibles to express the significancy of the Greek word in the full compass of it. For as because we have such hope we ought to use great plainness of speech towards men in preaching and dispensing the Gospel to them; so great boldness towards God in receiving the offers and promises of the Gospel, for our selves. Eliphaz having thus shewed what freedom Job, truly repenting, might have with God in prayer, proceeds in the next Verse to shew what success with God, or what fruit he should have in prayer.

Verse 27. Thou shalt make thy prayer to him, and he shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy Vows.

In these words we have a further promise, leading to a further duty; as before the duty of returning to the Almighty, mighty, had a promise annexed to it of lifting up the face to God, or boldness in prayer. So now the promise of being heard in prayer, is followed with a duty, The payment of Vowes.

Thou shalt make thy prayer to him, &c.

עתר Multiplicavit, propriè verba fortia fudit in Oratione.

The word notes the pouring out of many prayers, or of a multitude of words in prayer; yet not of bare words, but of words cloathed with power, strong prayers as well as many prayers. For as the Gospel comes from God to us, not in words only, but in power, and in the holy Ghost, and in much assurance (1 Thes. 1.5.) so prayer should go from us to God, not in word only, but in power, and in the holy Ghost, &c. Thus saith Eliphaz, Thou shalt make many, and mighty prayers, strong prayers, prevailing, conquering prayers; so the word is used, (Gen. 25.21.) Then Isaac intreated the Lord for his Wife, because she was barren; that is, he made many prayers to God; he made a business of praying that he might have a Son. Though there was a sure promise made to Abraham, that he should have a Son, and that in him, and from him should come the promised seed; yet Isaac was long without a Son, and he leaves it not carelesly in the decree of God, resolving idly, God hath said I shall have a Son at least, if not many Sons, why should I trouble my self in the thing? No, Isaac had not so learned the mind of God, he was better skill'd in Divinity then so, to separate the means from the end, or to conclude that we need not pray for that which God hath purposed and promised. He, I say, was better instructed then so, and therefore though he (doubtless) did fully believe that God would fulfil the promise made to Abraham in giving him a Son, yet he intreated the Lord for his Wife, because she was barren; and he intreated the Lord earnestly, he made plenty, abundance of prayers; for it cannot be supposed but that he had prayed for that mercy long before (for it was near twenty years since his marriage to Rebeccah, as appears plainly by comparing the twentieth Verse of that Chapter with the twenty-sixth, the former telling us, that he was forty years old when he married Rebeccah; and the latter, that he was threescore when Rebeccah bare Jacob and Esau. So that I say, we cannot suppose but so holy a man as Isaac had been suing out the good of the promise before) but when he perceived it sticking so long in the birth, then his soul fell in travel about it, then he was very fervent in prayer, and would give the Lord no rest; Then he entreated the Lord, &c. The same is said of Manoah (Judges 13.8.) Then Manoah intreated the Lord, and said, Oh my Lord, let the man of God which thou didst send come again unto us, and teach us what we should do unto the Child that shall be born: He prayed then with much earnestness, or made prayers for direction in that thing. The word is often used to signifie abundance (Isa. 35.2.) It shall blossom abundantly, (Jer. 33.6.) Behold, I will bring it health, and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace, and truth. Not only shall they have peace, and truth, but abundance of them. So here, thou shalt not only pray, but a spirit of prayer shall be poured out upon thee abundantly. Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him.

Hence Note, First, Prayer is a duty.

We owe prayer to God as his creatures, or in regard of our natural dependance upon him, much more as new creatures, or in regard of our spiritual dependance upon him.

Secondly, Note, It is our duty not only to pray, but to pray much, or to pray with much fervency.

The emphasis of the Original word here used, leads us to this as well as many Scripture Authorities. Cold asking invites a denyal; 'tis effectual or working fervent prayer that prevails much (Jam. 5.16.)

Thirdly, Note, Prayer is due only to God.

Prayer is a part of holy worship, and all such worship is proper to God alone, Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him. Saints and Angels worship God with us; we must not worship either Saint or Angel with God, no nor God by the help and mediation of Saints or Angels. We know no Mediator of intercession, but he who is the Mediator of redemption, the Lord Jesus Christ.

Fourthly, Taking in the consideration of the time, as before in the former part; Then shalt thou have thy delight in the Lord, then shalt thou make thy prayer to him.

Observe, That, We are never in a fit frame for prayer, till we turn from every sin by repentance.

As the Lord will not hear us when we pray, if we regard iniquity in our heart (Psal. 68.18.) so neither are we in a fitness to speak to God in prayer, if we regard any iniquity in our hearts. Repenting and praying must be of the same length; unless we repent continually, we cannot pray continually, because we sin continually. The more holy we are, the more free we are to pray. Sin clogs and checks the spirit in this great duty; cast off that weight, and then shalt thou make thy prayer to him,

And he shall hear thee.] To hear prayer, is more then to take notice of the matter or words spoken; to hear prayer, is to grant what we pray for. As our hearing the Word of God is more then to take in the sound or the sence of what is spoken; it is to submit to and obey what is spoken: Now as we hear no more of the Word of God, then we believe and practice; so the Lord heareth no more of what we pray (in a Scripture sence) then what he granteth. There are two expressions in Scripture which note this.

First, To have regard to a person, or to a prayer (1 Kings 8.28, 29.) when Solomon prayed at the dedication of the Temple, the Lords hearing of prayer, which he then begged, is thus described, Have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, &c. that thine eyes may be open toward this house night and day. So it is said of Abel (Gen. 4.4.) That the Lord had respect to his Offering, the Lord looked towards him, and accepted of him; to accept a prayer, is to hear a prayer. Respicere est audire.

Secondly, The hearing of prayer is described by the presence of God with those that pray (Isa. 58.9.) Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answer; thou shalt cry, and he shall say, here I am. This is a wonderful condescension, 'tis even as when a Master calling to his servant, he answereth, Here, Sir, here I am; and that is as much as to say, I am ready to your command, I am ready to do what you will have me, here I am: So saith that Promise in the Prophet, Thou shalt cry, and the Lord shall say, here I am; that is, I am ready to what you ask, I am even ready (O unspeakable Goodness) at your command (as our translation of the eleventh verse of the forty-fifth Chapter of Isaiah speaks out in plain terms) or, I am willing to do what you will have me to do. All which is in effect and vertually contained in the word of the Text. He shall hear thee. This teacheth us, Adesse est audire.

First, That God is the hearer of prayer.

It is the Lords Title, O thou that heareſt prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come (saith David, Psal. 65.2.) God is not only A hearer of prayer, but he is The hearer of prayer; to hear prayer is his peculiar prerogative and priviledge as well as his goodness and mercy; none in Heaven or Earth have a will to hear prayer as God doth, nor have any a power to do it. No creatures ear is long enough to reach the complaints, nor his stock large enough to supply the wants of all his fellow creatures. The Crown of this honour fits none but God himself. He shall hear thee.

Secondly, Note, It is a great mercy, a mercy comprehending all mercy, to be heard in prayer.

He shall hear thee.] Man cannot desire a richer favour then to be heard of God. To have audience in the Court of Princes, and among the great men of the earth, is a great favour. What greater worldly priviledge can a man have then this, that he hath the ear of those who are greatest in the world? When a man saith, I have the Princes ear, I can be heard when I speak, we think he hath spoken enough to make him a man. How great a mercy is it then to have the ear of God? To have ready audience in the Court of Heaven? That as soon as we call the Lord is ready to answer, Here I am; What's the matter? What would you have? It shall be done; your request is granted. And to shew that to be heard by God is the sum of all mercies, or all our mercies wrapt up in one, the Scripture testifies that not to be heard of God is the sum of all judgments, or all judgments wrapt

wrapt up in one. When the Lord refuseth to hear, or saith he will not hear those that pray, then wrath is coming upon them to the uttermost. Thus the Lord threatened the Jews (Isa. 1. 15.) When ye spread forth your hands, I will hide my eyes from you, yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear, your hands are full of blood: As it is an argument of the greatest sinfulness of man against God, not to pray; Pour out thy fury upon the Heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy Name (Jer. 10. 25.) So it is an argument of the greatest wrath of God upon man not to be heard in prayer. He that is not heard receives nothing; and he that is heard receives all. And this is the Saints priviledge by Jesus Christ, their prayers are heard, they have welcome audience at the Throne of Grace continually. And hence by way of Corollary from the former Observation, we learn, that Holy prayers are fruitful and gainful prayers.

God hath not said to the seed of Jacob, seek ye me in vain; He that goeth forth and weepeth bearing precious fruit (this precious fruit, faith and prayer, or the prayer of faith) shall doubtless (there's no hazard nor peradventure in the case) come again rejoycing, bringing his sheaves with him. His showry seed-time shall be blessed with a fruitful and plentiful harvest. The wicked make many adventures, many voyages by prayer, such as it is, Heaven-wards, yet come home without lading, without any fraight at all. Their prayers are all lost, and turn to no profit; and indeed theirs are not prayers but words, or babling rather. But holy prayer, the prayer of the holy, is prevailing: Those showers of prayers and tears which Believers send up to Heaven, are like the rain (as the Prophet speaks, Isa. 55. 10.) which cometh down, and the snow from Heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater. Even thus the word of prayer which goeth out of the mouths, or hearts rather of Believers, returns not to them void, but prospers in the thing whereto they send it. As appears yet more fully in the next words of this verse spoken by Eliphaz, He shall hear thee: What then?

And thou shalt pay thy Vows.

That is, God will give thee the mercies which thou didst pray for, and thereby give thee occasion to pay the Vows which thou didst make to him in case he performed thy desire in prayer. Eliphaz is not exhorting Job (directly) to pay Vows; but he is assuring him that his prayer shall be heard, and so fully answered, that he shall see reason and have abundant cause to pay them, and to pay them both fully and chearfully.

Thou shalt pay thy Vows. The word signifies free votive promises made to God, yet obligatory upon man; for howsoever, as the word implyeth, there ought to be the greatest freedom and voluntariness in making a Vow; yet a Vow being made, there is an obligation, a bond or tye upon him that made it to perform or pay it: He that voweth binds himself, but he cannot unbind or absolve himself from his Vow, nor can he retract or call in his lawful Vow.

Eliphaz, I suppose, here mentions the payment of Vows, because the godly in those times did often make Vows. When Jacob (Gen. 28. 20.) fled from his Brother Esau, he in case of his safe return, vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and rayment to put on, so that I come to my Fathers house again in peace, then shall the Lord be my God (that is, I will own and honour him, love and depend upon him more then ever) And this stone which I have set up shall be Gods house, and of all that thou shalt give me I shall surely give the tenth to thee. Here's the tenour and form of the most ancient and famous Vow that ever was made. Likewise Hanna (1 Sam. 1. 11.) vowed a vow, and said, O Lord of hosts, if thou wilt indeed look on the affliction of thy handmaid, and remember me, and not forget thy handmaid, but wilt give to thy handmaid a man-child, then will I give him unto the Lord. We read often in the Psalms of paying of Vows, Psal. 61. 13, 14. and 50. 14. and 76. 11. and 116. 14. And we have the command for it (Eccles. 5. 4.) Pay that which thou hast vowed.

Further, To explicate this Text, It may be inquired what a Vow is?

I answer, A Vow is a solemn, free and voluntary promise made to God, of things lawful, weighty, and possible, to further and help us to glorifie God in our obedience. In which description we have, First, The nature of a Vow, It is a solemn promise, not a bare promise. Secondly, The object, It must be made to God. Thirdly, The manner of it, It is a free and a voluntary promise; for though a lawful Vow layeth a necessity upon us to keep it, when once we have made it, yet there is not an antecedent necessity of compulsion upon us to make it; so that a Vow ought to be a most free and voluntary act. Fourthly, In this description of a Vow we have the general matter of it. As first, It must be of things lawful, we may not vow that which we may not do, either expresly, as they did (Acts 23. 12, 13.) who vowed to kill Paul; or implicitly, as Herod did, who promised to give the Daughter of Herodias whatsoever she should ask, limiting her only as to the quantity of her demand, she must not ask above half the Kingdom, but leaving her without limits, as to the quality of her demand, whether good or evil, lawful or unlawful made no matter. And thus many conceive Jephtah failed, implicitly vowing to do that, which was unlawful for him to do (Judg. 11. 30, 31.) Secondly, A Vow must be of things weighty and serious, we must not vow about trifles. Thirdly, It must be of things possible, through grace; though we must vow weighty things, yet we must not vow things impossible, either in their own nature, or without extraordinary assistance and strength from God. Fifthly, We have here the ends of a Vow: First, To glorifie God: Secondly, To oblige us more strictly to obedience.

Hence Note, First, It is lawful to make a Vow.

All the Scripture testimonies before alledged confirm that Proposition.

Secondly, Vows lawfully made ought to be kept.

Thou shalt pay thy Vows, hath in it the nature both of a Promise and of a Command: Vows are bonds, we must take heed of breaking them; if we break our Vows, God will break our peace. The word which we translate to pay a Vow, signifies also to give peace and quietness, implying that till the Vow be paid we cannot have peace. A man that is in bond to men hath no peace till he dischargeth, or hath prepared to discharge his debt; and therefore an acquittance or a discharge for a debt, is commonly called, A quietus est, implying, that till a man hath got a discharge, he is not at quiet. We are at our liberty whether we will vow or no; but we are not at our liberty whether we will pay our Vows or no. And therefore Solomon doth not only exhort to the payment of Vows, but to the speedy payment of them (Eccles. 5. 4.) When thou vowest a Vow unto God, defer not to pay it, for he hath no pleasure in fools: That is, He is greatly displeased with fools; he means it not of such as are called fools for the want of a natural understanding, but for the want of a good conscience, and such are all they, who flatter God with their hastiness in making Vows, and then mock him by their slowness in, or neglect of paying them. And therefore take four Cautions about Vows.

First, Be not frequent in making Vows; vowing must not be like praying, an every dayes work; we may not vow as we must pray, alwayes, and without ceasing. Many have brought themselves into great snares, by multiplying Vows, and we have need to be caution'd in this thing, because the nature of man is carried much to it. The Heathens made many Vows, especially when they were in any distress; and so meer carnal men will do to this day, vow great things, what they will be, and what they will do, if trouble be upon them. It is said, that those Heathen Marriners made Vows when the storm was over and the danger past (Jon. 1. 16.) Many make Vows in a storm, whether at Sea or Land, which they little mind when the storm is done. But those Heathens (which may be a rebuke to some Christians) made Vows of praise and thankfulness when they had escaped the storm. And this is a further proof of that naturalness which is in man to make Vows. And the reason of it is, because this satisfieth a natural man, and fills him with confidence that he shall receive good from from God, because he hath vowed duty to him. Man loves to be upon his own bottom, and thinks he shall surely engage God to be merciful, while himself promiseth to be dutiful and thankful. Now (I say) though there be still a lawfulness of Vows in these Gospel times, yet take heed of making many Vows, especially of conceiting to oblige God by any of them. As the former may prove a snare, and an entanglement to us; so the latter is a dishonour to God, who never shews us mercy more freely, then when we bind our selves most to duty.

Secondly, When ever you vow, be sure you do it in the strength of Christ. None discover more weakness in keeping Vows, then they who make Vows in their own strength, or not wholly in the strength of Christ. Some have vowed never to commit such a sin more; and they never committed it so much as after they had vowed. Some have thought to get cure and remedy against such a corruption or lust by a Vow, and yet that lust or corruption hath prevailed more upon them after their Vow. The reason of all is, because they have either put their Vow in the room of Christ, as if that could help them alone, or else they have made their Vows alone, without relyance upon the power of Christ. That rule of the Apostle which obtains in all cases of duty, doth most in this; Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the Name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him (Col. 3.17.)

Thirdly, In things which are directly commanded, or directly forbidden in the Law of God; we are not to vow the doing or not doing of the thing in it self, but only a greater care and stricter watch over our selves, either for the doing of the one, or not to do the other. As for example, We should not vow absolutely, that we will not worship Idols, that we will not swear, that we will keep the Sabbath, that we will honour our Parents, that we will do no murder, for all these duties are expresly commanded by God, and are therefore past being vowed by us. Only thus, we (observing the treachery of our own hearts) may vow more care and diligence in and about all these things. And thus we are to understand that of Jacob (Gen. 28.21.) vowing That the Lord should be his God; as also that of David (Psal. 119.106.) I have sworn, and will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments. David kept them before; but now he would be more strict then before in keeping them. So then, when we vow things already commanded or forbidden, we must pitch and place our Vow, not upon the matter of the Commandment, but upon the manner and intensenes of our spirits in keeping it.

Fourthly, Let not Vows about indifferent things be perpetual. All Vows about things expressed in the Law of God must be perpetual, because the things themselves are alwayes a duty. For the affirmative Precepts of the Law are at all times binding; and the negative bind at all times. But as for things which are not precisely under a Law: As for example, In the affirmative to pray so many times in a day, to read so many Chapters of the holy Scriptures in a day, to hear so many Sermons in a week: and in the negative, not to drink any wine or strong drink, not to wear silk or lace for or upon our apparel, not to take such or such a recreation, in it self lawful; I say, in these cases, let not Vows be perpetual, but limited to a season, lest thereby we entangle our own souls, and cast our selves into temptation, while (through a zeal, not according to knowledge) we use such means to avoid it. Make no Vows to bind your selves at all times in things which are not necessary at all times, either to be done, or not to be done.

From the whole Verse observe, That, The answer of prayer received from the Lord, doth call us to pay and perform all the duties that we have promised or vowed to the Lord in prayer.

Though we do not alwayes make strict and formal Vows when we pray, yet every prayer hath somewhat of a Vow in it; so that having prayed at any time, we may say, The Vows of God are upon us; for when we pray we promise, and then especially we do so, when we pray under any pressure of trouble, or when we have any extraordinary request to make; then, I say, we engage our selves in a more solemn manner to serve and walk with God: And so the return or answer of such prayers ingageth us more strongly to duty. For wheresoever the Lord soweth, there he looks to reap; and where he hath sowed much, he looks to reap much; but then and there chiefly, when we promise him fruits of duty for our receipt of favour and mercy. Did we take notice of this, we should not be found as we are so much in arrear to the Lord, either for our private or publick mercies. What promises have we made in the day of our distress? That we would be holy, that we would strive against and mortifie our sins, or the deeds of the body, through the Spirit and power of our Lord Jesus Christ. Now let Conscience speak; have we performed our promises? Have we paid our Vows? We can hardly say that we have put up a prayer which hath not had an answer by blessing and successes; God hath been to us a prayer-hearing God; Have we been to him a vow-paying people? Who amongst us is now more active for God? Or more careful to please him then before? Who amongst us is more watchful over his heart, or more circumspect in his walking then he was before? Who is more careful over his family, that it may be holy? Or more zealous for the publick, that it may be reformed, then he was before? What manner of men should we be in all holy conversation and godliness, did we but pay those Vows and make good those Engagements which have gone out of our lips, and we have laid upon our selves before the Lord, in the day of our trouble? How just, how pure, how righteous a Nation should we be, were we what we promised our outmost endeavours to be? The Lord hath done much for us; let us up and be doing for him; let us make good what we have spoken to the Lord in vowing and promising, seeing the Lord hath performed what we have spoken to him in praying and calling upon his Name. God hath answered us at the first call, yea, sometimes before we called; let us not put God to call a second and a third time, much less often and often for the payment of our Vows. For though the Lord in patience wait many dayes for the payment of Vows, yet according to righteousness we should not let him wait one day for it. All these spiritual debt-bills are payable at sight or upon demand; God shews us our own bills and bonds wherein we stand engaged to his Majesty every day, and every day (by some or other of his Attorneys; that is, by some means or other) he makes his demand: therefore pay to day, pay every day, for we can never come wholly out of these debts to God, or say, we owe him nothing, how much soever, we have paid him. And know, that if when God hath heard us, we be sloathful in paying our Vows, either God will hear us no more, or we shall hear of him (and that, as we say, with both ears) till he make our ears tingle, and our hearts ake for not paying them. Swift Judgments have often followed these slow payments. And though they have not been swift in coming presently upon the neglect, yet when they have come, they have come swiftly upon the neglecters. And as we may alwayes say of the evils and judgments which come upon any of the people of God, as the Prophet in a like case doth to the people of Israel (Jer. 4.18.) Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee, this is thy wickedness. So in most cases, when evils and judgments fall upon and afflict the people of God, we may say, Your not doing what you have promised, hath procured these things unto you, This is your vow-breaking or your neglect of paying your Vows. And how just is it that their troubles should not only be renewed, but even doubled and trebled, yea, seven times more encreased upon them, who slight and throw off those very duties which they took upon them in the day of their trouble, in expectation to have their troubles removed. Every mans mouth will be stopt, when he suffers for not doing that good which the mouth of the Lord hath spoken: How much more will his mouth be stopt, and he have nothing to say for himself, who suffers for not doing that good, or for not forbearing that evil, which his own mouth hath spoken, and solemnly charged upon himself as a duty in the presence of the Lord. They will have least to say for themselves who go against or come not up to what themselves have said. Then pay your Vows.

VERS.

VERS. 28, 29, 30.

Thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee; and the light shall shine upon thy wayes.
When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, There is lifting up; and he shall save the humble person.
He shall deliver the Island of the Innocent; and it is delivered by the pureness of thine hands.

IT hath appeared in opening the whole Context (of which this is a part) how Eliphaz presseth Job with Promises, assuring him, that not only good, but great good should accrue to him by his returning to God, and acquainting himself with the Almighty. And in the foregoing verse, That great benefit was shewed, The Lords hearing the prayer of such as do so; Thou shalt make thy prayer to him, and he shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy vows: Here Eliphaz gives in another excellent Promise, Thou shalt also, &c. that is, moreover and beside what I have said, I add this,

Verse 28 Thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee.

Thou shalt decree.] The word here translated to decree, signifies properly to divide, to cut asunder. So it is used (1 Kings 3. 25.) when Solomon gave sentence between the two women that were Harlots concerning the living Child, he saith, Divide the Child; my decree is that the Child shall be divided. Now hence, by a Trope, the word signifies also to decree, to decide, or to determine a matter, because in all decrees about or determinations of a Controversie, there is (as it were) a cutting off the business, a laying aside of one thing, and a sticking to another. When the whole matter is debated and weighed in Council, then the result and issue of all is drawn up and given out in a decree. So that to decree is to divide, or separate one thing from another, resolving upon that, which we conceive most just and reasonable.

Thou shalt decree a thing.] The Hebrew is, Thou shalt decree a word: It is usual in that language to put word for thing. And when he saith, Thou shalt decree a thing, we are not to understand it at large, as if whatsoever were decreed should be established; but the meaning is, thou shalt decree that which is right and good in it self, and good for thee. For the decree being made by a godly man, we cannot suppose that he should decree any thing but that which is just and good; and so the signification of the former word is well applyed to this, Thou shalt decree; that is, thou having by deliberation and serious discussion considered what is right, and having cut off all evil from thy sentence, thou decreeing such a thing, It shall be established unto thee.

There are yet two Opinions concerning this decree, as it is an exposition of the former promises, Thou shalt be heard, and, Thou shalt pay thy Vows; that is, what thou suest for by prayer on earth, shall be decreed for thee in Heaven. That is, thy prayer shall certainly be performed, thy prayers shall not be lost, no, they shall be as the Statutes and decrees of Heaven. It is said of Eliah (1 Kings 17. 1.) what he decreed was done: And what was his decree? His decree was his prayer: See how he speaks, as if he had the command of Heaven and Earth; as if he had carried the Keyes of the Clouds at his girdle; As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word. But what was this word of Elijah? The Apostle James expounds that for us, he telleth us what this word was, when Eliah said, It shall be according to my word (James 5. 17.) Elias was a man subject to the like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth, for the space of three years and six months: And he prayed again, and the Heavens gave rain, and the Earth brought forth her fruit. The Apostle explains, what the word of Eliah was, even a prayer-word, he prayed and sought the Lord in that thing, and his prayer was as certainly performed to him, as if he had the whole power of decreeing what he would have. Thus here, thou shalt pour out a prayer, and thy prayer shall be as a decree established with God. So we read (Gen. 32. 24.) in the report of Jacob's wrestling with the Angel, that the word of Jacob was as a decree, I will not let thee go, except thou bless me; I will have a blessing; and it is said, As a Prince hast thou power with God, and with men, and hast prevailed. Jacob had what he would in prayer, he decreed a thing, and it was established to him. The prayers of Saints are decrees with God: And 'tis but reason they should be so; because their prayers answer the decrees of God, or they pray for that which God hath decreed; and indeed there is no Saint or godly man would pray any other prayer, or ask any thing of God, but what God hath determined and decreed before to give: As a godly man would do nothing but what God hath commanded, so he would ask nothing but what God hath decreed. This is a comfortable truth; yet I rather conceive the sence of this place more general, and not tyed up to that of prayer: And therefore,

Secondly, Thou shalt decree a thing: That is, thou shalt take up a resolve, or a purpose; thou in thy wisdom and prudence shalt say in thy heart, I will do such a thing, or I would bring such a thing to pass, and it shall come to pass or be established. For as many men met together in Council, make Decrees; so any man in himself may make a decree; and we alwayes make decrees in our own minds before we joyn in any decree with others: First, We speak in our minds, then we speak out our minds; Thou shalt decree a thing; that is, thou shalt resolve to go such a way, or to do such a thing, and it shall be done. Now, this case of decreeing must be understood with a caution; suppose the thing it self be just and lawful (as we touched before) yet a man must not make absolute decrees (that's the priviledge of God, he only can make peremptory decrees, who hath all things in his power) we must decree submissively to the will of God, and say, If the Lord will, if the Lord please we will do such a thing. The Apostle (James 4. 12, 13, 14.) reproves those that would make peremptory decrees of what they would do in reference to outward affairs, Go to now ye that say to day or to morrow we will go into such a City, here is a decree, we will go to such a place, or do such a thing, we will continue there a year, and buy, and sell, and get gain. It is lawful for men to take up a purpose to go to such a place, and follow their trade to buy and sell, and get gain in an honest way; but no man must be peremptory in this, because we know not what shall be on the morrow; therefore, the Apostle directs, Ye ought to say, if the Lord will we shall live, and do this or that. Such decrees must be made with the Lords good leave, or with a reference to his pleasure who alone doth whatsoever pleaseth him. As the persons so the works of all men are in the hand of God (Eccles. 9. 1.) And there they are: First, As to the performance of them: Secondly, As to the success of them. They take themselves for more then men, who decree the doing of lawful things without the leave of God. We must not only see what we do is according to the will of God; but we must have his good will for the doing of it: That is, as we must have a Law from God for what we do, so leave from God. Thus Paul teacheth us to speak by his own example (1 Cor. 4. 19.) I will come unto you shortly, if the Lord will. And again (Chap. 16. 7.) I must tarry a while with you, if the Lord permit. Once more (Phil. 2. 19.) I trust in the Lord to send Timothy to you shortly. And even Heathens themselves, by the light of Nature, have acknowledged such a submission as due unto their superiour Powers, their gods; therefore they used to express their resolutions thus, If the gods will; much more must Christians speak thus in all they undertake to do, we will do it, if God will. Thou shalt decree a thing, Ordinabis per tuam providentiâ facturum aliquid, & quasi rem non futuram & incertâ, sed quasi divina jam voluntate constitutam illam habebis. Aquin.

Ethnicis illudi in ore frequens erat, si dii volunt.

And it shall be established unto thee.

That is, Thou shalt have success in it, it shall be confirm'd. The word in the Original signifies to rise up, as also to stand. So some render it here, Thou shalt decree a thing, and it shall rise up to thee. When a thing that we are determined upon, prospers and comes well on, we say, it riseth up to us; whereas a business that fails, falls off from us, or goeth backward. But saith Eliphaz to Job, The thing which thou decreest shall rise or come up to thy mind, to thy desire; or as some read, It shall come to thee; we say, It shall be established. So the word is used frequently in Scripture (Isa. 40. 8.) The word of the Lord shall stand.

יקם Surget tibi, surgere pro existere vel effectum dare.

Veniet tibi Vulg.

Now

Now as the Word of the Lord shall stand, so shall the word of man while it is according to the Word of God. So the word is used in the Case of a virgins making a vow (Numb. 30.4.) If the father hear it and say nothing, it shall stand, or be confirm'd; otherwise if he dislike, it is a void vow, a null vow. So that here, to rise up, or to be established, notes only the effectiveness and success of those decrees which this godly man should make; these shall be established unto him for his good, he shall have the comfort and benefit of them, while he aims at the glory of God in them.

Hence note, First, The success of our Councels and Decrees is a great mercy.

Eliphaz brings it in by way of promise, Thou shalt decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee. Success in any of our right actions is to be acknowledged as a mercy; and therefore the Lord doth so distinctly specifie the successfulness of the Jews after their return from Babylon, in their rural and houshold businesses, for neglecting to build his house (Hag. 1.6.) to shew that he had a controversie with them; Ye have sown much, and brought in little (no success) ye eat, but have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink (that is, ye are not satisfied) ye cloath you, but there is no warmth (which is the effect of cloathing) and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. Which is a proverbial speech, implying that nothing sticks, nothing stayes by a man, no more then mony doth in a bag that hath holes in it, or water in a sieve, or in a leaking vessel. Successfulness attended them in all they did, and that was their affliction. So when our Councels prosper, when what we advise to be done thrives in the doing; when the directing word of a man proves like the Creating word of God (Gen. 1.) who did but say, Let there be light, and there was light; let there be a firmament, and there was a firmament, &c. Thus when a man shall say, let such a thing be done, and it is done; when every thing comes forth at a word, like a new Creation, how great both a mercy and honour is this? When he saith, let there be deliverance, and there is deliverance; let there be victory, and there is victory; let there be peace, and there is peace; when in cases of greatest difficulty and utter impossibility to flesh and blood, he speaks like magnanimous Joshua (Josh. 10.13.) in a commanding language to the creature, while with strongest confidence in and humblest dependance upon God, Sun stand thou still upon Gibeah, and thou Moon in the valley of Ajalon; and the Sun stood still, and the Moon stayed until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. Who of the sons of men (who were not also the sons of God) were ever crowned with such an honour?

Secondly, He doth not say, he shall decree a thing and establish it; for man may decree a thing, but man cannot establish it; the decree is from one, the establishment is from another; and who is that other? Eliphaz doth not express who by name, but we may easily understand who it is, even God himself. For as it is God alone who hath given a being to all things, so he alone gives all things their establishment, whether they be things wrought by him, or wrought by us; God shall establish it, or it shall be established by the fiat, and consent of God.

Hence observe, The success of our Councels and decrees is from God.

There are many who take wise, yea honest Councels, which yet are not established, because the Lord is not pleased to establish them; and the Lord doth often overthrow evil and malicious Counsels. We read (Isa. 7.5, 6, 7.) of Councels and Decrees made, Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have taken evil Councel against thee, saying (they decree a thing, what was it?) let us go up against Judah to vex it (there was the decree) let us make a breach therein for us, and set a King in the midst of it, even the Son of Tabeal. Here was their decree, we will vex this people, we will set a King among them, the Son of Tabeal. But what saith the Lord to this? Thus saith the Lord God (vers. 7.) it shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass. It is this word in the Text, it shall not be established. You have made a decree, but you have not my consent for the establishment of it, and therefore it shall not stand, it shall not come to pass. Take another Scripture (Isa. 8.10.) the Lord doth as it were give them leave to make decrees: make as many decrees as you will, and sit together in Councel, lay your Councels as deep as you can, take Councel together, and it shall come to nought (you may take Councel, but it is in my power whether it shall succeed or no, and I have decreed concerning your decree, that it shall come to nought) speak the word, and it shall not stand. The standing or not standing, the frustrating or the fulfilling of our Decrees and Councels, it is from the Lord.

Thirdly, When he saith, Thou shalt decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee.

We may Observe, The Councels of the godly are under a promise of good success.

They have a kind of assurance that what they say shall come to pass; though they have not an absolute assurance, yet they have much assurance; though we cannot say in every particular case, that their decree shall be established to them, yet their decrees in general are under a promise of establishment. Christ speaketh concerning the decrees of a Church-Assembly (Matth. 18.18.) Verily I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall bind on Earth, shall be bound in Heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on Earth, shall be loosed in Heaven; that is, I will establish your decrees. If when you meet together in my name, you decree concerning a person to bind sin upon him, he shall be bound; if to loose or pronounce him pardon'd, he shall be loosened; your decree on Earth, shall be a decree in Heaven; I will bind what you bind, and loose what you loose. Now in proportion, the Lord speaks the same concerning the decrees of any godly man; what he binds on Earth, the Lord doth bind in Heaven, and what he looseth on Earth, God looseth in Heaven; that is, there is an establishment of his decrees: and as the Church there hath a promise that the Lord will joyn with her in her decrees; so a godly man hath a promise here that the Lord will joyn with him in his decrees. We have also an excellent confirmation of it (Isa. 44.25, 26.) The Lord is many wayes described in Scripture, but here he is described by disappointing and establishing the Councels of men. He it is that frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolishness. Here is a description of God in reference to the disappointments which he puts upon his enemies, in frustrating their Councels and Decrees; they boast of these and these tokens that assure them of good success, but the Lord frustrates their tokens. The Diviners say, O the Stars promise good luck, and tell us we shall have good fortune; thus diviners boast, but the Lord maketh the diviners mad; how doth he make them mad? By making them see things fall out quite cross to what they have foretold or prophesied. Again, he turns wise men backward; that is, he turns the Councels of wise men backward, when they have resolved such a thing, the Lord sets it quite another way: this is the glory of God that he can give check to the Councels of the greatest Politicians, and deepest Machiavels, he turns them backward. Thus the Lord is set forth overthrowing the decrees of the wicked; but at vers. 26. He is set forth establishing the decrees of the godly. He it is that confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the Council of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, thou shalt be inhabited; and to the Cities of Judah, ye shall be built, &c. God confirmeth the word of his servant; which may be understood not only of the word of Prophesie (though that be the scope of that place; as if it had been said, when the Lord sendeth forth his Prophets and holy Diviners, 'tis not with them as with false Prophets and heathenish Diviners, who making promises from the Stars of Heaven, not from the God of Heaven, are frustrated and disappointed; 'tis not thus with the Lords holy Diviners, for he confirmeth the word of his servants. Now, I say, we may understand that Text not only of that word of prophesie which the Lord puts into the mouths of his servants by an immediate inspiration) but also of that word of prophesie, or decree, which any one of his faithful servants speaketh or maketh according to his already revealed will. This word of his servants the Lord confirmeth also, and performeth the Council of his messengers. And the reason is (as was touched before about prayer) because there is a suitableness between such words and decrees of his servants, and his own decrees; for the designs of his servants falling in with his own designes, and so their decrees with his decrees; he in establishing their decrees, doth indeed but establish his own. For the servants of God desiring that their decrees may be suitable to the written or revealed will of God, they seldom miss of a suitableness to the decrees of his hidden and secret will. So that their decrees are (as it were) the Duplicate or Counterpanes of the Decrees of God; and therefore no wonder if they be under such a promise of success and establishment. The Lord saith concerning his own decrees or thoughts, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass (Isa. 14. 24.) Now if we think as God thinketh, then what we think shall come to pass too) and as I have purposed so shall it stand; if we purpose as God purposeth, then our purposes shall stand too. Again (Isa. 46. 10.) I am the Lord, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me: Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My councel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure. If then the councels of the Saints be the councels of God, he will do all their pleasure. That's the sum of this promise to Job, Thou shalt decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee. Which appears further from the last clause.

And the light shall shine upon thy wayes.

Eliphaz in this promise might possibly have respect to Job's former complaint (Chap. 19. 8.) He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass; and he hath set darkness in my paths; as if Eliphaz had here said, thou didst complain a while ago that God set darkness in thy paths, do thou return unto the Lord, and the light shall shine upon thy wayes, or there shall be light in stead of darkness in thy paths. This light may be taken three wayes.

First, A light of direction, thou shalt see what to do; so it answers the former promise, Thou shalt decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee. Thou shalt not make blind decrees, or decrees in the dark; thou shalt not decree at a venture, or at random; the light shall shine upon thy wayes; thou shalt have the light of the Word, and the light of the Spirit to direct thee in making thy decrees, and for the ordering of thy whole conversation.

Secondly, Light shining upon his wayes, is the prosperity of his wayes; as if he had said, success shall attend thy undertakings, the favour of God and his blessing shall be upon what thou takest in hand; as the Sun shining upon the earth ripens the fruits thereof, so the light, heat, and influence of divine favour shall ripen thy undertakings and bring them to a desired perfection. Light, in Scripture, is often put for prosperity, as hath been shewed from other passages of this book.

Thirdly, The light shall shine upon thy wayes; that is, thou shalt have personal comfort and contentment in thy wayes; that's a different blessing from the former; 'tis possible for a man to be in a prosperous way, and yet himself to take no comfort nor contentment in it. When these three lights shine upon any man in his way, or upon the wayes of any man, when the Lord shews him what he should do, when he prospereth and succeeds what he doth, and when he hath comfort and joy in what he is doing or hath done, then the blessing is full. As the Lord meets him that rejoyceth in his way and worketh righteousness, so the Lord doth often meet those that work righteousness in their way, causing them to rejoyce; and then the light shines upon their way indeed. This is a further addition unto the promise of success before given.

From the first notion of light,

First observe, The righteous are under a promise of direction and guidance by God; they shall see their way, and know what to do, by a divine light.

The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord (Psal. 73. 23.) that is, the Lord gives him light to see how to order his steps. He hath not only an outward natural light shining in the Air, and an outward spiritual light shining in the rule; but he hath an inward spiritual light shining in his heart, or that outward rule planted within, as it follows at vers. 31. of the same Psalm, The law of his God is in his heart, and none of his steps shall slide: The law in the heart is a rule within, which directs the good man what to do, and gives him such good direction, that none of his steps shall slide. He shall not walk like a man upon glass or ice, all whose steps are slips, or in danger of sliding; but he shall walk like a man upon plain firm ground, whose very steps are as sure as standings. As Saints who were darkness are made light in the Lord, in reference to their state; so they have light from the Lord, in reference to their walkings; and as they receive a light from God whereby they know all things, that is, those great things which concern eternal life (1 Joh. 2. 20.) Ye have an unction from the holy One, and ye know all things. Now as they have a light promised them, that they may know all things, that is, all necessary saving truths, or doctrines of salvation for attaining the next life; so a light is promised them whereby they may do all things, that is, all their necessary works, businesses, and affairs, which concern their duty in this life.

From the second notion of light,

Observe, Righteous men, such as turn unto the Lord, shall have a blessing in their way, their way shall prosper.

As they shall have a light shining to shew them their way, so to prosper them in their way: God is a Sun, and he is a Shield (Psal. 84. 11.) And as he is a Sun to give light, and a Shield to protect, so, no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly; that is, he will not hinder or stop those good things from them which their souls desire, or move after; they shall prosper in their way: yea, when 'tis said, He will not withhold, &c. there is more intended then expressed; for the meaning is, he will plentifully give forth or pour out all good things to and upon them, who walk uprightly.

From the third notion of light, Learn,

That the Lord gives godly men joy and comfort in their way.

Though their way be a way of much labour, yea and a way of much danger too, though it prove a way full of sweat and trouble; yet the Lord will cause a light to shine upon them, and refresh them in their way; To the righteous there riseth up light in darkness. The light of joy in the darkness of sorrow, the light of comfort in the darkness of trouble; they who walk in the light of truth and holiness, usually find the light of joy and comfort in their way, and are sure to find it in their end. The way of wisdom (saith Solomon, Prov. 3. 17.) are wayes of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace; and if at any time her wayes and paths are not peace and pleasantness (as to the outward man they often are not) while we are travelling in them, yet they are alwayes so in the close of our travels (Psal. 37. 37.) Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. Yea when others find most trouble in their way, then God is nearest to him for support, as it follows in the next words.

Vers. 29. When men are cast down, then thou shalt say there is a lifting up, and he shall save the humble person.

In this and the following verse, Eliphaz gives a firm assurance to Job by way of promise, that he should not only be delivered, but should have two further priviledges.

First, That himself should be exalted when others were cast down, or that he should be saved in times of common calamity, vers. 29.

Secondly, That he should be a means of safety to others, and should prevail with God for their deliverance: he shall deliver the Island of the Innocent, &c. vers. 30. That's the general scope of these two verses, according to our translation; as will further appear in the explication of them.

When men are cast down.

When they are prest, or oppress with mountains of affliction and trouble. So the word is used (Isa. 2. 17.) The loftiness of man shall be bowed down; that is, the lofty man shall be bowed down, as a man with a heavy burden upon his back. We say, when men are cast down: the word, שפל Depressus prostratus.

men,

men, is not expreſſed in the Hebrew Text, 'tis there only, when caſt down: and becauſe that word is not expreſt, therefore ſome ſupply out of the former clauſe, the word, way, The light ſhall ſhine upon thy way when it, that is, when thy way is caſt down; though thou be now in a low condition, and though thou ſhouldeſt hereafter be caſt into a low condition again, yet thou ſhalt ſay there is a lifting up, or, thou ſhalt be lifted up. If at any time thy wayes be caſt down in darkneſs, the light ſhall ſhine upon them, thou ſhalt ſay in faith, there is a lifting up. The Apoſtle ſpeaks (in a language like this) of himſelf and of his fellow Apoſtles (2 Cor. 4. 8.) We are troubled on every ſide, yet not diſtreſſed; perplexed, but not in deſpair; perſecuted, but not forſaken; caſt down, but not deſtroyed. Thus here, when there is a caſting down, or, when thy wayes are caſt down, yet thou ſhalt ſay there is a lifting up; thou mayeſt be caſt down, but not deſtroyed. Yet, I conceive, that Supplement of the word, men, which we put into the Text, is more ſuitable to the ſcope of it, and then the ſence is this, When men are caſt down, that is, when ſinners or ungodly men are caſt down, when God comes to ruine his enemies, and make them deſolate, then thou ſhalt ſay there is a lifting up; A lifting up for me, and for ſuch as I am.

Cum humiliata fuerint viæ tuæ dicas, elatio illa eſt, i. e. mox ſenties conditionem tuam exima factam optimam. Contextus mirè conciſus eſt, ideo variè intelligitur. Merc.

Thou ſhalt ſay.] This ſaying may be taken two wayes, and in both 'tis the voice of faith.

Dicts, ſc. in tuis ad Deũ precibus exaltatio ſit, ſc. illi depreſſo, i. e. ex alta illũ O deus. Piſc.

First, Thou ſhalt ſay in prayer, or thou ſhalt pray, O Lord, let there be a lifting up. Thus it is expounded as a promiſe to Job, that when others were caſt down, he ſhould help them up again by prayer; thou ſhalt ſay, There is a lifting up, or, O Lord, let there be a lifting up, namely, of him who is caſt down; lift him up, O Lord. As prayer is in its own nature a lifting up of the ſoul to God (Pſal. 25. 1.) ſo prayer in the effect of it hath a mighty power and prevalency with God for the lifting up both of our own bodies and outward eſtates, as alſo the bodies and outward eſtates of others out of the deeps of miſery and trouble. Many a godly man hath lifted himſelf and others out of the mire by prayer, while ſeeing a caſting down, he hath ſaid, There is a lifting up, or, O Lord, let there be a lifting up. This ſence carrieth a high priviledge; but I rather conceive that intended in the next verſe. And therefore

Pollicetur Jobo, Eliphaz eximiã fœlicitatem, impiis alijs atque etiam hoſtibus ſuis ad extremũ infœlicitatis gradum præcipitatis

Secondly, I ſhall take theſe words of Eliphaz as a promiſe, When men are caſt down, thou ſhalt ſay (or confidently affirm this thing) there is a lifting up; that is, I promiſe or aſſure thee, O Job, that when thou ſhalt ſee the Lord bringing vengeance upon the wicked, when thou ſeeſt them fall on this ſide, and on that, when nothing is viſible but the ruine and deſtruction of men and families, yea of Nations; that even then thou ſhalt ſay, there is a lifting up; that is, thou ſhalt have faith for thy ſelf, that both thou and thine ſhall be lifted up, or ſaved and delivered in a time when many wicked men or thine enemies fall and periſh, and ſhall never (as to any worldly enjoyment) riſe any more.

Hence obſerve, That a godly man may have much aſſurance when others are caſt down, that yet he and others ſhall be preſerved and lifted up.

When men were caſt down in Sodome, when Sodome was overthrown, Lot was lifted up, and aſſured of his preſervation. When all the men in the world were overwhelm'd and ſwept off the face of the earth with a Deluge, there was a lifting up for Noah and his family; he and his were ſafely houſed in the Ark floating upon the Waters. Thus the Lord had made proviſion for the preſervation of his people, when thouſands have been undone, and caſt down on the right hand and on the left by common calamities; yea when they have been caſt down, his people have been not only preſerved, but exalted and lifted up. Thou ſhalt ſay there is a lifting up,

And he ſhall ſave the humble perſon.

ὅτι ἐταπείνωσας σῶσον. Sept. Interior animi faſtus & tumor per oculos & per omnes ſimulari poſſit.

That is, the Lord ſhall ſave him; the Vulgar reads thus, He that is humble ſhall be in glory; the Seventy thus, Becauſe thou haſt humbled thy ſelf thou ſhalt be ſaved.

But I ſhall keep to our reading, He ſhall ſave the humble perſon (or according to the ſtrictneſs of the Hebrew) He ſhall ſave him that is low of eyes; 'tis frequent in Scripture to expreſs an humble perſon in this form, A man that hath low eyes; as high looks and lofty eyes, are every where in Scripture the periphraſis of pride. David ſaid (Pſal. 101. 5.) him that hath an high look and a proud heart will I not ſuffer; for you may ſee pride in the eye, pride ſits upon the eye; therefore David puts a high look and a proud heart both together there. And again (Pſal. 131. 1.) Lord, mine heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty. So that, I ſay, an humble perſon, and a perſon of low eyes is the ſame; as a proud perſon, and a perſon of lofty eyes is the ſame in Scripture ſence, and both are very ſignificant expreſſions; He ſhall ſave the humble perſon, this humble perſon may be taken two wayes, either Paſſively, or Actively.

Non tam modeſtum qui ſeſe ſubmittit (ut virtutem ſignificet) intelligo, quam afflictum eſſe illud etiam ſententiæ non repugnat, imo utrumq; rectè intellexeris? Merc.

Paſſively, ſo 'tis he that is caſt down and laid low by affliction. Thus the humble perſon is the ſame with the humbled perſon; affliction is an humiliation, however the afflicted take it or carry it; and uſually it makes men humble, at leaſt in appearance, and lowly in their looks; whereas in proſperity men lift up their eyes uſually, and look loftily, as if they would reach Heaven with their heads, while their hearts are far from it. But affliction makes men ſtoop. We may underſtand the Text of a perſon who is humble, when humbled, who ſtoops down quietly to take up and bear his croſs; and doth not in ſtouteneſs ſlight it, or in wantonneſs play with it, but is ſerious under the rebukes of God; He ſhall ſave the humble perſon.

Dimiſſus oculis eſt, qui ſuo judicio & exiſtimatione ſibi ipſi vileſcit.

Secondly, It may be taken Actively, He ſhall ſave the humble perſon; that is, the perſon who is low in his own eyes, while in the greateſt worldly heights, the perſon that humbles himſelf and walks humbly with God and men when moſt exalted. Thus the Apoſtle James exhorts the brother of high degree, or the rich brother, to rejoyce in that he is made low (Jam. 1. 10.) But if he be rich, how is he made low? He means it not of a lowneſs in ſtate, but of a lowneſs or rather lowlineſs of ſpirit. The brother of high degree hath no cauſe to rejoyce in his highneſs, but when he is low in his own eyes. Lowneſs of eyes is more then a vertue or common modeſty, 'tis a grace; that's in a ſpiritual ſence the moſt graceful look, which is the moſt humble look. He ſhall ſave the humble perſon; but with what ſalvation? I anſwer, Salvation is either temporal and bodily, or eternal, uſually called the ſalvation of the ſoul. We may expound this Text of both, the Lord ſaveth the humble perſon both body and ſoul, both temporally and eternally.

Where note, That the Lord takes ſpecial care of humble ones.

The Lord ſeems to take ſo much care to ſave the humble, as if there were none elſe that he took care to ſave, or regard what became of them, whether ſaved or no. And the Lord ſpeaks of proud perſons, as if he contemn'd none but under that name and notion (Jam. 4. 6.) He reſiſteth the proud; he that is proud of his perſon, or parts, or eſtate, or wit, or power, the Lord reſiſteth him. And he ſpeaks of the humble as if none were ſaved but under that name and notion, He ſaves the humble perſon; or as that Text in James hath it, He giveth grace to the humble. What grace? There is a twofold grace, and both are given to the humble; firſt, he gives them the grace of favour or good will, he is kind to and reſpecteth the humble, or (as this Text in Job hath it) He ſaves the humble perſon. Secondly, He gives much grace to the humble, as grace is taken for that gracious work of the Spirit in us, forming up faith, love, &c. in our ſouls. The Lord gives more of this grace alſo to the humble, that is, he addeth unto the graces which they have, and makes them more humble, more gracious; a man cannot be (in that ſence) an humble perſon without grace; humility it ſelf is a great grace, and the greater our humility is, the greater acceſſion we have of other graces. Thus, I ſay, we may underſtand the Text in James both wayes; He giveth grace to the humble, that is, he favours and reſpects them, becauſe they are gracious, and he addeth to or increaſeth their graces. We have a promiſe very parallel to theſe of Eliphaz and James (Pſal. 18. 27.) Thou wilt ſave the afflicted people, but wilt bring down high looks. The word which we tranſlate afflicted, ſignifies alſo one humbled, and humble, and ſo we might render externos geſtus ſe prodit. Non enim is ſuperbiæ mos eſt, qui latere aut diſſimulari poſſit. Pined.

the Psalm; Thou shalt save the humbled or the humble people; and that the humble are to be taken in to partake of the priviledge of that promise, is plain from the opposite Term in the latter clause of the verse, High looks; that is, high lookers God will bring down, but he will save the humble person. Men of low and mean estates are usually wrapt up with great ones in the same judgment, as the Prophet speaks (Isa. 5. 15.) The mean man shall be brought down, and the mighty man shall be humbled; the eyes of the lofty shall be humbled; there we have the mean man and the mighty man under the same wrathful dispensations of God. The wicked whether high or low, are far from salvation; but God knows how to make a distinction between the humble and the proud, when his wrath makes the greatest confusions in the world. Humility it is not only a sweet, but a safe, yea a saving grace; we never go under the covert of God so much as when we walk humbly with God; He will save the humble person.

Vers. 30. He shall deliver the Island of the Innocent, and it is delivered by the pureness of thine hands.

The promise is continued to the man that returns to God, He shall deliver the Island of the Innocent; or as some translate, the Innocent shall deliver the Island. The sence is the same, He shall deliver the Island, that is, the Inhabitants of the Island; all shall be safe, the Island and they that dwell in it. There is another reading of the Text, which yet falls in fully and clearly with this; whereas we read, He shall deliver the Island of the Innocent, it may be read, He shall deliver him that is not Innocent. Now because this may seem a very wide difference in the translation, we are to consider the ground of it, how this can be made out, that the same Text should be rendred, the Innocent, and him that is not innocent? The reason is because the word which we translate, Island, is taken by many of the Hebrew Doctors, as also by other translators, only for a negative particle, signifying not, or that which is not. So the word is rendred (1 Sam. 4. 21.) when Phineas his wife dying in travel gave the name to her Child, she said, He shall be called Ichabod, There is no glory, or, not glory. And again (Prov. 31. 4.) The word is used in the same sence, It is not for Kings, O Lemuel, to drink wine; strong drink is not for Princes. So here, Thou shalt deliver the nocent, or the not Innocent. And so the whole verse is thus translated, God, because of or for the pureness of thy hands, will deliver the nocent, or those who are not Innocent. Whereas we say, Thou shalt deliver the Island of the Innocent, or the Innocent shall deliver the Island.

Liberabit noxium. Pisc.

Vocula אי quæ hic redditur insula, idem valet quod לא non. Pisc. Ego cum veteribus אי pro negatione exponerem. Erit; facilis sensus, sc. Deus puritate manuum tuarū etiam nocentem, vel non innocentem liberabit. Merc.

And it is delivered by the pureness of thine hands.

Eliphaz spake before in the third person, here in the second; 'tis probable he did so purposely to make Job understand that he meant him. It is delivered, &c. that is, the Island is deliver'd; according to our translation, how is it delivered? By the pureness of thine hands. The word notes the most exact purity and cleanness, like that of gold when it is refined in the fire, or of garments that are washed with Soap or Nitre; By this pureneß it, or the Island, shall be delivered: and by the pureness of his hands, he means the pureness of his actions or administrations. The hand is the instrument of action, and pure or clean hands in Scripture are put for the purity or cleanness of our actions or conversations. While our doings are holy, our works righteous, just, and good, it may be said our hands are pure. And we may refer this especially to prayer, Thou shalt deliver the Island of the Innocent, and it is delivered by the pureness of thine hands; that is, thou praying in the purity of thy hands, or with pure hands, shalt deliver the Island of the Innocent, or (according to that other reading) those that are not Innocent. And then, pureness of hands, or pure hands, are put as a sign for the thing signified; the gesture, for that which is done in that gesture. The lifting up of hands is a gesture in prayer, and the lifting up of pure hands, notes the purity of prayer (1 Tim. 2. 8.) I will that men pray every where, lifting up holy or pure hands. Now because 'tis usual in prayer to lift up the hands; and in prayer no hands but morrally pure or holy hands should be lifted up (and so theirs are in Scripture sence whose lives are holy) therefore we may well conceive, that when he saith, It shall be deliver'd by the pureness of thy hands; his meaning is this, it shall be delivered by holy prayer, or when thou prayest holily, it shall be delivered. Thus Eliphaz doth not only promise Job, that himself in person should be lifted up and saved when others are cast down; but that he should be a means of saving and delivering others, and those not some few, or all his own family, but that the whole Nation or Island in general should escape and fare the better for him. It shall be delivered by the pureness of thy hands. Learn hence, this great and famous truth;

Manus puræ sunt opera inculpata & quæ crimine vacant Drus.

That, a godly person is a Common good.

He doth good not only within his own walls, or to his own personal relations; but he is a Common good, a publick mercy, a general blessing; whether we consider general blessings either Negatively, or Affirmatively, that is, either as delivering from evil, or as bringing in of good; every way the godly man is a general blessing, he shall deliver the Island of the Innocent, yea those that are not Innocent; the Lord will accept his prayer, and hear his request for the deliverance of a place, though there be many wicked ones in it. Abraham (Gen. 18. 32.) had that priviledge granted him, that for his sake and at his suite the Lord would have spared the wicked, the not Innocent, those who were most abominably polluted: if there had been but ten righteous persons there, Sodome had been saved from burning at the suit of Abraham. Much more will the Lord spare the Island of the Innocent; that is, where there is a great many Innocent ones, at the prayer and request of an Abraham, a man eminent in faith and holiness. How often did Moses turn away the wrath of God, when it was breaking forth against the people of Israel (Psal. 106. 23.) He said, he would destroy them (that is, the Lord said it) had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath lest he should destroy them. The Lord had as it were made a decree that he would destroy that people; but Moses comes and interposeth for them, and the Lord spared them. We read (Exod. 32. 9, 10.) that how the Lord said to Moses, I have seen this people, and behold it is a stiff-necked people; Now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them, and I will make of thee a great people. But did Moses accept this offer of advancement upon the ruines of that people? No, he deprecates his own honour, as it follows (vers. 11.) And Moses besought the Lord his God, and said, Lord why doth thy wrath wax hot against this people? &c. Then at vers. 14. The Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people. Thus Moses by the pureness of his hands, holy prayer, delivered a Nation that was not Innocent, from consumption in the flames of the Lords provoked jealousie. Again (Jerem. 5. 1.) the Prophet is commanded to run to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, to see and know in the broad places thereof, if he could find a man, if there were any that executed judgment, that sought the truth, and I will pardon it, saith the Lord. One man should deliver the City that was not Innocent by the pureness of his hands. We see the Lord puts the whole issue upon this, if thou canst find a man. But were there not multitudes and throngs of men in Jerusalem? Why then was it proposed as a matter of difficulty to find a man there? Doubtless Jerusalem was a populous City and was filled with men, but a man so qualified, a man of Justice, a man that sought the truth was hardly to be found there, and therefore if thou canst find (such) a man, I will pardon it, saith the Lord. How pardon it? There is a twofold pardon; first, a pardon of the guilt of sin; secondly a pardon of the punishment of sin. The Lord, upon the finding out of such a man, would not pardon the guilt of all that were there, nor give them an everlasting pardon; but pardoned they should be as to present punishment and ruine, they should be pardoned or saved from destruction for that time, if such a godly man could be found among them. Godly men save the wicked three wayes.

First, They save them, when by their good Councel and Instruction they turn them from their sins, and bring them to repentance; this is a happy way of saving them. And thus a godly man may save the wicked: every godly Minister of the Gospel is said to save not himself only (but in this sence) those that hear him; because he offers and urgeth upon them the means of salvation (1 Tim. 4. 16.)

Secondly,

Secondly, As they may ſave them thus by being a means of their Converſion, ſo they may ſave them by being a means of their Direction; one godly man may ſave a whole Land by his directing Counſel, as well as he ſaveth many by his converting Counſel. Of this Solomon ſpeaks clearly (Eccleſ. 9.14,15.) There was a little City, and few men in it, and there came a great King againſt it, &c. Now there was found a poor wiſe man in it, and he by his wiſdom delivered the City; that is, he gave wiſe and wholſom Counſel, which being followed, proved an effectual means for the deliverance of the City.

Haud tamen Deus id ſemper facit, neq; eſt quod quiſquam in hac re certã ei legem imponat, fallitur ergo Eliphaz ſi hoc perpetuũ eſſe putavit. Merc.

Thirdly, A godly man may be a publick good to ſave and deliver others by his Prayers and Interceſſion, by ſeeking the Lord that they may be deliver'd, as the latter branch was opened; he ſaves them by the pureneſs of his hands, lifted up in prayer. Yet we muſt take this with a caution, for we cannot affirm it univerſally, that the righteous have alwayes this priviledge (in the event) to deliver the Iſland or Nation wherein they are. But we may ſay, that this is a priviledge which Saints have often been honoured with, and which none but Saints have been honoured with at any time, to be the Saviours and Deliverers of a people among whom they dwell; for we know the Lord himſelf hath given expreſs Exceptions to this rule (Jer. 15. 1.) where he tells the ſtubborn Jews by his Prophet, Though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, yet my mind could not be towards this people; Caſt them out of my ſight, and let them go forth; and it ſhall come to paſs if they ſay unto thee, whither ſhall we go forth, thou ſhalt tell them, thus ſaith the Lord, ſuch as are for death, to death; and ſuch as are for the ſword, to the ſword; and ſuch as are for famine, to famine. When he ſaith, Though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me; ſome may ask, what to do? I anſwer, we are not to take it for a mute ſtanding before the Lord; but a ſtanding before the Lord with earneſt Prayers, Interceſſions, and Supplications, for the ſparing of that people: now ſaith the Lord, though Moſes and Samuel (who in their generations were eminent godly men, and eminent favourites of God) though theſe ſhould ſtand before me, earneſtly praying for this people, yet my mind could not be toward them; that is, I would not ſpare them, nor ſave them from death, ſword, famine, or captivity, no not at their entreaty. And we have a like Inſtance (Ezek. 14. 14.) Though theſe three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it (there were but two named in Jeremy, but here three, though theſe three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it) they ſhould but deliver their own ſ[illegible]s by their righteouſneſs, ſaith the Lord God. They might have the priviledge mentioned by Eliphaz in the former verſe, When men were caſt down, they might ſay, there is a lifting up, or there is preſervation for us; God will take care of us; but God would not be perſwaded, no, not by Noah, Daniel, and Job, to ſave the reſt. So that there are caſes wherein the Lord will not hear the Interceſſions of the beſt of men for a ſinful people. The Iſland of the wicked, or of the not Innocent ſhall not be delivered, no, not by the pureneſs of their hands; yet 'tis an experienced truth, that God hath ſpared a people for the ſake of ſome godly found among them; yea the reaſon why the Lord doth not deſtroy the world which lies in wickedneſs, is much, in reſpect of them who walk in holineſs. For were it not (as Eliſha told Jehoram to his face in reference to good King Jehoſaphat, 2 Kings 3. 14.) that God hath regard to their preſence in the world, God would not ſo much as look towards the ungodly, nor ſee them for good. This honour have all the Saints, and how great an honour is it to be a publick good, to be a Saviour to an Iſland, to a Nation? Some indeed are of ſuch narrow ſpirits, that if they may ſave themſelves, and keep their own ſtakes, they care not what becomes of the publick. But as it is a great honour to be active for the ſaving and delivering of a Nation, ſo it is a greater honour to have the ſafety and deliverance of a Nation attributed or given in to us by God himſelf (though not at all by way of deſert, yet) in a way of favour. Paul was at Sea with no good company, yet when all looked to be ſwallowed up, An Angel of God appeared to him, ſaying, Fear not Paul, Thou muſt be brought before Cæſar, and lo, God hath given thee all them that ſail with thee (Acts 27. 23, 24.) that is, for thy ſake, or becauſe they are now in thy company, they alſo ſhall eſcape the rage of this tempeſt. They all ow their lives to thee henceforth as well as to me, for to thee have I given them. The men of this world might hence take notice of their own folly, who can hardly afford them a good word, or room to live in the world, for whoſe ſake it is that they live. How often do they wiſh and ſeek their deſtruction, for whoſe ſake it is, that themſelves are not deſtroyed? How often do they accuſe the godly, as the troublers of a Nation, as the hinderers of publick good? Whereas they are indeed a common good, the Chariots and Horſemen, the Protection and Defence, the Salvation and Deliverance of thoſe States and Nations where they are. The breaches which wicked men make by ſinning, they make up by praying, to turn away the Lords wrath, that they be not conſumed. We read how the Lord complains, that there was none found to make up the hedge, to ſtand in the gap when he was coming to deſtroy them (Ezek. 22. 30.) And it is ſaid of Moſes (Pſal. 106. 23.) that he ſtood before the Lord in the breach, that he ſhould not deſtroy the Iſraelites. Which phraſe of ſtanding in the breach ſeems to bear an alluſion to an Army beſieging a City, who firſt plant their Canon, and make a breach, and then come to the ſtorm. Thus the Lord deals many times with a people, he encamps againſt them, and batters them; he makes ſome breach upon them by troubles and diviſions, and then expects that ſome ſhould ſtand in the breach, and beſeech him not to ſtorm them with the whole Army of his Judgments. And the Lord takes it well when any of the Valiant ones, when any of the Worthies of his Iſrael preſent themſelves in the breach, praying with utmoſt importunity, that the Lord would withdraw thoſe evils which threaten to come in at the breach like armed men and lay waſt a Nation.

And foraſmuch as men of pure hands, or godly men have this priviledge to be a common good, by being the deliverers of Nations from common evils and calamities; I ſhall hint ſome few things from it more diſtinctly.

Firſt, We ſee wherein (under God) the ſtrength and ſafety of Kingdoms and Common-wealths doth conſiſt. It is not, ſo much, in the wiſdom of the Counſeller, or in the courage of the Souldier; it is not, ſo much, in Armies at Land, or Navies at Sea; it is not, ſo much, in walled Cities and fortified Caſtles; it is not, ſo much, in union at home, or in Leagues and Confederacies abroad, as it is in the purity of mens hands, or in the holineſs of their lives. Godlineſs is the Sampſons lock, wherein the ſtrength of a Nation lyes. A Heathen could ſay, that A people were never ſafe by the ſtanding of their walls, while themſelves were falling in their virtues. It is therefore (if there were nothing better in it) good policy to encourage piety, and to endeavour the encreaſe of a holy Seed in any Nation. For as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 6. 13.) As a Teil tree and as an Oak whoſe ſubſtance is in them, when they caſt their leaves, ſo the holy Seed ſhall be the ſubſtance thereof.

Secondly, In this we ſee the honour which God puts upon godly men. What can be greater then this, to be really (though perhaps far from being accounted ſo) the Deliverers and Saviours of their Country? What an honour was it to Abraham when God told a King, that he was beholding to Abraham for his life, or that that favour muſt be granted to him at the ſuit and as it were ſent him by the hand of Abraham (Gen. 20. 7.) He ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt live. An honour much like this God put upon Job alſo, at the latter end of this Book (Chap. 42. 8.) My ſervant Job ſhall pray for you, for him will I accept, leſt I deal with you after your folly. Such an honour (in ſome degree) have all the Saints.

Thirdly, Let men honour thoſe whom God honours thus; and let the Princes and powers of the world be glad when they hear that they have many ſuch in their Dominions; when ſuch are ſubject to them, as rule with God. It is ſaid of Xerxes (the greateſt Monarch in the world in his time) that when Themiſtocles came over to him (who was a man Eminent for Wiſdom and Eloquence) that being over-joyed at ſuch a treaſure, he cryed out in his ſleep, I have got Themiſtocles the Athenian. Spiritual wiſdom renders men a greater treaſure to States, then moral wiſdom can. Surely then they who are ſpiritually wiſe deſerve to be rejoyced in. I am ſure it is not ſafe to let them be diſcouraged by whom our ſafety is eſtabliſhed; much leſſe is it ſafe to let them fall by whom in their capacity Kingdoms ſtand; leaſt of all, it is ſafe to caſt them down, who (by the rule of divine politicks) are State-upholders. Therefore let me ſay this to all the powers of this world, do not deſtroy thoſe who have the priviledge to be Saviours and Deliverers: Yea, Take heed of deading and ſtraitning their ſpirits in prayer for you; above all, take heed of turning their prayers againſt you. Do not provoke your own Horſemen to fight againſt you, and your own Chariot-wheels to run over you. As theſe are the beſt friends to a Nation, ſo the worſt enemies. Better have many outwardly oppoſing you, then one (upon juſt ground) ſecretly praying, or but complaining to God againſt you. They who have no power at all in their hands, no not ſo much as to help or ſave themſelves, may yet deſtroy many by the pureneſs of their hands; that is, they holding up pure hands in prayer, may bring down deſtruction upon many who are wicked, and the adverſaries of Chriſt becauſe their adverſaries. But that which they moſtly do, and that which they moſt of all deſire to do, is, That Lands and Iſlands may be delivered by the pureneſs of their hands.

To ſhut up this Point and Chapter, we ſee, that as the Saints are killed all the day long, by the wicked world, for the Lords ſake (Rom. 8. 36.) that is, becauſe they own the Lord and his wayes: ſo the wicked of the world are ſpared even all the day long, or as often as they are ſpared by the Lord, for the ſake of the Saints; that is, becauſe the Lord owns and approves them and their wayes, and doth therefore give peace to the world, that ſo in their peace they alſo may have peace.

A

TABLE

DIRECTING TO

Some Special Points

Noted in the Precedent

EXPOSITIONS.

A

Abib, the Jewish month, why so called. Folio 712

Abominable, what that is which is called abominable, or an abomination, 1418. Sinful man how abominable to God. 1419

Aboundance cannot satisfie, 1444. Aboundance a great tryal of grace as well as want, 2205 Aboundance of worldly things not to be desired, yet may lawfully be enjoyed. 2256

Abraham, in what sence called the root of the Olive-tree, 1783. Abraham's faith how strong, 1883. Abraham how he complained becaule childless. 2033

Accepting of persons what it is, 1219. To accept persons perverts justice, 1220. How we may be said to accept the person of God, 1221. It is a very provoking sin, 1229 Four things shew it. ibid.

Accusation, to accuse mearly upon suspition very uncharitable. 2171

Acquainting our selves with God, what it is, and the several steps by which Saints arise to it, 2234, &c. A twofold acquaintance with God, 2235, &c. The more we are acquainted with God, the more like we are to him, 2236. No acquaintance with God but by a Mediator, ibid. We can have no true peace till we acquaint our selves with God, 2237. While we are unacquainted or estranged from God, we are estranged from good, 2239. Acquaintance with God brings in all good. ib. &c.

Adam's sin in eating the forbidden fruit, how aggravated in one particular. 2158

Adamant, why so called. 761

Advancement is from God, 414. The difference between Gods advancing his own people and enemies. 415

Advice and Councel, the good or evil which others do by our advice, is reckoned as done by us. 24

Advocate between God and man, 1587. How the Holy Ghost is an Advocate, ibid. In what manner Christ performes the office of an Advocate, 1588. Christ is an effectual Mediator or Advocate, 1589. Five things to shew the effectualness of Christs pleading for us as an Advocate. 1590

Affections of men and their opinions of others are very variable, 1620. Affections, the change or stability of them is from God, 1819

Affliction is the touchstone of sincerity, 67. Afflictions are all bounded and ordered by God, 70. Those afflictions are most grievous, wherein God seems to be against us, 83 We ought to be sensible under the hand of God in afflictions, 95. And may express our sorrows by outward gestures, 96. When God humbles us with sorrows, we should humble our selves for sin, ibid. Afflictions send the people of God home to him, 100 They turn them into prayers, ib. They come from God, 108. Therefore look beyond the creature, 109. To bless God in affliction, is a high act of Grace, yet but our duty, 111 To bless God in afflictions, will make our afflictions a blessing, ib. God afflicts his, sometime without reference to sin, 123. Great afflictions may cause greatcomplainings, 183 No affliction in this life so great, but it may be greater, 193. Reasons why God continues life to those who are greatly afflicted, 238. Affliction usually accompanied with much darkness, 249. It encreaseth an affliction, not to know the reason of it, ib. Especially not to see a way to escape it, ib. Sore afflictions indispose for duty, 270. Affliction often disturbs the seat of reason, 272 Times of affliction, special seasons for the use of our graces, 275. Affliction discovers our hearts and our graces to our selves, 278 Afflictions good for the Saints, 327. They are but trials, ibid. Affliction is a cleanser, how, 328. They are sent to humble us, ib. To bring the Saints nearer God, ib. Man naturally seeks the reason of his afflictions out of himself, 387. Every affliction hath a cause, 388. It comes not by the power of any creature, ib. It is from the Lord, ib. It is our wisdom and our duty to seek God in times of affliction, 393. We are to seek him about four things in affliction, 393, 394. It is a great ease to the soul to do so, ib. Affliction and happiness meet in the same person, 438 Yet every one that is afflicted is not happy, 439. The best of Gods children, sometimes entertain afflictions unwillingly, 444. They sometime apprehend them as unuseful, 445 As disgraceful, ib. The least affliction ought not to be sleighted, 446. We ought highly to prize them, ib. Afflictions of others are to be throughly weighed, and wherein that consists, 497. It is an addition to a mans affliction, when others are not sensible of it, 498. Afflictions are heavy burdens, 500 They come by multitudes, 501. Afflictions are the higher services of grace, 537. They are measured out by the hand of God, 59 Man apt to think he needs not so many or so great afflictions, 616. It makes a little time seem very long to us, 623. Affliction is the magnifying of a man two wayes 632. Why called visitation? 635. They are trials, 638. They are bands, and such a man cannot break, 640, 641. It is a great ease to an afflicted mind, to know the reason why afflictions are sent, 655. God brings his eminentest servants to the most eminent trials by afflictions, 656. A good heart gives testimony to the righteousness of God, in the midst of greatest afflictions, 753. God layes very sore afflictions upon them that are very dear to him, 828. Afflictions continue cause us to suspect that our prayer is not answered, ib. A godly man may be much oppresst with the fears of affliction, 869. There was not such a spirit of rejoycing in affliction among the Saints of the Old Testament, as is under the New, 871, &c. After purgings God goes on sometimes with afflictions, 880. It is lawful to pray against affliction, 894. Affliction removed three wayes, 895. Great afflictions carry a charge of wickedness upon the afflicted, 913. An afflicted person is very solicitous about the reason of his afflictions, 915. Afflictions are searchers, 933. Afflictions affect with shame 990, &c. Under great afflictions our requests are modest, 994. Afflictions are the desert of sin, 1044. All the afflictions of this life are less then sin deserves, ibid. Afflictions blessed by God work a gracious change, 100 They have three advantages for it, ib. Affliction layes the best men open to disesteem, 1119. Affliction layeth us open to temptation, 1120. Men at ease are apt to despise those who are afflicted, 1121. It is very sinful to do so, 1122. In great afflictions we are apt to afflict our selves more, 12

All afflictions are not alike grievous, 1278 How we may pray for the withdrawing of affliction, 1280. Afflictions bitter things, 1303. Great afflictions hinder the ſenſe of tendred mercies, 1404. Some afflictions bring a wearineſs both upon ſoul and body, 1514. Some afflictions diſtract, ib. A godly man may grow extream weary of affliction, 1515. Great afflictions, like great ſins, leave a mark, 1521. Great afflictions, how made witneſſes of ſin againſt a man, ib. The witneſs which affliction gives, cenſured two wayes, ib. God afflicts his own ſeverely, 1535. God ſeems to take pleaſure in afflicting his, 1538. Affliction comes not by chance, but by ſpecial direction, ib. God hath many wayes to afflict, 1539. He ſends breach upon breach, 1546. Great afflictions have three things in them in reference to others, 1619. Afflictions are ſtraits, 1713. The length or continuance of affliction is more then the weight of it, 1769 Thoſe afflictions moſt painful which reach our ſpirits, ib. It is ſinful not to own the godly in affliction and trouble, yet hard to do ſo, 1777, &c. Affliction called reproach in Scripture, and why, 1785. A good heart acknowledges God in all his afflictions, 1786, &c. Affliction like a net ſhewed in five parallels, 1788. Some have much darkneſs in their afflictions, 1798. Afflictions like troops of enemies, 1811. Afflictions are all at Gods command, ib. There is no ſtriving with afflictions, 1813. A man in affliction is apt to lay little things to heart, 1831. It may be an act of grace to do ſo, ib. Differences between God and man in afflicting, 1847. Affliction doth not ſeparate from Chriſt, 1865. God is not to be charged with any unrighteouſneſs, becauſe the righteous are afflicted, 2085. Affliction hath much inſtruction in it, 2131. God hath abundance of affliction in his hand, 2178. Difference between the afflictions of a godly and a wicked man. 2179

Age, what meant by it? taken three wayes, 701. Old age, three degrees of it among the Jews. 1400

Alpha and Omega, firſt and laſt, include all perfections. 1862

Amalekites, their enmity againſt the Jews. 1450

Amarantus, the unfading flower. 1803

Amen, with what ſtrength of ſpirit it ſhould be uttered, 1074. Rabbins give three Rules about ſaying Amen. ibid.

Anathema Maranatha, what it ſignifieth. 1872

Ancient of dayes, why God is ſo called. 928

Angels, called the ſons of God, three reaſons of it, 37, 116. How Angels preſent themſelves before God, 37. We ſhould imitate Angels in our readineſs to do the will of God, 39. Angels are the ſervants of God, 334. Their ſeveral ſervices for the Church, 334, 335. And againſt the wicked, ib. Angels how chargeable with folly, 338. Pride and ſelf-confidence, the ſins of Angels, 339 Angels as creatures mutable, ib. Yet now confirmed by Chriſt, 340. God hath no need of Angels, 341. Angels falling, why their ſin greater then mans, and God ſo irreconcilable to them, 954. Angels, how imperfect, 1416. Angels by ſome called Heavens, and why, 1417. Chriſt a mediator and head of the good Angels, not their Redeemer, 1863. Angels, how in a place. 2184

Anger in man, what it is, 772. How God is angry, ib. The troubles that fall upon the creature are the effects of Gods anger, ib. It not in the power of man to turn away the anger of God, 810. How prayer is ſaid to do it, ib. The anger of God is more grievous to the Saints, then all their other afflictions, 913. Anger a bitter thing, eſpecially the anger of God, 1302, &c. Angry man deſcribed, 1703. Anger, ſix ſorts of it, ib. Anger may be of good uſe, ib. Furious and diſtempered anger hurts our ſelves moſt, 1704. Seven rules given for the moderating of our anger, ib. 1705. Anger is the kindling of a fire in us, 1807. Anger of God, how God is ſaid to be angry, 2065 Dangerous to provoke God to anger, ib. The afflictions of wicked men are diſtributed to them by God in anger. ibid.

Anſwer, how taken in Scripture, 493. It is the duty of a man to anſwer when he is queſtioned or charged with any fault, 494. Anſwer of two kinds, 811. It is a duty to anſwer what is ſpoken. How a fool muſt and muſt not be anſwered, 1019. Two things alwayes may, two things uſually do embolden men to anſwer. 1501

Antiochus Epiphanes, his painful life. 1431

Apis, the Egyptian Idol, why his Prieſts did not give him the water of Nilus to drink. 1461

Apoſtacy from profeſſion, worſe then continued prophaneneſs. 1534

Apoſtles, how ſome are called chief among the Apoſtles. 1108

Appeals to God lawful, 1573. It is a daring work to appeal to God. 1576

Appearance, we muſt not judge by it. 873

Appetite of the end infinite, 1493. Appetite twofold. 1975

Application of general truths very neceſſary. 490, 1042

Archers, ſeven Archers ſhot at Job. 1539

Arcturus deſcribed. 788

Ariſe, to ariſe and do a thing, what it imports. 91

Ark in which the Law was put, typed Chriſt. 2244

Arminians, why they deny the Interceſſion of Chriſt for all. 1598

Arrhabo, an earneſt, whence it comes. 1603

Arrows, how taken in Scripture, 502, 503. Arrows of God why ſo called, ib. Afflictions like arrows in four things, 1504. Poyſon'd arrows, ibid.

Aſtoniſhment at the dealings of God, 1628 Aſtoniſhment, judgments of God cauſe it. 2026, 2028

Aſſemblies of the Saints to worſhip, are the dwelling place of God. 2184

Aſſes colt, man like a wild Aſſes colt in three things. 1063

Aſſurance, to be aſſured of a mercy, is better then the enjoyment of a mercy, 479. Aſſurance that we are in a ſtate of Grace poſſible, and how wrought, 939. Aſſurance of faith, hope, love and underſtanding opened, 1273. What aſſurance is, ib. & 1274. Objections againſt aſſurance anſwered, ib. How a right aſſurance is grounded, 1275. Aſſurance of approaching miſeries, how great a trouble to the mind, 1446. A wicked man may have this aſſurance. ibid.

Atlantes, what people they were. 197

Attention to the word twofold, 1669

Auguſtine, his wiſh to ſee three things. 1888

Auguſtus Ceſar, his peircing eye. 1523

Awake, in what ſenſe God awakes, 692. His awaking and ſleeping, note only the changes of providence, 693. Two things awaken God, the prayer of his people, and the rage of his enemies. 694

Aygoland, a King of the Moors, why he refuſed baptiſm. 1630

B

Baptiſm threefold. Folio 1713

Barathzum, why it ſignifies Hell, 1622

Beaſts, in what ſence put for men in Scripture, 470. Beaſts of the earth, hurtful to us three wayes, 471. Beaſts how at peace with us, 476. Sin hath made the beaſts and all creatures hurtful to man, ib. It is from ſpecial providence that the beaſts hurt us not, 477. Beaſts complain not without cauſe, 511. Man in paſſion worſe then beaſts, 614, 615. When man is ſent to the beaſts to be taught, what it importeth, 1128. How we may be ſaid to ask queſtions of beaſts, or to confer with them, 1129. What ſpecial leſſons the beaſts and fowls teach us. 1130, 1131

Begging, or wandring for bread, a great affliction. 1443

Behold, a note either of deriſion, or of aſſeveration. 266

Being, How a troubleſom being may be worſe then no being, and how not, 220. How God excelleth all creatures in his being, ſhewed in ſeven particulars. 1233, &c.

Belial, wicked men, why called ſons of Belial? 289. Belial, whence derived, 1389 Who is Belial. 1429

Believing, a wicked man hath neither a ground nor a heart to believe, 1438, &c. A wicked mans believing is preſuming. 1439

Belly, taken for the appetite. 1986

Benefits received or promiſed, what influence they may or ought to have upon our obedience unto God. 53

Beſt things hardeſt to come by, 244. Beſt things are hidden in two reſpects. 244

Birth, The great power of God in the birth of man, 209. The remembrance that God takes us out of the womb, a great ſupport to faith in greateſt troubles, 210. Untimely birth, what, and why ſo called. 227

Birth-dayes kept ſolemnly, 336. Spiritual birth-day our greateſt joy. ibid.

Bitter day, is a day of trouble, 192. Sin is a bitter thing, and why. 1301

Bitterneſs of ſoul, notes the deepeſt ſorrow, 238. Bitterneſs put for ſoreſt affliction, 831 The Lord ſometime mixes a very bitter cup for his own people, 832. Bitterneſs of ſoul, what. 2094

Blaſphemy, what? 114. The holieſt perſons ſubject to the moſt blaſphemous temptations. 151

Blaſt and breath of God, what they ſignifie in Scripture. 293

Bleſſedneſs, three degrees of it. 479

Bleſſing, three wayes, 1. Man bleſſes man. 2. Man bleſſeth God. 3. God bleſſes man, what? 57, 58. All ſucceſs from the bleſſing of God, 59. God delights to bleſs thoſe who are laborious, ib. The bleſſing of God is effectual, 60. To bleſs God, what? 110 The beſt outward bleſſing may be turned into a croſs. 144

Blood, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 1565 Blood of Chriſt conſidered two wayes, as to the work of Redemption. 1862

Bloody ſins ſhall not paſs undiſcovered, 1570 Why God is ſaid to make inquiſition for blood in ſpecial. 1571

Body of man compared to a houſe, in two reſpects, 343. Why called a houſe of clay, 344. How it ſhould humble us, 345. Much care of the body is uſually joyned with neglect of the ſoul, ibid. Body of man an excellent cellent frame of it, 960. Five things shew this, ib. &c. Body of man an excellent frame, 947. How called a vile body, ib. Body of man like earth or clay, 1240, 1241. To mind the feeding of it, sinful, 1462. They take little care for their souls, who take overmuch care for their bodies, 1463. Body shall be spiritual, after the Resurrection, three wayes, 1886. Four endowments of a glorious body. ibid.

Bodies of the Saints abused and tortured here on earth. 134

Bodily-evils distemper the mind. 1841

Bonds of Kings of two sorts, how both are broken. 1163, 1164

Bones and sinews, their use in the body of man, 960. Our bones how taken in Scripture. 1946

Book, God hath a two fold book. 1300

Branch, what it signifies in Scripture, 1483 Branches of a man, what they are. 1736

Bread the staff of life, 457. It is a precious comfort, to have bread in a promise, when we have none upon the board, 458. What it signifies in Scripture. 1442, &c.

Breath, our breath in the hand of God, 1134 The safety of our lives chiefly in this, ibid. Breath of God, what it signifies in Scripture, 1470, &c. Breath of man, 1472. Breath of man taken three wayes, 1594. The breath of man is corruptible, 1595. Breath is not the soul. ibid.

Brethren, many sorts of them, 543. Brethren deceitful, 544. The deceit of a brother is double deceit, especially of a brother in the faith, ib. Seven sorts of them, 1817. Brethren may prove forgetful and unfaithful, ib. The estrangement of a brother is very grievous, 1818. Brethren of two sorts, 2156 To do wrong to, or not to relieve a brother. heightens the sin. ibid.

Bribe-takers, and bribe-givers, both alike wicked. 1486

Bribery is an odious sin, 1487. That which is got by bribery will not hold long. ibid.

Brimstone implies barrenness, 1751. Three things in a judgment intimated by scattering brimstone. 1752

Building, and to be built up what it signifies in Scripture. 2248

Burial, a comely burial is an honour and a blessing. 485

By-word, to be made a by-word, notes two things, 1617. Great sufferers are usually made a by-word, ib. &c. It is very burdensom to the spirit of a man to be made a by-word. 1618

C

CAbirs a Sect of babling Poets. Folio 675

Calling, every man ought to have a calling. 59 It is a great blessing when we can freely go on in the exercise of our callings. 1095

Candle-light, the removing of it shews a very miserable condition. 1711

Carnal reasonings are the strong holds of sin, 1455. The armor and weapons of sin, 1456 Carnal men, their spirits are meerly mercenary. 2212

Cattel the riches of the Patriarchs, and why? 14, &c.

Cause, second causes can do nothing without the first. 947

Chaff, wicked men compared to it in three things. 2067, &c.

Chambers of the South, what, and why so called. 789

Changes, greatest changes incident to greatest persons, 1167. Changeableness of man in his natural, civil, and spiritual estate opened, 1319. The most durable creatures have a changeableness in their nature, 1345. Three great changes, 1356. What a change is made by death, and the resurrection, opened, ib. 1357. To be without change is either the best or worst condition, 1359. The strongest creatures subject to change, 1369. Changes of wicked men for the worse, 1479. Changeableness of our estate both a part of our misery, and a great mercy. 1480

Charity, four acts of spiritual charity, 266. Spiritual charity best, 270. Charity especially spiritual charity is open handed, ib. Charity must and will make ventures, 2157. Charity is accepted, and uncharitableness condemned in the smallest matters, 2161. Churlish persons stick at small charities as well as great, ib. How charity believeth all things. 2171

Chastnings, see Afflictions. What is properly a chastning, 447. How we may improve this notion that Shaddai God Almighty chastens us. 448, 449

Chemarims, Idolatrous Priests, why so called? 192

Children are blessings, 11. A greater blessing then riches, ibid. The more children, the more blessing, 12. Best to have most sons, ib. To have daughters and sons, the compleat blessing, ib. Many children no hinderance either of piety or equity, ib. Love and concord among children, is the fathers special blessing, 19. Lawful delights is to be permitted our children, 23. Children of full age, not out of their parents care, ib. Childrens souls chiefly to be cared for, ib. Parents ought to pray in special for every child, 29 Job's loss of his children, his greatest loss, shewed in five considerations, 85, &c. Children of wicked parents, often wrapt up in the same judgment with their parents, 374 Children of godly parents neerest the blessing, 482. Blessings upon children are the parents blessings, ib. 483. Children of God why so called, 1614. Children may smart for their Fathers sin, ib. How their parents strength, 1732. To have no children, or to be bereaved of children, a greater cross to the wicked then to the godly, and why, 1759 Children how the crown of old men, 1802. Children being punished are a punishment to parents, 1942, 1943. Children their corruption of nature and life, signified in their name, 2037. Worldly men breed their children vainly, 2039. Children why compared to a building. 2248

Chisiu the tenth month among the Jews, why so called. 788

Christ, his presence makes any place or condition comfortable, 232. That the heart of a believer is never at rest, but in Christ, 257 Christ confirmed the good Angels, 340. No stability in any estate out of Christ, ib. Christ is not only a principle, but a pattern of holiness, 360. Faith can live upon nothing but Christ, 537. Christ is the medium by which we see God, 801. Christ, his exceeding great love shewed in that a little before his death, he was so mindful of the Church and of his mother, while he was nailed to the cross, 1378. Christ is comfort cloathed in our flesh, 1402. They are most free, who serve Christ most, 1431. Two battels in which we cannot stand without the help of Christ, 1448. The great love of Christ to sinners, how it appears, 1534. God did not spare Christ when he stood in our place, 1544. Name of Christ, the essential form of prayer, 1560. To pray in the name of Christ hath three things in it, ib. Christ, why called the Son of man, 1585. Christ is a surety for his people, as well as an Advocate, 1606 Christ was, and is, most ready to undertake the cause of sinners, 1607. Christ, how not heard of the Father, 1792. Christ hath in him a sutable good to all our wants, 1746 That Christ liveth, implieth three things, 1864. Christ first and last, 1868. Christ an everlasting foundation. 2207

Churches, their happiness when freed from the the mixture of prophane and erroneous persons, 1428. &c. A double danger by mingling with such in Church fellowship, 1429 Church, how like a flock. 2038

Chusing, or to make choice, what, 1394

Chyrurgion, three necessary qualifications for him, either in a natural or mystical sence 452

Cisterns, what kind of cistern the creature is. 2239

Cities, their glory in seven things. 1801. Four Glories of the City of God. ibid.

Clay, that man was made of clay intimates three things. 953

Clean, how we are or are not clean in the sight of God, 1031. To be clean in our own eyes or in the eyes of men, not enough, 1032 Man how clean under a fourfold notion. 1415

Cleopatra, why she chose to die by putting Aspes to her breasts. 1957

Cloathing, put for all good things of this life, 2159

Cloud, what it is, and what it signifies in Scripture, 191. Cloud, what, 606. Dying man like a cloud, 607. Clouds and darkness, how God is said to dwell in them. 2192

Comfort comes only from God, 866. Yet a man in affliction may help on his own comforts or sorrows, 867. Comforts put off upon two grounds. 868

Comforters, miserable comforters who, shewed diverse wayes, 1497. Two special sorts of miserable comforters, 1498. Three things to be considered by those who undertake to be comforters, ib. To know how to comfort others is a special gift of God, 1499. Two great duties of a comforter, 1507. He that would comfort a distressed soul, must watch for advantages both from his speech and silence. 1512

Commands, God can make every word he speaks, a command, 778. Every creature must submit to his command, 779. God hath a negative voice of command to stay the motion of any creature. ibid.

Commendation with a But, a wound, 271. To commend our selves very unseemly, 837 Commendation of our selves not alwayes uncomly. 1107

Committing our cause to God, what it imports, 392. Committing our cause to God, a great ease to the soul, 394. A caution about committing our cause to God. 395

Communicating our cause and estate to God, three encouragements to do do so. 1205

Company of friends and children, a great mercy, 1516. Man a sociable creature, ib. Some company is a burden, 1517. The comfort of society consists in the suitableness of it, ib. None but good company in Heaven. ib.

Complainings, when sinful, 611. Great sufferings, put the best to their complaints, 2020 Complaints of two sorts, 2021. Best to complain to God, ib. Seven sorts of men unfit to receive complaints. ib. &c.

Concealing the word of God sinful, four wayes of concealing it. 524

Conception of children, the work and blessing of God. 209

Condemnation hath three things in it, which makes it very grievous, 913. It is the adjudging a man to be wicked, 914. Condemnation, self-condemnation strongest. 1394

Confession of sin; a general confession may be a sound one, 643. Divers ingredients of it, 644. The holiest have cause to confess sin, and why? 645. Sin not confessed gets strength three wayes, 646. It makes the soul very active about the remedies of sin, ibid.

Confidence, holy confidence what it is, 274 Confidence in God, settles the heart in all conditions, 279. Confidence, what it is, 1741. Wicked men full of confidence, ibid. Their confidence shall perish. ibid.

Conscience, the testimony of it the best ground of willingness to die, 524, 525. A good conscience to be kept rather then our lives, 841. God and conscience keep a record of our lives, 972, &c. Conscience how neglected, 1436. Conscience evil, its defect considered two wayes, ib. The offices of conscience, ib. Four sorts of evil conscience, ib. Guilty conscience thinks every man he meets his enemy, 1440. He is ever in danger, and under the curse, 1441. A twofold evil conscience shewed, 1563. A guilty conscience cannot endure plain words, 1599. Conscience hath divers works in man, 1728. Conscience a Hell to some. 1991

Consent to sin how proper to the wicked. 938

Consideration, what and how taken, 1058. How God considers, ib. &c. The want of it causeth us to be so little affected with great things. 2187

Consolation, it is easie with God to comfort those who are most disconsolate, 1401. Consolations of two sorts, ib. Consolation is the proper gift of God, 1402. God can turn all our crosses into comforts, 1403. It is happy for Saints that consolation is in the hand of God, shewed in four particulars, ib. Consolation rightly administred by man, is the consolation of God, 1404. To count the consolations of God small is a very great sin, shewed upon two grounds, ib. A man in affliction receives much consolation if he be heard. 2013, &c.

Contamino, whence derived. 1702

Contempt of others sinful. 1701

Contention, Man naturally loves it, 755. Man is apt to contend with God, 756. Especially about three things, 757. Man is unable to contend with God in any thing. ibid.

Contentment with our portion, whether much or little, whence it is, 1976. What content is, ibid. It is our duty to sit down quiet and content under the saddest dispensations of God. 2237

Correction, what it is, 440. The greatest afflictions upon the children of God, are but corrections, ib. How a correction differs from a judgment, ib. A child of God is happy under all corrections, 441. What it is to despise corrections, opened. 443

Counsel, in counselling others, we should shew our selves ready to follow the same counsel, 95. God turns the counsels of wicked men against themselves, 425. What counsel is? 26. Rash, hasty counsels are successless, 428 Counsel what it is, 1142. Good counsel is the support of a Kingdom, 1161. Counsel of God unmoveable, 1707. Counsel of the wicked, what, 2218. Counsels of wicked men not shined on by God, 922. Counsels of evil men disappointed, 1483. Though the counsels of evil men be disappointed, yet they will go on, three grounds of it. 1492, &c

Counsels of men turned upon themselves, 1716 God over-rules the counsels and purposes of men, 1719. Counsel, what it is, 2060. The counsel of the wicked foolish in the opinion of the godly, 2061. Poor mans counsel not heard. 2062

Counsellors, their power to hurt or do good among Kings and Princes, 221. The best and wisest counsel. 1838

Covetous man an insatiable gulf. 1444

Covetousness unsatiable, 1974, &c. Covetous persons are in straits when fullest. 1981

Cowardise of wicked men. 1986, 1989

Craft, wisdom of natural men is craft, 418 Craft alone, how sinful. 1394

Crafty men, who they are, 417. Crafty men Satan desires to get to his side and service, why? 419, &c. Crafty men full of hopes, 420. And industry, ib. They want power to effect what they devise, 421. It is a wonderful work of God, to stop the devices of crafty men, 422. In what sence any of their devices prosper, ib. How God takes the wise in their craftiness, 423. No craft of man can stand before the wisdom of God, 424

Creation, the work of creation shews God the author, 1132. The smallest creatures are of Gods making as well as the greatest. 1133

Creatures, the best creatures left to themselves, will undo themselves, 39. Creatures, a book wherein we may learn much of God and our selves, 609. Creatures cannot give us any comfort without God, 618. He can make any creature helpful to us, ib. Creatures teach us, 1127. They teach us four several lessons, ib. God can soon make any of them a scourge to punish man, 1149. The excess of any Creature is a judgment, 1150. We ought to consider the several excellencies of them, 2188. The creature leads us to God ib. &c. Creature can neither hold nor give out the good it hath, but by a word from God. 2239

Credit and esteem, especially from parts and gifts, much stood upon. 1700

Cross, good men are apt to have strange thoughts about the cross or sufferings, for, or from Christ. 1630

Crown, what it signifies in Scripture. 1801. &c.

Cruelty of some, so great, that they are not satisfied unless they vex the souls of their brethren. 1853

Cup of Consolation, what. 2013

Curse, what it is to curse, 369. The Saints in Scripture, rather prophesie of, then pray for curses upon the heads of wicked men, ib. No creature can stand before the curse of God. 372

Cursing, what is meant by cursing God in the heart, 31, 32, 33, &c. Cursing hath three things in it, 65. What, to curse God to his face, 67. What it is to curse a thing or person, 174. A curse contains all evil, as blessing all good, 175. Man is but the minister of any curse, 176. In what sense the irrational creatures are capable of a curse. 177

Custom in sin, what. 938

D

Dalilah, what it signifies. Folio 434

Damned under endless sufferings, one reason of it. 2151

Dark day is a sad day, 186. It stains the beauty of the creature. 191

Darkness divers sorts of it, 185, 1182, 1438, 1468, 1798, 2176. Darkness in the day time, what it signifies. 428

Davids holy ingenuity in choosing the Pestilence. 1733

Dauncing twofold. 2038

Day, what it is to regard a day, 187. How changed into night, 1650. Day, put alone in Scripture, signifies a time of judgment or of tryal. 1761

Dayes of God not like the dayes of man, 928 Dayes of man few in this life, considered divers wayes, 1312. Sin the shortner of mans dayes, 1313. Dayes of man determined by God, 1331, 1352. A twofold limit of mans dayes, 1334. Latter or last dayes, understood three wayes in Scripture. 1867

Dayes-man, who, 887. Why so called, ibid. Five things belonging to a Dayes-man, 888 A threefold posture of the dayes-man in laying on his hand, 889. No creature can be a dayes-man between God and man, only Christ is. 890, 891

Death, suddain death no argument of Gods disfavour, 88. Death may surprise us eating, therefore be holy in eating, 89. Death shakes us out of all our worldly cloathing, 104. It is sinful absolutely to wish our own death, though we are in pains more painful then death, 150. Satan perswades that death is an end of all troubles, 151. He would make men willing to die, when they are most unfit to die, ib. Death is the total rest of the godly only, 215. The outward rest of all, 216 In death we have a four-fold rest, ib. Death is the sleep of the body, 217, 1346. Why so called, 218. Their opinion refuted, who say the soul sleeps when the body dies, 217 No power or policy can prevent death, 224, 235. In death all are equal, ib. In what sence we may desire death, 241. Many afflictions to our feeling are worse then death, 243 Death finds some before they look for it, others look for death and cannot find it, 243 Not to die is a punishment to some in this life, and it will be an everlasting punishment to all the damned, ib. Death consumes us without noise, 348. Man cannot stand out the assaults of death, 349. We are subject to death every moment, ib. Death hastens upon us all the dayes we live, 350. What death is? 353. In death all natural and civil excellencies go away, ib. Greatest wisdom to prepare to die well, 354. How man is said to perish for ever when he dies, 350, 351. Few of the living observe how suddenly others do, or themselves may die, 352 Thoughts of death laid to the heart, are a good medicine for an evil heart, ib. An happy death, what, 483. A godly man is a volunteer in death, 485. When a godly man dies, he hath had his fill of living, 486. In what sence a man may be said to die before his time, and in the midst of his dayes, 487 Assurance of a better life, carries us through all the pains of death with comfort, 520. So doth the testimony of a good conscience, 524, &c. No evil in the death of a godly man, 533. Death the end of worldly comforts, 609. Sudden death, or to be slain suddenly, in what sence a mercy, 846. Man dies by statute, 955. Whether death was natural to man or no, ib. Death without order two wayes, 997. No natural return from it, 995. Death is a bitter thing, 1303. We should familiarize death to us by easie notions of it, 1346, 1592. Death, a great change, 1356. Death, to whom it is desirable and welcom, 1353. Death defaceth ceth the beauty of man, 1374. An untimely death the portion of a wicked man, 1482 Death inexorable, we must go with it, when it calls, 1591. A believer speaks familiarly of death, ib. Death haſtens, ſo ſhould we to be ready for death, 1592. Reſt in death, 1658. Nothing deſireable in death it ſelf, ib. The familiarity of ſome believers with death deſcribed, 1660. Corruption the portion of the dead, 1661. Death, very terrible, or the King of terrors, in a threefold conſideration, 1744. A threefold gradation of the terribleneſs of death, 1745. In two caſes death terrible to a godly man, ibid. Seven things may ſweeten death to Saints, 1746 A low and miſerable eſtate expreſſed by death in Scripture, 1859. Death of the wicked often eaſie and peaceable, 2044. Sloweſt death is moſt cruel. 2045. Death takes the ſtrong and healthy, 2092. Death doth not obſerve the laws of nature, 2093. Man is daily dying, 2125. 'Tis no new thing to dye, 2126. Death of Chriſt voluntary, 1864. Death could not hold Chriſt under its power, two reaſons of it, 1881, &c. Chriſt continued as little time under the power of death as could be to conſtitute the third day, 1882. Death prevaileth over our whole outward man, 1880, &c. Death of Chriſt the beſt argument to give us comfort in death, 2126. Death makes no difference among men, 2097. Death when and to whom ſudden. 2175

Dead know nothing of what is done in this life. 1376

Deceived, what it is to be deceived, 1473. Man is verp apt to be deceived, 1474. Mans aptneſs to be deceived ariſeth two wayes. ibid.

Deceivers and deceivings of two ſorts opened, 1153. There are three notorious deceivers, 1475. How the deceiver and the deceived are ſaid to belong to God, 1154. How God orders the deceiver and the deceived, ſhewed in four things, ib. 1155. Deceiver, he that publiſheth that which is falſe, though he had no intent to deceive, is yet a deceiver. 1599

Decrees of God are abſolute, 1335. This doth not diſingage us from the uſe of means, ibid. Decree of God carries all before it, 1471 Decree by man what; how he may be ſaid to decree a thing, and have it eſtabliſhed, 2270. The ſucceſs of our decrees or counſels is a great mercy, 2271. The ſucceſs of our decrees is from God, ibid. The decrees of godly men are under a promiſe of ſucceſs. 2272

Deep things of two ſorts, 1181. The deep things of God and men opened, ib. 1182

Degrees in grace. God hath ſervants of all ſizes, 50. We ought not to ſet up our reſt in a low or lower degree of grace, ib. Degrees of excellency and dignity in the creatures, God hath not levelled them. 2188

Deliberate ſinning. 1954

Deliberating neceſſary before ſpeaking. 1669

Delight in ſin worſe then the committing of ſin, 939. Delight conſiſteth in two things, 2258. Delight in God is our duty as well as our reward and comfort. ib. They who mourn for ſin, ſhall find delight in God, 2259 Delight in the Lord is the choiceſt mercy, 2260. Delight in the Lord exceeds all worldy delights in four things. ibid.

Deliverance is of the Lord, 455. The Lord can deliver as often as we can need deliverance, ib. God delivers his people from evil while they are in trouble. 457

Deſert, no rule of Gods proceedings. 2029

Deſire, it is not alwayes a mercy to have our deſires granted, 69. It is an affliction to nature, to be debar'd of what it deſires, though the thing deſired be deſtructive to nature, 243. True deſires produce endeavours, 244 Proportionable to the ſtrength of deſire, is the ſtrength of endeavour, ib. Deſires obtained fill with joy, 245. And with joy proportionable to thoſe deſires, 246. How God hath a deſire to man, 1362. Deſires when ſtrong are very importunate, 1835. Deſire runs out upon thoſe things which are ſuitable to our wants, 1845. Deſires of the wicked never full, 1975. When a wicked man hath his deſire, it ſhall not help him. 1977

Deſpair, a godly man may think his eſtate deſperate, 569. Deſpair is the cutting off of hope. 720

Devices, what. 417

Devils trade, what, 1489. Devil, how the firſtborn of death, 1737. How he is ſaid to have the power of death, ib. How wicked men come to be the children of the Devil, 2071 Devils not in fulneſs of torment yet. 42

Diſcontent at the dealings of God with us, a high point of folly, 364. Diſcontent at the afflictions of God, afflicts more then thoſe afflictions, 365. Diſcontent very ſinful. 1976

Diſcourteſies from thoſe who are near us go neareſt to our hearts. 1111

Diſcoveries made of deep evil counſels or ſinful practices three wayes. 1186

Diſeaſes. Satan can ſmite the body with diſeaſes if God permit him, 140. No diſeaſe can wear out the marks by which Chriſt knows us, 169. Diſeaſes called weapons. 1986, &c.

Diſgrace, a great affliction to dye under a blot of diſgrace. 1592, &c.

Diſputes kindle paſſion, 1698. Diſputers apt to make falſe inferences from the tenets of their oppoſers. 2191

Diſſimulation, what it is. 1565

Diviſion and diſunion, a great curſe. 193

Doctrine, no doctrine ought to be rejected till tried, 1137. Doctrine and divine teachings, why compared to and expreſſed by rain and raining. 2241

Doubling of words, what it imports. 2010

Dreams, the ſeveral ſorts, and cauſes of them, 619, 620. Our dreams are ordered by God, ib. Satan makes them terrible, 621. Dreams, how vaniſhing. 1939

Drinking iniquity like water; ſeven parallels between the drinking of iniquity, and the Drinking of water, 1421, &c. Drinking wrath what it imports. 2075, 2076

Dropping, why put for propheſying in Scripture. 1581

Drunkenneſs of two ſorts, 1197. A parallel in ſeven particulars between a man who is drunk, and one whoſe heart God taketh away. 1198, 1199

Dung of man worſe then that of other creatures. 1935

Duſt, ſhaking off the duſt of the feet, notes three things, 1550. To be raiſed from the duſt, or laid in the duſt, what it meaneth. 1551

Duties, dangerous to lean upon them, 725 How hypocrites duties fail, ib. How we muſt hold duties faſt, and how not. 726

To the Love diligently — 1271. —

E

Eagles flight, time compared to it. 861

Ear, two ears given man, and but one tongue, what it teacheth, 1018. Ear of God, what and how exact, 1136. Ear muſt do more then hear, it muſt try, 1137. What it is to hear with our ears, 1293. What it is to hear with our harveſt ears. 1294

Earneſt, what it is. 1603

Earth taken five wayes in Scripture, 851. How the earth is given to wicked men, ib. Men of the earth, why the wicked are ſo called, 2166

Earthly things ſlippery and uncertain, 1118 And all earthly things the gift of God two wayes, 1427. Earthly things continue not, two reaſons of it, 1467. Earthly things the beſt of them may ſoon be taken from us. 1802

Earth-quake the force of it, 774. The cauſe of it. ibid.

Eaſt-wind, why it ſignifies paſſion in man. 1387

Eccliſe of the Sun, when Chriſt ſuffered, was miraculous in two reſpects. 777

Egg, white of an egg what it emblems. 512

Egypt, called Rahab in Scripture, and why, 808

Elect perſons, how, impoſſible they ſhould be deceived. 1475

Election, man muſt not elect or chuſe perſons as God doth, 1032, &c. Election the quarrellings of mans heart about it, 2082. The decree of election is an unmovable foundation. 2206

Emims, why ſo called. 1992

Empty, a perſon may be ſent away empty in a threefold ſence. 2169, &c

Encreaſe from God, 1188. God encreaſeth a Nation three [illegible]es. ibid.

End, we ſhould reſolve upon our end, before we undertake any action, 165. A wiſe man propoſes ſutable ends, ib. Man may propoſe his end, but he cannot reach it, ib. End two wayes taken, 532. An evil heart is never ſetled either about its way or end, 1083 Our end will be ſuch as our way is, 1480 End and rule to be enquired into before every action. 1905

Enemy who, 1295. God acts toward ſome of his neareſt friends as if they were his enemies, ib. God may account thoſe he loves as enemies, 1808, &c. God hath enemies of two ſorts, 1809. To be an enemy to God is a moſt dangerous condition, ib. We ſhall ſurely prevail over our enemies, if they be Gods enemies, 1810. Enemies, in what ſence we may not or may rejoyce in their fall, 2223, 2224

Enmity everlaſting between the godly and the wicked. 1632

Envy, what it is, 363, 1523. Envy a killing paſſion, 363, &c. Envy a ſign of folly. 365

Error, he that is ſhewed his error, ſhould ſit down convinc'd, 561. He is in a fair way to truth, who acknowledges he may err, 563 What is properly called an error, as diſtinct from hereſie, ib. Upon what terms an error is to be left, ib. The publiſhing of it ſerves the ends of God, 1157. Why God ſuffers many to be ſeduced by error, ib. &c. We may be guilty of errors by conſequence though we do not hold them, 1391. They who maintain error among men, ſhall not find favour with God, 1612. Error, the daughter of ignorance, 1779. The beſt of men, godly men are ſubject to error, ib. He that judgeth himſelf to be in the truth ſhould not leave it, becauſe others call it error, 1781 Many call that an error, which they cannot prove to be one, ib. Man is apt to magnifie himſelf over thoſe who are fallen into an error, 1782. That it is very ſinful to do ſo ſhewed, 1784. Good men may err and continue long in an error, 2128. Error, very binding upon the conſcience as well as truth 2180. Hard to judge which is worſe, unſetledneſs in truth, or tenaciouſneſs in [illegible]

ror, ib. The way of error old. 2199
Eschewing evil, more then the not committing of evil, 8. A godly man doth not only forbear but eschew sin, all sin, and all the occasions of sin. 11
Eternity, how the longest and the shortest, 623 Eternity is Gods day, 929. Difference between eternity, eviternity, and time, 930 God hath time enough to do his work in. ibid.
Everlasting, things so called two wayes. 1397
Evil of sin. Why sin called evil, 8. Satan would perswade us to ease our selves of troublesom evils, by committing sinful evils, 150. Affliction in what sence called evil, 154. Evil of punishment or affliction, considered as coming from God, may be born with more quietness, 155. Because we receive all good from God, it is equal that we should patiently bear evil, 156. Evils of body or mind, when they may be said to be incurable, 1511 It makes that which is evil or bad worse, when we account it better then it is. 1935
Evil-doers who, 741. God will not help such, ib. How God concurs with evil-doers and how not, 742, 743. God resists them, a twofold resistance. ib.
Exaltation of Christ threefold. 1876, &c.
Example of God and Christ, how our rule, 360, &c. The examples of others falling into sin, or under punishment, should be our warnings, 689. Examples of two sorts in Scripture, 1619. Examples of punishment upon sinners ought to be marked, 2200. Examples of two sorts, ib. God makes wicked men examples. 2221
Excellency of God, 1231. What that is shewed three wayes, 1233, &c. The excellency of God should overaw the spirit of man, 1235 What the opening of the eye implies in Scripture, 1321
Exhortation a duty, 392. It must be joyned with reproof, ib. The best Saints on earth may need brotherly Exhortations, 393. Exhortations must be managed with meekness. ib.
Experience the mistress of truth, 366. Experience works hope, 435. Experience teacheth wicked men, they will not know till they feel. 2073
Extasie twofold. 2226
Eye, how the sight of the eye wounds the heart, either with sin or sorrow, 211. Also that the sight of the eye affects the heart with joy, 212. Eyes of God what, 923. Seven differences between the eyes of God and man, 924. As man sees, so much of man is seen at his eye, 1408. Two sins very visible in the eye, 1409. A look of the eye, how powerful, 1523. Eyes, high or low, note pride or humility. 2276
Ezekiel, why so often called Son of man. 1585

F

Face of God, what, Folio 71. Faces of Judges covered, what it imports, 854. Face put for anger, &c. why, 865. Lifting up the face notes three things, 1079. Four things are chiefly seen in the Face, ib. What it is to lift up the face without spot, 1080, &c. Face of God, what, 1289. Face of God seen in his life, and how, 1290. Face of God seen chiefly in three things, 1291. Six grounds of Gods hiding his face, 1292. The hiding of Gods face a great affliction, 1293. Lifting up the face, what it imports in Scripture, 2261. Face cast down three wayes. ib.
Faith ought to be great, because God can do great things, 401. We must believe not only what we cannot see, but what we cannot understand, 403. Faith should encrease in us, when God works wonders for us, 406 Faith must have somewhat to lean upon, 723. Faith necessary in prayer, 824. Faith in prayer doth not deserve an answer though it get one, 825. Faith hath its decayes, 826 Faith sees God good to us and our friend, when we receive nothing but frowns and evil from him, 1253, &c. Faith propheses, 1362. Want of Faith in times of affliction, how grievous, 1439. The great benefits of faith in such a state, ib. He that hath no faith knows not whither to go for the supply of any want, 1445. Faith, how necessary in prayer, 1562. Faith must be openly professed when we are called thereunto, 1858 Open profession of our faith a support in affliction, 1859. Faith will venture and trust in the worst condition, 1730, &c. Man is hardly brought to believe that God will pour out wrath upon sinners, 1765, &c. A threefold work of faith, 1863. Faith triumphs over all difficulties, 1883. We cannot please God without faith, yet he may be served without faith, 2005. Faith, the reflect act of it most sweet. 2258
Fall, a three-fold fall in Scripture. 260
Family, To order a family well, is a great point of wisdom, 481. A family well ordered, is usually a prosperous family, ibid. The governor of a family is to take care that sin abides not in his family. 1078
Famine, a very sore judgment, the effect of it, 457, 458. How many wayes the Lord redeems from famine. 458
Father, a wicked Father brings a curse upon his Children, 1484. Fathers provoking their Children, very dangerous, 1601. In what sence no man is to be called Father. 1701
Fatherless, who, 570. Such in a sad condition, 571. A grievous sin to oppress them, ib. Fatherless and widdow, who in Scripture, 2170. How sinful to wrong them. 2172
Fatness, wicked men described by it. 1461
Favour of God makes our worst outward troubles comfortable, 187. The blessing of the creature depends wholly on the favour and respect which God shews. ib. &c.
Fear of God taken two wayes, both described, 7. Morall honesty without the fear of God, commends us not to God, 10. Fear contains every grace, ib. Fear keeps the life clean, ib. What it is to fear God for nought, 51, &c. Whether it be lawful in times of comfort to fear troubles, 252. Divers sorts of fear, ib. &c. To fear a fear, what it imports, ib. Holy wisdom bids us fear, so as to prepare for evil in our best dayes, 253. The more we thus fear, the less we shall feel troubles, 254. Fear natural what, 313, 314. It is natural for man to fear at the appearances of God, and why, ib. Four effects or symptoms of natural fear, 314, 315. It is a strong passion, 317. From what kind of fear God exempts his people in times of danger, 465. Holy fear what it is, 273. They who have most holy fear in times of peace, shall have most confidence in times of trouble, 277. It keeps the heart and life holy, 279 Fear of God ever joyned with love to our brethren, 541, 542. Fear taken two wayes, 898. Extream fear hinders speech, ib. Fear, good and bad, 1084. To get free from sin is the way to get free from fear, ib. To be free from the fear of evil, is better then to be free from evil, ib. Divine fear caused three wayes, 1236. God is to be dreaded, ib. Fear of two sorts, 1390. To cast off the fear of God is highest wickedness, ib. Holy fear like a Porter at the door, 1392, &c. Natural fear what it is, 1434. Pannick fear, ib. A wicked man most subject to vexing fear, 1434, &c. Three sorts of fear, 1447 Fear of evil worse then evil, ib. Distracting fear is the portion of the wicked, ib. We may use arguments from fear to dissuade from sin, 1913. Holy fear hath a threefold effect, 1914. Fear taken two wayes, 2143 Fear makes men cruel, and do unjust things as well as hope, 2144, &c. Fear may be a just ground of doing Justice, 2145 Fear of two sorts, 2175. Sudden fear surprizeth secure sinners. ibid.
Fearful persons cannot be helpful. 553
Feasting is lawful, 20. Seven rules given about feasting, 20, 21. Feastings anciently in the night. 194
Feet, slipping with the feet implies two things in Scripture. 1117
Fellow-feeling of others afflictions, a duty, 497. It adds to a mans affliction, when others have no feeling of it, 498. We cannot be truly sensible of the afflictions of others, till we throughly weigh them, ib. he that hath not been afflicted, seldom feels the afflictions of others. 498
Finger of God, what it signifies in Scripture. 1844, &c.
Fire of God, why so called, 81. How taken in Scripture, 1486. Three reasons why the judgments of God are called fire, ib. Fire not blown, what it is; nine apprehensions about it, 1994, &c. Fire put to signifie any Judgment, 2231. There is a different fire for the righteous and the wicked, ib. How God is a consuming fire in reference to the godly. 2232
First-born of death, what or who; seven opinions about it opened, 1737, &c. The priviledges of the first-born, 1738. How believers are called the Congregation of the first-born, ib. How Christ is called the first-born from the dead, and of every creature. 1739
Flame, taken two wayes. 1469
Flattery, how God may be said to be flattered, 1220. Man is flattered by three, 1228 Flattery, hath a force in it, 1612. Flattery is a kind of language by it self, ib. An ordinary way of flattering sick friends. 1613. Two wayes of flattering men, ib. How God may be said to be flattered, ibid. Flattery a very great sin, 1614. Especially flattery in spiritual things. 1615
Flatterers prove most hateful at last to those whom they have flattered. ibid.
Flight, an argument of guilt. 1732
Flood, the Judgments of God compared to it, and why. 2204
Flower, three excellencies of a flower. 1317
Fool and wicked the same, 152. Low thoughts of God, and the works of his providence, argue the greatest folly, 153. Sin the greatest folly, ib. Who, and what a fool is, 362 Every wicked man is a fool, 364, 366. A fool ever worst when he is at ease, 367. Fools most burdensom when they speak or are angry. 2015
Forgetfulness of God consists in four things, 714, 715. Hypocrites are forgetters of God, ib. To forget God, is a very great sin, ib. Forgetfulness of God is a mother sin, 716 Forgetfulness of three sorts, 864. Some things can hardly be forgotten, others as hardly remembred, 864, &c. Forgetfulness of past evils implieth two things, 1085. A twofold twofold forgetfulneſs deſcribed, ib. In what ſence we muſt not only forgive but forget injuries, 1086. How God is ſaid to forget the ſins which he pardoneth, ib. Forgetfulneſs is the cure of all our ſorrows. ib.

Forgiveneſs, God ready to forgive. 1735

Foundation is the ſtrength of the building, 344 Foundation, figuratively taken, what, 2204 2205. Everlaſting foundation, what, 2206 The ſtrongeſt foundations which the wicked lay, are quickly overthrown by God, ib. A righteous man hath two foundations which ſhall never fail. ib. &c.

Friend, unkindneſs from a friend troubles moſt, 144. A friend who, 160. It is an act of true friendſhip, to mourn with and comfort our afflicted friends, 162. An unfaithful friend fails us moſt, when we have moſt need of him, 553, 554. A faithful friend, who, 554 The beſt of them may prove unfriendly, 1580. Friend taken two wayes, 1586. The alienation of friends from us, is a great encreaſe of our trouble in times of trouble, 1823. The moſt profeſſed friends may prove unſteady, 1824. A godly man may fail as a friend, ib. Inward friends who, 1838 Some friends ſhould have more love then others, 1639. The diſſention of friends many times hotter then that of brethren, the ground of it, ib. Beſt friends may turn enemies, ib. Friend how nearer then a brother, ib. Friendſhip; adverſity is the touchſtone of it, 1822. True and ſtrong love or friendſhip hath five things in it, ib. Friendſhip breaks uſually upon two rocks, 1824 Four concluſions about our friendſhip with men, 1825, &c. What friendſhip is. 1844

Froward men who they are. 426

Fulneſs, twofold, which wicked men uſually have before their ruine. 1983

Funerals, men wicked in their lives, have glorious funerals. 2120, &c.

G

Gain will make ſome do any thing. Folio 204

Gall of Aſps how poyſonous. 1957

Garments, renting of garments in what caſes uſed, 92. Garments teſtifie mans perfidiouſneſs againſt God. 544

Gehenna, why it ſignifies Hell. 1622

Geſtures, outward geſtures in prayer very ſpeaking, a caution about them. 1074

Ghoſt, giving up the ghoſt, what it imports. 212

Giants and infants are expreſſed by a word coming from the ſame root in the Hebrew, 226. To run on like a Giant, what, 1546. Two reaſons why Giants are called Nephilim in the Hebrew. ibid.

Gift, what it is, 105. Every outward as well as ſpiritual good thing, is Gods gift, ib. &c. God gives no more then we get honeſtly, 106. That God gives all, deſtroyes four Monſters at once, two in the rich, two in the poor, 107, &c. That the Lord gives, ſhould make us willing to give to the Lord, 108 Gifts not to be truſted to, 724. God gives to men two wayes, 851. Gifts of five ſorts, 1487. A gift and a bribe ſignified by one word in the Hebrew, and why. ibid.

Girdle and girding with it, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 1666. The ſame word ſignifies both a girdle and ſtrength, why. 1180

Glory of God promoted, promotes the good of man, 586. Glory of three ſorts, 1799 Earthly glory taken two wayes, ib. In glory we ſhall have perpetual aſſurance of the favour of God, 1891. Glorying, man apt to do it in worldly things. 1971

Glorifie, in what ſence man may be ſaid to glorifie God. 2133

Gnaſhing of the teeth aſcribed to men, notes four things. 1523

God can eaſily deſtroy his enemies, ſhewed in particulars, 294. He can do it ſuddenly, 295 Secretly, ib. Unavoidably, ib. Man is not able to bear the preſence of God, 315. Reaſons why men tremble and fear at any greater manifeſtations of Gods power or preſence, 314. Man naturally prefers himſelf before God, 324. It is high preſumption for the beſt of men to compare with God, ibid. God in himſelf is moſt juſt and pure, 325 Holieſt men compared with God are unholy, ib. God is ſo juſt and pure in himſelf, that he can do no wrong to any creature, 326. Objections againſt this, anſwered, 327, 328 It cannot be ill with him, with whom God is, 329. To conſider God in his greatneſs, is an excellent means to humble man, 396, &c. The conſideration of Gods greatneſs, ſhould provoke us to ſeek him, 397. God can do great things as eaſily as the ſmalleſt things, 400. God can do the ſame things as often as he pleaſeth, 407. God appears ſometimes as an enemy to his beſt friends, 501, 655. When God appears an enemy man cannot bear it, ib. Beſt to turn to God for comfort in diſtreſs, 603. The beſt way for man to get his heart humbled, is to look up to the holineſs of God, 754. God is inviſible and incomprehenſible, 800. As God is, ſo he works above man, 881. The conſideration that God is above man, ſhould humble man, 822. The unevenneſs of mans acting towards God, ariſes from thoughts of his evenneſs with God, ib. 883. Man was made in the image of God, but God is not in the image of man, 884. Man ſhould take heed of meaſuring God eſpecially in three things, 885. Man cannot contend with God, ſhewed in ſeven things, 886. Why it is ſo fearful to fall into the hands of God, 891, &c. Preſence of God both joyful and terrible, 896, &c. Man cannot bear the anger of God, 897 God knows the ſtate of every man 935. God knoweth all things, in and of himſelf, 936 God, how he may, how he cannot be found, 1046. The attributes of God are eſſential to God, 1047. God is unſearchable, ib. 1048 How God is every where preſent, 1051 God is beyond all creatures, 1052. All changes are from God, 1055. God being our friend, we need not care who is our enemy, 1142. What God will do he can do, 1144 How God hath a hand in the errors and wandrings of men, 1195. Reaſoning with God how and when, 1204. Our undue actings or ſpeakings for God ariſe from our undue apprehenſions of God, 1236. The loſs of Gods favourable preſence is the greateſt loſs, 1290, &c. How God ſhews himſelf to us, 1281. God appears to his ſometimes in majeſty only, and not in mercy, 1282. The enjoyment of God is the happineſs of man ſhewed in four things, 1294. The cleaneſt creatures are unclean before God, 1418. The hand ſtretcht out againſt God three wayes, 1451. That it is a fooliſh as well as a ſinful thing to oppoſe God, ſhewed three wayes, 1456, &c. God is in Heaven in a ſpecial manner, 1576. God ſhould not only be our refuge, but our choice, 1582. God expreſſed by four names in Scripture, ſhewing a fourfold excellency in him, 2047. Wicked men cannot abide the preſence of God, 2046, 2048 How God is near the worſt of men, 2049 To be weary of God the higheſt argument of an evil heart, ib. Wicked men have low and ſlight thoughts of God, 2054. God the author of mans temporal good, and that God is jealous of this honour, 2059, &c. God cannot be taught, &c. vid. Teaching. Works of God, vid. Works. God abſolutely independent and perfect in himſelf, 2132 To think of God on high, the beſt way to quiet our ſouls in any trouble here below, 2182. How God is every where, 2185, &c. Carnal men frame conceptions of God like themſelves, 2193. A wrong notion of the true God is the ſetting up of a falſe God, 2194. The preſence of God ſlighted by carnal men, the only joy of Saints, 2210, &c. God hath not given the worſt of men any cauſe to be weary of him, 2214. God doth good to them that are evil, two reaſons of it, 2215. God is to be acknowledged as the fountain of all good to us, 2216. God ready to be at peace with ſinners, 2238. God infinitely better to the ſoul then all other things, 2239. God is the defence of his people, 2254 God is the riches, the gold and ſilver of his people. ibid.

Gods, falſe Gods, how they are famiſhed. 1519

Godly man, the moſt conſiderable object in the world, 45. Such are moſt aimed at, and aſſaulted by Satan, ib. A godly man will not let nature work alone, 99. He acquits God in all his dealings with him, 104. A godly man can never be in ſo ill a condition, but God hath uſe of his life, 133. The Godly can be in no condition wherein God doth not love them, 371. A godly man hath help within him, when all worldly help fails, 537. A godly man hath a light within him in the greateſt outward darkneſs, ib. Godly men ſhall never be caſt away, 738, 739 How God may be ſaid to caſt his people away, ib. God highly honours them, 749 A godly man exalts God, while God is caſting him down, 796. Godly men are a ſafety and a ſupport to the places where they live 808. Yet ſometimes God will not be entreated by the godly, ib. A godly man may put the worſt caſes to himſelf, 594. Godly may not pleaſed with the way of the wicked though he proſper in it, 2061. Godly and wicked in ſome things like and unlike in the life, ſhall be in all things unlike in the next life, 2098. Godly and the wicked have quite contrary both deſires and fears, 2219, 2221 A godly man is one of Gods acquaintance 2237. He ſhall be guided the right way and bleſſed in his way, 2273, &c. He ſhall have comfort in his way, 2274. A godly man is a common good, 2278. Godly men ſave others three wayes. ib. 227

Godlineſs hath the promiſes of this life perfomed to it, 17. Time ſpent in duties of godlineſs, no hinderance to our calling, 18. Godlineſs is truly profitable, 2137. Godlineſs the neareſt way to worldly gain. 22

Gold and Silver how proper and neceſſary for Princes, 223. Gold and Silver how a defence, and why put for all riches, 2251, 2 How Gold is to be laid up in the duſt, 22 The natural place of Gold ſhould abate deſires after it. ib

Good and evil, how alike from the hand of God 155. Good done is a reproach to us, when we do the contrary evil, 272. Good and bad alike dealt with by God in outward things 845. Three ſorts of good things, 2042. Three things of the world called our goods in threefold conſideration.

Goodneſs of God. Sin hath by ſo much greater evil in it, as it is committed aga the greater goodneſs. 2215, &c.

Goſpel-times, why called the laſt or latter dayes. 1867
Government of God over the world moſt exact. 2084
Grace preſerves it ſelf pure among the impure, 6. Grace the beſt bleſſing, 9. &c. Where one grace is every grace is, ib. Holy practiſe makes grace viſible, 21. It increaſes by oppoſition, 119. Grace and the favour of God are ſweet to us when all other things are bitter and burdenſom, 239. Falſe grace fails when we have moſt need of it, 275. Our graces ſhould be made viſible in our actions, 278. How failings in grace conſiſt with ſincerity, 280. Grace muſt not be truſted to. We may make Idols of our own graces, 537. Grace acts alwayes like it ſelf, but a gracious man doth not, 875 Grace exerciſed fits us for the receiving of more grace, 1070. Grace eſtabliſheth the heart, 1082. Grace is of an increaſing nature, 1636. It increaſeth in times of trouble, 1637. Grace, ſhadowed in Scripture by the moſt excellent things, 1702. Grace put for glory, 1889. Grace in the heart is the root of the matter. 1909, 1910
Graſs of the field, how man is compared to it. 482
Graves and Sepulchres called deſolate places, 222. Care and coſt anciently beſtowed in building of them, ib. Why called deſolate places, ib. Grave called a houſe, 224. Much treaſure formerly put in graves, ib. Some take more care for their graves and ſepulchres, then they do for their ſouls, 226 Grave a ſure hiding place, 1347. Grave, in what ſence no returning from it, 1591. We had need ſee all our work done, and well done, before we go thither, 1592. Diſcourſes of the grave very ſutable for ſick men, 1597. Some as ready for the grave as the grave is for them, ib. Why the grave is called a houſe, 1653. The grave called darkneſs in a double reſpect, ib. It is a mercy when the body is not diſturbed in the grave. 2122, &c.
Greatneſs of Gods works, 399. The leaſt works of God, have a greatneſs in them, becauſe they are his, ib. A twofold greatneſs in the works of God. 400
Grimneſs, what it ſignifies in Scripture. 1483
Groping at noon day, what it imports. 428
Guilt, till guilt be removed, fear will not, 871 Guilt of ſin wearieth the ſoul. 902

H

Hallalujah, what it ſignifies, where firſt uſed in the Scripture of the Old and New Teſtament. Folio 336 hand, work of the hands may be applied to any buſineſs, though a work of the head, 58 To put forth the hand, what it means, 61 Hand of God what it ſignifies, 62, 945, 1279. Either mediate or immediate, ib. To put into the hand, what it notes, 68. Hand of God, how ſaid to be looſned, 519. If God ſtretch out his hand of power, all creatures are helpt or deſtroyed by it, 520. Putting forth the hand notes three things in Scripture, 741. Hand put for outward converſation or action, 877. Waſhing hands an emblem of freedom from guilt, ibid. Laying out of the hand, what it ſignifies, 888 Hands how aſcribed to God, his hand implies two things, 918, &c. Sin of the hand, what properly, 1075. The hand muſt be cleanſed as well as the heart, ib. Hand of God working, what it imports in Scripture, 1132. To put our life in our hand, what it imports, 1247. Hand, how taken in Scripture, 1450. Stretching out the hand imports four things, ib. 1451. The hand of a good man, how it is ſaid to be green, 1483 Clean hands, what it imports, 1636. They who have clean hearts, will have clean hands too, ibid. Striking of hands, what it ſignifies, 1604. Hand of God taken two wayes in Scripture, 1844. It is dreadful to fall into the hand of God. 1848. Hands hanging down, what meant by them, 267. Weakneſs of the hands ariſes four wayes, ib. Stretching forth of the hands imports three things in Scripture, 1072. It hath four ſignifications in prayer, 1073 Clapping the hands for three cauſes, 1979 Pureneſs of hands, what, 2277
Happineſs, what it is, 438. Many opinions about happineſs, and whence they aroſe, ib. Why the Hebrew word for happineſs is in the plural number, ib. Happineſs ariſeth from our viſion of God in glory four wayes. 1890
Hardneſs of heart oppoſed both to repentance and pity. 1846, &c.
Hardning the heart, what, 760. A hardning the heart to do either good or evil, 761 The heart hardned appears in ſix things, ib. A threefold hardneſs of heart, 762. Man hardens himſelf againſt God upon four grounds, ib. Nine degrees or ſteps of hardneſs of heart, 763. None ever proſpered by hardning themſelves againſt God, 764 A hard heart is Satans cuſhion. ib.
Harpocrates, the Egyptian Idol, an emblem of ſilence. 2026
Haſt twofold, 1924. 'Tis good to make haſt in doing good, ib. &c. We ſhould make haſt to recover any from ſin or error. 1925
Hatred taken two wayes, 747. Wicked men haters of the righteous. 750
Head, lifting up of the head, what it imports in Scripture. 975, &c.
Health, a great bleſſing, 140. Yet quickly blaſted. ibid.
Hearing is more then a work of ſenſe, 488 Man counts it a diſhonour not to be heard, 1216, 1271. Extraordinary matters muſt not be heard with ordinary attention, 1271 It is uſeful to ſtir up hearers to attention. ib. To hear well, requires a compoſed ſpirit, 1669. Hearing put for anſwering, 1790 To hear well, no eaſie matter. 2011. Hearing conſidered as a threefold work, ib. Spiritual hearing hath a fourfold work in it. ib.
Hearkning is more then hearing. 823
Heart muſt be eſpecially looked to, 34. Man can but gueſs at the heart of another, ib. The heart continually evil, 35. Satan can but gueſs at the heart, 67. A judiciary hard heart, is the greateſt judgment on this ſide hell, 330 Setting the heart upon any thing magnifies it, 631. Setting the heart, notes four things, 633, &c. Our duty to ſet our hearts upon God 634. Heart of man, full of changes, 638 The beſt repoſitory for truth, 710. What it ſignifies in Scripture, 1067. How it is to be prepared for God, 1068. God muſt have the heart, 1069. The heart is the worſt part of man till it be mended, and then it is the beſt, ib. While our hearts are not right no marvel if things go wrong with us, 1070. Heart put for underſtanding and courage, 1107 To take away the heart ſignifies three things, 1191. When we will not give God our hearts he takes them away, 1192. When the heart is diſordered the whole man is out of order, 1195. They who undertake to judge the heart take upon them the place of God, 1218. An evil heart is a bad tutor, 1406. The heart is too hard for the whole man, 1407. How the heart carries the man away, ib. The heart ſtrengthens and hardens it ſelf againſt God, and how, 1455 The heart very deceitful in a threefold reference, 1475. Heart, as a Shop where ſin is framed, 1491. The opening and ſhutting of the heart is the work of God, 1609. The vanity of ſuch as ſay they have good hearts, when their wayes are evil, 1636. Heart lift up to Heaven, the work of Grace, 2182 Laying up the word in the heart, hath a twofold oppoſition, 2243. The heart of man is the Ark where the Word of God muſt be laid up, 2244. Truth in the heart better to us then truth in the book, 2245 Heart of man makes more falſe Gods then his hand ever made. 2194
Heathens confined their gods to certain places. 2187
Heaven, the various acceptations of it in Scripture, 782, 783. Heaven is a building of three ſtories, ib. Heaven taken three wayes, 1343. In what ſence the heavens ſhall be no more after the reſurrection, divers opinions about it, 1344. Heavens, how they are unclean, 1417. Heaven is not every where, 1577. Three Heavens ſpoken of in Scripture, 1578. Heaven is higheſt in Scripture, four deductions from the highneſs of Heaven, ib. To mount up to heaven notes four things, 1932. Heaven, how it reveals the ſin of man, 1997, &c. Heaven is the place of Gods ſpecial reſidence, 2182. Two inferences given from it. ib. &c.
Hedge, what it imports, when God makes a hedge about a man, 54. Job had a threefold hedge, 55. There is a hedge of affliction, and a hedge of protection. 248
Heel, what it ſignifies in Scripture. 1722
Help given by God, twofold. 742
Hereſie, three things concur to make an hereſie. 563
Hiding, of two ſorts, 1426. Hiding the word of two ſorts, 2244. Three ends of hiding the word in the heart. ib. &c.
High, God can ſet us high and ſafe. 415
Higheſt of men ſhall be judged by God. 2068
Hills from the beginning, 1396. It is uſual in Scripture to ſet that forth by the Hills, which is of greateſt antiquity. ib.
Hirelings, who, 585. His eye upon his wages more then upon his work. 589
Holineſs, holieſt perſons do not alwayes keep the ſame degree of holineſs, 183. Holineſs better then peace in our dwellings, 479, 481 What the holineſs of the creature is, 527 We muſt go to God for holineſs, 528. To deſpiſe holineſs, is to deſpiſe God, 529. Holineſs makes us truly honourable, 1098. Holineſs is diſgraced and mockt by unholy men, 1114. And they who are moſt holy are moſt diſgraced, 1115. No created holineſs ſtable and perfect in it ſelf, 1416. In what holineſs conſiſts, 1558. Holineſs, the Lord takes pleaſure in it, three reaſons why, 2140, &c. Why we ſhould be every where holy, 2186. Holineſs hath boldneſs with God. 2262
Holy One, God is called the holy One in five reſpects, 526. The excellency of the holineſs of God, above that in men or Angels, ſhewed divers wayes, ib. 527. None are fit for communion with God, but holy perſons. 529
Holy perſons fit for holy duties, 690. It is not contrary to free grace, to ſay we muſt be holy, if we would be heard. 691

Honesty, what we get honestly, we can loose patiently. 106

Honour, God will honour them who honour him, 117. What it is to honour God or man, 174. Honour no shelter against the wrath of God, 1170, &c. They who abuse their honour shall receive contempt, 1180 A threefold honour arising to God by the fall of the wicked. 2225

Hope, the want of that afflicts us most, which we hope for most, 206. A hopeless condition is the worst condition, 207. Hope, what it is to hope, 275. Hope taken two wayes, 434 The people of God have hope in the worst times, ib. It is no vain thing to hope in God, 435. Experience breeds hope, ib. Hope, is better to the people of God, then all their possessions, ibid. Hope that troubles will end, supports the heart in bearing present troubles, 522. Hope of more is better then enjoyment of much, 1093. Hope in God is the settlement of the soul, ib. The condition of a godly man is alwayes hopeful, ib. Hopes of wicked men are dying and decaying, 1101, 1102. Whose hope and what hope may be destroyed, 1372. Hope puts men on to action, though they have been often disappointed, 1493. A good man may give up all his worldly hopes, 1658. Hope considered two wayes, 1662. A twofold object of hope, ib. Hope of the righteous strong, 1741. Hope about worldly things may soon be gone, 1805. The worldlings hope cut short, 1965 The wicked when fullest of hope, then nearest destruction, 1983. Hopes deceived, trouble us more then wants, 550. Deceived hopes fill with shame, 551. Hope the last refuge, 600. A godly mans hope may lie prostrate. ibid.

Hopeless, to be so is the worst condition, 718 Where hope faileth, endeavour faileth also. 875

Horn, it imports two things in Scripture, 1550 Why strength is signified by the Horn. ibid.

Hornets, what meant by them in Scripture. 1729

Horsleach, the embleme of covetous desire. 1975

Humble, the apprehension of Gods great goodness, humbles man, 630. Humble persons of two sorts, 2276. Humble persons under the special care of God. ibid.

Humiliation must encrease as afflictions either personal or publick do encrease, 141, &c. Outward humiliation is a duty, when the hand of God is upon us. 1552

Humility, a godly mans thoughts are lowest of himself, 812. The more holiness any man hath, the more humility he hath. 976

Husbands bitterness to their Wives, how unbecoming. 1600

Hypocrites profession, grounded upon hope to gain by it, 276. They cannot hold out in profession, because they want an inward principle, 630. Hypocrites compared to a rush in six particulars, 713, 714. What an hypocrite is, 717. Two sorts of hypocrites, ib. They are filthy, they may be full of hopes, their hopes will deceive them, 718. He shall loath himself, 719. His whole course is nothing but foolishness, ib. He shall be hopeless, 720. His hope like a spiders web, shewed in five things, 721, 722. He hath two houses, 723. His hopes may be very strong, 725. He hath three witnesses, ibid. All he trusts to shall fail, ib. He may abound in outward blessings, 729. They do all to be seen, ib. They may endure persecution a while, ib. They care not whom they wrong, so they may thrive, 631. They are often destroyed in the height of their prosperity, 632 They shall be forgotten or remembred with disgrace, 734. He may have much joy, 735 His joy is most from outward things, ib. His joy is short, 736. He hath no right to come before God, nor acceptance with him, 1288 Four expressions in Scripture, gradually shewing the rejection of hypocrites in the life to come, 1289. Hypocrites are the worst sort of wicked men, ib. Hypocrite is under a curse, 1485. The fashion of an Hypocrite, 1599. Hypocrite, his joy in what, 1930. He may have joy about spiritual things. 1931

Hypocrisie paints the face as well as pride, 413 Hypocrisie and pride desire nothing so much as to be seen. 1936

I

Idol, the same word in the Hebrew signifies sorrow and an Idol, two reasons of it, 869 Idols, why called Emims. 896

Idols, how called new, or near Gods. 1651

Idolaters bring God in their hands. 1126

Jews, how God brought the curse which they wished upon their own heads. 1570

Ignorance, how God is said to wink at times of ignorance, 188. Ignorance, or not knowing of God, fourfold, 1763. Wickedness and ignorance go together 1764. Ignorance and error near a kin, ignorance the mother of two very uncomely daughters, 1779. Affected ignorance what, 2050. Ignorance of three sorts. 2052

Imitation, God is not to be imitated in all things, 1851. Childrens imitation of their parents sin, what it doth. 2071

Immortality threefold. 956

Impatience is a charging of God with folly. 114

Impenitency under sin committed, worse then the sin committed. 2151

Imprecations, of two sorts, 1567, &c. We may in some cases use imprecations, 1568 Two grounds of them, ib. Four rules limiting the use of imprecations, 1569. Divers dreadful examples of such as have used imprecations rashly and falsly. 1570

Imprisonment, when a cruelty. 2156

Ingemination of words in Scripture very emphatical. 1843

Innocent oft charged with foulest crimes, 2171 Innocent taken two wayes in Scripture. 2226

Innocency, or an innocent person, whence called, 283. A man is bound to defend his own innocency, 494. Innocency fears no discovery. 1571

Infants weep as soon as born, 211. They have the seed of death in them as soon as born. 214

Infidelity, a wicked man full of infidelity, that his state is bad. 1480

Infirmities of two sorts. 1556

Iniquity shall be revealed. 1998

Injustice, two sorts of it, 1555. That which a man gets by injustice is none of his, 1750. It shall not be long possessed. ib. &c.

Innumerable, a threefold sence of it. 407

Instruction, to instruct others, is a mans duty and his praise, 269. Such as know God aright, are ready to instruct others in his knowledge, ib. An honour to great men to instruct others, ib. It is easier in some cases to instruct then to learn, 276. It is a shame when our actions cross our teaching. ibid.

Instruments and second causes, what God doth by them is to be reckoned as his own act. 803

Integrity, to hold integrity in evil times, is not only good but admirable, 120. The world would perswade, that the holding of integrity and profession of holiness are vain. 145. Integrity makes a man strong in bearing troubles. 1556

Intentions, it argues a malitious spirit, when a mans actions are fair, then to accuse his intentions. 53

Intercession of Christ assures us of a twofold salvation. 1866

Interpretation, what is meant by private interpretation. 1183

Invocation of Saints confuted. 357, &c.

Job, when he lived. 2

Joy, godly joy and sorrow mutually cause one another, 162. What at one time is our fear, at another time may be our joy, 245. Joy is the portion of the Saints, and they shall receive it in good time, 746. They rejoyce in the works of Gods mercies to themselves, judgments on enemies, ib. 747. Joy better then outward good things, 1729. Joy often seperated from the enjoyment of the creature, 1971. Sensitive joyes, who taken up with them, 2039. Saints joy in God, 2040 A threefold joy spoken of in Scripture, ib. Sensual joyes, their sinfulness, 2041. When joyes are sinful in their circumstances, ib. Joy at the troubles which befall wicked men, how lawful, 2224. What kind of joy that is not, and what it is. 2226

Ira, whence derived. 1704

Jubilee, whence so called. 2120

Judge, it is a great honour to judge another mans cause. 1611

Judging, man apt to judge favourably of himself, hardly of others, 2153. We must take heed of judging upon suspition, ibid. &c. What judging of others forbidden. 2154

Judgment considered under a threefold opposition, 1655, &c. Day of General Judgment known and believed in all ages, 1872. Three demonstrations of a judgment to come, ib. 1873. Two profitable effects of considering the last judgment, 1874. Christ shall be Judge, 1875. The equity of it that he should, 1876. This terrible to the wicked, 1877 Five things make the wrath of this Judge dreadful, ib. That Christ is Judge comfortable to the Saints, 1878. And why, ib. Man is not easily perswaded of a day of judgment, 1919. Present judgments of God argue a future judgment, 1920. The judgment of God exact, ib. Judgments of God on the wicked amazing, 1761. Judgments of God to be feared, 1915. Judgments come sometime by an invisible hand, 1995. Judgment twofold. 1918. They who judge others harshly, have cause to fear judgment, 1920. The remembrance of the judgment to come should keep us in a holy fear, 1921. To judge notes three things, 2087. Wicked ripe for judgement sometimes before ripe in years, 2201 Judgements of God have somewhat of mercy in them, 2214. Judgments of God upon the wicked, how matter of Joy to the righteous. 2221

Julian the Apostate a mocker of the Christians, 1024. His blasphemy, 1450. The opinion of Athanasius concerning him. 1468

Justice in our dealings, honours our profession of godliness, 10. Justice and judgment, how they differ, 678. Judgment opposed to three things, ib. Judgment subverted two wayes 679. To pervert judgment, what, ib. Judgments of God find most men secure, 77 Judgment taken three wayes, 834. Judgment of God unlike mans in four things, 926. God is most exact in justice, 680. Three things cause men to pervert justice, ib. Justice o

God

God how acquitted, when he afflicts us without cause, 829, &c. Justice or righteousness twofold, 754. Justice, the want of it a great evil, it layeth the people open to the judgments of God, 560. Some men out-grow the reach of mans justice, 2118. Justice, how blind, and how seeing, 2141. Justice must be done for the example of others, 2221. Justice of God honoured by the fall of evil men. 2224, &c.

Justification cannot be by works, 758, 838 Self-justification will prove self condemnation, 836. Three reasons of it, ib. Justification sure, though the person justified have doubts concerning it, 872. We are never so black in Gods eye, as when we are whitest in our own, 878. There is a self-justification warrantable, 1261. What it is to be justified, 1273. Assurance of justification is attainable in this life, ibid. Self-justification extreamly displeasing unto God, 2141. God hath no respect to our righteousness in the business of justification. 2144

K

Key, the giving of a key, what it signifieth, 1145. Four keyes specially in the hand of God. 209

King of terrors, who or what, 1743. Kings set up or cast down as God pleaseth, 1165 Examples of great Kings brought low, 1167, 1168. The will of Kings strong and resolved, yet turned by God. 1191, &c.

Kingdoms are not ruined by chance but by the decree of God. 1161

Know, to know how taken in Scripture, 1056, 1445. How God is said to know wicked men, 1765. They who know not God, and whom God doth not know, are the same, ib. Knowing put for the highest act of believing. 1860. God is not honoured by wicked men, because they do not know him, 2054, &c. To know put for experience, 1918. We may be said not to know, what we do not act up to. 1919

Knowing, three sorts of knowing men. 489

Knowledge, wicked men hate it, and why, 199 Knowledge of misery which we cannot be delivered from, makes us more miserable, 237 Knowledge, or to know, taken five wayes in Scripture, 478. A man may know much, and yet get no good by it, 490. Life of man so short that it cannot get much knowledge, 707 We should have humble thoughts of our own knowledge, ib. A godly man is a knowing man, 753. The more we know God, the more humble we are, 812. Knowledge of our selves twofold, 840. Knowledge of God concerning man, and all other things described, 935, 936. It is matter of great consolation to the Saints, that God knows them, 937. His knowledge of us gives an assurance of four things, ib. Knowledge of three sorts, 1201. God cannot be known perfectly by man, no not in glory, 1048, &c. God knoweth man fully, 1057. The knowledge of God over all things, 1183. The knowledge of God reacheth the most secret things, 1223. Knowledge of things twofold, 1240. A threefold knowledge opened, 1272 Knowledge coming in by sight hath a threefold advantage of any other knowledge, 1058. Many over-rate their own knowledge as if they knew all, 1105. There is a vanity in some kind of knowledge, 1387. Sins against the light of knowledge most dangerous, 1453 Knowledge of the wayes of God very troublesom to wicked men, 2051. Three considerations whence it is that such knowledge is so troublesom, ib. Knowledge hath three things attending upon it, 2052. Not to desire knowledge is more sinful then ignorance, ib. All mans knowledge derived from God, 2083. Mans knowledge nothing compared to the knowledge of God, ib. &c. Knowledge of God, how and what God knoweth. 2190

L

Labour, it is a sore affliction when we cannot enjoy our labours, 377. Except we labour, we have no right to eat, 585. We must not be displeased at our labour. 586

Lamp despised, what. 1118

Laughter, what it is, 466. To laugh, how taken in Scripture, with the kinds of it, ibid. 467. A godly man laughs at, or triumph over all outward evils, 468. Yea, though brought at once to charge against him, 470. Filling the mouth with it, what, 745 Laughter, of two sorts, ib. How the Lord laughs at the afflictions of his people, opened. 848, 849, &c.

Law, why God calls his laws, judgments, 678 Good laws without good men, never made a happy people, 698. Law given to Noah, the seven precepts of it, 1040. More righteousness in the law then man is able to comprehend, ib. How he that breaks one Commandment of the Law, may be said to break all, 1558. Law of God, the Elegancy of the Hebrew word, whereby it is expressed, opened, 2240, &c. Law taken two wayes, 2241. To receive the law, what it is, 2243 God only can give a law to the conscience, ib. Law how written in our hearts by God, and how by our selves, 2244. Law-suits to be avoided. 890

Leanness of two sorts. 1520

Lebbeus, what it signifies. 1107

Levelling principles confuted by the natural state of the creature. 2188

Leviathan, why so called, 197. What it is to raise up Leviathan, ib. 198. Two other significations of the word, 202. The name of a song. 203

Liberty threefold where the Spirit is. 2262

Lie, to lie taken two wayes, 573. A lie cannot belong hid, 574. Every sin is a lie, 1431 Lies, the false heart of a man a fit shop to frame such false ware, 1021. Lies of three sorts. 1022

Life, our life here is but a coming and a going, 104. Life is the most precious treasure in nature, 126. Not to be parted with for a trifle, ib. The soul far more precious then life, 127. So also is the Gospel, ib. &c. The love of Christ in parting with life for us, 128 What life is, in the natural consideration of it, 131. Life and death are in the hand of God, 134. Mercy to have life, though we loose all else, 135. No strength in man can give him assurance of long life, 532, 533 The life of man a warfare, 582, &c. The life of man is measured out by the will of God, 584. The decree of God concerning our lives, no ground for any to abate their care of preserving their lives, ib. Life short, 587. It is good for man that it is so, ib. Life what it is, 902. Life taken two wayes, ib. Life, may grow to be a burden, 905 Grounds of this burdensomness of life both in wicked and godly men shewed, 906, 907, &c. Life is the gift of God, 962. A favour, 963. Life of man short in divers respects, 1312. Times of mans life fixed and determined by God, 1331. This life must be reckoned for, 1338. It is a mercy to be taken out of this life, before great troubles come upon the place where we live, 1377 The number of the years of our life is a secret to all, 1433. That is a secret is an affliction to a wicked man, ib. It is best for us that this is a secret, and why, ib. Life of man like a piece of cloath in the loom, 1605 Life of man goes out like a candle, opened three wayes, 2063. Life of man in what sence it may be said to be shortned by God, 2079. Long life a promise of it to the godly. 2092

Light, a great blessing, the sorts of it, 188, 189. Light-haters, who, 199, 200. A double light necessary to seeing, 428. It is a sore judgment not to see when light shines, 429 They who abuse light shall be deprived of it, 1197. A twofold light denyed to some, 1608 Three reasons why God denyes light, ibid. Light of three sorts, 1708. Outward prosperity compared to light for three reasons, 1709. A threefold light opposed to a threefold darkness, 1758, 1798. It is a hard thing to sin against light, 2052. God is with all men by a twofold light, 2208. Light threefold shining upon the wayes of a godly man. 2273

Lightning, to come as lightning, what it signifieth. 1992

Lion, God comes forth as a Lion against his own servants, 981. Lions, their several names, 296. How they shadow several sorts of men, ib. How tyrants resemble Lions. 297

Lips, a man of lips, who, 1019. A wise man hath a lock and key at his lips, 1034. Opening the lips what it implieth. 1035

Likeness of quality and of equality, 48. All the Saints on earth like one another, and like Christ in quality, but unlike in equality, ib.

Limiting God what, the sinfulness of it. 1656

Live, to live, what it imports in Scripture. 2032

Loathing, twofold. 719

Longing for a thing, notes the strongest desire. 240

Loss, the punishment of loss opened, 1290, &c. How we may be said to lose that which we never had, 1292. Great losses have great repairs. 699

Love of God everlasting, 744. Love, the spring of all action, whether good or evil, 1492. What we over-love, we are in danger to lose, 1540, Love much decayed among Gospel-professors in these times, 1777. True love described in five things, 1822. Love or loving taken two wayes, 1838. Two sorts of love, ib. True love to man will not easily conceive or nourish suspition. 2180

Low, they that are lowest, are nearest exaltation, 414. It is a wonderful work of God, to set on high those that be low. 415

Lowness, twofold. 413

Lust, the shortest time is too long to serve any lust in, 674. Several lusts act in several ages of man. 362

M

Magistrates are the heads of the people, which imports both their dignity and their duty, 1193. Magistrates great duty is to relieve the oppressed, 1791. Magistrates, that are bad most ready to favour such as are so, 2166. Why evil Magistrates are compared to Oaks, ib. Evil Magistrates favour the great, 2167. They should take special care of the widdow and fatherless. 2172, &c.

Mag-

Magnifie, signifies three things, 627. God magnifies man four wayes, 627, 628. Especially by setting his heart upon man. 631

Male children, why expressed in the Hebrew by a word which signifies memory. 950

Man, the word man in Scripture, signifies more then a reasonable creature, or the noble sex, 3, &c. Three Hebrew words for man, their difference, ib. Man taken, first, for any eminent man; secondly, for a Magistrate, 4 Man is the work of Gods hands, 919. Three cautions from it, 920. It moves the Lord to compassion, to tell him we are the work of his hands, ib. No man is Master of his own designs, 1719. A fourfold condition of man, held out in four names given him in Scripture, 2047. Man can no way be profitable unto God. Objections answered. 2132, &c. Mans natural constitution, makes him sensible of affliction, 534. Mans worth is out of himself, 628. God bestows many thoughts upon man. 629

Mankind fallen may be considered two wayes. 1863

Manutenentia Dei. 1635

Marrow, what to the bones. 2091

Marvellous things what, 404. They are separated from man three wayes, ib. Ordinary works of nature and providence are marvellous in two respects, 405. Marvels are a token of Gods presence, 406. Marvels should work faith in us, ib. Christ will wonder at our unbelief, if we believe not, when he doth wonders. ib.

Maschil, the title of several Psalms, what it importeth. 2136

Mass, a Popish conceit about the name of it. 538

Mediator, the doctrine of a Mediator between God and Man, known and believed, before Christ came into the world, 1588. The twofold nature of the Mediator known in all Ages of the Church, 1589. Mediator and Redeemer how they differ. 1863

Meditation turns the promises of God into marrow, 1138. Meditation, what it is. 2241

Memory, and to remember, what, 280, 281 The works of God are to be remembred, 281 Memory or remembrance, how ascribed to God, 951. It implieth two things. ib.

Mercy, a threefold mercy in God, 522. Mercy of God most moved towards us by telling him our misery, 604. Mercy of God, how not to be pleaded, 1455. There is a fivefold mercy of God, 1541. Four degrees of sparing mercy, 1541, &c. Sparing mercy brings no good to the wicked, 2113. Mercy of God, in what sence sin may be said to overcome it, 2151. Some mercies received, exceed our own praises, as some troubles exceed our own mourning, 204. In sad times small comforts pass for great mercies, 206 Every step of our lives needs a step of mercy, 214. Mercies come in by degrees; we may be over-mercy'd as well as over-afflicted. 700

Merit, the best of men cannot oblige God or merit any thing at his hand. 2131

Minchah, the offerings of the Jews, why so called. 1189

Mind of man hath a formative faculty in it. 2195

Ministers of Christ, their joy is when the Word is heard and obeyed. 2014

Miracles, signs and marvels, how they differ. 405

Mischief contrivers do themselves most mischief. 1963

Misery, vid. Afflictions.

Mocking, the highest step of sinning, 1024 To be mocks especially in affliction is a great affliction, 1110. Mocks make deep wounds, 1111. Some more ready to mock then to answer such as oppose them or differ from them, 2017. Mocking how sinful and dangerous. 2018

Moloch, the Idol, why so called, how formed, and worshipped. 1621

Moment, what. 1930

Morning, to do a thing in the morning, is to do a thing diligently, 26. Morning best praying time, ib. To do a thing in the morning, and every morning, what they import. 636

Moses and Aaron in what sence they may be called evil Angels. 1813

Moth, how man is crushed as a moth, a threefold meaning of it. 348

Mountains, figurative mountains, of two sorts, 767. To remove a mountain, used proverbially for doing the most difficult things. 769

Mourn, to mourn with those that are in affliction, our duty, 162. The report of others sufferings, should cause us to mourn, 163. Great troubles warrant solemn mournings. 170

Mourners described, 413. Such nearest joy and exaltation. 414

Mourning, a profession. 201, &c.

Mouth, to open the mouth, what, 173. A fool doth not open his mouth and speak, but his speech opens his mouth, ib. Mouth of God, how we may be said to receive the Law from it, 2242. To receive the Law from the mouth of God, stands in a double opposition. 2243

Multiloquie, very burdensom. 2016

Murmuring or complaining, to murmur at the dealings of God, is to make our selves juster then God, 331. Complain to God, but not of God. ib.

Musing men no great talkers. 559

N

Naked, who in a Scripture sence. Folio 2158

Nakedness twofold, 102, &c. Every man born a naked helpless creature. 104

Name, what it importeth when God knoweth a man by name, 47. Name of God taken four wayes, 110. What it is to bless the Name of God, 111. A good name a great blessing, 1081. Name, in Scripture put for honour and renown, 1756. A man of no name, and a man of no number, the same, ib. To loose our name a great punishment, ib. With whom good men loose their good name, ib. To want a name among men is most penal to the wicked. 1757

Nations subject to change as well as persons, 1189. All the changes in Nations are from God. 1190

Nature, changes in the course of nature, are full of terror, 192. The best natural things which we have may turn to our hurt. 1717

Natural things are shadows to us of spiritual. 712

Necessity cannot excuse sinful actions. 2158

Neck, stiff neck what it imports in Scripture, 1458. Running upon the neck, the meaning of it. ibid.

Need makes a little mercy seem great. 2162

Negative words in Scripture, are not alwayes denials, 92, 93, Negative voice, God hath one upon all creatures, 779. Where the negative voice lies, there is the greatest power, ib. Negative expressions in Scripture often signifie the contrary affirmative. 1976

Nero, his miserable end, 1464. The clemency of Nero, how shewed, 1543. His speech when he made his grave. 1548

Net, affliction compared to it. 1788

Noahs three Sons, how stiled. 1427

Nostril of God, what meant by it. 294

Now-day imports two things in Scripture. 1090

Numbers, three, six and seven, how used in Scripture, 453. Twice and thrice, three and four, six and seven, seven and eight, what they signifie in Scripture. 454, 455

O

Oaths of two sorts, Folio 1568, 1574 Rules about oaths. 1574

Old-age, a full old-age, what, 483, 484. A perishing old-age, and a flourishing old-age, ib. A godly man never dies but in a full age, 485 A blessing to live to old-age, 486. Old-age, three degrees of old-age among the Jews, 1139. Old-age of some men very vigorous. 2032

Old men are presumed to know much, 709 Old men why supposed full of wisdom, 1139 It is their duty to be wise, ib. It is a sad sight to see an old man ignorant, 1140. Old men are to be honoured and their counsel respected. ib.

Omnipotency of God, what. 1454

Omnipresence of God, 1051, 2183. Two deductions from the omnipresence of God, 2186

Omniscience of God, 2080. To deny that, is is to deny his being, 2190. Sinners fancy to themselves that God seeth them not in all their wayes, 2194. That God is omniscient, cleared, 2195. Queries about it answered. 2196, &c.

Oppressors of three sorts, 231, The words of oppressors are wounding words, 232. They who will not hear the voice of the Preacher, may justly be given up to hear the voice of the oppressor, 233. Oppressors are speedily cut off. 1432

Oppression, to oppress the poor and fatherless, a grievous sin, 570. Oppression twofold, 917 Oppression, wise men most affected with it, why, 1514. Oppression called blood, 1566 Oppression of the poor, the most sinful act of oppression. 2159

Oppressed, men usually are very deaf at the cry of the oppressed, and why, 1790, &c. Not to hear the cry of the oppressed is a very crying sin, 1792. Not to hear the oppressed is an oppression, ib. Oppressors not only unjust but cruel, 1972. Oppression calls for revenge, ib. 1973

Ordeal, used superstitiously by the old Saxons, four sorts of it. 1569, &c.

Ordinances of God, how vainly trusted too. 1742

Ophir the place of Gold, queried where it is. 2253

Orion described. 788

P

Pain of the body, very powerful to disquiet the mind. Folio 130

Papists, would teach God. 2082

Panther, his fierceness against mankind, 750

Parable, what it is, 173. Parables grounded on known customs. 213

Pardon of sin, God only can do it, 663. Why pardoning or remitting sin is committed to men, and in what sence, ib. How pardon of sin is expressed in Scripture, 664. When sin is pardoned, the punishment of sin is also pardoned, 665. Greatest sins pardonable, 666. They whose sins are pardoned, may and ought to pray for pardon, ib. In two cases prayer for pardon is specially to be renewed, 668. Pardon of sin is our acquittance from sin, 973. Pardon of sin, the infinite freeness of God in it, and the unlikeness of his thoughts to mans about it, 2193 Pardon twofold, 2278. Pardoned sins may be presented to the soul as unpardoned. 1306

Parents should not take immoderate care to prefer their children, why, 1377. Parents sick and dying, mindless either of the comforts or sorrows of their children, ib. &c. Parents smitten in their childrens punishment, 1943. Sins of parents justly punishable in their posterity. 2070

Passion, it is lawful to shew passion in the cause of God, when his glory is concerned, 152 We may express our passion by reproofs, ib. Passion carries us out of our selves, 576 Passions ascribed to God, have no power over him, 809. Passions, when violent, are the disguise of a wise man, 1588. Passions break out into unprofitable words, ib. We should not answer passionate speeches with passion. 1926

Path, our ordinary course of life compared to a path. 714

Patience, a man may be patient, and yet complain under his afflictions, 181. Five things in afflictions to clear this, 182. A threefold patience, 1654. The perfect work of patience consists in two things, 1655. Patience ascends by three steps to her perfection, ib. Patience gives us possession of our selves, ib. Patience of God extended long to some wicked men, 2111. Wicked men spared in wrath. 2113

Peace with beasts, how, 476. When God is at peace with us, he can quickly make all creatures at peace with us, ib. Peace a great mercy, 477. Peace of wicked men, what it is, and whence it ariseth, 1436. Peace of a wicked man in death, whence it proceeds. 2044. God ready to be at peace with us, when we apply to him. 2238

Peacock, how called in Hebrew, and why. 1929

Pelican, whence called in the Hebrew. 1959

People of God, dangerous to touch them. 1452

Perfection, or to be perfect, what, 6. The kinds of it, ib. In what sence the Saints are perfect in this life, ib. Perfection of a thing, what, 1467. All the perfection of earthly things is vanishing, 1468. Perfection of our wayes, what. 2139

Perish, what it is to perish, 179. How a day may be said to perish, ib. Perishing, or to perish taken five wayes in Scripture. 282 How righteous persons may or cannot perish. 284, 285

Persecution, what it is properly, 1849. Persecution considered two wayes, ib. To persecute and persecution further considered, 1903 To persecute very sinful, 1906. Some think they do well, while they persecute, 1907 Two sorts of persecutors, ibid. Persecutors catch at words, 1908. He that holds root-truths should not be persecuted. 1910

Perseverance, that which a man doth out of conscience, he will do with perseverance, 35 Perseverance in evil, is worse then the doing of evil, 674. Perseverance both the duty and priviledge of Saints. 1633

Persisting in evil most dangerous. 576

Petitioning, It is a great honour to be petitioned and sued unto. 1097

Pharisees, whence so called, two reasons of it. 1071

Phylacteries among the Jews, what they were, and their use. 2245

Physitians of two sorts, 1209. Who is a Physitian of no value, ib. Four things make a Physitian of no value. 1210

Pillars, two set up before the flood, 702. Pillars of the earth, what, 774. The real pillar of the earth is Gods power, 775. Metaphorical pillars of the earth, who. 776 ity, what it is, 439, &c. 1842. It is a duty to pity the distressed, 541. A twofold pity, 1842 Why pity is expressed by bowels, ib. Misery calls for pity, 1846. We may pity evil men in sufferings, 1847. Double afflictions call us to double pity. ib.

Plato, one of his chief lessons to his Schollars. 2189

Pleasure, two sorts of it, which every man should abhor, 1529. Pleasure a choaker of the Word, 1952. Pleasure threefold, 2094 Four conclusions about the state of mans life in reference to pleasure, 2095, &c. All the pleasure which God taketh is in himself, or in the fulfilling of his own good pleasure in Christ. 2142

Pledge, taking a pledge when sinful, shewed in two things. 2155

Pleiades, what, and why so called. 788

Plowing of iniquity, &c. 287. Plowing referred to good actions. ib.

Policy and Power the two great pillars of Nations. 1715

Poor, some Gods poor, and some the Devils poor, 430. Poor are full of desires, because full of wants, 431. Wicked men plot against the people of God, how poor soever, and why, 432. God delights to help the poor, 433. Poor must take heed of greedy seeking the creatures, 556. Poor that are modest in asking, should be soonest supplied, ib. They are brought to the lowest state who must submit and seek to the poor, 1944. Poor are Gods treasury, 1969. Poor most subject to oppression, 432, 1972, 2172. A poor man oppressed, or oppressing, how grievous, 2159 Want of compassion to the poor, the mark of a wicked man, 2162. The poor have a right in what rich men have, 2163. Not to do good to the poor is sinful, as well as to do them injury, 2164. Honest poor less regarded by wicked men, then their beasts. 2166

Portion of the wicked, what. 2603

Possession of good things without the enjoyment of them, is a great evil and trouble. 239

Pouring out of any thing notes abundance. 1178

Poverty is Gods gift as well as riches, 155 Some poverty is a note of Gods displeasure, 1443. Oppressors often brought to poverty, ib. What it is which makes poverty so great an evil to any man, ib. Imaginary poverty, or fear of want, makes us more miserable then want. 1444

Power, neither Men nor Devils have any power to hurt till God give commission, 69 Power of God as visible in changing, as in setling the course of nature, 770. Power of God can do greater things then ever he hath done, 774. Power of God such, that he needs not the help of any creature, 784. None can rescue from the hand of his power, 803, 804. His power is absolute, 806. They who have much power are tempted to oppress, 1432. A godly man hath a natural and civil power to do evil, but he hath not a moral power to do it, 1505, &c. The more power we have to prevent evil, the greater is our sin if we do not. 2168

Practise of duty, the best answer to slander in any kind. 1548

Praise, they who do well, shall be sure to have praise from God. 114

Prayer, how it may be said to move God, 120 We must plead with God in prayer, 121 Satan would discourage us out of prayer and holy duties, 146. Some wicked men thrust out of the prayers of Gods people, 370. A dreadful thing to be so, ib. Prayer is the putting of our case to God, 392. They who pray much, expect much, 518. God often keeps prayer by him unanswered, ib. The return of prayer is the solace of the soul, ib Prayer, early in the morning, 687. Prayer is a seeking of God, ib. God must be sought speedily and diligently, ib. In prayer we must expect all from free grace, 688 Prayer of the upright prevails, 691. Holy prayer is certainly and presently heard, 693 Prayer awakens God, ib. It should be fervent, 694. Prayer cannot stay the anger of God sometimes against a people, 804. How prayer is said to prevail with God, 810 Prayer a reasoning with God, 814. Nothing of man so prevailing with God as prayer, 821. Faith in prayer, 824. Prayers may be answered, while we are still afflicted, 827 The whole man must be exercised in it, 1074 Prayer hindred three wayes by uneven walking, 1081. Prayer of the Saints very powerful 1099. Prayer shall be answered, 1113. It is dangerous to wrong them who can go to God in prayer, ib. Prayer to Saints departed vain as well as sinful, 1377. The sinfulness of forbearing, or abating prayer in times of trouble, 1392. Hypocrites never love prayer, and in two seasons they lay it by, ib. To restrain prayer is worse then not to pray, ib. Prayer taken two wayes, 1555. Only pure prayer is acceptable prayer, 1559. The requisites to pure prayer, shewed, ib. 1560, &c. The general end of prayer what, 1563 Prayer, why expressed by a cry, 1567. Not to have prayer heard by God, is the greatest misery that can befal man, 1571. Prayer, God defers the answer of it sometimes, and why, 1791, &c. Eight reasons why God defers to hear, 1792, &c. Not to be heard when we pray is a great trial and temptation, 1794. A gradation of four steps in this trial, 1795. Strong afflictions usually raise strong affections in prayer, ib. Prayer sometimes born down by the anger of God, 1813 Prayer is our meeting God, 2056. Wicked men count prayer unprofitable, 2057. Prayer may have a twofold stop, 2259. We must pray much for that whereof we have a sure promise that God will do it, 2263. Prayer due to God only, ib. We are never in a fit frame to pray, till we turn from sin, 2264 To hear prayer, what, ib. God is the hearer of prayer, ib. It is a mercy including all mercy to be heard in prayer, ib. Prayer profitable, 2265. Prayer is a lifting up both in the act and effect, 2275. Prayer of the righteous shall not prevail in some cases. 2279

Preparation, holy duties call for holy preparations, 24. Preparation of the heart consists in two things, 1068. God only can prepare the heart, yet man is to be exhorted to prepare his own heart, and why, 1076. Preparation of the heart will be seen at the fingers ends. 1076

Presence of God twofold, 639. God can make his own presence grievous to us. 640

Preservation, the work of God, 651, 966 Man wants a preserver, and why, ib. How God is a preserver, 652. A necessity that God should be mans preserver, ib. He preserves his own people in a special manner, and why, 653. His preserving care is perpetual, 654. He preserves both natural and spiritual life. 967

Presumption, a threefold presumption of wicked men. 2213

Presumptuous sin, spoken of in the Old Testament, why thought to be the same with the sin against the Holy Ghost in the New Testament. 1453

Pride grows in the best soil, 328. God resists the persons of the proud, and he will resist pride in his best friends, ib. Pride in apparel and beauty, 597. We are apt to be proud of strength, 807. Pride comes from ignorance of our selves, 839. Men are usually proud of three things, 1239. Pride ariseth from ignorance of what we are, 1240 Pride stops the ear against counsel, 1241 Pride causeth oppolition against God. 1458 Proud men lifted up, 1932. They love to be seen, 1937. Proud mans fall. 1938

Prince and Priest expressed by one word in the Hebrew, three reasons of it, 1169 Princes most sensible of dishonour and contempt, 1179. Princes should be free and open hearted, 2104. The estates of Princes brought to nought as soon as the estates of meanest men. 2105

Principles, some easie, 1109. It is a shame not to know common principles, ib. False principles cannot produce true comforts. 2128

Printing taken in a large sence, 1856. When the art of Printing was first invented. ib.

Prisoners of two sorts, 231. Theirs is a sad condition, 232. To visit Prisoners, a work very pleasing to Christ, ib. Sighing is the language of Prisoners. ib.

Probability of finding, is ground enough for seeking. 548

Profit, wicked led by their profit in all they do, 2056. Wicked men throw up holy duties, when they get no outward profit by them, 2057. Man cannot profit God, 2133, &c. Eight Conclusions made from that principle, that man cannot profit God. 2134, &c.

Prognostication by the Stars sinful and vain. 794

Promises are the portion of believers, 490 Three acts of the soul upon the Promises. 1652

Proselyte, who he was. 1827

Prosperity of good men a torture to evil men, 1099. To have been in prosperity adds to the bitterness of any present adversity, 1533 Prosperity discovers the wickedness that lyeth close in the heart, 2005. A threefold evil flows to an evil man from his present prosperity, 2007. Several answers given why wicked men are in prosperity, 2030, &c. Prosperity of the wicked tryeth the graces of the godly. 2031

Proverbs, what they are. 1617

Providence, the common blessings of God not dispenced without a special providence, 410 Providence watches over all creatures, most over such as are hurtful to man, 614. Providence of God orders the greatest confusions in the world, 856. Confusions argue the power of God, 857. Providence of God orders all things, and is present with all second causes, 1052. Providence and preservation follow creation, 1133. God leads all people, especially his own, by a hand of providence, 1189. Providence of God, how exercised towards his people, when he puts them into the hand of wicked men, shewed divers wayes, 1531. Some providences of God put the wisest to a stand, 1628. Five miscarriages of carnal men, at the unusual dealings and providences of God, 1629. Wise men often out in expounding the providences of God. 1644

Provocation, what it is, 1600. There is a good provocation, 1601. Three ill effects of provocation, ib. Provoking God, more then sinning. 1124

Prudence goes softly. 427

Punishment of loss, worse then the punishment of sense, 189. Punishment may come long after the sin, 290. It shall be proportionable to the degrees of sin, ib. It shall not exceed the desert of sin, ib. It is often like the sin in kind, 291. The strongest sinner shall not escape punishment, 299. Punishment is gradual, ib. &c. Reasons why the Lord suspends punishment, 301. Wicked punish'd by those whom they have oppressed, 379 God can punish the strongest by the weakest instruments, 380. God will punish impenitent sinners severely, 1228. Punishment of loss the greatest punishment, 1290. Punishment proportioned to sin two wayes, 1453, 1464. God hath judgments of several degrees to punish sinners with, 1740. Punishment of offenders, three special reasons of it, 2221. Punishments often suited to the sin, 1938. Punishments deserved, yet all the punishments of this life less then desert, 2073. Punishment is payment. 2118

Purity of doctrine, what it imports. 1030

Purposes to sin, how proper to wicked men, 938. Purposes, must be followed by action, if not, a double danger, 1647. Death breaks all our purposes. 1648

Pyramides in Egypt, not known who built them. 1757

Q

Quantity, natural and civil. Folio 234

Questions, what it imports when God asks a question, 41. Questions in Scripture, sometime heighten the sence, and sometime abate it, 626. In all disputes and questions we should yield as much as without wrong to truth may be yielded to, 752. Three kinds of questions, 989. Extravagant questions, what fruit they produce, 990. Questions in Scripture concerning God or man, who or what he is? how to be understood, 2053 Questioning our selves about what we are to do, or have done, how useful. 1905, 1906

R

Racha, what it means to call one so. Folio 2169

Rain, the benefit of it, 409. How it is a special gift of God, 410. It is a wonderful work of God to send rain, 411. The giving of rain a motive to fruitful obedience, and a conviction of the disobedient, 412 Rain of doctrine, 557. Rain at the command of God, 1148. Raining of wrath, what. 1984

Reason, we are apt to think there is no reason for that, for which we see no reason, 238 Reason is the souls taster, 579. Bare reason as far from grace as sense is from reason, 1064. Meer humane reason no competent surveyor of the wayes of God, 2086 Actings of many out-run their reason. 1904 Reasoning with God, twofold: how we may or may not reason with God, 814. Reasoning with God in prayer. ib.

Recompence of two sorts. 1479

Redeemer twofold, 1861. Christ a Redeemer in the strictest sence, 1862. Five things concur in the work of a Redeemer, all which meet in Christ, 1863. Christ was the Redeemer from the beginning, 1865. That our Redeemer liveth, carrieth in it a twofold comfort. 1866

Redemption, what it is, 556. Redemption, what it is; to redeem taken three wayes, 1861 Redemption of sinners by Christ is Gods pleasure. 2142

Rejoycing, to see others rejoyce at our troubles is very grievous. 1625

Relapsing into the same sin very sinful, 1773 A good man may relapse. ib.

Relations, God can create us trouble out of any relation. 1831

Religion, the two chief heads of it, which. 1031

Remembrance of evil which shall never return to hurt us, comforts us, 1689. To remember a man, is to do him good, 1352 Gods remembrance of his people, implies all good to his people, ib. 1353. Remembring what it imports, when ascribed to God, 600

Remembrancer, a great honour to be so to God, 951. Saints use to put God in remembrance of four things. ib. &c.

Repeated acts though small produce great effects. 1370

Repentance, renewed sins must have renewed repentance, 35. Repentance not to be put off to a pained body, 130, &c. Repentance twofold, sinful, and for sin, 822. Repentance a brief platform of it in three things, 1678 A returning, the two terms of it, 1665. Repentance twofold, 1960. They who neglect repentance in health seldom mind it in sickness, 2045. Repentance reneweth our communion with God, 2234. Affliction bespeaks our repentance, 2246. True repentance is a home returning to God, 2247 Repentance followed with a blessing, and a building of us up, 2249. In true repentance sin is utterly cast off, 2250. They who repent truly endeavour to put away sin, not only from themselves, but from all that belong to them. ib. &c.

Repetitions with a negative how used in Scripture. 1197

Reproach, the best Saints on Earth have been deeply reproached, 1526. Good men have often reproached one another, 1527. Reproach is a very heavy burden, ib. A reproaching tongue is compared in Scripture to three things, ib. Reproach, the bearing of it is a great fight of afflictions, 1771. Reproaches make breaches, 1773. Good men subject to reproach, 1774. Most sad when one good man reproaches another, ib. Reproof must not savour of reproach. 1785

Reproof lawful, 152. How to be qualified with meekness, 153. Reproof prevails most when backt with reason, 154, &c. Reproof must be sweetned with friendly insinuations, 265 It is no easie thing to bear a reproof, ib. In some cases we must reprove, whether men take it well or no, ib. Some in reproving other mens faults, run into the same themselves, 1400. Reproofs are often grounded upon mistakes, 674. Reproofs of two sorts, 1226. How God reproves sinners, 1227 Reproofs may prove comforts, 2013. Wicked men should be reproved, 2115. Few found doing it, ib. Four qualifications necessary in a reprover, 2116. It is the misery of some men that they are not reproved. ib. How dangerous to sin against reproof, 2148

Rest of confidence, and rest of contentation. 256

Restitution of what is ill gotten, necessary, 1076, &c. Restitution of two sorts, 1945 To restore is very troublesom to a wicked man, ib. Five queries answered about restitution. 1968, &c.

Restraint of others from sin two wayes. 2168

Resurrection, a birth, 103. Resurrection how great a change, 1357. It will be as a new birth-day to mankind, ib. Hopes of a happy resurrection adds much courage, &c. 1358 Resurrection, an ancient heresie about it, 1760 A twofold resurrection spoken of in Scripture, 1870. Resurrection of the body proved. 1871. Spiritual resurrection, ib. Christ a twofold cause of our bodily resurrection, ib. Difference between the resurrection of the godly and the wicked, 1872. The total consumption of the body, no impediment to the believing a resurrection, 1882. The body after the resurrection shall have true flesh. 1884. The same body shall rise, 1897. Faith in the resurrection to life, encourageth us in all the troubles of this life. 1901

Return to God, when we may be said to do so, 2247. Returning, what it imports in Scripture, 574. Return, return, what it imports. 575

Revelation of deep things the work of God, 1183. He revealeth both his own deep things and the deep things of man, 1184. Revelation of divine secrets, two wayes of it. 1397

Revenge belongs to God, man must not revenge himself, 1508. Revenge is very sweet to some spirits. 1529

Reward, every man shall have a reward, 586 It is the undoing of some to have their reward, 1480. The difference between a godly man and a carnal man, in looking to his reward, 2137, Reward twofold. 2225

Reynes, what they signifie in Scripture, 1540 To cleave the reyns, what. ib.

Riches, three reasons why the Holy Ghost is so exact in describing Job's riches, 15, &c. To be rich and holy, argues much riches of holiness, 16. Riches are the blessing of God, ib. Honest dealing no stop to the getting or keeping of riches, 17. Riches and all outward comforts may be lost in a day, when we least suspect, 75, &c. All our care cannot secure them, 76. Worldly men very careful to secure their riches, 381. Ill gotten riches cannot be secured, 382. Riches, why called strength, 383. It is not in the power of man to get riches, 1466. Riches ill gotten will not hold, 1467. A carnal man would have perfection of riches, ib. Riches, lying vanities, shewed two wayes, 1477 In what sence riches are deceitful, ib. Riches why expressed by the same word that signifieth strength, 1733. Riches a sweet morsel to a worldly mind, 1959. A wicked man cares not how he gets riches, so he get them, ib. Riches ill gotten, not held long, 1961 A wicked man cannot hold the riches which he hath gotten, 1977. Riches shut up how revealed, 1999. Riches flow away, or are consumed in the day of Gods wrath three wayes, 2001. Riches provoke to contemptuous thoughts of God, 2048. Riches not gotten nor kept by mans own power, 2059, 2060. Riches no defence against death, 2094. Riches, how we may lay up a good foundation for our selves by them. 2138

Rich men, the same word signifies a rich man, and a man at ease, in Hebrew, two reasons of it, 1532. Rich covetous men, in what sence, they would be alone in the Earth. 2167

Righteous, men so called in a four-foldence. 283 Righteous men persevere in the wayes of God against all discouragements, 1634 Their perseverance is from the power of God, 1635. How the Lord hath and hath not pleasure in us as righteous, shewed in six propositions, 2139, 2140, &c. Righteous men often preserved in common calamities. 2230

Righteousness, what it is, 696. Righteousness the mother of prosperity, 697. Two things make a Nation an habitation of righteousness, 698. Man is called righteous in a twofold opposition, 817, &c. Two sorts of righteousness, 818, 2138. How a righteous person may answer God, and how not, ib. Mans righteousness is not pleadable before God, 819. A godly man reckons his righteousness as nothing. ib.

Roaring under affliction, notes extream affliction. 251

Robbers of two sorts. 1123

Rod, what it signifies in Scripture, 893. Affliction called a rod in a threefold consideration, 894. Rod of God, what it signifies. 2035

Rot of a wicked man what, 1752. Taking away root and branch, notes compleat destruction. ib.

S

Sack-cloath, taken two wayes in Scripture. Folio 1549

Sacrifices, four sorts of them under the Law, 26. Why the whole burnt-offering is called an ascention, three reasons of it, 27. The Father of the Family was as Priest before Moses, ib. The Law of sacrificing given, though not written from the beginning, ib. &c. Wherein the benefit of a sacrifice did consist, and what made it effectual to man. 28

Saints, what a Saint is, 359. It is our duty to look upon and imitate the examples of the Saint, 360. When God forsakes a man, the Saints on earth forsake him too, 361. Saints, who, 1416. Saints by some called Heaven, two reasons of it. 1417

Salt in our speech, what, 512. Ministers of the Gospel, why called salt, 516. Salt, implying barrenness. 1749

Salvation or safety is of the Lord, 432. God is the salvation of his people, 1261. A thought that God is our salvation is an abundant consolation, ib. None can give any kind of salvation without God, 1262. A believer looks upon God himself as his salvation. ib.

Sanctifie, how man sanctifies God, 529. Sanctifying to the slaughter, what it meaneth. 2112

Sanctification, how one man may be said to sanctifie another, 22. To sanctifie notes two things, ib. He that is holy, desires to make others holy. 24

Sand of the Sea applied three wayes in Scripture. 499, &c.

Satan, what the word imports, 38. How Satan comes into the presence of God, ib. He that opposes good, is the Devils picture, 39 Satan is in a twofold chain, though he walk all the world over, 42. His going to and fro, what it imports, 43. No place free from his temptations, 44. Very active to do mischief, ib. Satan boundless in malice, 70. Satan is speedy in executing where he hath power to hurt, 72. How the will of God and Satan may meet about the same thing, 69. He cannot compel, 77. Wicked men do his will, while they are doing their own, 78. He loves to work by instruments, 79 Satan labours to work in us hard thoughts of God, 83. Satan very powerful, 90. Meer malice moves Satan against the people of God, 123. When one means will not prevail, he tries another, 129. And more prevalent or strong, ib. He makes use of such instruments to tempt by, as are most effectual. 144

Satisfaction for sin cannot be made by man, 648. A three-fold deficiency in all our works for that end, 649. A wicked man is never satisfied, 1734. All worldly things together cannot satisfie. ib.

Sauce, what the best to our meat 2094

Scandal, what, 570. Scandal at the cross or sufferings of Professors. 1630

Scorn, how opposite to love, 1580. They who are highly honoured by God, are often scorned by men, ib. Three words in the Hebrew signifying to scorn, their difference. 1598

Scorning, vid. mocking. All kind of scorn is not sinful or uncomely, 1105. How the godly may be said to scorn the wicked in their troubles, 2227, &c. Scorning is very sinful. 2228

Scourge of the tongue, vide Tongue. Scourge put for any kind of affliction, 846. A sudden scourge, what. ib.

Sea, three things in it most considerable, 612, 613. How like man in his natural condition, 614, 615. Especially to covetous oppressors, 615. The sea in its highest rage is under the command of God. 785

Sealing of a thing imports two things, 781 A threefold use of it in Scripture. 1365

Season, every thing (even pale death) is beautified in it, 486. Seasons and opportunities. Satan is very watchful to take the fittest time in doing mischief, 74. We should be as wise to do good. 72

Secrets of God, or divine secrets, of two sorts. 1397

Security twofold, 1092. Wicked men are neareſt destruction when they are most secure. 1439

Seeing, a sure sense, 1424. Seeing taken two wayes, ib. 1884

Seeking implies four things, 392. We must seek God especially in times of affliction. 393

Seers, old Prophets, why so called. 1425

Sence of want carries us to look for remedy. 547, &c.

Sense is an inlet to the understanding. 1202

Serapis, the Egyptian Idol, why the Emblem of silence was always placed near it, 2116 The honour which the Egyptians did to that Idol. 2217

Serve, to serve God, what it is, 2054. A wicked man slights the service of God. 2055

Service of God counted an unprofitable thing by carnal men. 2212

Servants of God, God hath servants in the worst places, 5. It is an honour to serve God faithfully among the wicked, ib. What it is to be Gods servant, godly men are his servants three wayes, 46. Servants of God surrounded with enemies, therefore surrounded with protections, 56. God is the guard of his servants, 57. And of the meanest thing belonging to them, ib. Servants of two sorts, 235. Sin brought in servility, 236. No servant at his own dispose, ib. In what sence they must not answer again, 1410. Servants not to answer when called is their sin. 1832

Shaddai, one of the Names of God, what it signifieth, 447, &c. 1454, 2053. Three significations of it opened in reference to justice. 677

Shaddow of death, what, 190, 1182. How taken in Scripture, 588. Shadows, three sorts, 708. Mans life how like a shadow. 709, 1319

Shame the fruit of sin, what shame is, and how caused, 551, 748. Three degrees of Scripture expression about shame, ib. 749. To be cloathed with shame, ib. Shame, as it hinders some from doing good, so many from doing so much evil as they would, 1775. Not to be ashamed of the evil we have done doubles it, 1776. Shame is a good effect of a bad cause, how, ib. A twofold shame, ib. Shame put for repentance. ib.

Shaving the head, what it imports. 94

Shekel, whence so called, it's use. 495

Sheol, how taken in Scripture. 607

Shiggaion, what it means. 562

Shiloh, why Christ was so called. 255

Ship, how time passes like a ship. 860

Sick friends not to be flattered, how to be dealt with, 1613. Sickness unfits most for spiritual duties. 1648

Sight of the eye, much comfort comes in by it, 602, &c. Sight put for enjoyment, 1964. Sight of evil how grievous. 2074

Silence is best in great sorrows, for then a man is unfit either for counsel or comfort, 170 In what sence it is a mans wisdom, 1213 Silence or stopping of the mouth caused two wayes, 436, 2027. The mouths of wicked men stopt two wayes, 436. Silence signified by laying the hand upon the mouth, 643. Silence becomes learners, 560. Silence or holding the peace, what it imports in Scripture, 1022. Seven seasons of speech and seven of silence, 1214. Three sorts of silent men, 1215. The season of speaking and of silence to be observed, 1242. Silence twofold, 2237

Sin, not safe to let sin lye a moment upon the soul, 26. In what sense a man may be said not to sin, 29. Three degrees of sinning, 30 We may quickly sin while we are about lawful things, 31. Sin spoils us of all, both honour and comfort, 39. In what sence we may be said not to sin in this life, 112. The material cause of it, is in our selves, 387 Sin is the meritorious cause of suffering, ib. We need no teaching to sin, 389. Sin and sorrow the portion of man by nature, ib. 390. They are contained vertually in our nature, ib. To sin is no burden to a natural man, ib. Not to sin, how taken, 480. To be kept from sin is better then all outward blessings, 481. Sin the greatest evil, ib. Sin contrary to the nature of God, 528. They who are sensible of sin, will pray hard for the pardon of it, 658, 659. Sinners expect benefit by sin, 289. Sin persisted in, shall have a sorrowful reward, ib. God gives men up to the power of sin, 685. Sin is a punishment, ib. Sin shall not go long unpunished by outward evils, 686. They who are equal in sin, may be unequal in punishment, 689. How God assists, and how not in the committing of sin, 742. All sin is resisted by God, 743, &c. All our weaknesses are the effects of sin, 818. A godly man may relapse into sin, 904. Every sin makes man a debtor to God, 973, 1043. Sin can never be put too far away, 1076. Sin will come in, but we must not let it stay in, 1077. Sins of others, when ours, 1078. Sin unrepented hinders confidence in approaching to God, 1081. To be a plotter of sin is worse then to be an actor of it, 1207. How sin is said to find out the sinner, 1224. Secret sins before God, 1230. Secret sins in two things not so bad as open sins, ib. In what sence we may desire to know the number of our sins, 1285 God only can shew us what and how many our sins are, 1286. The better any man is, the more he desires to know the worst of his sins, 1287. What it is to know our sins, 1288. Some sins more proper to some men, 1393. Man is most apt to act his proper sin, ib. Sin kept close hinders the receiving of the word, 1406. Sin, and sin only, makes men abominable in the sight of God, 1420 Multiplied acts of sin argue mans sinfulness, ib. All sins are against God, yet some are more against him, 1452. Sinning with a high hand, two things in it, ib. Sin the greatest evil, and why, 1454. Sin runs against reason, 1456. No danger can keep a wicked heart from sinning, 1459. Sin deceitful, 1475. There are three eminent evils in sin, 1476. Sin deceives by a threefold promise, ib. Some special characters of the sin of a wicked man, 1488. To be a plotter of sin is worse then to be an actor of it, 1489 Wicked man cannot but sin, 1490. They are oft put to much pain in sinning, ib. Sinful conceptions often prove abortive, ib. Sin is the sting of affliction, 1497, &c. Great sins leave their mark, 1521. It is possible to live without any known sin, 1557. Crying sin, what, 1567. Sin makes both things and persons vile, 1702. It brings into straits, 1713, &c. Sin may do much hurt to others, but it doth most hurt to our selves, 1945 Seven sorts of Sins, 1947. Punishment of sin reacheth as far as sin reacheth, 1948. Perseverance in sin is the greatest misery, 1949 Sin goes to the grave with wicked men, the misery of that, ib. Sin is as food to the soul of a natural man, 1951. The metaphor between sinning and eating opened in seven things, 1950. Sin hath a present sweetness, 1951. This sweetness provokes to the committing of sin, 1952. Our covering of our own sin how sinful, 1953. A carnal man is kind to his sin, 1955. Sin spared three wayes, ib. How dangerous it is to spare sin, 1955. Evil man keeps close to sin, 1956 Sin bitter in the end, 1957. Sin how it is covered, 1998. To be bidden go on in sin the greatest threat against sinners, 2018. Sin, no disadvantage to God, 2135. We should not think any sin little, 2147. In what sence no sin is little, ib. It is our duty to take notice of the greatness of our sin, ib. &c. How we may take the measure of sin, 2148. Seven aggravations of sin, ib. &c. In what sence sin may be said to be infinite, 2149, &c. How our sins may be said to be innumerable, 2150. The less we are provoked to sin, the greater is our sin if we fall into it, 2157, &c. 2174. Sin punished in all ages, 2199. Sin breeds an estrangement from God, 2233. Two degrees of putting away sin, 2250. Sins of omission more frequent then sins of commission. 2146

Sinners, in three degrees. 228

Sinning advisedly, the property of the wicked. 2219

Sincerity commends us unto God, 9. Sincere persons are in Gods esteem perfect persons ib. Where there is sincerity toward God, there will be honesty toward men, 10. It is most opposed by Satan, 118. A godly man will hold that, whatsoever he looses, ib. It is our armor, 119. Sincerity causeth us to rate our selves low. 899

Sleep, the ease of trouble and cares, 594. Bed cannot give sleep, ib. Quiet rest in sleep a great mercy. 1095

Small and great in a twofold sence, 699. We must not despise small beginnings, 700. Smallest matters fall under providence. 399, 2197

Smiting on the cheek, what it signifies in Scripture. 1525

Snare, every thing which a wicked man hath is a snare to him, 1721. An account of six particulars which are a snare to him. ib.

Sodom, the judgment of God upon that, made the measure of greatest judgments, 1751 Apples of Sodom. ib.

Solitariness is a sad condition, 194. What solitariness good, 196. Solitariness, in what sence good. 1516

Son, no Son mentioned in Scripture to die before the Father till Terah, 1760. Sons of God who, 116. In what sence sonship is said to be brought in when Christ was born, ib.

Sorrow is good, only as it tends to joy, 165 Great sorrows hinder speech, 172, 502. Man sees sorrow as soon as he is born, 210. We ought to give a reason of our sorrows, as well as of our hopes, 494. Not to be able to express sorrow is an increase of it, ib. Sorrow is not easily shaken off, 866. Sorrow is dry, 1519 Sorrow makes old before the time, ib. Sorrow under sufferings is not contrary to patience, 1552. Sorrow, worldly, and godly, its effects, 1553. Sorrow taken two wayes, 1626. The sorrows of the mind break and weaken the body, ib. &c. Sorrow is a breaker, 1770. Sorrow shortneth the spirit of man, 2019. A godly man may give too much way to sorrow, 2023. The danger of it, 2024. Sorrow for sin may be excessive, 2178. There is an unavoidable sequel between sin and sorrow. 2179

Soveraignty of God, 830. It should silence all complaints, 109. God can do us no wrong. 108

Soul, the preciousness of it, 127. Soul of man is the man, 347, 1503. Mans excellency, 353 Souls being seperate from the body, ib. &c Soul taken two wayes in Scripture, 901 Three things weary and load the soul, 902 Soul and life in man are distinct, 905. Soul-sufferings put for all sufferings, and why. ib.

Sowing, how applied & taken in Scripture. 288

Sparing mercy what, 1542. Sparing sinfulness, 1543. Sparing mercy is the lowest degree of mercy. 1544

Speaking, when the heart is full of matter, it a hard thing not to speak, 266. God is said to speak four wayes, 1035. Some men beyond the speaking of man, 1036. If God speak he makes the stoutest stoop. ib.

Speech, ability of speech the gift of God, 1174 Speech removed two wayes, 1175. It shews what we are. 1176

Spirit, a threefold work of the spirit, 935 Spirit of man taken three wayes, 966. Spirit of man in an ill sence, what it signifieth, 1410 To turn the spirit against God, most sinful 1411. In what cases a man may be charged to have turned his spirit against God, ib. Spirit helps to pray: no pure prayer without the help of the spirit. 1561

Spot natural and metaphorical. 1086

Star, what it is, 787. The difference of the Stars, ib. The number of the known Stars ib. The known Stars represented in fourty one images, 788. All the Stars are particularly planted in the Heavens for the good of man, 790. Man very apt to commit idolatry with the Stars, ib. 791. God knows the number and names of all the Stars, 790. Some Stars more excellent then others, 791. The power and wisdom of God shines forth from the Stars, ib. Six things shew the power and wisdom of God in making and ordering the Stars, 792. Stars can do nothing of themselves, but as God orders, 793. They are for signs, but not for infallible signs, 794 It is a duty to study the Stars, 795. Stars, a threefold benefit to the night, 205. Stars to be considered, especially in four things. 2188. The consideration of the Stars should make us humble and thankful. 2189

Stedfastness fourfold, 1082. There is a double unstedfastness brought in by sin, and cast out by grace. 1083

Steps of strength fourfold. 1712

Stones of the field, what it is to be in league with them, 472, 473, &c. How God turns stones into bread, and how man may be said to do so. 475

Strait, what properly it is, 1614, 1980. Straits of two sorts into which sin brings us, 1614 Grace may put us into some straits, ib. How and why God brings his into straits. ib.

Strangers, a double notion of them, 1428 Strangers why called Enemies. ib.

Strangeness among Christians very sinful. 1777

Strength, of two sorts, 759. Strength of God opened, 760. Strength signified by five distinct words in the Hebrew, 833. Strength of God insuperable, ib. The strength of God appears in three things, ib. Strength cannot protect against the wrath of God, 1715 Strength threefold, 2090. Strength no defence against death, 2092. Strength of God, in what. 2238

Sufferers, great sufferers usually thought to be great sinners. 2152

Suffering, few hit upon any other cause of suffering but sin, ib. &c. Other causes of suffering noted, 2153. In suffering it is good to suspect our sins, and search after them. ib.

Sufficiency, how many wayes a carnal man may be said to be in straits in the fullness of his sufficiency. 1980, &c.

Sun at Gods command, 777. Shaddow of the Sun going back in Hezekiahs time, 779. The rising of the Sun is an act of favour renewed to the world every day. 780

Superstition, or false worship hath a tange of baseness and slavery in it. 1431

Supplication, the nature of it, 820. Supplication, properly what it is. 821

Surety, what it is to be a surety, 1603. Christ is our surety, 1606. How Christ is called the surety of a better Testament, shewed two wayes, ib. Christ being our surety, we need not fear, ib. Our surety is of Gods appointing not of ours. ib.

Suspition, it is no breach of charity to suspect ill of others, while it leads us to do them good, 30. A suspition that we or others have sinned, is ground enough to seek for pardon. 31

Swallowing, what it imports in Scripture. 1958

Sword, a terrible judgment, 80. How worse then Famine, ib. Two swords of the mouth, 431. The hand of the sword, sword in the hand, what they import, 459. Sword, how taken in Scripture, 1440. Sword twofold, 1911. Sword put for all manner of outward evils, ib. Face of the sword, what, 1912 The sword is a very dreadful evil. 1913

T

Tabernacle taken three wayes, Folio 1742 How the body of man is like a Tabernacle. ib.

Tamerlane, the majesty of his eye. 1523

Taste, what the instrument of it, 1138. Faith is the souls taster. ib.

Teaching compared to raining, or holy doctrine to rain in four respects, 558, 559 What we teach others, we should be well assured of our selves, 1425. God cannot be taught, 2080. Some men attempt to teach God; how this is done, and several sorts of men who do it, 2081. How sinful it is to go about to teach God. 2083

Teachable, a gracious spirit is teachable, and a teachable spirit is an excellent spirit, 560 Unteachableness more dangerous then ignorance. ib.

Tears of three sorts, 1551. Tears have a voice, 1581. Eight sorts of tears in Scripture, all vocal, ib. Tears are very powerful Orators. 1582

Ten, or ten times how used in Scripture, 1771, &c. The number ten burdened with innumerability. 1772

Temptation, four steps of Satans work in temptation, 77, &c. Satan suits temptations to mans temper and condition, 79. The most violent temptations are reserved to the last, 85. Some tempt the Devil, 88. Temptation by way of assay or tryal, 264. Temptation, prayer and meditation, the three great exercises of a Christian, 582. Temptation makes the Saints sometimes weary of their lives, 906. Great afflictions lay us open to great temptations, 912. Temptation, no standing in it without the help of Christ. 1448

Terah the first whose son died before him. The note of Epiphanius about it. 1760

Terrors, after terrors God usually sends comforts, 320, &c. Terrors of God what, why so called, 505. Divers sorts of terrors, sent from God, 506, 508. Spiritual terrors, as spiritual joyes, are known to few, 508. Terrors of two sorts, 1728. A threefold distinction of terrors, ib. Wicked men subject to terror, which riseth three wayes, ib. Terrors are worse then outward troubles, 1729. Approaching terrors have a different effect, as persons differ, 1731. Terrors wound within. 1993

Thoughts compared to boughs or branches of a tree, and why, 307. Thoughts the first-born of the soul, ibid. A godly mans top branches, or highest thoughts, are about highest things, ib. God never lost any one of his thoughts, nor ever shall, 421. Thoughts called the possessions of the heart, why, 1647. Thoughts are vocal to God, 1790 Thoughts, what they are, 1923. Thoughts press to words, 1924. Thoughts should form our words, ib. There is a kind of art in thinking, 2099. Thoughts how known to God only, ib. It is possible for man to know the thoughts of man, 2100. Six wayes shewed by which man may know the thoughts of man, 2101. Evil thoughts of God the character of a wicked man, 2191. Thoughts of God, how we acquaint our selves with God by them. 2234

Thousand, how taken in Scripture, 755. One of a thousand, what it means. 756

Threatnings, a godly man makes use of threatnings, as well as of promises, to provoke himself to his duty, 1615. Threatnings against sin, why so often repeated in Scripture. 1766

Time, the shortness and speed of it, 599. Time past irrecoverable, ib. Time is very swift, 858. Swift as, and swifter then a Post, shewed in ten particulars, ib. 859. Time is not an empty duration, 1139. All time is as nothing compared with eternity, 1313. It is the sole priviledge of God to set times, 1351 God can pull down the stoutest sinners in a little time, even without time, 2202. God needs not take time to do what he hath a mind to. ib.

Tomb or grave why called a heap. 2122

Tongue, to govern the tongue under great affliction, is a high act of grace, 158. A scourge, and what the scourge of the tongue is, 461. &c. What it is to be hid from the scourge of the tongue, 462. It is most sad, when Christians scourge each other with the tongue, 463. It is a great mercy to be delivered from the scourge of the tongue, ib. The tongue discovers the iniquity of the heart, 578. Man is not master of his own tongue, God is two wayes, 1174. Tongue, the Scholler of the heart, 1593. Sin hath got the mastery of the heart, when it freely vents it self at the tongue, 1413. Tongue, a light member, yet falls heavy, 1472. Tongue, of a wicked man, the cover of his sin three wayes. 1953

Tophet, why so called. 1621

Touching the estate or person of a man what it signifies, 63. Satans touches are utter ruinings. 65

Tradition and immediate revelation the rule, till the Word was written, 702. Tradition when in use, of what force now. 1426

Treading under the feet notes absolute conquest. 1744

Treasure, called hidden, in two respects, 241 In what sence the Lords people are his treasure. 2133

Troubler, to be a troubler of others, is the height of sin, 229. Wicked men are troublers both of themselves and others, 229 By troubling others, they trouble themselves, 230, &c. They never cease to trouble till they cease to live, ib. Except in two cases. 231

Troubles, to consider what we were and shortly must be, may much strengthen us to bear present troubles, 105. Troubles afflict them most who suppose thmselves beyond trouble, 370. Troubles of this life many and how distinguished, 1316. It is a mercy that our lives are so short seeing they are so full of trouble. 1317

Trust, what it is, 720. A twofold effect of trust, ib. Trust of hypocrites like a Spiders web in five things, 721, &c. Trusting in God proper to a godly man, 1252. True trust triumphs over the worst, not only of present but of possible evils, ib. Trust is due to God in all estates, 1253. Trust is an honour to God, ib. Trust in God is a remedy before the remedy comes, 1254. We can never trust God too much nor creatures too little, 1255. Five encouragements to trust God, ib. Three rules for the strengthening of trust, 1256. To trust God alone, to trust him for the least matters, to trust him in our fullest enjoyments, shews the purest and most spiritual trust, ib. Trusting in thing or person is upon a twofold supposition, 1416. To trust, and to trust in, or upon, the same, ib. Man will have somewhat to trust to, and why, 1478. It is mans duty to trust God, ib. Man is most apt to trust that which hath deceived him, ib. The creature is most vain to those who trust it. 1479

Truth, Satan will speak truth for his own advantage, 56. Truth is infused, not born with us, 304. God sometimes (as it were) steals a truth into the hearts of his people, 305. Why he is said to do so, 304. Holy truths are very pleasant to the ear of a holy person, 306. Our hearts are too narrow to take in or hold all the truths of God, ibid.

A godly man ever receives somewhat when truth is revealed, ib. God usually humbles man, before he shews him his truth, 316 Truth deserves our most diligent search, 489. We are to search and make truth our own, before we distribute it unto others, ib. Truth may challenge credit, 490. Truth is the portion of the Saints, ib. Truth mis-applied is very unsavoury, and may be dangerous, 516. Truth must be made known, 425. It is the study of a godly man to do so, ib. Dangerous to conceal truth, ibid. The strength of truth, naked truth is too hard for armed Error, 565. Common truths seriously to be studied, 599. Truth is more ancient then error, 704. Truth cannot be had with ease, 705. Four things fit us for the search of truth, ib. Truth is to be highly esteemed, 710. We should yield to one another in controversies, as far as truth will let us, 752. Truth is ever the same, and we should be the same to truth, 843. Great truths must be resolutely maintained, ib. It is our duty to be advocates for truth, 1022. We must own a derided truth, 1024. It is no new thing to be called a liar, when we speak truth, 1025. Truth of doctrine hath both strength and subtlety in it, 1029. Truth is the meat of the mind, 1138. Truth hath grayest head, 1140. Great truths must be ushered in with great thoughts of God, 1151. Whosoever speaks truth it ought to be embraced, 1176. Truth wrong applied may be as dangerous as error, 1211. Truth, a precious commodity, it should be conveyed to posterity, 1426. Truth must not be hid, ib. Some truths are of very common observation, 1495. Ordinary truths will not serve in extraordinary cases, ib. Truth seeks no corners, 1858. Truth well set home will put the wittiest and proudest besides their mocking, 2017. God honoured in his truth by the fall of the wicked, 2225. Truth must be bought, but not sould. 2240

Tryals, when God brings to new tryals he gives new strength. 1638

Tympanization, or drumming, what kind of torture it was. 1622

Type, what it is properly. 689

Tyrant, the common name of Kings in old time, 1428. Tyrant, who or what he is. 2154

V

VAin man, who, Folio 1056, 1060. He is an empty man, 1060. Scripture calls things vain four wayes. 1386

Vanity graduall, Moneths of vanity, what, 590, 591. The vanity of mans life shewed four wayes. 624, 625. Man is full of vanity, 1056. The vanity of man subjects the creature to vanity, 1057. Vanity, what it is, 1474. Vanity, taken two wayes, ibid. Vanity of the creature, 1477. When a man brings forth vanity, shewed in three particulars. 1489, &c.

Vau, an Hebrew particle, its diverse significations. 1587

Verse, or meeter, those parts of Scripture which are fullest of affection, are written in verse. 178

Vipers tongue how deadly. 1963

Vision of God in Heaven, not in his Essence, 800. We cannot see God fully on Earth in his Word and Works, 799, 801. That we see so little of God should humble us, 802 Vision of God twofold, 1290. Vision of God our compleat Blessedness in glory, 1889, 1891. We have a vision of God by faith in this life three wayes, 1889. Vision of Christ in our nature glorified, 1890. We shall eye nothing but God in glory, 1895 Visions of two sorts, 1940. Visions and revelations feigned often by false prophets, and why, 302. And heathens, 303. Four sorts of visions or divine revelations observed among the Rabbins, 308. Three sorts noted from Scripture, 309. Visions five wayes distinguisht, 309, 310. A further sort of visions. 619

Visit, to visit, what it imports, 480. Visitation of God three wayes. 635, 966

Visiting of the afflicted, how called pure Religion. 165

Unbelief of threatnings as dangerous as of promises, 1480. The use which Satan makes of such unbelief, 1481. Unbelief is the sheild of sin. ib.

Uncleanness of man by nature opened, 1323 A clean thing cannot be brought out of an unclean, in a threefold sence, ib. Sin is an unclean thing, 1324. Two things in the natural uncleanness of man, ib. Seven properties of mans natural uncleanness opened, 1325. All the actings of men unclean, 1326 Even the best actions of believers are unclean; objections answered. ib. 1327

Understanding, the work of it attributed to the tongue and senses, why, 577. Understanding at the dispose of God, 1177. It is a sore judgment when understanding is taken from the ancient, ib. How God may be said to hide the heart from understanding, shewed four wayes, 1608. That it is the work of God to do it, shewed, 1609. It is a great judgment to have the understanding clouded, 1610. Our inability to understand ariseth two wayes, ib. When God takes away mens understanding it is a sign of their destruction. 1611

Unity, men are apt to agree in doing hurt, 1528

Unsearchableness of God in his works two wayes considered. 402

Unthankfulness, man is apt to be unthankful both to God and man, 1828. Unthankfulness provokes. 1829

Until, notes a continued act. 744

Vomiting four causes of it, spiritually considered, 1960. How ill gotten goods are vomited up. ib.

Vow, what it is, 2266. Vows lawfully made ought to be kept, ib. Four cautions about vows, ib. &c. When God answers prayer, we must be careful to pay our vows. 2267

Uprightness, Upright, what it is to be upright, as upright is distinct from perfect, 7, 274 Two sorts of uprightness, 7. It makes us confident in saddest times, 278. It hath boldness, 574. And stedfastness, ib. An upright heart the more it is searched, the better it proves, 576. Uprightness and honesty shall not always be hid, 1187. An upright heart is not afraid to reason with God, 1206 An upright heart is very resolute, 1243. An upright man never fears any hurt from God, ib. He keeps his ground in all turns, 1258 It is a sign of uprightness when we dare put our selves in the presence of God. ib.

Useless, to be useless in Scripture account, is to be essenceless. 552

Uselessness of any creature, is the dishonour of that creature. 194

Uz, Land of Uz, why so called, 4. Where seated, 5. What manner of people dwell there. ib.

W

WAiting hath four things in it, Folio 1355. It is our duty to wait Gods time fully, ib. Waiting, what it is, 1652 Waiting upon God is one of the great duties of man, 1654. Waiting hath a blessing, 1656 Four sinful grounds of giving over waiting upon God. 1657

Walking of God and of Satan, how to be understood, 2193. Our holy walking notes our acquaintance with God. 2235

Wall, a false prophesie why called a wall built with untempered morter. 2204

War usually accompanied with famine, and why, 459. War is a devourer, 459, 1985

Warfare, the life of man is a warfare shewed in six particulars. 582

Washing, what it imports, ceremonial washing. 876

Watchfulness a duty in two things. 1864

Water, fire and water put for all manner of afflictions, 2177. Grounds of the allusion why water signifieth affliction, 2178. Waters at the command of God, 1148. Waters destroy as well as nourish the Earth. 1149

Way of a man, what, 247. Way of man towards God twofold, ib. How our way is hid from God, 248. How Gods way is hidden from us, ib. Way of God a safe way. 1196. Wayes of God threefold, 2050. Prejudices of wicked men against the wayes of God. 2052

Wealth, the business of a worldly man is all about wealth, 2042. Wealth often impoverisheth the godly in spirituals, 2043. Three cautions about wealth. ib.

Weariness of body and mind. 1514

Weavers shuttle, life of man like it. 598

Wedding garments signs of joy. 1549

Weeping and crying out in pain, is an ease of pain, 169. Weeping not unbecoming the most valiant men. 1582

Weighing of actions and persons, God doth it most exactly. 2196

Whale, why God sets a watch over him. 613

Wicked men are imployed as instruments to afflict the godly, 84, &c. Wicked men may flourish in great outward prosperity, 368 The patience of God glorified in the prosperity of wicked men, ib. Two other reasons why they are permitted to prosper, ib. Wicked men may flourish a great while, ib. They are under a curse while they flourish, 370. Wicked men have their name from unquietness, 844. They often abound with earthly things, 853. They have a just title to the earthly things which they enjoy, ib. How it is in vain for a wicked man to seek unto God, and how not, 874, &c. To be accounted wicked, is a sore affliction, 914. Wicked men in what sence they may be said to have prosperity, 922. To be wicked, or to do wickedly, is inconsistent with grace, 937 A wicked man who, described in five particulars, 937, 938, &c. All men are either godly or wicked, 941. Wicked man is never setled either about his way or about his end, 1083. Wicked men may enjoy great worldly peace, 1124. Four grounds of it, ib. 1125 Wicked men turn the blessing of God into fuel for their lusts, ib. Wicked mans life, a painful life, 1430. He hath two sorts of pain, ib. He hath the pain but not the deliverance of a Woman in travel, 1431. He makes an ill construction of all that he hears, 1433 The destruction of a wicked man is inevitable 1441. His misery is decreed, 1447. Wicked ked man falling into misery is irrecoverable, 1469. Wicked men of two sorts, 1485. God often delivers his precious servants into the hands of wicked men, 1530. It is an addition to affliction to be given into the hands of wicked men, ib. Wicked man the cause of his own ruine, 1709. The prosperity of a wicked man is his affliction, 1710. The best things which a wicked man hath turn to his hurt, 1717. How wicked men destroy their own lives, 1720. Every thing proves a snare to him, 1721. They are catcht when their hopes are highest, 1724. God hath many wayes to vex them, 1726. Wicked men numbred among wild and hurtful creatures, ib. The prosperity of the wicked short, 1929. He is very miserable, 1930, 1762 A wicked man may get to the highest of worldly heights, 1934. No height can secure a wicked man against the hand of God, ib. Wicked mans prosperity like a dream, 1939. When it is best with him, his worst is approaching, 1980. God hath instruments of all sorts ready to punish wicked men, 1988. The wicked seek not to improve troubles, but only to get out of them, 1989 The shifts of a wicked man shall not help him, ib. Portion of the wicked appointed out by God, 2003. What their portion is, ib. Why God gives many wicked men a portion of good things in the world, 2004 It sometimes troubles good men to see the wicked prosper, 2030. Wicked men careless of what is beyond their own time, 2078 Wicked sometimes spared when others suffer, 2111. Wicked have impresses of the presence of God upon their Spirits, 2208 Presence of God grievous to the wicked, 2209. Wicked men think they can do well enough without God, their great folly shewed in it, ib. &c. Wicked have slight thoughts of God, 2211. The wicked do even dare God to do his worst, 2213. God gives wicked men no cause to be weary of him, shewed divers wayes, 2214. They do not acknowledge God the fountain of all the good they receive, 2216. Portion of the wicked lyes on this side Heaven, 2217. A threefold honour arising to God by the fall of the wicked, 2225. Wicked men how made ridiculous, 2229. Wicked men doubly disappointed. ib.

Wickedness is very laborious, 289. There is an art in wickedness, ib. Wickedness and iniquity how distinguished. 2147

Widdow, what the Hebrew word for a widdow importeth concerning her, 2169. Two cautions to the widdow and the fatherless, 2173

Wife, why Job's wife was spared, when all else was lost, 143. Wives have a threefold advantage in perswading with their husbands, 144. Good wife the beauty and ornament of the house, 480. Wife, she was given for a help, yet may prove helpless, 1834. An example of high conjugal love, 1835. Love between husband and wife grounded on externals, may soon decay, ib.

Will of God the law and rule of all things, 1152. Will of God under a threefold consideration is the rule of prayer, 1560. How man may cross the will of God, by doing that which God wills, 1852. Will of God to be submitted to, 2086. Will of man by nature goth out without end to sin, 2151

Wilderness, and wandring in it, what it implies, 1194

Wind, vain words compared to wind, 568 How the life is a wind, 600. Winds, their nature and power, 87. How sent by God, how raised by Satan. ib. &c.

Winking, how sinful. 1408

Wisdom is the stability of things, 418. Wisdom of God both in his word and works, full of secrets, 1038. God only can effectually teach us the secrets of wisdom, ib. The wisdom of God which appeareth is but little to that which is in him, 1041. Wisdom the gift of God, 1141. The wisdom of man no wisdom compared with the wisdom of God, 1141. Man loves forbidden wisdom, 1062 Two extreams about wisdom, ib. No one man hath all wisdom, 1398. The highest strain of pride to think so, ib. He that is full of his own wisdom is unfit to receive instruction, 1405. Wisdom and happiness go together, 2136. What that wisdom is which doth not profit man, and what that is which doth. ib. 2137

Wise men to whom plain things may be dark and obscure, 430. What it is to be wise in heart, 759. God is infinitely wise, ib. How it may be folly to desire to be wise, 1062. Wise man, who, and how distinguished from a crafty man, 1385. It is most uncomely for a wife man to speak vainly, 1387. The wisest of men do not see all truths, 1609. A wise man may soon forfeit his title, 1643. Wise men rarely found, 1644. Wise men sometimes ignorant in what ordinary men know. 2109

Wishing evil to others, in what sence it may be done, 1504. In what sence we may lawfully wish that had not been, which is. 218

Wit often abused by Satan. 430

Witness and party must not be the same man, 837. Self-witness the sole priviledge of God, 1026. How we may or may not bear witness to our selves, 1927. Witnesses, an old custom among them, 1394. God is both Judge and witness, 1573. How and in what cases we may call God to witness, 1574. The witness of God is the most desirable witness, 1575. It is the joy of an upright heart, that God is a witness of all he doth. 1576

Woes of two sorts, 974. Wo is the portion of the wicked. ib.

Woman, in what sence said to be the glory of the man, 1799. Women fullest of affections. 203

Word of God expounded in his Works, 281 A caution about it, ib. Word of God, how it may be hid, and how not, 523, &c. Word of God, in that God discovers himself to us, 2235. Words the conceptions of the mind, as hard to keep them in, as children ready for the birth, 266. Words of the wise very powerful, 270. Right words very strong, three things in right words, 564, 565. It is our duty to watch over our words, 674. It is a duty to give check to the idle or evil words of others, ib. Words like a strong wind shewed in six particulars, 675, 676. God is not taken with fine words, 816 When many or a multitude of words are sinful, shewed in five particulars, 1017. Good words may colour a bad cause, but they cannot make it good, 1020. Words are often reckoned for more then the speaker meant them, 1028. Words are great doers, 1388 Words which do no good, are evil, 1389 Salt of words, what, ib. Our words are sutable to our spirits, 1413. In what sence evil words are worse then evil thoughts, ib. Words called windy in three respects, 1499 Bitter and passionate words to man, provoke God, 1502. Words duly spoken, are of great power, 1508. Ill sleeping upon hard words, 1600. Unkind words are bitter to the hearer, ib. Harsh words carry much provocation in them, 1601. Hard words stick long upon the spirit of man, 1602. Unkind words make deep wounds, 1770. Two sorts of words work much upon the heart, ib. What words, and to whom, burdensom. 2015

Works of God are perfect works, 398. Work of man put for his reward, 588. Works of God are to be recorded for after-times, 703 It is our duty to enquire into former times, ib. It is but little of God that we are able to see in his works, 801. Good works must be done in secret, 1071. Works of God answerable to a threefold word, 2084. The justice of the works of God. 2085

World, when we are most retired from the world, we usually have, and are most fit to have communion with God, 312. Worldly men would live always in the world. 623

Worldly things in their greatest beauty may be blasted in a moment, 89. The thoughts of great and wise worldly men are only for the world, 225. The best things of this world may prove burdens to us, 239. worldly mens hearts, fuller of the world then their houses, 256. They rest fully in worldly contentments, ib. A godly man never sets up his rest in worldly things, ib. The more our hearts are loosned from the world, the more assurance we have to hold the world, 257. Worldly things, the more we trust to them the less we receive from them, 258 Their difference in this from spiritual things, ibid. Worldly good things not good in themselves, 368. They are no argument that a man who hath them is good, 369. No evidences of the favour of God, 371. The best of worldly things loathed, if long used: spiritual things, the more used, the more desired, 443. Best of worldly things fading, 479. The world is but for this life, 605 Worldly things have no consistance, they are always in motion, 859. They pass as if they had never been, 862. Worldly estate of good men, as transitory as that of evil men, ib. Worldly things, are not the rest of believers, 1532. All worldly prosperity may quickly be dasht and lost, 1534. Worldly things, are tastless and worthless to us in times of great sorrow, 1554. Worldly men hope for great things in the world, 1965. Worldly things, much pains willingly taken for them, 1966. Worldly things the matter of a carnal mans rejoycing. 1971

Worms, the companions of the dead. 1660

Worship, what the postures of it, 97. Standing, sitting, walking, kneeling, falling down, all these are worship postures, ib. What worship is with the kinds of it, 98 Divine Worship proper only to God, 99, 100. Civil worship may be given men, that of two sorts, 99. God must be worshipped in an humble manner. 100

Wounds of an enemy, what, 1296. Woundings by the hand of God are often preparatory to a cure, 450. God never makes a wound too big for his own cure, 451 And he can easily cure all the wounds which the malice of man can make. ib.

Wrath what it is, 362. Wrath kills three at once, 363. Wrath of God, what, 1348 The love of God is our only refuge from the wrath of God, ib. Man is not able to bear the wrath of God, 1349. Saints here may be under sence of wrath, 1350. Wrath of of God, a consuming flame, 1470. How we are said to give place to wrath, 1507 Wrath of God what it is, 1807. The wrath of God is very terrible, ib. Apprehensions of wrath more grievous then all our sufferings, 1808. Wrath of God brings Judgements, 1917. Wrath falls upon the wicked when they are taking their fill of worldly contentments, 1988. How God is said to have a day of wrath, 2000. Wrath goes out with Judgments, 2001. Wrath of man brings a sword two wayes, 1917. No shelter against the wrath of God, but Christ, 2064. God hath abundance of wrath ready for the wicked, 2075. A day of wrath coming upon wicked men. 2112

Wrinkles in the face caused two wayes, 1518. A perfect soul-state, and a perfect state of body, hath no wrinkle in it. 1519

Wrong, we must not wrong men to right God. 1230

Y

YEA and nay, what they signifie in Scripture. Folio 552

Yesterday, taken three wayes in Scripture. 706

Young ones owe reverence to the aged. 1836

Youth, how the sins of youth are possessed in elder years, 1304, 1305. Youth is easily overtaken with sin, ib. Youth is very subject to and usually very full of sin, 1947. Youth-sins remain upon the oldest impenitents. 1948

Youthful sins prove often the sufferings of old age. 1306

Z

ZOphar, what it signifies. Folio 1015

A TABLE OF THOSE SCRIPTURES

Which are occasionally CLEARED and briefly ILLUSTRATED in the foregoing

EXPOSITIONS.

The First Number directs to the CHAPTER, the Second to the VERSE, the Third to the FOLIO.

GENESIS.

Chap.	Verſ.	Folio.
1	1	782
	1	1194
	2	191
	2	590
	4	286
	8	783
	9	274
	14	787
	16	400
	20, 24	132
	22, 28	175
	28	60
2	2	918
	7	344
	7	131
	15	1927
	20	143
	24	143
	24	315
	25	102
	25	417
3	1	417
	5	456
	5	52
	8	1435
	9	41
	9, 11	41
	14, 17	177
	16	826
	16	1722
	17	175
	17	177
	19	59
	22	266
	23, 24	2168
4	5	2262
	6	685
	5, 6, 7	1079
	7	1080
	7	1570
	9	41
	10	879
	14	1440
	16	43
5	22, 24	2186
	29	216
	29	1402
6	2	37
	2	116
	3	2175
	4	110
	4	226
	4	1546
	5	1326
	5	2175
	5	2195
	6	950
	9	7
7	4	1867
	21	213
	23	726
8	21	84
	21	1329
	22	289
9	4	132
	24, 25	1943
	25	236
	27	363
	27	1475
10	9	1725
11	3	343
	4	1932
	5	2185
	5	498
	5, 6	1528
	15	936
	27, 28	1760
12	15	1586
13	8	1819
14	14	270
	22	1574
15	1	2033
	13	1336
	16	2201
16	4	110
	4	175
	12	510
	13	313
17	17	464
18	5	680
	12	464
	14	404
	20, 21	2185
	21	498
	25	323
	25	326
	27	345
	30	265
19	21	936
	24	81
20	3	1805
	7	2280
	18	208
22	12	888
	12	936
	14	1133
	17	499
23	1	889
	8	911
	12	99
	16	495
24	16	312
25	8	212
	8	1312
	21	2263
	22	249
	22	1942
	23	833
	25	397
	27	6
	32	964
	32	126
26	14	17
	11, 19	63
27	33	856
28	19	745
	21	2267
29	15	51
	31	209
	31	747
30	8	426
	23	1785
31	1	1800
	2, 5	1079
	7	1771
	24	779
	24	887
	29	134
	47	730
	47	1572
	53	273
32	2	335
	9	1835
	9, 10	815
	10	156
	24	196
	24	312
	24	1516
	24	2269
	30	1887
34	1, 2	286
	23	54
	29	1591
35	2	22
	2	2250
	5	505
	11	448
37	34	92
38	21	33
	24	1784
	29	58
39	7, 8	68
40	30	660
41	13	1085
	51	1086
42	7	1776
	11, 19	898
	13	227
	18	10
43	11	4
44	30, 31	212
45	8	1719
46	32	18
47	6	383
	9	211
	10	32
	13	271
48	11	99
	14	578
	15, 16	1943
	16	1861
	17	403
	19	1861
49	1	1867
	3, 4	353
	7	176
	9	570
	10	255
	10	296
50	3, 10	169
	21	1085

EXODUS.

Chap.	Verſ.	Folio.
1	10	417
	10	2145
	12	58
	14	192
	21	2248
3	3	1893
	7	211
4	10	1020
	19	126
	21	68
	25, 26	641
5	21	1911
6	12	1019
7	5	1786
8	18	404
	19	1844
	22, 23	457
	29	1598
9	10	137
10	13, 19	87
	28	764
12	13, 14	661
	15	1586

	41	1336
13	4	712
14	13	60
	13	1089
	15	42
	24	295
	24, 25	1471
15	8	293
	9	1529
	10	664
	9, 10	2203
	11	48
	11	405
	11	884
	13	2028
18	11	31
	21	2139
19	5	2133
	6	1170
	20	22
20	3	250
	5	270
	6	689
	7	1056
	12	1334
	16	160
	20	277
21	11	51
22	1, 4	1969
	6	381
23	11	740
	20, 21	1861
	22	763
	28	1729
28	8	417
	30	7
	38	112
32	1	549
	6	381
	31	2148
	32	665
33	2	653
	11	2205
	12	47
	15	2185
	15	2211
	16	405
	19	688
	20	800
	23	71
34	7	635
	7	663
	7	872
	29, 30	1550
35	5	1179
40	38	191

LEVITIC.

1	4	888
4	15	888
10	2	81
	3	1170
13	3, 8	369
16	22	360
19	15	698
	15	1221
	17	2117
	27	95
20	9	174
	17	539
	27	173
21	5	95
26	26	457
	26	1772
	41	656
	41	1655
	44	739

NUMB.

1	16	1756
5	19	2226
	21	1568
6	12	179
8	10	889
11	20	443
	20	1833
	31	87
12	6, 7, 8	308
	14	1023
14	9	408
	42	1052
	42	2185
15	10	1451
	30	1452
16	2	1756
	46	2001
20	10, 11	1502
	17, 18	2162
21	4	2019
	8	319
22	6	176
23	10	2252
	11, 12	1174
	21	288
24	17	785
25	4	2221
33	42	2027
35	12	190
	12	1861

DEUT.

1	28	407
2	10	1992
	11	896
3	23	688
4	15, 16	319
	19	790
6	13	8
7	7	6
	20	1729
	21	2185
8	2	638
	2	936
	2	2005
	10	111
	16, 17	2059
	18	1466
9	14	641
10	12	701
11	8, 11	412
	12	186
	24	785
13	6	160
	14	332
	14	487
14	1	95
16	19	1175
17	8	404
	13	553
	13	1915
	17	223
18	9	793
	11	173
19	6	2075
	18	332
21	6, 7	877
	17	1738
22	4	450
23	3	1772
24	6	2159
	10	2155
	15	589
28	6	58
	7, 25	1991
	12	209
	15	177
	22	1994
	24	170
	24	1371
	25	250
	31, 34	212
	35	137
	48	2159
	50	1079
	56	2258
	59	87
	67	594
29	4	1609
	18	1301
	18	1962
	26	790
32	2	558
	4, 5	1080
	6, 21	152
	9	2133
	13	474
	13	785
	15	1122
	17	1651
	17	1929
	20	1293
	21	380
	24	457
	30	1054
	31	625
	34	1365
	35	1117
	36	1053
	41	1912
	41	2175
	42	80
33	9	841
	26	1235
34	7	484
	8	169

JOSHUA.

1	5	639
	8	577
2	11	1729
5	2	1641
6	5	746
	26	1144
7	7, 8	806
	19	645
	21	1976
8	26	1450
10	12	777
	22	1744
21	45	330
23	13	282
	14	330
24	12	1729

JUDGES.

1	6, 7	1167
4	18	1476
5	7	291
	20	197
	20	582
	20	792
	23	2132
	28	206
6	1, 7	69
	21	755
	22	313
7	31	745
8	21	654
9	15	190
	15	380
	54	380
10	10, 11	455
	12, 13	456
	13	408
11	3	2169
12	3	1248
	7	1808
14	12	987
15	16	1545
	19	510
16	29	547
20	16	480

RUTH.

1	21	15
2	15	1772
3	8	547
4	4, 5	1862

I. SAM.

1	13	42
	16	611
	18	865
	19	951
	27	435
2	3	2196
	5	453
	5	1443
	5	1733
	9	231
	12	1919
	23	1228
	30	175
	30	1098
3	1	309
	7	1820
	12	398
	13	2168
	13	1228
4	18	92
	20	45
7	3	1892
	3	2248
	6	251
	12	157
	12	474
9	9	309
	9	1425
	20	45
10	27	1022
12	20	277
13	8	1355
14	6	400
	29	1098
15	22	2141
	29	807
	29	882
	32	240
	32	1303
16	5	22
	14	69
	14	505
17	24	1912
	33	881
18	1	1844
	21	144
19	5	1248
20	8	155
	19	472
21	4	25
22	18	833
24	14	126
	14	432
	14	686
25	5	2035
	10	2022
	11	108
	16	55
	25	45
	25	152
	27	254
	30	1215
	36	1744
	41	630
	41	1829
27	12	350
28	15	217
	15	442
	19	706
	21	271
	21	1248
31	4	1597

II. SAM.

1	9	519
	9	1597
	11	92
	12	173
	21	177
	26	1838
2	14, 26	469
	22	1079
	22	2262
3	31	92
5	8	948
7	14	131
	14	2036
	15, 25	666
9	8	630
10	4	94
11	25	80
12	7, 8	53
	9	24
	12	683
	12	728
	12	2221
13	4	1520
	39	2012
14	2	201
	9	2226
	14	1088
	22	32
	31	91
15	25, 26	394
16	10	110
	10	1052
	10, 11	544
	15	174
	21	268
18	3	634
	18	31
	18	222
	23	1243
	33	229
19	3	1024
	24	95
	24	793
	25	351
	35	408
21	1	916
22	19	723
23	4	1148
	5	1899
	9	287
24	4	118
	14	62
	14	453
	14	604
	14	1733
	14	1850

I. KINGS.

2	8	1500
3	7	1836
4	29	500
	32, 33	713
5	4	38
	4	654
6	19	265
7	21	727
8	10, 11	2192
	27	1577
	29	631
	46	29
11	14	38
14	10	1935
	10	2201
	12, 13	483
15	5	112
16	2	1551
	34	1144
17	1	411
	1	2269
18	17	230
	21	307
	41	1434
	46	62
19	4	155
	4	242
	12	319
20	11	1165
	18	180
	23, 24	2186
	32	1864
	33	1512
21	13	33
	25	48
	25	120
	25	144
22	19	37
	19, 20	1156
	29	556

II. KINGS.

2	12	1843
	23, 24	1942
3	14	45
4	1	1862
	29	831
	40	1303
5	18	97
	25	41
6	11	1186
	33	1434
7	4	1730
	6	1435
8	10	1250
	11	164

13 2005
9 25 500
26 706
37 1762
14 9 755
9 1456
15 5 569
18 4, 5 49
20, 21 1256
27 1935
19 4 27
4 210
7 294
28 616
28 1715
20 3 278
5 1333
9, 10 779
17 2000
21 13 997
22 20 1377
23 5 192
25 49

I. CHRON.

17 16 630
21 1 78
23 25 350
29 16 1071

II. CHRON.

5 6 2253
6 13 31
10 7 1941
15 3 1764
28 22 120
30 5 704
18, 19 25
32 25 1829
33 13 1919
35 25 201
36 12 2242

EZRA.

4 6 38
9 13 156
13 400
13 1044
13 1412

NEHEM.

1 4 169
2 18 91
3 2 76
4 12 1772
5 13 2169
6 8 1021
9 741
11 1320
16 1107
8 10 2260
9 26 664
27 1262
13 14, 22 820
26 49

ESTHER.

4 17 282
5 6 73
11, 12 1734
13 188
13 1099
6 2 62
7 8 854
9 2 1729
29, 31 726

PSALM.

1 1 1024
2 2138
3 1299
4 294
6 1056
2 1 421
1 786
1 1490
1, 2 1164
2 424
7 103
9 952
12 294
12 1807
12 1917
12 2605
4 2 673
3 2133
4 313
6 601
5 3 26
3 506
6 1 2065
7 3, 4, 5 1568
6 1235
12, 13 426
12, 13 1735
14 420
15 570
15 1716
16 1945
8 3 795
3 2187
3 2189
4 480
4 627
4 1236
9 12 1570
18 337
18 951
20 1786
20 1918
10 4 2049
4 2211
7 176
7 1954
11, 13 1059
11 2191
11 2194
18 571
11 3 2205
4 573
5, 6 2066
14 1 152
5 702
6 1113
15 4 45
4 1419
16 2 2132
5 2076
7 1540
8 2186
10 602
17 11 1363
13 1912
14 63
14 225
14 853
14 896
14 1975
14 2217
14 2231
15 1889
17 1824
18 1, 2 1263
4 614
4 1232
7 773
25, 26 691
26 427
27 2276
28 1119
43, 44 101
19 1 609
4 795
5 87
12 562
14 1575
22 1, 14 251
2 1792
2 1956
6 1023
6 1773
7 2227
9 209
12 1461
15 538
15 1864
16 1775
21 1790
29 954
30 1462
23 1 159
4 190
4 1403
5 378
6 350
6 1820
24 1, 2 775
25 1 27
11 2148
16 360
26 6 24
27 4 603
4 1291
10 1112
29 2 98
30 6, 7 252
31 11 1823
15 70
15 584
15 1351
19 1978
32 1 439
1 1998
2 644
3 251
4 62
6 2179
9 297
10 232
33 6 675
17 2013
34 6 430
7 35
19 300
16 1060
35 5 2067
7 51
13, 14 1121
15, 16 1523
19 1408
26 596
26 1782
36 1, 2 2004
1, 2 2046
6 82
6 300
9 962
37 4 2259
4 2260
10 609
13 1761
16 371
23 2273
25 281
25 285
25 1443
31 2243
35, 36 281
36 545
36 661
37 330
38 1 1539
2 507
3 1947
5 1912
11 1824
16 1782
19 1864
39 1 158
2 613
4 355
5 350
5 441
5 1312
6 625
9 109
9 611
9 2237
10, 11 349
12 1582
13 522
40 7, 8 1924
9, 10 525
10 2244
12 2150
41 3 618
42 1, 2 2049
2 1267
4 1178
5 2024
7 2178
10 94
10 1937
11 1246
44 4 455
5 110
12 2135
45 5 502
12 1462
12 2043
13 1799
46 2 31
2 769
5 636
8, 10 2086
47 7 1927
48 10 110
10 881
12 1896
73 13 1700
14 2055
49 1, 2 234
5 1722
11 225
13 273
20 282
20 354
20 1063
20 1700
20 1926
50 8 2143
16 874
17 664
18 882
20 1421
21 509
51 4 105
4 323
4 683
4 1020
5 662
8 659
9 877
12 1729
13 269
14 1179
14 1566
15 174
53 5 1728
55 2 2020
11 238
12 144
12 544
12 1782
15 2202
19 1120
23 487
23 1313
56 5 868
8 2150
11, 13 592
57 1 1840
58 2 2196
6 300
7 503
8 228
10 2223
11 398
61 7 701
62 5 855
9 497
9 627
9 1826
10 76
10 256
10 589
11 1766
63 2 1291
64 8 1472
8 1716
9, 10 435
65 9 82
66 9 134
17 1953
18 693
68 9, 10 558
12 480
12, 13 469
17 335
20 135
20 432
69 4 2157
6, 7 748
72 5 250
15 2032
17 348
17 1759
20 1899
73 2, 13 1117
3 2209
3 2223
4 846
4 2045
9 676
9 461
12 283
13 67
14 63
14 637
15 690
22 511
22 1514
25 1263
25 1895
25, 28 1112
25, 28 1583
27 2047
28 1820
74 11 420
15 1171
19 430
19 433
75 1 406
4, 5 336
5 776
5 1160
5 1458
8 444
8 2004
76 4 504
5 421
6 780
77 4 172
7, 8, 9 1794
9 714
9 951
19 2050
78 2 173
20 408
27 499
31 1461
36 1220
38 604
41 1656
49 1813
72 578
79 11 232
12 291
80 4 1096
10 82
81 11 685
13 2014
14 64
82 2 17
5 855
84 1 564
5 2243
11 640
85 6 1641
8 1035
86 5 1735
13 607
87 3 1801
88 5 569
15 509
15 1514
89 15 745
25 889
36 1047
39 573
45 1334
90 2 2133
6 1754
8 1946
9 597
11 897
20 628
91 1 57
5 503
7 460
8 2220
11 1471
13 785
13 1744

92 5 1181
94 4,5 231
5,6,7 2191
9 943
20 238
95 6 97
8 219
10 720
11 294
97 8 2223
99 6 1111
100 3 947
101 8 26
102 23 487
27 797
103 2 57
8 294
12 1076
12 2250
14 953
16 351
104 3 82
32 768
105 15 63
15 780
18 232
18 238
25 1819
32 82
106 7 403
7 1600
8 1883
15 1520
23 804
23 2278
32,33 1502
36 1325
40 1418
107 39,40 415
40 250
40 1179
41 2038
42 436
42 2222
108 1 703
2 203
7,8,9 1471
9 785
109 6 1530
110 1 1810
3 1179
7 976
7 2262
111 2 281
4 281
7 281
10 2137
112 4 1798
7,8 277
10 362
10 1741
113 5,6 2197
115 2,3 2185
17 215
116 3 614
3 1046
7 157
11 2225
15 57
118 2,3,4 1827
17 2032
22 445
119 1 2139
13 308
59 417
75 156
96 1040
103 564
104 1196
106 2267
109 1248
113 1952
116 206
116 748
121 678
121 1605
176 1473
120 5,7 1502
121 3 1117
4 692
5 967
8 234
123 1 1832
3 72
124 3 1958
125 1 279
2 454
126 1 75
1 1087
3 1530
4 545
5 288
127 2 513
2 618
2 1087
4 12
130 3 972
5 531
131 1 406
133 1 543
136 4,5,6 405
23 2163
137 7 600
7,12 1761
139 1,2 642
2 234
2 1790
6 2196
7 37
7,8 2184
8 607
14,15 209
14,15 919
23 574
23,24 1206
23,24 2198
141 2 27
3 613
4 1951
5 2117
5 1530
7 135
142 2 394
4 138
4 1100
143 2 757
4 1761
144 4 625
5 767
7 61
7 1428
11 2191
145 16 209
15,16 1443
146 4 1648
147 10,11 2140
148 8 88
8 779
14 1821
149 6 459
22 673
22,25 2051
26 251
26 2228
27 77
27 317
32 686
2 4 244
16 1828
3 2 2092
17 1952
27 2163
29 287
4 15 2219
16 1602
17 1555
17 1951
19 1197
21 2244
24 1407
27 287
5 4 1302
22 1718
6 1 1604
11 556
13 1020
13 1409
17 1409
18 287
25 1407
26 1442
30 2158
34 1969
7 3 2243
13,21 1029
14 26
15 26
18,19 2193
21 1612
22 447
27 789
8 6 173
27 784
30,31 2259
34 2121
9 12 488
12 1963
17 1951
10 4 59
4 1330
4 1756
4,22 59
7 1238
10 1409
15 1477
20 252
20 1741
20 2067
24 252
25 2206
11 4 224
11 1995
16 383
21 1982
30 1029
31 1479
12 10 144
16 1565
26 377
27 1965
13 12 207
15 383
25 1975
14 1 1720
2 1115
3 462
17 294
24 1802
27 279
15 2 173
7 1070
21 221
32 1061
16 1 1071
1,9 1719
4 2112
26 1853
30 1409
17 6 1802
9 1028
11 162
17 1823
17 1824
21 1610
22 2091
26 337
28 1213
18 1 244
1 392
4 1182
9 1817
10 413
14 130
14 500
14 1558
23 688
23 1830
19 11 797
24 520
20 5 1182
5 1185
8 574
21 1 1191
4 287
25 363
30 424
22 2 2164
8 288
17,18 1034
26 1604
23 2 532
5 626
5 1803
7 500
10,11 572
23 2240
28 802
31 1202
31,32 1957
24 4 789
7 2223
10 640
16 268
16 454
16 1469
17,18 1787
25 3,25 125
12 1497
20 74
20 239
25 1587
26 1108
27 1048
26 4,5 1019
6 1420
27 1716
27 1 1314
3 365
3 2015
5,6 2117
17 1698
19 48
19 811
28 3 1432
3 2159
14 253
14 761
29 1 2148
6 1718
8 1712
11
15 1411
18 684
27 141
2 1063
30 4 87
8,4 16
8 155
15 1975
15,18 454
32 561
31 4,5,6 1087
6 1303
8 797
8,9 174
10,11 333
21 467
31 374

PROVER.

1 17 1724
18 1720
18 1963
10 216
10 1271
12 75
10 1 1129
7 855
11 1947
19 14
11 2 1184
1 2157
8 45
9 14
12 1 9
1 4
1 7
1 20
1 21
2 18
2 45
3 67
5 22
5 35
11 15
13 1
13 34
13 199

ECCLES.

1 16 679
16 1893
17 1154
18 2051
2 1 1964
2 164
2 2261
7 169
16 2097
18 736
3 1 73
1 194
7 170
13 378
18 1062
19 20 601
4 1,2 242
5 1245
9,10 1517
5 1 1905
2 1018
2 2183
4 2265
10 1444
17,19 1971
19 2058
6 4 227
10 884
7 2 352
6 2260
7 1514
9 362
12 2251
23 679
14 156
15,16 1629
16,17 1333
17 486
17 1482
19 1771
24 1183
8 4 806
5 1272
6 75
6 1919
8 413
10 1476
11 762
9 1 284
1 2270
2 368
2 941
4 126
4 242
5,6 1376
7,8,9 1549

CANTIC

1 6 92
7 109
16 148
2 3 197
4 7
4,5 207
16 159
4 9 152
11 195
5 10 75
12 87
6 9 103
13 57
7 1 109
4 41
11 31
8 6 8

ISAIAH.

1 1 142
2 54
2 182
2 182
3 221
6 13
6 37
7 142
7 182
10 217
15 1560
15,16 132
18 81
24 44
29 55
2 4 45
4 158
9 2
12 17
12,17 117
3 1 457
1 723
4 116
6 215
6,7 449

6,7 2022
7 223
9 717
9 748
9 86
9 17
10 762
11 2225
12 1311
1458
5 191
2 54
2 681
2,5 474
2,5 34,35
6 410
8 2167
8,9 1464
13 1733
19 436
19 1990
24 437
25 62
5 800
5 1019
8 369
9 2176
9,10 429
9,10 1610
13 537
2 162
4 1119
13 408
22 1964
7 2204
8 1053
9 173
9 765
9 1740
10 2272
17 240
17 1292
19 173
19 300
20 703
21 66
21 1443
22 1964
2 186
2 190
6 482
6 1891
12 62
20 1246
7 1850
6,12 329
14,15 2217
18 538
19 407
23 1330
26 846
27 1912
3 856
3 925
3 1341
4 675
4 1440
4 1471
7,8,9 476
4,5,6 1105
11 2097
12,16 1937
18,19 2122
20,21 2034
22,23 216
23 722
29,30 1738
2 94
3 1090
14 585

17 294
13 2067
6 434
19 25 919
20 3 169
5 551
20 1194
21 2,3,4 1585
14 2163
22 2 1435
4 171
12 94
12,13 21
18 1449
22 1145
24 16 1841
18 1989
20 775
25 4 827
4 1411
6 74
9 435
9 1656
9 2055
26 3 256
4 224
4 1857
9 513
11 436
11 1787
16 635
17,18 1489
19 955
20 1344
27 1 200
1,7 71
4 764
4 1815
4,5 2238
7 732
8 131
11 921
28 1 1802
10 1545
15 846
15 1919
15 2175
16 2207
17 2206
19 2073
21 406
29 4 321
6 379
13 1390
14 8
14 1178
15 1182
21 570
21 1908
30 2 2422
5 551
7 809
9 1599
13 847
14 1710
18 1655
20 511
20 2241
26 189
30 2165
30,31 1623
33 293
31 1 505
1 1998
8 80
32 2 909
4 427
5 1179
6 1387
6,7 2162

17 697
33 2 1465
1 2001
8,9 92
9,10 414
14 509
14 640
14 714
16 415
20 479
20 1742
21 434
21 652
24 665
35 3 267
37 1 93
22 2228
36 136
38 2 603
3 820
10,12 903
11 603
11 1889
12 350
12 598
14 130
14 183
14 1605
17 664
18 215
39 6,7 1377
8 2086
40 1,2 582
2 1039
4 767
6 140
6 482
8 1320
15 401
24 367
27 247
28 759
30,31 1638
41 8 2042
14,15 2226
15 767
15 2068
23 155
42 25 771
43 2 457
3 1524
4 1179
7 397
13 760
13 804
13,14 1457
14 1171
26 815
44 9 1977
9 1394
19,20 1905
20 889
20 1075
20 1478
22 606
24,25 793
25 422
25 2272
45 7 62
7 109
7 155
11 806
11 921
14 1097
46 8 1419
47 3 2056
9 170
9 1740
11 1441
48 6,7 1802

15,17 1190
18 1964
18 2240
49 1 47
4 1509
15,16 716
23 809
26 1246
50 4 1498
6,7 1773
7,8 1276
10 188
10 189
10 249
10 1731
51 1 1862
4 2044
6,7 348
9 694
9 808
17 2075
19 161
20 2237
23 1812
52 1 1265
1 1429
14 167
53 2 367
2,3 1326
3 45
5 447
6 660
8 702
10 58
9,10 660
10 849
10 1543
10 2142
11 1967
12 592
12 873
54 4 1085
9 1088
17 1978
55 1 649
1 1967
7 408
7 1726
6,7 883
8 2193
56 3 483
12 254
12 584
57 1 282
1 351
2 217
10 897
14 1812
15 518
15 1934
16 270
16 534
17 714
19 373
20 229
20 786
20 1502
21 189
58 1 304
1 359
2 1820
3 167
3 717
3 757
3 2041
6 2157
7 450
9 2264
10 1091
13 238

13 1258
59 1 62
1,2 388
2 2259
5,14 1796
6 421
19 2204
60 5 1914
6 2177
14 100
17 233
61 8 1230
3 139
62 1 1119
4 2140
1,6 121
6 951
63 15 1843
15 2182
16 1376
17 1195
64 1 768
1 2002
7 942
65 1 1842
2 1072
5 1916
5 2142
11 592
13 1085
16 210
17 401
20 486
22 450
24 1794
66 1 2184
3 252
5 740
5 1818
7 1907
8 210
11 2258
12 982
14 2091
24 596

JEREM.

1 6 1836
10 369
10 565
5 625
12 2025
19 1957
22 878
23,24 1063
25 567
29 757
31 715
32 715
34 933
36 1083
3 5 2165
16 1821
23 432
23 1262
4 1 2247
7,8 167
12 1077
14 1780
14 2151
16 1545
18 288
18 1720
19 142
20 295
22 418

5 1 4
1 681
1 1797
7 1463
13 568
13 1386
22,23 2151
24 412
24 1905
28 2173
6 8 2210
11 483
15 1778
29,30 1460
7 1,2 110
1,2 725
4 1742
4,9 874
16 2056
8 1 224
1 2123
5 120
5 2151
6 1906
7 511
9 153
14 183
14 805
15 207
15 254
9 4 144
4 554
17,18 201
22 152
10 6,7 1914
14 1240
23 165
24 897
11 13 750
16 1783
12 1 85
1 757
1,2 284
2 368
13 16 1117
27 2151
14 4 1451
9 2211
18 1178
15 1 804
1 1813
1 2279
1,2,3 635
2 1440
9 453
19 2242
16 7 2013
14,15 1085
16 1725
17 1 1851
6 491
6 602
9 1057
9 1218
18 4 952
12,13 1657
18 418
18 461
19 11,17 1161
20 3,4 1435
9 265
10 1364
14,15 178
22 3 1750
24 681
28 33
28 194
28 2138
29 628
29 1241

23 9 1198
24 24 2184
3 284
10 898
25 13 113
10 1711
15 2076
27 80
27 1959
27 6 852
29 22, 23 152
30 14 715
17 1097
31 21 1607
15 227
18 1553
19 1947
20 2234
28 692
35 792
35, 36 1707
32 40 1914
33 22 499
36 24 93
38 4 267
39 6, 7 1089
18 135
41 6 1680
45 5 135
46 28 1542
47 6 1811
48 10 1271
49 7 161
7 1400
11 2173
31 255
50 6 1005
7 1221
20 664
20 184
43 461
51 25 765
44 1961
57 1306

LAM.

1 12 498
12 1768
2 2 1821
6 1170
10 169
14 113
14 512
19 240
3 1 602
4 1519
7, 9 248
8 1795
12 1543
12 1768
12, 13 1539
22 1542
22, 39 1044
23 637
24 2254
36 681
36 1786
73 780
44 27
51 211
59 679
6 846
4 6 2045
7, 8 167
9 80
16 71
21 148
5 16 1802

EZEK.

1 3 62
24 2253
2 7 2016
3 8, 9 761
26 1176
4 15 1936
5 13 2066
6 6 1566
9 720
19 2014
7 17 268
8 12 2195
11 16 2111
21 2250
13 9 1208
10 516
10, 13 2204
14 113
14 2205
19 127
19 1498
14 5 1820
9 1156
14 1619
15 3 1420
16 4, 5 213
6 1566
14 629
49 741
49 1463
18 2 374
20 2070
20 47 1995
21 2 1581
3 845
3, 4, 5 2111
7 251
22 6 2165
16 1555
23 4 478
42 1532
24 6 1949
7 1566
13 1509
13 1949
17 94
26 20 222
28 17 2222
29 18 94
30 2 202
32 7 778
34 4 362
36 30 1780
31 902
31 1419
38 2038
37 1 62
13 209
39 2 452
40 4 634

DANIEL.

1 20 592
2 3 84
21 2160
34 1996
35 733
44 2205
3 27 1341
4 255
4 4 367
13, 14 372
24 1065
26 1577
35 805
23 134
5 5 169
6 9 928
7 9 2044
15 347
8 5 731
6 1459
7 1302
13 1184
13, 14 1769
9 14 1364
14 692
17 71
23 1362
23 1976
24 1367
10 2 163
3 513
33, 34 327
11 21 1702
12 2 215

HOSEA.

2 2 757
6 381
6 1797
6 1227
8 53
8, 9 2216
8, 9 2256
14 363
15 250
21 1127
21, 22 793
21, 22 1149
4 1 1764
2 1566
4 474
4 2117
8 662
14 386
18 557
18 1171
5 10 474
13, 14 348
6 7 884
7 1643
7 5 175
5 1121
9 96
9 771
11 759
11 1061
11 1192
16 2247
8 4 41
4 106
7 1389
8 1725
9 2 573
6 166
7 1500
8 1725
11 1800
11 1938
15 739
10 4 1796
12 1984
11 5, 6 1543
8, 9 440
9 678
12 1 568
4 121
4 2230
4 703
7 917
8 1123
13 1366
13 1 898
6 2048
9 388
9 1720
13 1483
14 3 433
5 367
5 1635

JOEL.

1 7 1102
19 1469
20 1147
20 1994
2 2 185
2 778
13 92
13 1553
14 549
23 2241

AMOS.

1 3 454
2 8 2159
9 1755
14 1100
14, 15 1192
3 2 1059
3 835
6 388
6 108
8 108
4 6 283
7 778
6, 8 457
8 410
12 2956
5 8 791
10, 11 1214
13 170
16 201
17 798
18, 19 1990
21 622
6 3 253
3 2112
4, 5, 6 2041
7 1, 2, 3 1541
4, 5 1995
8 661
8 797
8 3, 10 195
5 1453
9 1, 2 296
1 377
1 1053
1 1990
5 774

OBADIAH.

1 3, 4 1934
12 163
12 1818

JONAH.

1 3 2186
17 592
2 8 1476
3 6 139
8 2248
9 549
4 4 41
9 1704

MICAH.

1 3 785
15 1748
16 94, 95
2 6, 7 2019
3 2 298
2 1972
3 1799
4 11 2220
5 1 1526
5 455
6 2 2142
3, 4 2214
6 648
11 1153
15 378
16 2026
7 2 1475
3 244
3 395
5 1825
9 365
16 436
18 48
18 430
18 663
18 841
19 664
19 876

NAHUM.

1 9 1088
15 1429
15 1895
2 7 1622
11, 12 297
12 13
12 1720
3 6 161

HABAK.

1 2, 3 1792
6, 7 84
4 1796
6 192
7 1233
8 598
16 2216
2 2, 3 1355
3 1654
9, 10 1487
12 1566
3 6 809
8 180
8 772
14 369
16 314
17 459
17 573
17 2040

ZEPHAN.

1 12 933
12 957
12 2053
12 2213
2 1, 2 2067
11 1519
11 2132

HAGGAI.

1 6 290
6 2002
6 2271
7 1059
9 295
9 1471
2 4 1513
6, 7 773
14 132
14 1326

ZECHAR.

1 8 335
10 43
10 565
11 1983
12 1588
13 163
15 371
15 923
18, 20 1725
2 5 55
5 653
8 1452
13 695
13 1022
4 7 626
7 767
10 43
10 700
5 1 2175
6, 8, 11 2221
7 1 788
5 2248
7 1533
13 292
8 4, 5 2038
9, 13 267
23 734
23 1772

MALAC.

1	4	697
	4	1144
	4	1987
2	13	1101
	2	497
	7,8	1170
	9	1219
	17	857
3	2	1806
	9	173
4	2	206

MATTH.

1	19	1619
	19	2221
3	7	1963
	9	707
	9	1988
	17	40
4	3	778
	6	473
	9	52
	9	852
	16	186
5	1	173
	8	1268
	19	1612
	22	152
	22	1060
	22	1701
	22	2169
	39	1774
	39	1525
	45	411
	45	780
	45	2215
6	3	1071
	7	1391
	16	413
	24	2055
	25	1503
	26	1966
	33	371
	33	442
7	1	1643
	1	1920
	1	2154
	6	1214
	9,10	1113
	22	551
	22	717
	22	724
	23	167
	23	251
	23	2208
	24	1765
	24,25	2207
	27	2024
8	12	1758
	17	497
	25	282
	25	695
	26	785
	27	87
	29	42
	18	889
9	23	203
10	10	893
	13	1717
	14	1550
	19	1503
	19,20	1924
	21	1817
	25	1187
	30	57
	30	2150
11	42	2161
	5	2043
	16	2038
	16,17	1511
	22	139
	23	1933
	25	1430
	25	1609
	29	361
12	20	1119
	36,37	184
	37	1393
	44	1068
	57	281
13	10,14	1608
	21	368
	42	1554
	44	245
15	20	107
	26	969
16	19	1145
	22,23	149
	25	127
	26	318
18	5	1096
	10	37
	18	2272
	21,22	1773
19	24	1064
	26	127
	28	1351
20	15	107
	15	829
21	19	548
	21	769
	25	1577
22	13	189
	31,32	1746
23	2,3	566
	4	244
	4	395
	5	2245
	8,9	1701
	14	377
	14	2170
	15	1827
	32	2071
24	12	1823
	15	903
	22	587
	22	1317
	24	1475
	25	253
	30	1892
	37	2175
	38	1985
	40,41	457
	50	2176
	51	1266
25	29	1708
	35	820
	36	162
	36	232
26	24	220
	33,35	1638
	38	238
	39	444
	49	2076
	56,58	1777
27	19	620
	25	1569
	38,46	181
	45	777
	46	666

MARK.

2	27	2135
4	38	785
6	2,6	406
	8	893
	4	1510
	16	413
8	38	1775
9	49	389
14	65	854
15	22	1087

LUKE.

1	6	1557
	6	30
	10	28
	19	38
	25	1785
	35	1440
	46	627
	51	414
	68	635
2	30	1888
	34,35	1537
	35	2101
	37	168
4	13	117
	20	1408
	22,23	2103
	23,24	1510
	24	1590
5	8	2211
6	25	467
	25	747
	38	468
7	15	1904
8	14	1952
9	3	893
10	4	821
	9	995
	19	1744
	2,3	1757
	30	160
11	20,46	1845
	31	1876
	48	2071
12	4,5	1913
	19	256
	19	584
	20	213
	20	367
	32	2038
	36,37	2131
	50	1713
13	1	88
	9	665
	26	602
	28	1893
	28	2034
14	12,13	30
	31	1456
15	7	167
	17	576
	17	1642
	32	553
16	3	1095
	9	995
	15	145
	15	885
	15	1261
	29	710
17	4	1773
	4	663
	27	31
18	5	1096
	8	416
	14	322
	31	216
19	41	211
	41,42	1610
	42	75
21	19	1655
	28	1879
	28	2262
	34	89
	34	906
22	28	162
	28	1822
	29,30	1876
	44	121
	61,62	1523
23	24	53
	30	1348
	31	1349
	31	1483
24	37	315
	38	1647
	39,40	1884
	53	168

JOHN.

1	5	430
	11	166
	16	125
	20	190
2	4	74
	19	1897
	23,24	334
	24,25	2099
3	6	954
	14	659
	16	189
	16	282
	19,20	200
	21	195
	24	1542
	30	1120
	35	68
4	42	1272
5	17	397
	22,27	1875
	25,28	1870
	31	1026
	35	1120
	35	1620
6	26	54
	67	1111
7	24	873
	24	1580
	38	549
	39	116
8	5	1784
	13,16	837
	14	1026
	15	1875
	21	1949
	44	79
9	2	123
	2,3	2153
	4	418
	27	488
10	13	589
11	23	1901
	25	1871
	25	1882
	35,37	1882
	55	22
12	19	421
	24	1340
	24	1747
	28	40
	35	1720
13	2	78
	7	331
	7	1039
	33, 36	1578
14	1	2024
	2	1578
	18	433
	21	1274
16	2	1221
	21	1085
	23,24	1561
	30	927
17	1	1073
	1	2182
	3	1765
18	6	1461
	11	444
	37	1824
19	12	2102
	13	1238
	25	1378
	30	1737
20	15	103
	23	663
	25	689
21	18	656

ACTS.

1	15	110
2	2,3	676
	21	1794
	24	1866
	25	1032
	27	1882
	31	168
	42	1517
3	19,20	1877
4	19	266
	28	62
	28	945
	30	61
5	3	78
	10	213
	38,39	1452
	39	765
6	1	1973
	15	1886
8	21	1069
	23	663
	23	1302
9	1	504
	1	1849
10	25	99
12	23	136
13	10	39
	10	418
	18	902
	22	528
	33	1357
	46	563
14	13	93
	16	684
	17	412
	17	1729
15	9	1069
16	25	232
17	3	1321
	18	1017
	25,27	2208
	26	851
	27	429
	28	962
	30	187
	30	684
	30	1042
18	5	1924
20	24	127
	24	241
22	23	168
23	1,2	1526
	6,7	1897
26	9	1907
	28,29	1505
27	23,24	2279
	33	169
28	3	88
	27	429

ROMANS.

1	1	1236
	1	1756
	9	1573
	18	524
	18	1228
	20,26	684
	20	1046
	20	2189
	20	2209

	21,29	2194
	32	1906
2	4	1109
	5	174
	5	1873
	5	1948
	12	680
	14	340
	14	2242
	15	1873
	15	2209
	17	724
	19	272
	23,24	566
3	4	105
	4	1643
	7,8	1217
	19	1559
4	5	688
	18	531
	18,19	1883
	20	825
	21	1274
5	3	219
	4	435
	6,7	539
	14	214
	20	1980
6	20,21	2056
	21	1476
	21	1776
	21	2137
	23	2003
7	9,13	1040
	13	884
	15	1904
	24	907
	25	1489
8	7	757
	13	1913
	15	1350
	19	1128
	26	1562
	31	476
	31	1018
	31	1276
	32	522
	32	664
	32	1543
	35	1634
	35,36	469
	36	349
	36	1249
9	11,12	1219
	16	2203
	18	885
	19	910
	20	756
	20	1410
	22	2031
	23	550
10	18	795
11	11	1601
	13	627
	17,18	1782
	20	252
	20	1410
	32	1146
	33	402
	34	2080
12	14	176
	15	2222
	19	1507
	20	1508
13	8	1968
14	3	1783
	3	1875
	4	1874
	6	187
	7	2137
	11	656
15	15	1212
	30	205
16	18	1612
	18	49
	20	2203
	20	1744

I. COR.

1	21	419
	25	425
	25	834
	28	1750
2	4,14	813
	12	940
3	2	578
	13	1761
	19	423
4	4	323
	4	340
	4,5	1874
	4	1875
	5	1188
	5	1920
	8	556
	8	1449
	8,10	1106
	9	1625
	11	2158
	13	1761
	21	1785
5	2	226
6	2	1876
	20	173
	20	556
	20	2132
7	5	25
	20	586
	23	2054
	30	76
	30	1534
	31	256
8	31	479
	1	569
	1	1061
	2	560
	2	707
	4	625
	4	1977
	11	1212
	11	1498
9	9	633
	22	515
10	3,4	1591
	11	689
	11	1619
	12	1784
	13	71
	13	249
	13	906
	16	57
11	7	194
	7	1799
	14	1110
	16	755
	31	1873
12	9	1254
13	2	769
	3,4	2171
	9	305
	12	211
	12	1049
	12	1887
14	1	1902
	14,15	1927
	24,25	101
	36, 37	1106
15	8	227
	12	1871
	16,17	1871
	26	241
	28	1895
	32	602
	34	1763
	37	288
	37,38	1885
	40	316
	50	1885
	53	597
	53	1897
	54	956
	55	468
16	13	1454
	22	1872
	26	1418

II. COR.

1	3	866
	3,4	1402
	17,20	552
	23	1573
	24	1398
2	6,7	1784
	7	2178
	7,11	2024
3	2	1858
	6	92
	10	325
	17	2262
	18	528
4	3,4	429
	6	778
	7	343
	8,9	285
	12,17	441
	16	133
	17	174
	17	632
	17	2008
	17	2262
	18	2061
5	1	343
	1,2	908
	4	104
	4	1885
	5	1603
	7	1196
	7	1887
	9	1575
	10	1897
	11	507
	11	1073
	14,15	1866
	14	1924
	15	2137
	16	1220
	21	478
	21	1272
6	4	1025
	10	157
	10	256
	16,17	2184
7	1	1513
	6	1403
	10	1553
	10	2019
	11	1703
8	9	128
9	2	1662
	6	288
10	4	305
	4,5	423
	12	754
11	1,19	2015
	5	1108
	5	1203
	14	335
	20	1525
	24	1542
12	1	310
	2	217
	9,10	1638
	10	219
	10	434
13	8	391
	8	1506
	12	800

GALAT.

1	16	317
	16	1925
2	9	776
	11	66
3	1	1405
	20	1587
4	4	1311
	5	116
	13,14	130
	29	1115
5	3	1044
	12	231
	15	1917
6	1	265
	1	268
	1	1785
	2	163
	2	2021
	3	755
	7,8	288
	14	219

EPHES.

1	21	37
2	2	77
	2	90
	10	2140
	12	90
	13	373
3	8	227
	8	813
	13	749
	18	1051
	18,19	897
4	10	1578
	13	1083
	18	902
	23	1926
5	8	185
	14	560
	15	177
	15	1905
	15	417
	18	1150
	18	1463
	27	1519
6	2	2092
	12	10
	12	57
	12	507
	19	174
	28	34

PHILIP.

1	9	2181
	23	241
	23	908
	25	1714
	28	556
2	5	48
	7	2169
	9,10	1876
	12	1070
	15	1080
	16	524
	27	1545
	27	962
3	2	674
	8,9	1935
	19	1776
	19	1462
	20	225
	20	1898
	21	1886
	21	597
4	1	2014
	5	76

COLLOS.

1	15,18	1739
	18	1357
	18	1871
	20	340
	24	219
2	2	1273
	15	556
	17	708
3	3	214
	3	1249
	11	235
	19,20	1600
4	6	516
	6	1389

I. THES.

2	5	1573
3	3	1538
	3,4	1630
	8	2032
	16	1360
4	3	76
5	6	195
	17	34
	18	111
	20	446
	23	66

II. THES.

1	10	1761
	10	950
2	2	76
	2	303
	3	282
	3	2199
	6,7	2202
	8	1471
	11	1022
	11	1157
	19	2014
3	10,12	585
	10	1974
	12	1750

I. TIM.

1	9	469
2	5	1589
	8	1562
	8	2277
	14	1311
3	3	462
	4,5	481
4	10	1866
	12	446
	16	867
5	1	1837
6	1	236
	1,2	1832
	6	105
	7	104
	9	1466
	16	338
	17	107
	17	76
	19	2138

II. TIM.

1	10	1592
	12	1861
	16	1777
2	3	521
	15	398
	15	515
	19,20	2206
	26	45
	26	77
3	1	1867
	2	1828
	9	1156
4	16	1822
	17	297
	17	1790

TITUS.

1	7	462
	10,11	676
	13	2013
	15	1326
2	16	1420
	9	811
	9	1410
	9	1830
	15	446
3	10	563
	14	1394

HEBR.

1	1	368
	3	637
	3	1294

	5	37
	6, 7	1811
	7	82
	14	38
	14	332
2	8	1801
	10, 15	871
	11	1862
	14	1862
	17	1588
	17	1590
3	8	163
	8	1600
	8	1602
	11	573
	12	32
	13	393
	19	219
	19	1462
4	1	2014
	13	935
	13	1270
	15	498
5	2	1847
	7	667
	7	1795
	12	1139
	14	429
	14	1109
	14	1737
6	5	1266
	7, 8	558
	11	1273
	18	1662
7	22	340
	25	1866
8	5	708
9	8	116
	24	1587
	27	16
	27	234
	27	1313
	28	1888
10	1, 2	871
	4, 10	649
	9	1607
	14	6
	22	1563
	22	1273
	24	1601
	26	1453
	26, 31	892
	30	1479
	31	62
	32, 33	1771
	34	164
	34	1637
	36	1654
11	1	564
	1	1588
	3	1133
	4	710
	5	2074
	7	253
	7	2175
	8	1196
	10	346
	17, 19	1883
	21	2041
	24	800
	35	1622
	36	233
12	1	361
	2	360
	4	1565
	5	96
	5	446
	6	268
	10	442
	14	529
	14	1910
	15	1301
	16	126
	29	1807
	29	2232
13	2, 3	1846
	3	163
	8	706
	9	1082
	9	1910
	12	2232
	13	1528

JAMES.

1	2	469
	3	1131
	4	1655
	6, 7	824
	10	2276
	17	105
	17	542
	17	624
	17	708
	19	1018
	19	1699
	27	163
	27	636
	27	2173
2	2, 3	926
	10	1558
	14, 15	539
	15	258
	15, 16	2022
	15, 16	2165
	18	278
	20	1060
3	1	1131
	3, 4, 5	1508
4	1	615
	1	1807
	3	1561
	6	2276
	9, 10	142
	12, 13	2270
	14	127
	16	691
5	1, 2	1309
	13, 14	130
	17	411

I. PET.

1	6	445
	6, 7	1707
	7, 8	1888
	8	2258
	10	2026
2	1	1406
	11	1454
	22	660
	24	1881
3	7	1081
	7	1889
	19	1146
	21	1909
4	3	674
	12, 13	1630
	14	111
	14	468
	19	70
	19	395
	19	1249
5	4	1803

II. PET.

1	4	48
	4	527
	4	754
2	9	2113
	12	393
	12	1726
	18	568
	20	1183
3	3	1990
	8	44
	8	755
	9	931
	16	402

I. JOHN.

1	1	1425
2	1	30
	1	112
	1	1557
	3, 13	1272
	4, 5	1023
	11, 12	1139
	12	664
	14	1638
	16	363
	19	1635
	20	390
	20	1039
	21	1208
	24	390
3	2	211
	2	800
	2	1887
	9	1387
	9	1505
	18	1822
	20	1260
4	5	1413
	18	10
	18	252
	18	1084
	18	1273
5	8	800
	8	940
	13	1273

JUDE.

	6	42
	10	1763
	12	552
	13	786
	15	233
	16	568
	17	1237
	22	516
	22, 23	559
	22, 23	1499

REVEL.

1	7	1868
	7	1892
	18	1865
	14	923
2	9	1027
	10	79
	10	134
	10	1772
	20	2168
	24	1050
3	2	9
	3	1145
	9	100
	9	1097
	9	1943
	14	1739
4	6	1117
	6	670
5	8, 9	470
6	9, 10	218
	10	70
7	9	407
	9	2150
9	11	132
	11	1737
	12	282
11	8	2032
	11	1236
12	1	68
	1	1803
	1	2043
	16	808
13	8	1588
14	3	851
	7	1915
	10	2076
	13	215
	13	288
	13	1337
	13	1949
15	3	400
16	9	131
	15	304
	20	773
17	8	1750
	16	1516
	2, 3	1711
18	4	1429
	6	291
	7	771
	7	1118
	7	1516
	7	2170
	7	2206
	7, 8	1981
	8	89
	21	664
	22	195
20	2, 3	1155
21	19	346
	27	289
22	8	99
	11	685
	11	1635
	17	1878
	18	2081

FINIS.

A 25

1034